The issues most prominent in the election of legislative members as well as delegate to Congress in the campaign of 1886 were the questions of division and admission or statehood for the southern half of the territory. The capital-removal issue had been largely obscured. It had been removed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the probability at this time favored the opinion that it would not be reached by that body until after the Dakotas had been admitted into the Union, either as one or two states, which was tantamount to anticipating that it would never be heard. It "cut no figure" in the campaign, which was an active one. It was hoped, if not expected, that if the result disclosed a strong preponderance for division, Congress would be influenced to prompt action in that direction, for it had been recognized from Pettigrew's term, and his plan to secure division first, that there was a democratic element of considerable numbers in the House who would favor division if the effort for statehood was dropped entirely for the time being. There was little said about setting up a state government to conflict with the territorial government. The majority seemed rather "inclined to bear the ills they had, rather than fly to others they knew not of," still, the state constitution of 1885 and the state government, already formed and in waiting, were to be kept intact and ready for use whenever called for.

The election occurred Tuesday, November 2d, and the election for members of the House of Representatives throughout the United States occurred the same day. The democrats lost a number of northern districts, but not quite enough to erase their majority in Congress. They retained a lead of two or three only, and this encouraged Dakotans to believe that there would be found a number of these favorable to passing the Dakota bills; those who had already expressed themselves as opposed to making the Dakota question a party issue.

THE OFFICIAL VOTE

The appended table shows the vote of the two divisions of the territory, as canvassed by the territorial board of canvassers. The democratic candidate received a much larger vote than was expected. He was a strong divisionist, and subsequently headed a powerful wing of his party in antagonizing the democratic governor, Louis K. Church. Gifford's majority, about thirty thousand, was about the average republican majority, and there was some hope expressed that it would be cut down to much smaller figures for the effect it might have in inducing the Springer democrats of Congress to favor Dakota's division and admission:

SOUTH DAKOTA

County	For Gifford	For Day	County	For Gifford	For Day
Aurora	776	617	Buffalo	188	74
Beadle	1,638	806	Butte	299	90
Bon Homme	755	829	Campbell	399	268
Brookings	1,307	618	Charles Mix	583	261
Brown	1,812	1,233	Clark	956	499
Brule	602	745	Clay	1,113	230

County	For Gifford	For Day	County	For Gifford	For Day
Codington	798	587	Lincoln	1,201	225
Custer	448	334	McCook	614	622
Davison	1,015	437	McPherson	468	99
Day	740	584	Marshall	572	402
Deuel	667	240	Miner	901	451
Douglas	728	327	Minnehaha	2,490	1,091
Edmunds	781	454	Moody	1,086	213
Fall River	154	131	Pennington	960	662
Faulk	708	253	Potter	542	214
Grant	691	665	Roberts	340	180
Hamlin	541	287	Sanborn	857	297
Hand	1,142	641	Spink	2,843	833
Hanson	589	403	Sully	535	185
Hughes	618	379	Turner	1,193	240
Hutchinson	1,140	267	Union	904	627
Hyde	417	269	Walworth	209	149
Jerauld	629	249	Yankton	1,251	672
Kingsbury	986	448
Lake	836	358
Lawrence	2,513	1,614	Totals	43,394	22,371

NORTH DAKOTA

County	For Gifford	For Day	County	For Gifford	For Day
Barnes	1,106	773	Morton	749	419
Benson	244	190	Nelson	828	227
Billings	22	73	Oliver	65	52
Bottineau	245	194	Pembina	990	2,013
Burleigh	498	639	Ramsey	841	531
Cass	3,128	899	Richland	1,277	748
Cavalier	491	607	Rolette	253	220
Dickey	667	600	Ransom	1,058	264
Eddy	315	59	Sargent	868	311
Emmons	227	153	Stark	287	255
Foster	265	124	Steele	667	139
Grand Forks	2,053	1,389	Stutsman	869	667
Griggs	702	104	Towner	52	159
Kidder	160	150	Trail	1,854	798
LaMoure	751	239	Walsh	1,758	1,801
Logan	21	5	Ward	34	170
McHenry	125	101	Wells	138	44
McIntosh	237	35
McLean	198	138	Totals	23,528	15,508
Mercer	76	39

Grand total vote, 104,798. Gifford, 66,919; Day, 37,879. Gifford's majority, 29,040.

THE ELECTION FAVORED DIVISION

The result of this delegate election, the large vote polled, and the fact that both candidates stood for division and admission, was accepted throughout the country as the best evidence of the almost unanimous choice of Dakotans for a division of the territory; and a majority of congressmen, including quite a number of democrats, were disposed to assert that it would be only a needless waste of time and money to demand another popular election for the purpose of ascertaining the wishes of the people. It had been asserted by the opponents of division that it was not an issue in the election, and that it had never been squarely tested by giving the people an opportunity to vote directly upon the question. This the Hill bill provided for, but it was defeated by the Springer opposition, which was openly committed to the one state for the entire territory plan. The fact that both the democratic and republican candidates favored, and the platforms of each territorial convention demanded it, would seem to fully justify the claim made that the voice of the people had been given affirmatively upon the question, as plainly and unequivocally as it would be given were an election held specially to test the sentiment of voters. There was no opposition, however, within the territory, among divisionists, to such an election, and the only reason why one had not been held was owing to the unwillingness of Mr. Springer and his faction to order it.

Mr. Springer probably realized, and he could hardly have failed to do so, that the people of Dakota wanted the territory divided, but he expected the sentiment would be largely modified by the new order of democratic control in the territory, and by the offer of statehood tendered by his omnibus bill, which would, even if defeated in Dakota, admit New Mexico, Montana and Washington, two democratic and one republican state. Mr. Springer undoubtedly saw that the democrats had much to gain in a partisan way, should the omnibus bill, providing one state for all Dakota, become a law, and contended for it persistently and until Congress defeated all by adjournment.

The Territorial Legislature, which succeeded, of 1887, took official notice of the claim that Dakota's sentiment on the division question had never been authoritatively tested, and authorized a vote to be taken at the next general election, upon the question. This could not be had at a general election, however, before November, 1888.

The democratic vote in the counties north of the forty-sixth parallel, in the delegate contest of 1866, was encouraging for the democrats. Out of the 39,000 votes cast in that half of Dakota, the republicans received 23,525 and the democrats 15,508.

It had now come to be conceded in many quarters that in case a division of the territory was decided upon at Washington there would be no territorial organization for the northern half, but both sections would be admitted to the Union as two states, with the titles of "South Dakota" and "North Dakota," the southern section having formally consented at an adjourned meeting of the constitutional convention to withdraw its name "Dakota," and enter the Union as "South Dakota," giving to the northern half the Dakota name as "North Dakota," which it so highly prized.

DAKOTA'S PROGRESS

The increase of population in Dakota during the year ending June 30, 1886, as given by the report of Immigration Commissioner Dunlap, was 65,000, exclusive of births, which gave to the territory a population of 480,610 on that date. The total area of land filed upon during the same time was 3,565,366 acres. There were 22,420 filings at the various United States land offices, and 9,962 final proofs, covering an area of 1,404,630 acres.

The staple crops produced in Dakota Territory, as given by the United States Agricultural Department and the commissioner of immigration for Dakota, Mr. Dunlap, for the year 1885, were equal to the average year, and in corn considerably better. The yield of wheat was given at 27,013,000 bushels, which was a little more than California was credited with, and less by five million than Minnesota. The corn crop was given at 15,345,000 bushels. The corn acreage was set down at 530,000 acres.

The Dakota oat crop was given at 13,220,000 bushels, a large falling off from 1884, due principally to the loss of acreage sown to this grain, which amounted to over three hundred thousand acres. The flax crop showed an increase over the previous year, being 2,232,788 bushels. The total flax crop of the western states amounted to 11,000,000 bushels. Rye, barley, potatoes and hay yielded an average crop, perhaps a slight increase over the average.

Late in July, 1886, at a meeting of the Farmers' Alliance at Aberdeen, small grain crop reports were obtained from individual farmers from a number of representative counties. The weather had been unfavorable and there was apprehension of a serious failure throughout the Northwest. From these reports it was gleaned, concerning the wheat crop which was then made, that:

Brown County's yield ran all the way from one-half a crop to one-eighth. Grand Forks County, short 20 to 25 per cent. (The Red River Valley and the southeastern section bordering the Missouri and Big Sioux rivers had been favored with more moisture than the other sections of the territory.) Brookings County, wheat, half crop. Oats, total failure. Cass County, appearances promising. Kingsbury County, two-thirds crop. Day County, serious in western half. There would be two-thirds wheat crop in the eastern half. Sanborn County, two-thirds; flax poor. Faulk County, one-half crop. Marshall County, nearly a full crop. Aurora County, two-thirds crop. Beadle County, half crop a liberal estimate; much grain not worth cutting. Stutsman, LaMoure and Dickey counties, not above one-half.

The substance of the report of the alliance was that outside of the Red River Valley, wheat would yield not more than half a crop, and like conditions applied to adjoining states.

The grand total of land newly filed on and purchased by immigrants for settlement during the year 1886 was estimated at over four million acres, taken from the records of the various United States land offices in the territory, or 6,250 square miles, an area, considered in a solid body, larger by 320 square miles than the combined area of Connecticut and Rhode Island. The total increase of population for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, was estimated by the territorial immigration commissioner, Mr. Dunlap, an efficient and conscientious officer and citizen, at eighty-five thousand, said to have been the largest population increase of any consecutive twelve months in the career of the territory, giving to the territory on that date a population of one-half million. At the close of the year, adding the immigration of the months of July, August, September, October and November, estimated at twenty-five thousand, the same authority gave the population of the territory at 525,000.

Railway construction was quite active during the year. There were 679 miles of railroad completed and opened to traffic, and about three hundred and forty miles additional graded. The railroad centers of the territory were placed in groups by the immigration office, giving Aberdeen and Fargo each five lines, Sioux Falls and Watertown each four lines, Grand Forks, Huron, Jamestown, Mitchell, Redfield and Yankton each three lines. Of these cities, Fargo, Sioux Falls, Watertown and Aberdeen had distinct lines of three railway companies, while Aberdeen and Watertown had a fourth line under way. The Northwestern was also extending its Rapid City line to Fort Meade and Sturgis, and had projected a line through the mountains to Deadwood.

THE TREATY BILL

A census of the Dakota or Sioux Indian Nation of Dakota was taken and completed by the Government in the year 1866, presumably to promote a just and equitable distribution of the moneys and goods and the land allotments provided for under the Dawes bill, then pending for the opening of a large tract of the reservation. The count was made by the agents at the several agencies by direction of the commissioner of Indian affairs, Edward Atkins, and the returns gave a description of each Indian, his parentage and the band to which he belonged. The total number of Sioux Indians on the reservation entitled to rations was found to be 23,831, of whom 5,723 were male adults, 7,455 female adults, 5,320 males under eighteen years of age, and 5,333 females under sixteen years of age. The number of Indians at the different agencies at that time were given as follows: Standing Rock, 4,609; Crow Creek, 1,023; Lower Brule, 1,220; Cheyenne River, 2,937; Pine Ridge, 4,883; Santee, 1,122; Rosebud, 8,036. (The Yanktons and Sissetons were not included, they having no interest in the great reservation.)

Col. Hughes East, register of the Yankton land office and indirectly and officially interested in the passage of the Dawes bill, stated that while the bill had already been passed by the Senate, the House was unwilling to concur until certain provisions giving certain railroad corporations privileges, to the exclusion of others, be eliminated. John D. Lawler, of the Milwaukee, was at Washington in the interest of the bill, and was opposing any changes in the Senate measure. The success of the bill was shadowed with doubt. It finally failed.

Hon. P. F. McClure, mayor of Pierre, spent several months in Washington during 1886, while Congress was in session, and was there also during the short session of 1886-87, promoting the passage of the Dawes bill for opening the reservation. He was assisted by Mr. MacManima, Delegate Gifford, Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, who manifested sincere friendliness in all Dakota matters, and a number of congressmen, and solidly supported by the people of the territory of all sections, but their combined efforts were not sufficient to induce the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House to report the bill. McClure's efforts were highly praised by those who were familiar with his work. Had the bill been reported, it would have passed. The majority of Congress had little sympathy with any sentiment that would keep so large a body of land in a situation where it could be of no benefit to either Indians or whites, and great detriment to the further development of the territory, particularly the Black Hills, now regarded as the most important mineral section of the United States. There was a growing sentiment that Congress should enact a law declaring the portion of the reservation, which had been partially treated for, open, and authorizing the Government to settle with the Indians on an equitable basis, afterwards.

From the best information that could be obtained at the time, there were two or three thousand immigrants then encamped along the Missouri River, from Chamberlain to Pierre, waiting for the opening of the reserve, and it was apprehended that it would be necessary to employ a military force to prevent these whites from invading the Indian country.

FIRST RAILROAD TO THE BLACK HILLS

Railway building was a dormant industry throughout the United States during the year 1885, according to the year's summary given out by the Railway Age, an acknowledged authority, which said that the principal activity had been in the southern states and in the country between the Missouri River and the Pacific states and territories. The leading extension of the year was that of the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley line of the Chicago & Northwestern System, from Valentine, Neb., west and north 191 miles, to Buffalo Gap, Dak., from which point it was to be pushed in the spring of 1886 to Rapid City. Other lines in Dakota were the Northwestern from Centreville to Yankton and the James River Valley from Jamestown to LaMoure.

Buffalo Gap, in the Black Hills, was a railroad town and townsite, and was inaugurated as a business center and railway point by the railroad company about the first of December, 1885, by an auction sale of city lots that eclipsed, in the amount of cash sales, any similar incident during the construction of the line, amounting in the aggregate to over fifty thousand dollars. The production of tin was a growing and promising industry in the Black Hills, and the completion of the road to Buffalo Gap was celebrated by appropriate ceremonies, in which about one thousand people participated, and the driving of a tin spike. Judge Reno was president of the day. Addresses were made by Judge Sprague and John H. King, and the tin spike was driven by Hon. George Boland, with a mica mallet, amid the shrill whistles of three locomotives, whose echo was heard far up in the Hills. Buffalo Gap was the station for the famous Hot Springs.

RAILROAD TO RAPID CITY

The Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railway was extended from Buffalo Gap to Rapid City during the spring and early summer of 1886, and a formal celebration of the completion of the road and its opening for traffic was held at Rapid City on the 4th of July, on which occasion Independence Day was appropriately observed, and lent its patriotic fervor to the proceedings. The first locomotive arrived on the same occasion. The city was thronged by two thousand people, at least, representing every mining camp and live-stock ranch and lumber camp, with scores of tourists of the adventurous sort who were spending the heated term at some of the natural beauty spots with which the Hills abounded. It was claimed there was never such another assemblage, anywhere, where the variety of garb was so striking and so extensive. The war whoop of the wild savage was also present, but from motives of prudence was not exhibited. As a rule the ladies of the city and the Hills were becomingly attired and formed a charming feature of the grand occasion, and gave to the motley assemblage its most civilized aspect, but the masculine element would have furnished a dozen complete equipments for a wild-west show, and would have eclipsed them in variety and originality of their costumes, and in their daring feats of broncho riding and their expert horsemanship generally. There were hundreds of youngsters who had never seen a railroad car, and some grown ones that could recall the only one they had rode in. The Indians were amazed—they recognized the locomotive as a monster of tremendous strength and speed, but so much of the products of civilization coming so abruptly and with such shrieks and clanging of bells bewildered them. They realized that they were vanquished as far as their nomadic life was concerned, and doubtless counseled together where their future place in the country would be.

There were seven sleeping-cars in the train that brought the officers of the road and hundreds of visitors to the celebration. There was a brass band and a street parade that would have been envied by eastern cities of a hundred thousand population. The addresses were appropriate, well timed and characteristic. Hon. John Brennan spoke for the municipality, and General Manager Fitch for the railway. Judge Levi Magee made an excellent address for the Black Hills generally, and Lawyer Wood and P. B. McCarthy contributed to the intellectual feast. The citizens generally acted as a reception committee and diligently looked after the comfort of their guests, for the day was as fervid with warmth as the people were with enthusiasm.

The opening of the gateway to the Eldorado of Western Dakota, with its gold-seamed mountains and fruitful lands, had been observed appropriately and decorously, and with the dignified ceremonies that distinguish the formal public recognition of a great and lasting and valuable achievement. And more than this, the development of the Black Hills railway system was now inaugurated.

February 5th the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley Railway Company filed its plat at the Deadwood Land Office for its extension from Rapid City, about February 1, 1886. The line terminated at a point one and a half miles east of Fort Meade and eighteen miles from Deadwood. The intention of the company was to build to Deadwood during the year, but its main line was projected west up the Belle Fourche Valley. The survey for the road was made the same month of the Black Hills winter season.

In 1886 the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company extended its James River line from Columbia, Brown County, to beyond the forty-sixth parallel, in township 129, range 59, Dickey County. Distance, forty miles. It also built its extension from Salem, McCook County, to Mitchell in 1886, founding the towns of Fulton and Spencer and was at work grading its extension to Forest City, Potter County, from Redfield. It built its line, however, to Gettysburg, and did not go through to the Missouri.

The immigration commissioner, Lauren Dunlap, claimed that railroad building in July was moderately active and in keeping with the growth and activity that was manifested throughout the territory. He claimed that the railroads had made Dakota what it was, which was serious error of judgment, for it would have been better and nearer the mark to have said that the territory had made the railroads. The incoming thousands, estimated at 50,000 for the past year, were not attracted hither by railroads, but by the then well known and admitted natural advantages and valuable resources of the territory, and the railroads were impelled and attracted by the like influences—and by the guarantee of abundant business which the increasing population would develop.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway was building from Ipswich west through Edmunds County, and also from Andover north through Day and Marshall counties into Sargent County in the central portion of Dakota. In the extreme south the same company was building from Portland to Mitchell, crossing the southwestern part of Hutchinson County and continuing north along its western boundary. It also sent a branch line west into Douglas County from the station at Tripp, grading to Armour. The new map of the Milwaukee system, issued that year, showed an extension from Flandreau to Ortonville, Minn., also a spur from Ellendale in a northeasterly direction.

The Chicago and Northwestern company was engaged in building from Columbia, Brown County, through Dickey and LaMoure counties to LaMoure. The completion of this line as indicated would furnish an additional railroad bond between South and North Dakota, and would strengthen the claim of the one state element that the two sections were rapidly forming close and lasting commercial connections. The extension of the Northwestern west from Redfield through Faulk County had been determined upon.

The St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba was building from Devil's Lake west by north across the Big Coulee country. It was claimed to be the intention of this corporation to build a line through to Mouse River, and across North Dakota into Montana, and another line into the Turtle Mountains.

The Manitoba Company made preparations during the winter of 1886-7 for building several hundreds of miles of new road during the coming year. The company was in a position financially to make the most extensive and important forward move yet undertaken by any distinctly private railway corporation in the northwestern country. It was quite generally believed that all the most desirable lands in the territory would be covered by railways during the ensuing twelve months, as both the Milwaukee and Northwestern systems were also preparing for notable extensions.

The amount of vacant government land, not including the reservations set apart and occupied as Indian reservations, amounted to 18,500,000 acres, nearly all of it in the northern half of the territory. In the Bismarck Land District alone there was over twelve million five hundred thousand acres, two-thirds of the whole. In the Devil's Lake Land District there were nearly four million acres. In the Deadwood (Black Hills) District about seven hundred thousand acres. In the Aberdeen District about six hundred thousand acres. The Huron Land District had about fifty thousand acres of untaken land, and was to be classed in 1887 with the relinquishment districts, which would embrace the Yankton, Mitchell, Watertown, Fargo and Grand Forks districts, where the new filings would be made in practically all cases on lands previously taken up and relinquished by the original claimant or contested for various causes.

Among the new railway lines projected in 1886 by the Manitoba was the Willmar and Sioux Falls, which was also projected to continue on to the Missouri River at Yankton. Graders were already at work on the Sioux Falls extension. The Manitoba company would also build from Watertown to Huron and it was expected would extend that line from Huron to the Missouri River at a point near Fort Thompson, on the Crow Creek Reservation, and from thence to the Black Hills when the Indian reservation barrier should be removed. The longest and most important stretch of railway to be constructed by this corporation would be what is termed its Fort Buford Extension. This line was projected to run from Devil's Lake straight across the territory to near the mouth of the Yellowstone at Fort Buford, passing through Benson, DeSmet, McHenry, Stevens, Montraille, Flannery and Buford counties as at that time defined. The total length would be not far from 250 miles, and it would pass through a section of the territory where at that time there was no railroad within a hundred miles.

It was given out in December, 1866, that President J. J. Hill of the Manitoba Railroad (now the Great Northern), was in Washington promoting the passage of a bill through Congress to permit his line to pass over the Mandan Indian Reservation at Fort Berthold, Dakota. It is learned from this movement of the daring designs of the Northwestern railroad king to span the western portion of the United States, in the extreme north, with a railway to the Pacific. Mr. Hill avowed his purpose to build westward from Devil's Lake and cross the reservation on the line between townships 153 and 154, to follow the Missouri River Valley by the most convenient route to the valley of Milk River, through that valley to Fort Assinaboine, and thence southwesterly to the Great Falls of the Missouri above Fort Benton. He was able to secure the consent of Congress to his enterprise.

The Milwaukee company announced its purpose to build from Madison, Lake County, north through the counties of Kingsbury, Hamlin and Clark, to Bristol, Day County, there to connect with its Ortonville and Aberdeen line, crossing the Northwestern at Lake Preston, in 1886. Also designed to complete its line between Madison and Bristol, over half of which had already been built. The line was to form a part of the second principal iron highway between North and South Dakota and would unite with the Northern Pacific at Dawson in Kidder County. A third line was contemplated running just east of the Missouri River to Bismarck.

The occupation of the public lands and the opening of farms and building of farm houses, and other rural improvements used during the year, had kept pace with the average of former years since the beginning of this remarkable and unprecedented decade.

Among the railway extensions inaugurated in 1886 was one of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Company, southward from Roscoe in Edmunds County, to Orient, on the boundary line between Faulk and Hand counties. This line was projected to meet the northwestward extension of the same company from Scotland or Tripp into Douglas County, which was extended to Armour and thence to Corsica in northern Douglas County.

The Milwaukee & St. Paul surveyors ran a line from Roscoe, Edmunds County, to Bismarck. There was also a company of surveyors at work on the Ordway, Bismarck and Northwestern in McIntosh County, which line was said to be a continuation of the Minneapolis and Pacific. The surveyors were also at work on the Bismarck & Aberdeen, and had progressed as far as Coal Larson. Right-of-way had been secured to the latter point.

Sioux Falls had secured an agreement with the Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern, which would probably be completed during the year, and would give to the granite city an enviable prominence as a railroad center and strengthen its claims as a manufacturing and commercial center. It had become apparent that the enterprising railway companies looked upon Sioux Falls as a desirable point for future business. At a special election held about the middle of February, 1886, the Sioux Falls people voted to donate $60,000 of city bonds to the Burlington company, which was to be completed to that city by the following August. The vote was nearly unanimous in favor of the donation, being 679 in favor of the donation to 38 against. Ex-Delegate Pettigrew is not found at Washington this winter, being detained at home where he is engaged in securing the extension of the Burlington from Rock Rapids, Iowa, to Sioux Falls. Mr. Pettigrew's motto was "Business before pleasure," and he knew that Dakota's interests were being attended to by a number of qualified citizens. Speaking of the new road, Mr. Pettigrew said:

The engineers had been busily at work all along the line until our last heavy snow (late in March) forced them to suspend. I saw the president of the road in Chicago recently, and he gives us hope of the speedy completion of the line.

In May, 1887, the Rapid City board of trade made a compact with Mr. E. B. Chapman to build a narrow gauge railroad west from that point. Mr. Chapman's proposition was "to build and equip a narrow gauge railroad to such point west of Rapid City as may be settled by a survey, the corporation of Rapid City to pay him $500 per mile for thirty miles, the road to be in operation eighteen months from date, or in November, 1889." An agreement was made on this basis, the contract signed and sealed at a public meeting where over ten thousand dollars was subscribed. It was expected at this time that the road would extend ultimately to the Wyoming oil fields.

The Northwestern Railroad from Salem to Mitchell was completed to the latter point May 24, 1887, giving Sioux Falls direct connection with Mitchell, the principal center of the Milwaukee system. The line was known as the "Omaha," and was a subdivision of the Northwestern system. Two new towns, Fulton and Spencer, were located on the new line.

PIERCE TENDERS HIS RESIGNATION

Gilbert A. Pierce had been governor of Dakota for about two and a half years, the larger portion of the time under a democratic administration, when, in November, 1886, he tendered his resignation of the office while on a visit to Washington. His letter of resignation, explaining why he resigned, is given herewith:

Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., November 15, 1886.

Mr. President: I hereby tender my resignation as governor of the Territory of Dakota. Offices of this character were made an exception to the rules governing removals from office, laid down by you at the opening of your administration, but you have kindly abstained from interference with me, and have never by act or word indicated that my continuance in office was not entirely acceptable. I tender my resignation now because the pressure for the place subjects you to constant annoyance, and because I fear that my own usefulness is impaired by the constant agitation of the question of change. Throughout my incumbency of the office I have met nothing but personal kindness and official courtesy at your hands and those of your advisors. The most cordial support has been afforded me, and my relations in this respect have been most pleasant and agreeable. This treatment of one whose political affiliations are not those of the dominant party shows a spirit of tolerance which lends dignity to your high office and demands this frank acknowledgement from me. With the assurance, Mr. President, of my deep obligations for your courtesy, and with a sincere wish for your personal welfare, I remain,

With great respect, your obedient servant,

GILBERT A. PIERCE.

There were no public manifestations of regret at the resignation of Mr. Pierce. His administration, however, had not been discreditable, nor was it marked by any policy that left an impression on the progress of Dakota. He lived at the capital, and made an occasional trip to some neighboring city. He attended promptly to the cry for relief when Spink County called upon him to protect her from her county seat brigands. He deserved credit for his efforts, though unavailable, to prevent the legislative extravagance of the session of 1885.

Accompanied by Mrs. Pierce and their daughter, also by Secretary and Mrs. McCormack, State Treasurer Raymond and Mrs. Raymond, State Auditor E. C. Caldwell and Mrs. Caldwell, Immigration Commissioner Lauren Dunlap, Mrs. Dunlap and Miss Jeannie Dunlap, he made an official trip of observation and brief inspection of the various territorial, educational and penal and charitable institutions during the month of May, 1886. The party was provided with a special car contributed for the occasion by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The journey was made the occasion of formal social entertainments at the various places where public institutions were located. The governor was thoroughly at home in the northern portion of the territory, and evidently found its communities more congenial than those of some of the other sections, and possibly he was even then enjoying a reflection that he would be in a position to speak for the north in the halls of Congress, if there should be no change in the program.

The resignation of Mr. Pierce found the President unprepared to appoint the man he had selected for the place some months previous, and he therefore took no action upon the resignation for some weeks, claiming that he disliked to ignore the splendid endorsements Ziebach had received, and owing to the irreconcilable differences among the democrats of the territory, he did not feel justified in appointing him.

About the last of October the President disposed of Captain Ziebach's campaign for the governorship by appointing him receiver of the Yankton Land Office, to succeed Joseph Chandler, resigned. The President's selection for the position of governor had probably been decided upon, but the time was not ripe for the appointment, which would go to the newly appointed judge of the Fifth District when he had become better acquainted with territorial conditions. There may have been a partiality in the mind of the President for but one State of Dakota. He knew of the strong prevailing sentiment in Dakota in favor of division, but this sentiment had diminished already under the strenuous opposition of the Ordway-Johnson faction of the democracy of the territory, whose change of front, as manifested by their official action in their committee meetings and in their refraining to participate in the statehood movement, may have led the President to expect that he would be able through a judicious territorial executive, to build up the one-state plan. Ziebach had been conspicuous as a supporter of division, and it was stated that the President explained as his reason for not appointing Ziebach that the democrats of the territory were not united, that the question of division was playing havoc with them, hence he thought it best to select a new man who had not identified himself with any faction or any section.

Pierce was permitted to remain as governor for a number of weeks after his resignation was tendered, and until after the convening of the Legislature of 1887. In the meantime, about the middle of December, 1886, the President had concluded that his favorite candidate had been in Dakota long enough to be considered a Dakotan under the ironclad rule of the administration that none but Dakotans should be appointed, and Louis Kossuth Church, judge of the Huron District, was appointed. Mr. Day, the national committeeman, gave out the following regarding the appointment:

I really never made any application for the governorship. Ziebach was my man all the time, and he ought to have had the appointment, considering what he had done for the party in the territory. The President was in favor of Church, having been favorably impressed with the work he did towards reform while in the New York State Assembly, but the strong endorsements Ziebach and myself received made him hesitate. Fearing that were we to continue the fight for the place, the President would delay making the appointment until after the Legislature convened, I went to him and inquired if the appointment would be made at once if we agreed upon one man. He said it would. I then withdrew all the papers that Ziebach and I had filed, and gave Church an endorsement, by filing a letter similar to the following:

Washington, December 16, 1886.

His Excellency, President Cleveland.

Sir: I desire to withdraw all papers now on file endorsing me for governor of Dakota, and most respectfully ask for the appointment of Judge L. K. Church to that position at the very earliest practicable moment. Have telegraphed to that effect.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. H. DAY.

Within a half hour the appointment was made.

It was presumed at the time that Church would be promptly confirmed, his predecessor having resigned voluntarily, and would be able to enter upon his gubernatorial duties before the Legislature met the following January, but the appointment was held up in the Senate for several weeks, due to the opposition of his predecessor, Judge Church afterwards alleged, who desired a pledge regarding some of the territorial appointments to be made during the session, which Governor Church was loath to give.

CHAPTER XCVIII

LOUIS K. CHURCH, GOVERNOR—INSANE HOSPITAL DISASTER

1887

SEVENTEENTH SESSION OF THE DAKOTA LEGISLATURE—THE SECOND MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR PIERCE—LOUIS KOSSUTH CHURCH BECOMES GOVERNOR DURING THE SESSION, PRECEDED FOR A BRIEF TIME BY ACTING GOVERNOR MCCORMICK—THE SIOUX FALLS CONSTITUTION OF 1885 COMMENDED—SOLDIER'S HOME LAW ENACTED—A COMPILATION OF THE LAWS OF THE TERRITORY AUTHORIZED—THE LAW OF 1883 AUTHORIZING THE CAPITAL COMMISSION LEGALIZED—SALE OF TERRITORIAL BONDS—GOVERNOR APPOINTS TERRITORIAL OFFICERS—SPRING BREAK-UP OF THE MISSOURI INUNDATES THE BOTTOM LANDS—DAKOTA IN CONGRESS—CERTAIN LEGISLATION FORBIDDEN—GOVERNOR CHURCH OPPOSES A DIVISION OF THE TERRITORY—ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN INDIAN SCHOOLS—PARTISAN CONTEST TO OBTAIN CONTROL OF DAKOTA INSANE HOSPITAL—GOVERNOR CHURCH REFUSES TO APPROVE PLANS FOR NEW BUILDINGS—DEMANDS RESIGNATION OF MEMBERS OF THE BOARD AS A CONDITION OF APPROVAL—BOARD REFUSES TO VACATE—GOVERNOR APPOINTS NEW MEMBERS—CONTEST TAKEN INTO COURT AND GOVERNOR SUSTAINED—ENTIRE NEW BOARD APPOINTED—CONTRACTS FOR BUILDINGS LET AFTER A YEAR'S DELAY—WORK PROGRESSES UNDER INCOMPETENT MANAGEMENT—FAULTY CONSTRUCTION AND POOR MATERIAL, FOLLOWED BY FALLING WALLS—PROVES FATAL TO TWO WORKMEN—GRAND JURY INDICTS BUILDING OVERSEER AND CONTRACTOR—TRIBUTE TO JOHN R. GAMBLE.

The seventeenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota convened at Bismarck on Tuesday, January 11, 1887, at 12 o'clock M. The territory had been divided into twenty-three legislative districts by the apportionment made by the preceding Legislature, which consisted of forty-eight members of the House of Representatives and twenty-four members of the Council, and the present legislative body was composed of an equal number apportioned among twenty-three legislative districts. The counties composing the several districts and the names of the councilmen and members of the House from each district composing the present Legislative Assembly were as given in the subjoined list: First District—Union, Clay and Lincoln counties. Councilman, E. V. Erickson, Union. Representatives, J. V. White, Clay, and F. R. Aikens, Lincoln. Second District—Yankton, Hutchinson and Turner counties. Councilman, E. G. Smith, Yankton. Representatives, F. A. Morris and Jacob Schnaidt, of Hutchinson, and J. P. Ward, of Turner. Third District—Bon Homme, Douglas and Charles Mix counties. Councilman, T. O. Bogert, of Bon Homme. Representative, J. G. Jones, of Charles Mix. Fourth District—Minnehaha, McCook and Hanson counties. Councilman, Melvin Grigsby, of Minnehaha. Representatives, W. R. Burkholder, of Minnehaha, E. W. Terrill, of McCook, and C. I. Millmore, of Hanson. Fifth District—Davison, Aurora and Brule counties. Councilman, J. D. Lawler, of Davison. Representatives, T. F. Mentzer, of Davison, and Boetius Sullivan, of Aurora. Sixth District—Moody Lake and Miner counties. Councilman, T. S. Martin, of Lake. Representatives, J. H. Patten, of Miner, and John Hobart, of Moody. Seventh District—Brookings, Kingsbury, Hamlin and Deuel counties. Councilman, G. A. Matthews, of Brookings County. Representatives, A. Harkins, of Deuel, and William Glendenning, of Kingsbury. Eighth District—Beadle, Sanborn and Jerauld counties. Councilman, John Cain, of Beadle. Representatives, Wilson Wise, of Sanborn, and D. F. Royer, of Jerauld. Ninth District—Spink and Clark counties. Councilman, E. W. Foster, of Spink. Representatives, F. C. Mariner, of Spink, and W. N. Berry, of Clark. Tenth District—Hand, Faulk, Potter, Walworth and Campbell counties. Councilmen, E. P. Sheldon, of Hand; A. J. Pruitt, of Potter, and J. R. Dutch, of Faulk. Eleventh District—Hyde, Hughes, Sully and Buffalo counties. Councilman, C. D. Mead, of Hughes. Representatives, G. C. Crosc, of Hyde, and J. M. Moore, of Sully. Twelfth District—Codington, Grant, Roberts and Day counties. Councilman, C. H. Sheldon, of Day. Representatives, G. B. Williams, of Grant, and O. Gestley, of Codington. Thirteenth District—Marshall, Brown, Edmunds and McPherson counties. Councilman, A. R. Campbell, of Brown. Representatives, W. R. Ruggles, of Edmunds, and J. H. Fletcher, of Brown. Fourteenth District—Fall River, Custer, Pennington, Lawrence and Butte counties. Councilmen, S. P. Wells, of Pennington, and Frank J. Washabaugh, of Lawrence. Representatives, S. P. Romans and John D. Patton, of Lawrence, and A. S. Stewart, of Fall River. Fifteenth District—Dickey, Sargent, McIntosh and Richland counties. Councilman, P. J. McCumber, of Richland. Representatives, A. M. Cook, of Sargent, and H. J. Mallory, of Dickey. Sixteenth District—Cass County. Councilman, H. Galloway. Representatives, J. W. Burnham and W. J. Hawks, of Cass. Seventeenth District—Ransom, LaMoure, Logan and Barnes counties. Councilman, J. S. Weiser, of Barnes. Representatives, T. M. Elliott, of Ransom, R. McDonald, of Barnes. Eighteenth District—Traill, Steele and Griggs counties. Councilman, J. F. Selby, of Traill. Representatives, D. W. Sprague, of Steele, and E. H. Adams, of Griggs. Nineteenth District—Grand Forks County. Councilman, W. T. Collins, of Grand Forks. Representatives, L. O. Wyman and W. H. Fellows, of Grand Forks. Twentieth District—Walsh, Blaine and Ramsey counties. Councilman, Roger Allen, of Walsh. Representatives, A. Ensign, of Ramsey, and Donald Stewart, of Walsh. Twenty-first District—Pembina, Cavalier, Towner, Rolette and Bottineau counties. Councilman, R. C. Donovan, Pembina. Representatives, John Bidlake, Pembina, and John Ely, of Bottineau. Twenty-second District—Stutsman, Foster, Nelson, Wells, Benson, DeSmet, Stanton, McHenry and Eddy counties. Councilman, W. E. Dodge, of Stutsman. Representatives, T. M. Shook, of Benson, and B. S. Dodds, of Nelson. Twenty-third District—Emmons, Kidder, Burleigh, Sheridan, McLean, Mercer, Norton, Boreman, Hettinger, Bowman, Villard, Billings, Stark, Williams, Dunn, Oliver, McKenzie, Allred, Wallace, Garfield, Ward, Stevens, Wynn, Renville, Mountraille, Flannery and Buford counties. Councilman, Alex Hughes, of Burleigh. Representatives, E. A. Williams, of Burleigh, and F. Greene, of Morton.

In the organization of the two houses the same general issue was encountered as had marked the contest in the election of delegate to Congress at the November election. It was the south versus the north.

On calling the roll of the councilmen-elect, the following members responded to their names:

First District, E. C. Erickson, Union County; Second District, A. L. Van-Osdel, Yankton County; Third District, Robert Dollard, Bon Homme County; Fourth District, C. A. Soderberg, Minnehaha County; Fifth District, J. C. Ryan, Aurora County; Sixth District, J. H. Patton, Miner County; Seventh District, I. Atkinson, Brookings County; Eighth District, Robert Lowery, Beadle County; Ninth District, D. W. Poindexter, Spink County; Tenth District, J. A. Woolhiser, Hand County; Eleventh District, Coc I. Crawford, Hughes County; Twelfth District, M. H. Cooper, Codington County; Thirteenth District, A. W. Campbell, Brown County; Fourteenth District, Frank J. Washabaugh, Lawrence County, James Halley, Pennington County; Fifteenth District, J. H. Miller, Richland County; Sixteenth District, Smith Stimmel, Cass County; Seventeenth District, G. A. Harstad, Traill County; Eighteenth District, Hugh MacDonald,

LOUIS KOSSUTH CHURCH

Ninth governor of Dakota Territory, 1887-89

THE NEW YORK
PUBLIC LIBRARY

ASTOR LENOX AND
TILDEN FOUNDATIONS

La Moure County; Nineteenth District, George H. Walsh, Grand Forks County; Twentieth District, Roger Ale, Traill County; Twenty-first District, P. Cameron, Pembina County; Twenty-second District, S. L. Glaspell, Stutsman County; Twenty-third District, Meek Hughes, Burleigh County.

By a combination based largely on the removal of the United States Court from Yankton to Mitchell, the Council was organized in the interest of the north, by securing, in addition to its nine members, G. A. Matthews, of Brookings, A. R. Campbell, of Brown, C. H. Sheldon, of Day, and J. D. Lawler, of Davison.

The Council was organized by the election of G. A. Matthews, of Brookings, president; T. A. Kingsbury, of Codington, secretary; assistant secretary, Robert Wallace, of Stutsman; sergeant-at-arms, W. B. Troy, of Richland; assistant sergeant-at-arms, Sidney Hitsman, of Barnes; chaplain, C. Benham, of Bismarck.

The southern members, who were in a minority of one, voted for E. W. Foster, of Spink County, for president.

The organization of the House was made by the southern members. The officers chosen were: For speaker, George C. Crose, of Hyde County; for chief clerk, W. G. Eakins, of Deuel County; first assistant clerk, J. G. Hamilton, of Grand Forks; second assistant clerk, J. W. Cone, Brule County; sergeant-at-arms, H. C. Roachpaugh, of Lawrence County; assistant sergeant-at-arms, O. W. Russell, of Brown; enrolling clerk, O. K. Ballard, of Lincoln; assistant enrolling clerk, Clara J. Kelly, of Sanborn; messenger, David Shield, of Moody; watchman, M. Slick, of Emmons; chaplain, A. F. Cook, of Burleigh; postmaster, H. E. Ward, of Stutsman.

Governor Pierce delivered his message on the second day. Although Governor Church had been appointed to succeed Pierce nearly a month prior to the convening of the Legislature, there had been some delay in the Senate over his confirmation, and he was still awaiting his commission. At the conclusion of Governor Pierce's message, Governor Church was formally introduced as the heir expectant, and made a brief address expressing his gratification at confronting such an intelligent appearing body of lawmakers, and promised himself much pleasure from his association with them, both officially and socially. As governor, he expected to be governed entirely and absolutely by what he conceived to be the best interests of the over half a million people within the jurisdiction of Dakota, and the welfare of the entire territory would elicit his best and most conscientious efforts.

On the second day of the session, the two houses having assembled in joint convention in the hall of the House of Representatives, Governor Pierce delivered his second biennial message in person, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Council and House of Representatives.

Once more the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota has assembled in obedience to law. With few exceptions the faces of those who compose this General Assembly are new to these halls. In the exercise of their sovereign will and pleasure the people have seen fit to fill the places of their former servants with other men, who have gained in daily intercourse with them, their esteem and confidence. But while the personnel of law-making bodies may change, legislative authority and responsibility remain. Men die, officials change, but government endures. For the time being this assemblage is empowered to speak and act for the 500,000 people who comprise the population of this territory. It is a grave responsibility. How you shall perform this representative work most faithfully and effectively is a question that may well inspire anxious thought and serious reflection.

In many respects, gentlemen, you come here at an auspicious time and under favorable conditions. I do not remember a period when better or kindlier feeling has prevailed; and in spite of the hard times so generally felt throughout the Union, there has never been an assemblage of the Legislature which found the fiscal concerns of the territory in so prosperous a condition. Taxation for territorial purposes is now so light as to be scarcely felt by the people, and can be reduced still further in the near future. The treasury shows a balance on hand not only sufficient to pay all proper expenses of the Territorial Government, and all reasonable appropriations, but to pay off all the bonded indebtedness of the territory, which under the option contained in the law, can be called at this time.

Ninety thousand dollars of bonds, which it was provided might be paid by the territory at its option within five years of their issue, have already been called for by the treasurer, but owing to the neglect of the law to provide exactly how this call might be issued, and under what circumstances interest on such bonds should thereafter cease, holders have refused to present them for redemption. This difficulty should be promptly met by the enactment of a law permitting the treasurer to take advantage of the option reserved, and holders required to either refund the bonds at a lower rate of interest, or present them for redemption. The territory is paying about fourteen dollars per day on these bonds, which can be stopped at once if the Legislature will grant the necessary authority.

The bonds authorized by the last Legislature, amounting to $176,000, were sold at 103 2-10 and the premium, amounting to $5,638.40, was credited to the territory on the books of the treasurer.

This is the first instance in the history of the territory where bonds have sold at a premium; indeed, as late as the summer of 1884, a similar class of bonds were sold at 98 and 98½. While the sale, therefore was in some respects gratifying, and the growth of confidence in the financial standing of Dakota very encouraging, there is no question but that the 6 per cent bonds of the territory are worth much more than the amount received. Two or three things have operated to injure, in some degree, our financial standing. One is the fact that Dakota is still in the territorial condition, territorial bonds being unpopular as a rule. And there is the existence of the outstanding territorial warrants, issued under the law providing for the Capital Commission. In some places a non-payment of these warrants by the treasurer, seemed to give the impression that the territory was either unable to pay, or else was endeavoring to repudiate her obligations. With the latter obstacle removed, I believe that 4 per cent bonds can be sold at par, and if long-time bonds should be issued, the interest can be made even less than that named. It will not be a year before our 6 per cent bonds having ten years to run will be worth at least 1.12 or 1.15. I am informed that such bonds cannot be purchased today for less than 1.10.

The total receipts from all sources for the biennial period covered by the treasurer's report, including balance on hand, at the close of 1884, were $1,395,216.67.

The total amount paid out for same period was $1,162,234.04, leaving a balance in the treasury, November 30, 1886, of $232,982.63. Deducting the amount paid to counties as their share of railroad tax, the amount of bonds, etc., for permanent improvements of public institutions, and we have a balance of $706,278, which represents the amount expended during the biennial period. Take from this the cost of the constitutional convention, the census, the New Orleans exposition, furniture and heating for capitol building, and other extraordinary expenditures not required now, and the total expenditures, less the bond interest, is $538,279.73, for the ordinary expenses of the Territorial Government, or $269,139.86 per year. This sum is divided as follows:

Vermillion University, $30,639.27; Grand Forks University, $26,867.16; Deaf Mute School, $13,860.42; School of Mines, $1,211.41; Madison Normal School, $13,817.67; Spearfish Normal School, $5,488.85; Agricultural College, $21,777.16; total, $113,661.94. Yankton Hospital for Insane, $108,085.20; Jamestown Hospital for Insane, $65,030.89; total, $173,116.18. Sioux Falls penitentiary, $70,923.46; Bismarck penitentiary, $38,885.65; total, $109,809.11. Railway Commission, $13,543.08; adjutant general's office, $2,463.97; militia maintenance, including expense of adjutant general's office, $35,009.88; returning fugitives from justice, $9,241.44; legislative expenses, $21,217.71; board of agriculture, $7,021.44; commissioner of immigration, $11,090.43; attorney general's office, $5,002.99; superintendent and assistant superintendent public instruction, $10,981.69; auditor and auditor's office, $4,982.74; treasurer and treasurer's office, $5,328; board of health, $2,881.64; teacher's institute, $630.50; district attorneys (salaries), $1,500; territorial library, $666.78; court expenses in unorganized counties, $5,803.30; blind, $2,908.46; supervisors of election, $409.20; transportation of arms, $409.82; total, $141,692.50. Grand total, $538,279.73.

At the last session of the Legislature I recommended the discontinuance of the capitol commission, or at least the passage of an act providing for a reappraisement and sale of the property conveyed to the territory, and the payment of the debts contracted by the commission, these debts amounting at that time to between twenty and thirty thousand dollars. Nothing was done, and the commission, with almost unlimited powers, was continued. Something over twenty thousand dollars has been added to the amount outstanding, until the total amount now reaches $52,000, evidenced by territorial warrants drawn on the capitol building fund, but not paid by the treasurer for lack of funds. These warrants are an anomaly in our financial system. They are a constant menace to our credit and detrimental to our good name. The people interested in our securities persist in misunderstanding the attitude of the territory, and protests are received from various quarters against what is called our repudiation of the territory's obligations. An old law provides that all warrants shall be received for taxes, and an application was made a year ago to have them taken for this purpose. To test the case, the treasurer, under my direction, refused to so receive them. Suit was brought and the District Court held that they must be taken. Under the peculiar circumstances, I directed an appeal. This appeal is still pending, although I some time ago requested the attorney general to dismiss it on condition that no more warrants, except those then provided for, were issued, and that the commission would resign and pay the accrued costs.

The property belonging to this fund, worth certainly much more than the debt, should be sold and some plan adopted which will no longer permit these warrants, bearing the official seal of the territory, to be hawked about the country, an embarrassment and disgrace to the people.

The report of the superintendent of public instruction gives a marvelous exhibition of the growth of the territory, both in population and educational advantages. The following table gives a brief summary of the facts contained in the report, for the year ending June 30, 1886;

Total receipts	$2,349,205.54
Expenditures	1,917,258.68
Balance on hand.....	432,990.86
Number of children of school age.....	103,384
Number of teachers employed.....	5,055
Number of schools.....	3,925
Number of schoolhouses.....	3,497
Population in each school.....	129
Sittings in schoolhouses.....	110,111
Value of permanent school property.....	$2,989,696.29

The report of the territorial auditor shows that a vast volume of business has been transacted in his office. Nothing more clearly denotes the growth and development of the territory than the exhibit thus made. I call particular attention to this report and the suggestions contained therein which are based upon the experience of this officer and made after the most painstaking and diligent inquiry. His recommendations regarding the amendment of the revenue law are particularly worthy of consideration.

The commissioner of immigration submits an interesting report. If any one has supposed this office to be a sinecure, the perusal of the report will dispel the idea. The business of the commissioner has steadily grown until his office is now among the busiest of the territorial officials. Inquiries about Dakota have been received from nearly every state and territory in the Union, embracing nearly six thousand separate inquiries in nineteen months. From twenty to thirty thousand persons have been supplied with documents of various kinds. The number of miles of railroad track laid during 1886, as given by the commissioner, is 678, and the total miles of completed road in the territory, 3,491. Several hundred miles are graded also, on which track laying will begin in the spring. One of the most important duties assigned the commissioner, that of collecting local statistics, he has been unable to perform in anything like a thorough and satisfactory manner, owing to defects in the law. Such results as it has been possible to accomplish are submitted with his report. He suggests certain amendments to the law in this, and other respects.

The board of agriculture has accomplished more than was hoped at its formation. It deserves encouragement. Two fairs have been held at Huron which were surprising in their completeness. I believe an experimental farm under the direction of this board, or other competent direction, would be a valuable help to our agricultural interests. We do not want a scheme to provide places for more officials, but a plain, simple provision, for practical experiments, which shall be of service to the farmers of the territory.

The board of dental examiners submit a report showing ninety-eight registered dentists in the territory.

The Railway Commission, while an experiment, has certainly redounded to the public benefit. Perhaps the greatest advantage has accrued from the speedy settlement of disputes between the people and the companies, the railways having for the most part promptly complied with the requests of the commission. All the roads in the territory have reduced the rates of freight since the organization of the commission, and some the passenger rates also. Considering that the powers of the commission are limited, and that the law itself is very crude and incomplete, the people have reason to feel encouraged over the results. Much yet remains to be done, however, before the full measure of usefulness is attained by the commission. How this shall be realized is a difficult problem as the question of transportation always has been. It does seem, however, as if some means ought to be devised whereby the farmers' product could be taken to market with reasonable promptness, and at rates which shall not invite bankruptcy. There has been more than one period within the past few years when the more grain a farmer raised, the poorer he became. This is disastrous to the railroads as well as the farmer, for their hope, as well as his, lies in agricultural prosperity.

The commission recommends that all elevators be licensed and operated under bond, so as to afford the farmer assurance that his grain is safely deposited, and stamping warehouse receipts with the necessary authority to make them negotiable, both excellent propositions.

An extraordinary state of affairs existed in October and November, particularly along the line of the Manitoba Road, it being impossible to furnish cars to carry the grain brought in by the farmers. All the elevators were filled, teams were waiting at the stations to unload, and complaints poured in upon the commissioners from all quarters. Perhaps so serious a blockade is not likely to occur again, but there seems but one remedy for the difficulty, and that is in multiplying the number of cars. The roads will probably take steps in this direction, but as these cars, and indeed a great number of the present complement, must remain idle nine months in the year, the outlay will necessarily be a losing one, and will be incurred with hesitation. We look to the railroads to develop this country, and none of us wish to deter new lines from coming in, but the farmer must live, or roads will have no incentive to come, and would be of no use if they did come.

The school for the deaf, dumb and blind, and dumb at Sioux Falls is in excellent condition and well managed. The appropriation made by the last Legislature for new buildings, etc., seems to have been wisely and judiciously expended. Provision is made for seventy students.

The North Dakota University shows an attendance of fifty-eight students, entirely too small a number considering the character of the institution, the terms, and the excellent course of study offered. I am at loss to account for the limited number of students, for the university appears to be well conducted, and the faculty to compare with that of other educational institutions.

The University of Dakota at Vermillion is in a flourishing condition. The entire attendance last year was 195, and the first week of this year shows 125 students present, which gives promise of a total attendance of 250. The college building proper is a substantial structure. The dormitory built from the appropriation of two years ago is a monstrosity, illy designed, badly constructed, and entirely out of keeping with the rest of the university buildings.

The Agricultural College at Brookings makes a report which is herewith submitted. No institution in Dakota has a brighter future than this college of agriculture. The attendance is already good, 252 students being enrolled for the last college year. There are at present 191 students in the college, and the number for the college year will probably exceed the last. The absence of a proper report from the directors makes it impossible to understand the expenditures of the board. I recommend that the Legislature call for a full and complete exhibit of the transactions of the board, required by law, before making further appropriations.

The Normal School at Madison shows a very large attendance and commends itself as a successful and well managed institution. A calamity befell the school in the destruction of the old building by fire in 1885. The citizens of the town took the responsibility of rebuilding, trusting to the Legislature to make an appropriation to cover the expense. The new building has cost $26,000, and is one of the best as well as cheapest structures for public use in the territory. I recommend that the Legislature make appropriation to cover the cost of the new building.

The School of Mines at Rapid City, provided for by the last Legislature, will open for the reception of pupils next month. Great confidence is expressed in the success of this school. At the special term beginning in February there will be taught mineralogy, geology, chemistry, engineering, assaying, and the practical treatment of ores.

The Yankton Hospital for the Insane has 144 inmates. The present superintendent reports capacity for only 125, although all previous reports have placed the number of patients who could be accommodated at 200.

The Jamestown Hospital has 136 inmates, while the reported capacity is but 100. In making calculations regarding necessary quarters for inmates, much depends upon the views of the superintendent regarding the room required for patients. It is a question which requires examination, but I presume that forty or fifty more patients might be accommodated without any serious difficulty. At the same time I think it undeniable that there will be need of enlarging both hospitals before two years have expired. According to the estimates of the superintendents in charge, the territory will have 600 patients by the end of 1888. But my experience is that these estimates are delusory. Two years ago the superintendent of the Dakota Hospital estimated that by December, 1886, there would be 295 patients to be cared for from South Dakota alone, while the report now submitted shows that there are actually but 144. Still, as I have said, more room will undoubtedly be required. Just what additional improvements will be necessary is a matter for study and investigation.

The trustees of the Yankton Hospital have kept within their appropriations and have expended the money provided for repairs, improvements and buildings, in what seems to me a very judicious and economical manner. Both our institutions seem to be well conducted, indeed, it would be difficult to find a hospital of a similar character in the country which is superior to either of them in this respect. The only apparent reason for complaint is the amount expended for maintenance, which seems too large.

[The governor recommends the enactment of a law that will provide for the official inspection of the hospitals for the insane. While regarding the present conditions of the hospitals as creditable, he believes an occasional inspection would be advantageous in assuring the public that this is true, and would silence unfriendly criticism.—Ed.]

There are eighty-six prisoners in the territorial penitentiary at Sioux Falls. By placing two in a cell this prison will accommodate 144 males and ten females, so that it would not seem necessary to provide further room at present, unless it is desired that prisoners should be entirely separated.

The Bismarck Penitentiary contains fifty-two prisoners, all but one of whom have been sentenced from North Dakota in the past twelve months. The present wing contains room for 144 prisoners, by placing two in a cell. The warden's report advances many strong reasons for the separate confinement of prisoners. Upon this subject of single or dual occupancy of cells depends the question of whether provisions shall be made for enlarging both prisons.

The law of 1885 allowing the governor at his option to open the Bismarck Penitentiary as a reform school, was found inoperative, owing to the failure to confer upon the courts power to sentence prisoners of this class to confinement at Bismarck.

The pardoning of prisoners and their parole receive considerable comment in the message, and a recommendation is made for the establishment of a board of pardons. The message also commends the militia organization of the territory, suggesting the necessity for an amendment fixing a definite number and proper apportionment of the force. The law was faulty in this respect. The message says, "this organization not only saves the people from an annoyance of a demand upon their time for such service, but is found very convenient in case of local disturbance, liable to arise at any moment."

The census of 1885. The entire expense of taking the census of the territory amounted to $44,968.47. The amount allowed for the purpose by the United States was $35,500.89, leaving a balance of $9,467.58. Three thousand, two hundred and forty-one dollars and thirty-three cents of this allowance was withheld by the department to cover the direct tax levied in 1864, and which Dakota, in common with nearly all the states, failed to pay in full. This amount will be returned to the territory as soon as authority can be obtained from Congress. No other territory succeeded in complying with the law, and no other state, save one, did so, and that had an enumeration of only sixty thousand people, and finally saw the entire appropriation she had earned, withheld by their treasury department to cover old indebtedness. It is a simple act of justice on my part to make this public acknowledgment to the supervisors of the census, A. W. Edwards, of Fargo, and R. B. Fiske, of Pierre, for their faithful and untiring efforts in this work. But for the zeal and energy displayed by them the attempt would have been a failure, and the population and resources of the territory would yet be a question of dispute.

Since the adjournment of the Legislature of 1885, the accounts of the Dakota commissioner to the New Orleans Exposition have been received, examined and closed by the officers selected by the Legislature to perform the duty.

The law relating to notary publics classes such persons as territorial officers, and subjects them to the qualifications required by the general law, one of which is that they must be male persons over the age of twenty-one years. I know of no reason, moral or political, why women should not hold the office of notary public. I speak of this here because I have had applications from worthy, intelligent and capable women, which I have been compelled to refuse solely because of sex. The duties of a notary public are not such as to conflict even with the traditional sentiment regarding woman's sphere. I hope the Legislature will so amend the law as to do away with this restriction on account of sex.

SOLDIERS' HOME.—The territory should take the initial steps to construct a home for disabled soldiers. We do not need this now, but the time is coming when it will be required. There are between ten and twenty thousand old soldiers in Dakota. For the most part they are thrifty and prosperous, but misfortune will overtake some, and they should not be left without provision. Our old soldiers must not become mendicants or occupy poor-houses. I recommend the setting aside a certain percentage, either of the revenue or of the bonds redeemed, as a fund for this purpose, and which will in a few years enable us to construct a home worthy of the object to which it is dedicated.

A few car loads of articles sent to the New Orleans Exposition were returned to the territory and stored in the capitol building. They are of little intrinsic value, but will possess much interest in the future as an illustration of the early life of the territory. I hope the Legislature will see to it that the collection is safely kept.

I recommend the passage of a general law providing salaries instead of fees for county officers.

Regarding meetings of public boards for public institutions, the Legislature should fix the mileage and per diem, limit the number of meetings for which per diem or mileage shall be charged, and provide that other or extra sessions of the boards shall be holden without expense to the territory.

[The message recommends the addition of the office of public examiner to the roll of Dakota officers, and supports the recommendation by alleging much carelessness in the administration of county officers, in the approval of worthless bonds, and willful acts of dishonesty. A recommendation is made for a revision and codification of the territorial statutes.—Ed.]

The credit of the territory, as well as the credit of municipalities, is strengthened and improved by the passage of a law of Congress limiting indebtedness. Under that law the territory cannot contract debts to an amount exceeding one per centum on the assessed valuation of the property of the territory. Our assessment being $132,000,000, and our present indebtedness $568,700, it will be seen that we have not yet reached half the prescribed limit. Loans may be made for the erection of penal, charitable and educational institutions, but for no other purpose. It is further provided that no city, town or county shall hereafter make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company or loan its credit to, or use it for the benefit of such company, or borrow money for the use of such company. No municipality, county or other subdivision can become indebted beyond 4 per centum of the value of the taxable property within such corporation. General laws may be framed relating to the subjects prohibited, the purpose of the law of Congress being to prohibit much vicious special legislation, which however great a convenience in some cases is generally pernicious and unfortunate.

STATEHOOD.—The late election shows that Dakota has a population considerably in excess of half a million. The territory is filled with that most stable and permanent of all classes, an agricultural population. It expends $2,000,000 annually for schools. It has expended more than six hundred thousand dollars in the erection of permanent buildings for territorial institutions. It has 3,500 miles of railway, and 300 newspapers. It has 1,000 post-offices and pays $500,000 annually into the postoffice department alone. In all that goes to make up a great commonwealth it is ahead of a dozen of the old states of the Union. It maintains its credit; it pays its debts; it contributes thousands upon thousands to the national treasury. Its people are law-abiding and God-fearing. No army is required to maintain public order. No police are needed to protect citizens in the enjoyment of their property. Respectfully, her people have petitioned for recognition by Congress. Year after year they have seen that body meet and adjourn without action, and this in the face of that ordinance declaring that when any territory possesses 60,000 people it shall be admitted into the sisterhood of states. I do not doubt but what the blessings of statehood are magnified as the disadvantages of a territorial condition are exaggerated. But that does not matter. The people of Dakota are entitled to admission. No one denies it. No one questions it. Upon what hypothesis or ground of reasoning the application is denied, it is difficult to conceive. On the ground of policy it is a blunder; on the ground of partnership, it is something worse. We have seen people fighting to get out of the Union amid the protests of the National Government; it is a novel sight to see 500,000 people struggling to get into the Union without being heeded or recognized. The excuse sometimes heard that there is doubt as to whether the people desire one state or two is not valid. If Congress cares to know the opinion of Dakota, let an enabling act be passed with a clause submitting this question to a vote. All doubt will then be dispelled. At least give Dakota an opportunity to be heard.

I wish to say in this connection and with all emphasis, that the territory cannot accomplish her aim by any extraordinary or extra-judicial methods. Let us disavow at once and forever all intention of seeking such a remedy. Experience has proved it difficult for a state to force its way out of the Union; it is even more difficult to force its way in. I take the responsibility of saying that no such attempt will be made by the consent of the people of Dakota. They will not place themselves in the attitude of law-breakers or revolutionists. I stake my reputation on their loyalty, on their patience and on their forbearance. They love the Union of these states. Thousands of them fought and shed their blood for its maintenance, and they recognize its paramount authority even when that authority forbids their participation in privileges which they have richly earned. But all this does not alter or lessen the wrong. It but makes it the more glaring and flagrant. Nothing becomes a government or an individual more than the prompt recognition of rights which, owing to circumstances, cannot be demanded and enforced. The nation is powerful; the territories are helpless—they have no ingenerate powers. They were established on the supposition that the nation would deal justly with them. They were left without redress because the fathers confided in the honor and good faith of those who were to succeed them. I beg the men who represent the statesmanship of this country, not to betray that trust. It is not the people of Dakota who will be the greatest sufferers by reason of such betrayal. It is the principle of representative government. An individual may be wrongfully denied the elective franchise without depriving him of the material pleasures of life. He may amass property, win friends, seek happiness in a hundred ways. But that wrong creeps into the body politic and festers there. It becomes the precedent for other and greater wrongs. It degrades liberty, sports with a solemn injunction of the fathers, and sacrifices those principles which are eternal, to the pitiful exigencies of an hour. No party can afford to do this. No people are strong enough to trifle with a fundamental principle which affects the rights and privileges of half a million of their fellow citizens. We profess in this land to want an honest expression of the people regarding public measures and public men. Can any statesman honorably vote to exclude Dakota because, if admitted, her vote will probably be cast in a given direction? Is that the end and aim of statesmanship? Have our great men accomplished their life mission when they have deprived a few of their struggling fellow countrymen of a political privilege because they differ from them on the petty details of government? If that is so, then politics and politicians merit all the opprobrium heaped upon them. I speak here without one selfish thought. I utter this protest simply in behalf of the disfranchised thousands of honest, industrious, law-abiding citizens of this territory, who, so far as voice or influence in national affairs are concerned, are as powerless and helpless as the Indian tribe shut in upon a neighboring reservation.

The people must bear and wait. But let us hope that if ever, in the days to come, a representative of the State of Dakota shall raise his hand to stay the admission of a territory similarly situated, the people, remembering their own great wrong, will relegate him to eternal oblivion.

And now having terminated my official duty, I invoke the blessing of God on the members of this General Assembly, and on the people they represent.

GILBERT A. PIERCE, Governor of Dakota Territory.

Governor Pierce then introduced Louis K. Church, who had been appointed governor, but not yet confirmed by the Senate. Governor Church's brief address was in the words following:

Governor, Mr. President, Gentlemen of the Council and House of Representatives: It would be appropriate for me to say at this time that no one realizes more than I the duties that are about to devolve upon me. There is no one that realizes the responsibility that may be incurred. In the future questions will necessarily arise that will cause you and I to differ as respects legislation, but I trust that we will always be found to agree when the interests of our great territory are at stake. I desire to say that it would be extremely indelicate on my part to attempt to define the political situation, but I say to you, gentlemen, in all earnestness, in all fairness, that to the best of my ability, so help me God, I will do my full duty to all the people of Dakota. There are a great many important questions which will arise during this legislative session, and I trust that all enactments that may be placed on the statute books will be such as will reflect credit upon you and your constituents, and will likewise reflect credit upon the executive of the territory.

At all times and upon all occasions it shall be my desire to act in harmony for the benefit of the whole territory. I desire to be governor of Dakota, representing no faction, no cliques, wedded to no section or portion of the territory, but I believe that it is my duty to the fullest extent to hold the balance between the sections of the territory in justice, rectitude and fairness. I do not desire to say anything at length upon this occasion, but there will undoubtedly be times when I may have occasion to communicate with you.

There is no one who more fully appreciates the retiring gentleman than I do myself, and only trust that when my duties as executive shall close, I will carry with me the record and esteem of the Chief Executive of the United States, which I know my predecessor will carry with him into private life. I thank you for your attention, and trust that, considering the delicacy of the occasion, you will excuse me from making any further remarks.

The President evidently apprehended that the best interests of Dakota demanded a change in the governorship, and without waiting the action of the Senate on the confirmation of Governor Church, he accepted the resignation formerly filed by Governor Pierce, notifying Pierce of his action by telegraph, as follows:

Executive Mansion, Washington, D. C., January 31, 1887.

To Hon. Gilbert A. Pierce, Governor of Dakota:

To avoid complications and to enable you to enter upon your contemplated plans, your resignation as governor is accepted, to take effect upon receipt of this.

(Signed) GROVER CLEVELAND.

Upon receipt of this document, Governor Pierce transferred the executive office to Secretary McCormack, who became acting governor under the provisions of the organic act, and retired.

Governor Church's appointment was a long time held by the Senate without action. This was not due to any objection to the appointee whatever, but as sometimes happens, the chairman of the Committee on Territories was absent for nearly a month, and the committee to whom the appointment was referred, the Territorial Committee, of which Senator Benjamin Harrison was chairman, as a matter of customary courtesy, deferred reporting the Church appointment until the chairman's return, probably expecting an earlier termination of his absence. It was, however, reported that Church had been accused before the Senate committee of intemperate habits.

Judge Church may or may not have been a moderate user of intoxicants. It was not publicly commented upon, however, while he was the incumbent of the judicial office. But if he drank publicly, and ever so moderately, it would have prejudiced him in the minds of many people of all classes. The reader is reminded that Dakota, as subsequent action proved, was a prohibition territory, and each division of the territory, north as well as south of the proposed dividing line, was prohibition territory, therefore it would not be remarkable if some party, knowing of Judge Church's propensity, occasionally, to take a social glass, had felt it a duty to so inform the Senate committee having charge of the confirmation, and it is not surprising that the Senate felt that its duty was to investigate the matter, for prohibition had at that day found its way into the halls of Congress and throughout the executive departments, and its voice had become potent in political affairs. The Senate did investigate and evidently found nothing that would justify a refusal to confirm the nomination. Regarding the strength of the prohibition sentiment in Dakota, the reader is reminded that the prohibitionists, through their leaders, Rev. Joseph Ward, Reverend Whitfield, Editor N. C. Nash, of Canton, John A. Owen, of Kingsbury County, H. H. Smith, of Yankton, and many others, initiated the original organized movement for statehood as early as 1882, and out of their meetings, subsequently treating prohibition as a separate feature of the state polity, grew the convention and constitution of 1883, then those of 1885 held under territorial authority, and it will be observed that these prohibition leaders were prominently identified with all the conventions and with the making of the constitutions, and were finally rewarded by seeing the Dakota states admitted to the Union flying the prohibition flag. And viewing the field of prominent leaders of all parties, and there were four, including the Farmers' Alliance, they were all avowedly, or by example, in sympathy with the prohibition movement.

February 4th Governor Church was confirmed, and entered upon the duties of governor February 17th. Chief Justice Tripp administered the official oath.

A bill to remove the Federal Court from Yankton to Mitchell was introduced in the House by Mr. Meltzer, of Davison County, on January 26th, and was thereafter a bone of contention during the remainder of the session, and formed the principal bond that united a faction of the southern members with the northern members whereby the security of the capital at Bismarck was assured. The court bill passed the House, but failed in the Council. The vote in the House stood thirty for to sixteen against.

At this session the House passed a bill introduced by Mr. Hobart, of Moody County, requiring the territorial treasurer to hereafter account for interest received on territorial deposits. The Council failed to reach a vote on the measure.

In the House of Representatives the following resolutions expressive of the sentiment of the body with reference to the state and division movement of the southern half of the territory were adopted by a vote of twenty for to seventeen against, to-wit:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the late constitutional convention, assembled by authority of law to frame a constitution for the State of South Dakota, meets our most hearty endorsement and approval.

Resolved, That the course pursued by the people of South Dakota through their representatives in the constitutional convention, and the officers elected under the constitution has been wise, patriotic and courageous.

Resolved, That North Dakota, by reason of its territory, its development, its resources, and the character, intelligence and enterprise of its inhabitants, is entitled to speedy admission into the Union, upon an equal footing with other states.

The Territorial Legislature closed its sixty days' session on Friday, March 11th. The weather during the session had been of the order known as "blizzardy" a large portion of the time. The cold was intense and prolonged. Railroads were blockaded with snowdrifts throughout the Northwest, and mails interrupted.

E. W. Caldwell, of Sioux Falls, and Charles H. Price, of Highmore, were appointed compilers of the general laws of the territory under an act passed by the Legislature. The compilation of 1887 was the product of their labors.

The following laws were among those enacted at this session:

Locating a Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, and authorizing territorial bonds to the amount of $50,000 for the erection of buildings. Vetoed. Passed over the veto. Providing for the appointment and prescribing the duties of a public examiner. Establishing the Dakota Experimental Farm and Forestry Institution. To provide for the support of indigent soldiers and sailors and their families.

To regulate the practice of pharmacy. Providing how tickets shall be prepared for elections. To give to fire departments a portion of the taxes paid by insurance companies. To amend the exemption law. The county boundaries of Morton County were defined. Establishing a Territorial Horticultural Society. For the preservation of game.

The bills passed at this session of the Legislature were approved or disapproved by three different governors, namely, Pierce, Acting Governor McCormack, and Church.

TO LEGALIZE THE CAPITAL COMMISSION

There was nothing done by the Legislature of 1885 toward legalizing the acts of the capital commission which had been acting under authority of the chapter 104 of the laws of 1883. The Legislature passed a bill removing the capital from Bismarck to Pierre, which Governor Pierce vetoed on the ground virtually that the Legislature had no authority to remove the capital, the capital commission having exhausted the authority of the territory by an agreement with the Northern Pacific Railway Company, which located the capitol on ground donated by that company for the special purpose, and thereby obtained a vested right in such location which the Legislature was powerless to disturb. The Legislature failed to pass the bill over the veto, and there the matter rested, the capital commission continuing in office. Its duties under the removal act were practically completed, but the Legislature, a majority of whose members had come determined upon removing the capital to some point in the southern part of the territory, declined to take any steps that could be construed as a recognition of the validity of the capital commission law. In the course of its proceedings the capital commission had largely overdrawn the appropriation made to defray its expenses by the law of '83, and the territorial auditor, who was Governor Ordway's son, had issued territorial warrants upon the treasury to meet this overdraft, but the territorial treasurer had declined to pay this class of warrants, and they were being transferred to the hands of "innocent purchasers" at a sacrifice, with the design of resorting to the courts to enforce payment should the Legislature refuse to come to their relief. This was the situation when the Legislature convened in January, 1887. The Burleigh County representatives were anxious that the territory should assume the burden of the capital commission, and early in the session of 1887 a bill was introduced in the House by Representative Williams, of Bismarck, House bill No. 145, entitled:

An act to create a board of trustees of public property, to provide for the appointment of a commission to appraise and sell certain real property of the territory, to pay out-standing warrants, and to discharge the commission created by chapter 104 of the laws of 1883.

There was considerable opposition to this bill, particularly in the Council, where its consideration was deferred until the last days of the session and where the vote in favor of it was carried by the slim majority of one, and these were cast by members who had steadfastly opposed the method by which the capital had been removed to Bismarck. In support of the measure was the expectation of a divided territory and statehood for both sections at an early day. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, to which tribunal the case had been removed from the territorial court, might be delayed for years, and would not be heard at all should the admission of the states intervene. The indebtedness, though incurred without authority, had been allowed by the territorial auditor and was largely in the shape of territorial warrants that in the course of business had drifted into the possession of "innocent holders." There was no member of the Legislature whose constituents valued the prize of the territorial capital as worth an attempt to remove it, and no bill had been presented for this purpose during the session. For the credit of the territory to remove the question from the arena of discussion which was now well occupied with the larger subjects of statehood for two states which had become very much complicated by the change of the national administration and had peopled official Dakota with a strong battalion of democrats who would have been best satisfied to be "let alone" in their comfortable places, just as the republicans would have been had the fortunes of politics favored them, it seemed to some of the members who had strenuously fought to undo and repudiate the original removal scheme accomplished by the venal practices of the Ordway administration, that the wiser course was to end it all, remove whatever estrangement existed between the north and the south on account of it and relieve the deluded people who had come into possession of the capital prize(?) of their long and troublesome nightmare. It was also apprehended that in case of division the northern state would pay the full capitol building debt when the public property of the territory, which consisted of many public institutions, came to be apportioned to each section.

It will also be observed that the bill or act makes no attempt to even commend any of the proceedings or methods of removal, or extenuate them.

SALE OF TERRITORIAL BONDS

The Legislature of 1887 had been quite prodigal of the credit of Dakota Territory, possibly anticipating that it was about the last opportunity it would have to do something handsome for its people that would keep her in remembrance for many years after she was gone. And they hit upon the most enduring memento almost unanimously, and with little regard for the financial condition of their constituents and with a generosity out of all proportion with the actual needs of many of the various public institutions favored. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars in bonds of the territory were bestowed upon the following named public institutions, for new buildings and betterments, and in addition was the vast sums in cash appropriated to maintain and subsist the inmates and officials of the institutions, and the small army of territorial officials in the pay of the territory, whose number was now set down at 112, with pay and salaries ranging from five hundred to two thousand five hundred dollars annually.

At this time one occasionally heard or read of the great-hearted "Uncle Sam," whose headquarters were at Washington, and who was cheerfully maintaining the vast expense of running the Territory of Dakota under the inexcusably erroneous belief that the Federal Government was defraying the expenses incident to the government of the territory; whereas, in truth, the government's contribution in that direction was but "a drop in the bucket." Leaving out of account the expense for common schools which was borne entirely by the people and had grown to over six hundred thousands of dollars annually, the people paid the salaries and all the expenses of maintaining every official except the governor, secretary, marshal, United States attorney, the collector of internal revenue, the postmasters, and the judges of the Supreme Court, who were also the judges of the districts courts, but as nearly all had jurisdiction of United States cases, and all Indian cases came under that head, the Federal Government would have been obliged to maintain courts for the adjudication of that major portion of court business regardless of the territorial government.

Prior to 1880, and for a year or two later, there was little business for the courts except United States cases. The auditor, treasurer, attorney general, and all of the 112 officials whom the governor appointed, were paid by the people of the territory. There was a gross injustice in this, but the original organic act provided, section 7, that:

The governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, appoint all officers not herein provided for.

The actual biennial expense of the Territory of Dakota to the general government was about forty-two thousand five hundred dollars, or less than twenty-five thousand dollars a year, while the general government was reaping a harvest of hundreds of thousands from the territory by the sale of public lands, from internal revenue and from the postoffices. The amount which the territory was paying for the officials appointed by the governor aggregated about two hundred thousand dollars annually.

The bonds voted for public institutions in 1887 and the amounts to each are given in the following table:

North Dakota Insane Hospital, 4½ per cent, fifteen years.....	$153,000
North Dakota Penitentiary, 4½ per cent, thirty years.....	20,000
Spearfish Normal School, 5 per cent, ten years.....	25,000
Dakota Insane Hospital, Yankton, 4½ per cent, twenty years.....	92,500
Reform School, 5 per cent, ten years.....	30,000
Deaf Mute School, Sioux Falls, 5 per cent, ten years.....	23,000
School of Mines, 5 per cent, ten years.....	23,000
University of Dakota, Vermillion, 4½ per cent, twenty years.....	30,000
Dakota Penitentiary, Sioux Falls, 4½ per cent, twenty years.....	14,300
Agricultural College, Brookings, 4½ per cent, twenty years.....	51,500
Refunding bonds, 4½ per cent, twenty years.....	107,500
Total.....	$641,800

The bonds were sold about the last of May, 1887, after advertising by Territorial Treasurer Raymond. There were seven bidders, from Chicago, Cincinnati, and New York, and Preston & Co. of Chicago being the highest bidders, took them all at 4½ per cent and paid a premium of $3,338. It was claimed that this was the first sale of territorial bonds ever made at less than 6 per cent.

James A. Ward, of Sioux Falls, was appointed territorial auditor as one of the first official acts of Governor Church after assuming the office of governor. He succeeded E. W. Caldwell, also of Sioux Falls, who had been the incumbent during the Pierce administration, and had established an enviable record for efficiency and faithfulness to the interests of the territory. Mr. Ward was a prominent merchant, and a successful one, and a personal friend of the governor, a moderate democrat, strong for division, and a citizen in whom the people had confidence.

February 23d, Governor Church appointed Hon. P. F. McClure, Pierre's popular mayor, commissioner of immigration, to succeed Lauren Dunlap. The governor also appointed Alexander Griggs, of Grand Forks, Abraham Boynton, of Lennox, and N. T. Smith, of Huron, railroad commissioners. The salary of the commissioner of immigration was $2,000 with $500 for office expenses. Railway commissioners received $2,000 each annually. Territorial treasurer, salary $2,000. Attorney general, $2,500. Superintendent of public instruction, $1,500, office furnished and traveling expenses paid. Assistant superintendent, $1,000 and traveling expenses. Fees for certificates formed quite a respectable income. Superintendent board of health, $500. Adjutant general, $1,000 and $500 for office expenses.

The following appointments were also made: Sioux Falls penitentiary trustees—P. J. Runkel, John J. Murray, Porter P. Peck, W. H. Corson, E. P. Bebee. State University, Vermillion—D. M. Inman, H. E. Hansen, H. H. Blair, J. N. Conklin, J. C. Ryan. Dr. F. A. Spafford, Flandreau, vice-president of the board of health—Dr. Chas. F. King, of Mandan, superintendent of the board of health. Sioux Falls Deaf Mute School—Walter W. Goddard, J. T. Gilbert, Frank S. Blackman, Charles S. Wynn, Charles C. McKinney. Insane Hospital, Yankton—Frank L. Van Tassel, Charles H. Brown, Martin J. Lewis, William Powers, B. S. Williams. Madison Normal School—D. D. Baldwin, George C. Jones. Superintendent of public instruction—Eugene A. Dye, of Mellette, Spink County. Attorney general—C. F. Templeton, Fargo. Public examiner for North Dakota—A. W. Edwards, Fargo, and Charles N. Harris, of Aberdeen, for South Dakota. Directors Bismarck Penitentiary—W. D. McCabe, Jamestown; H. C. Plumley, Fargo; T. L. Shattuck, Fargo; John Russell, Valley City; Alexander McKenzie, Bismarck. F. S. Tyler, of Fargo, was appointed public examiner for North Dakota, the appointment of A. W. Edwards having been withdrawn.

Governor Church's successor as judge of the Huron District was Hon. J. L. Spencer, of New York.

About the first of November, 1887, J. W. Raymond, of Bismarck, was relieved of the office of territorial treasurer, an appointment he received from Governor Pierce, and John D. Lawler, a banker of Mitchell and a good democrat, was appointed by Governor Church to succeed him. Both were very capable men, Raymond being a republican.

RIVER BREAKS UP MARCH 10TH—OVERFLOW

Information from Fort Buford, received about the 18th of March, gave notice to all the inhabitants of the Missouri Valley below to prepare for an overflow. At Buford the river had broken up and was accompanied by a rise of thirty feet, one of the largest that had occurred since the fort was built. At Bismarck and Mandan the low lands were covered with water and ice, and the railroad bridge approach on the west side was four feet under water. The ice had moved out of the channel below Pierre some days earlier without gorging. A telegram giving the situation regarding the railroad bridge at Bismarck stated that a group of deer were observed on the floating ice in the channel of the Missouri, leaping from one piece to another in an attempt to reach the shore. Settlers were making their way out of the lowlands, frequently being compelled to swim across the low places.

All the bottom and second bench lands adjacent to Bismarck were under a seething mass of ice and water. Mandan was flooded and its inhabitants had sought refuge in the neighboring hills. The break-up above Buford began on the 17th with a rise of fourteen feet, which filled the channel to the top of the banks. Below the Yellowstone the ice was then intact and a gorge formed twenty-five miles below Buford and flooded the Little Missouri Valley, driving the settlers to the highlands.

On the 18th the river opened at Bismarck with a sudden heavy rise due to the breaking of a gorge near Washburn, some forty miles above. A gorge soon formed below Bismarck that in extent and ferocity far exceeded the great flood of 1881. At Bismarck the moving masses of ice swept away every obstacle and struck the immense warehouse of the Northern Pacific Railroad, claimed to be one of the largest in the world. The workmen at the building had a narrow escape from drowning, and within a brief two hours from the time the gorge formed near Fort Lincoln the water was in the second stories of the Bismarck River boarding house, which had been placed on what was considered land that was above high water mark. The work house which was nearly seven hundred feet in length was moved bodily over thirty feet and crashed into the bluff. The building was not wrecked but damaged to the extent of $15,000. The meadow land south of the city, embracing a tract of 6,000 acres, was submerged and the river was flowing across it with torrential force. Fears were entertained that it would cut a channel through it. The width of water opposite the city was about six miles. Train service was suspended west from Bismarck. All small dwellings on the banks of the river were swept away or destroyed, and even steamboats were in an precarious position.

At Bismarck, or in the stretch of hundreds of miles of river country above and below, the rise exceeded by one foot the unprecedented overflow of 1881. At LeBeau, Walworth County, the water was reported six feet higher than in 1881. A number of Indians were reported drowned. At Washburn, fifty miles above Bismarck, the river was claimed to have been ten feet higher than in 1881.

Below Bismarck the rivers having their rise in the Black Hills and adjacent country, are quite numerous and empty large volumes of water into the Missouri during the spring floods. These rivers are the Grand, which comes first; thirty miles below the Grand the Moreau comes in; then eighty miles further down the Big Cheyenne pours out a tremendous volume; the Bad River is fifty miles below the Cheyenne, flowing through the village of Fort Pierre; next comes in White River, 145 miles below the Bad, and 130 miles below the White the mouth of the Niobrara is reached. The simultaneous breaking up of these streams caused damaging inundations along the bottom land of the Missouri through Charles Mix, Bon Homme, Yankton, Clay and Union counties, and inflicted serious damage to the Dakota Southern Railway in the three last mentioned counties.

A painful incident of the flood was reported from Livonia, Emmons County, from which point a man was seen floating on a block of ice. He was waving his hands frantically and cried for help. The river was coming up rapidly and the heavy floating ice made it impossible for the settlers who saw him to send any relief. He was followed for at least four miles, and finally passed out of sight. The last words heard from his lips were taken to be, "My God, some one come out and help me. I have been on the ice all night and am almost dead." The settlers had no boat, but they felt certain that even with the best of boats rescue or attempts at rescue would only have imperiled the lives of those who attempted it. And it would seem that the unfortunate man was too far away to be reached by rope. Settlers around Livonia suffered the loss of nearly everything they possessed and narrowly escaped. Nothing was learned of the fate of the poor wretch who floated off and was yet standing erect when last observed. How he came to be in such peril was not learned nor anything concerning him.

About the same time the men engaged in watching at the Omaha bridge discovered a huge black bear seated on a cake of ice floating rapidly. They tossed bruin a plank, which landed within four feet of him, but the only notice he gave it was to dip his nose into the water, and then turned as if looking for something upon which to spring. A bear had been observed passing an up-river point a few days earlier and this was believed to be the same animal. After passing Omaha no further tidings were had of him.

It was reported that a party among whom were Jacob McCarthy, a Mr. Kirtland, and four others, were drowned near La Grace, Campbell County. Skinners and Wilkins ranches, with much valuable live stock, in Campbell County, were covered with water twenty feet deep. Skinner lost 200 head of cattle in the flood.

It was noticeable that a number of points that escaped with slight discomfort during the flood of 1881 were the most serious sufferers in this overflow, and points where the former flood did its greatest damage went through with slight loss. This was due to the formation of gorges during the latter overflow at points that escaped such formations in 1881.

There were three washouts on the railroad between Yankton and the Big Sioux over the Milwaukee line that interrupted traffic for a week. Mail and passengers from the east were sent round by way of Scotland.

The James River was unusually high, the bottom lands in the lower valley submerged, but none of the bridges were moved.

At Insley's ranch on the Vermillion River, in Clay County, about two hundred head of cattle were caught by a sudden inundation. The owner succeeded in extricating the greater portion of his herd, losing a number of weak ones. The ice cold water and the ice floating appeared to sap the strength of many animals who had come through the winter in average condition and would do well under ordinary spring conditions.

No difficulty whatever was experienced at Pierre and no great loss occurred at Fort Pierre where the waters of Bad River threatened the place for a night and a day.

DAKOTA IN CONGRESS

Bills for the repeal of the pre-emption, timber culture and desert land laws were pending in Congress during this session. Bills for the purpose had passed each House, but their provisions conflicted and differed to such an extent that a conference of a committee from each House was held, but no conclusion was reached. It was quite manifest that the laws named were regarded as having served their purpose and were no longer of service in inducing settlers to the public lands which in fact were growing near the day of practical exhaustion, except such tracts as were not regarded desirable for tillage. The homestead law was fulfilling every purpose required and was ample in its provision to accommodate the conditions of new settlers, and had already been designated as the only law that would be applicable to claims taken on the Sioux reservation for which negotiations had been partially completed.

The people of Dakota were greatly interested in the public land laws of the National Government, and watched the progress of this legislation closely. The conference committees above noted reported to their respective bodies that the conference had been unable to come to any agreement on the question of pre-emption repeal. It was understood, however, that it was a harmonious disagreement with the purpose of deferring action for a time.

Congress at this session passed a bill authorizing the construction of railroad bridges over the Missouri River, at Yankton and at Pierre. In case low bridges were built, the bill provided that the draw should be 300 feet wide. It was evident that Congress believed the day might come when the needs of commerce would demand a return of the steamboat fleets to the Missouri.

CONGRESSIONAL PROHIBITION OF TERRITORIAL LEGISLATION

In 1886 Congress enacted the following comprehensive law "prohibiting special legislation in the territories, to limit territorial indebtedness and for other purposes." The bill was approved July 30th of that year:

An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the territories of the United States, to limit territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Section 1. That the legislatures of the territories of the United States now or hereafter to be organized shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: 1. Granting divorces. 2. Changing the names of persons or places. 3. Laying out, opening, altering and working roads or highways. 4. Vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys and public grounds. 5. Locating or changing county seats. 6. Regulating county and township affairs. 7. Regulating the practice in courts of justice. 8. Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of justices of the peace, police magistrates and constables. 9. Providing for changes of venue in civil and criminal cases. 10. Incorporating cities, towns or villages, or changing or amending the charter of any town, city or village. 11. For the punishment of crimes or misdemeanors. 12. For the assessment or collection of taxes for territorial, county, township or road purposes. 13. Summoning and impanelling grand and petit juries jurors. 14. Providing for the management of common schools. 15. Regulating the interest on money. 16. The opening and conducting of any election, or designating the place of voting. 17. The sale or mortgage of real estate belonging to minors or others under disability. 18. The protection of game or fish. 19. Chartering or licensing ferries or toll bridges. 20. Remitting fines, penalties or forfeitures. 21. Creating, increasing or decreasing fees, percentage or allowances of public officers during the term for which said officers are elected or appointed. 22. Changing the law of descent. 23. Granting to any corporation, association or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks, or amending existing charters for such purpose. 24. Granting to any corporation, association or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity or franchise whatever.

In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, no special law shall be enacted in any of the territories of the United States by the territorial legislatures thereof.

Sec. 2. That no territory of the United States now or hereafter to be organized, or any political or municipal corporation or sub-division of any territory, shall hereafter make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company or association having corporate powers, or in any manner loan its credit to or use it for the benefit of any such company or association, or borrow any money for the use of any such company or association.

Sec. 3. That no law of any territorial Legislature shall authorize any debt to be contracted by or on behalf of such territory, except in the following cases: "To meet a casual deficit in the revenues. To pay the interest on the territorial debt. To suppress insurrections, or to provide for the public defense, except that in addition to any indebtedness created for such purposes the Legislature may authorize a loan for the erection of penal, charitable or educational institutions, for such territory, if the total indebtedness of such territory is not thereby made to exceed 1 per centum upon the assessed value of the taxable property of such territory, as shown by the last general assessment for taxation. And nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the refunding of any existing indebtedness of such territory, or of any political or municipal corporation, county or other sub-division thereof.

Sec. 4. That no political or municipal corporation, county or other sub-division in any of the territories of the United States shall ever become indebted in any manner or for any purpose to any amount in the aggregate, including existing indebtedness, exceeding 4 per centum of the value of the taxable property within said corporation, county or sub-division, to be ascertained by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness, and all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount, given by such corporation, shall be void. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect the validity of any act of any Territorial Legislature heretofore enacted, or of any obligations existing or contracts thereunder, nor to preclude the issuing of bonds already contracted for in pursuance of express provisions of law. Nor to prevent any Territorial Legislature from legalizing the acts of any county, municipal corporation or sub-division of any territory as to any bonds heretofore issued or contracted to be issued.

Sec. 5. That section 1880, title 23, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended to read as follows:

"The legislative assemblies of the several territories shall not grant private charters or special privileges, but they may by general incorporation acts permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for mining, manufacturing and other industrial pursuits, and for conducting the business of insurance, banks of discount and deposit (not of issue), loan, trust and guarantee associations, and for the construction and operation of railroads, wagon roads, irrigating ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries or any other benevolent, charitable or scientific association.

Sec. 6. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed to abridge the power of Congress to annul any law passed by a Territorial Legislature, or to modify any existing law of Congress requiring in any case that the laws of any territory shall be submitted to Congress.

Sec. 7. That all acts hereafter passed by any Territorial Legislature in conflict with the provisions of this act shall be null and void.

Approved July 30, 1886

GOVERNOR CHURCH FOR ONE STATE.

Governor Church made two public addresses during the fall of 1887, one at the North Dakota Agricultural Fair at Grand Forks, and the other at the South Dakota Agricultural Exhibition at Mitchell. While confining his remarks largely to the material resources of the territory, he touched upon the division question in each address, opposing a division of the territory, and favoring its admission as one state. This, it was claimed, was the sentiment of the President and a part of the policy of the administration.

Ex-United States Marshal Harrison Allen, who also spoke following the governor, advocated division.

Dakotans had been educated to favor division. The division of the territory was discussed when the territory was young and its people not many, and as population increased, settlement broadened and time passed, it continued to be advocated as something very desirable when settlements had grown up throughout the territory. And when the northern portion of the territory began to settle in 1872 with the coming in of the Northern Pacific Railroad, it was soon disclosed that the actual settlers and substantial citizenship of that section were even more zealous for dividing the territory than the older inhabited counties of the south, and so apprehensive were they that a southern delegate in Congress would not urge the importance of the measure upon Congress that they selected a candidate of their own, on the division issue, in 1874, and gave him considerable support.

The one-state idea came in with Ordway, who thought he saw in it his opportunity to gain a seat in the United States Senate, and to bring this about before his term as governor expired. Before that time the abandonment of division was never considered, and was never favorably mentioned in any general assemblage or public document.

Governor Church did not appear to possess the qualifications of an executive officer. He had given satisfaction as judge, but the duties and responsibilities of the governorship of Dakota at that time were as important and as diversified as the duties of any executive officer in the Union of States, and more important and diversified than in many. The territory was making more rapid headway in settlement and the increase of her population, and in general improvement, than at any time before. Everything betokened action, growth and prosperity everywhere, and the new governor may have labored under the delusion that it had come about because of the wisdom and merit of his administration, for he was not immune from vanity. The President had assured him that he was a statesman, and he may have felt that his own qualifications, coupled with his years of probation in the territory as judge, entitled his views to paramount consideration in such matters as the division of the territory. He seemed to be possessed of an assurance that if he counseled the people of Dakota to adopt the one-state plan, he would be able to change the current of popular sentiment.

There is no evidence that the governor was influenced by any sectional motive, nor any selfish motive, unless it sprung from a wish to promote the plans of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, which favored the one-state plan. Being a New Yorker, he argued from the standpoint of an inhabitant of that state, pointing out the great advantages accruing from a large delegation in the House of Representatives and in state conventions. His arguments seemed based upon the same foundation as the Springer letter to the anti-division convention, and it was suggested at the time that the Springer letter came addressed to Governor Church. The New York argument, however, was not suited to the conditions governing Dakota. Had the territory been on the Atlantic seaboard the example of the Empire State would have been worth considering. The territory nor the state or states formed from it were not to derive material strength, nor prosperity, nor improvement, nor better markets from its representation in national conventions, nor even from its representatives in Congress. In all these matters Dakota would be obliged to rely upon natural conditions that could not be changed, and upon the enterprise and intelligence of her own people.

Nature had apparently divided the territory and its material interests.

North Dakota was a part of Minnesota, politically and commercially, even before there was any settlement of importance within its boundaries; and Southern Dakota, by the commercial tie, was linked with Iowa and Chicago and Milwaukee. The geography of Dakota suggested its division. And Dakota had been divided to make Montana, again to make Wyoming, and had contributed to Idaho and Nebraska. There may have been the expectation in the minds of Congress when the vast territory was formed, that it would serve to carve up into a number of territorial dependencies when exploration furnished more definite information regarding its resources. There were some excellent reasons advanced for the one-state plan, even before Governor Church came among us with his commission. He furnished nothing new, gave no additional inducement, and his administration rather gave strength to division at the close of the long struggle, rather than weakened it.

For local reasons, for commercial reasons, in some important features of legislation, and as best subserving all the varied interests of the state, we believe it will be conceded that division has been fully justified by experience.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN INDIAN SCHOOLS

The coming into power of a new national administration was invariably marked by a change in the official heads of the Indian Bureau at Washington, and the new appointees invariably brought with them a panacea for remedying all the ills that afflicted the Indian question, and would result in placing him on the highway to civilization. This "was a consummation devoutly to be wished."

With Indian Commissioner Hayt, who served under President Hayes, it was the use of beads and their employment in ornamenting the moccasins and leggings of the braves that had been the chief hindrance to the more rapid civilization of the Indian, and therefore beads were prohibited, the traders were forbidden to sell them, still no notable progress was observed in the upward march of the Indian toward a civilized mode of living that could be attributed to the banishment of beads.

When Mr. Cleveland became President, a new Indian commissioner was appointed, and as he reflected upon the very moderate progress the Indian had made toward the white man's customs, he was struck with the illogical rule that permitted the schools for Indian children, which had become quite numerous, to be conducted in the Indian vernacular. To be properly civilized, they should be taught the English language, and their studies should be in that language. Superficially considered, this looked reasonable, and the commissioner of Indian affairs, through his assistant, issued a general order in the summer of 1887 that the use of the Indian language was prohibited in the Government Indian schools, and the English language substituted, and further, that the violation of the order, by anyone, would subject the offender or offenders to expulsion from the reservation. This order was exceedingly distasteful to the missionaries and other instructors who had given many years to acquiring a knowledge of the Indian languages in order that they might be qualified to instruct the Indian children. The different religious denominations who had established Indian missions had been conducting nearly all the Indian schools, and they realized that such order, if persisted in and enforced, would be the abolition of one of the most valuable factors in their work of Christianizing, which included civilizing, the Indians. Therefore, the Association of Congregational Churches of Dakota, which included members who had spent from ten to fifty years as missionaries and teachers among the Dakota Indians, took up the subject at their annual conference at Sioux Falls, in September, and adopted the following memorial to the President of the United States. There were 105 church organizations represented at this conference:

To the President of the United States:

We are all of us face to face with the Indian question. Some of us, for almost twenty years, have known the men and women who are working to Christianize and civilize the Indian, and have seen and do see, every day, the success they have attained, so that we know what we are saying and feel that we have a right to speak. We therefore urgently protest against the recent order from the assistant commissioner of Indian affairs forbidding the use of the Indian language in all schools on the Indian reservations. We sympathize with the reason alleged for the order, namely—to hasten the time when the Indian shall use none but the English language; but we protest against the enforcement of the order for the following reasons:

First. It defeats the very purpose for which the order was issued, since long experience has shown that the readiest way to secure an intelligent use of the English tongue is by a thorough instruction in the vernacular.

Second. The enforcement of this order will cut off from many, both old and young, all means of instruction.

Third. But worst of all it shuts the avenue by which religious ideas are best conveyed to a large number of the people, and so entirely stops the carrying on of Christian work, which the experience of generations, not only with Indians, but with other degraded races of men, has shown to be the surest and quickest method of civilizing them.

If the Government should allow the assistant commissioner to rigidly execute the order, and if in that event the religious teachers shall still insist on using the Indian language, choosing to obey God rather than man, they will be most heartily and thoroughly sustained in such course by all churches. But we trust that when this matter is fully brought to your notice you will direct the revoking of the order, which is so directly contrary to fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty.

Sioux Falls, D. T., September 14, 1887.

The order was not enforced, and was, presumably, quietly revoked.

INSANE HOSPITAL TROUBLE

While the topic of general interest to the people of the territory—that of division—kept its prominence before the public, there being no Congress in session after the short session closed in March, 1887, no progress was made toward securing Government action. But the people were not idle with reference to it, as will be observed by various public assemblies during the year, both north and south. An adjourned meeting of the Constitutional Convention was held at Huron, June 1st, but the purpose was only to comply with the requirements of the Sioux Falls constitution adopted in 1885, and to give formal consent to a further adjournment, and keep intact the organization. A further adjournment was taken until the first Thursday after the first Monday in January, 1888.

A purely local or territorial matter grew up, however, which enlisted the attention of the people and the press even beyond the boundaries of the territory. The Territorial Insane Hospital at Yankton was overcrowded and had been in that condition for more than a year, there being forty-eight more patients within its walls than the accommodations could properly, and with a due regard for the welfare of the patients, provide for. The Legislature of 1887 had recognized this condition and provided funds for the enlargement of the institution by authorizing the issue of $92,000.00 of territorial bonds for the purpose, and made it the duty of the governor to approve the plans for the improvement prior to beginning operations. This approval, however, was required in all the public institution bills, and there were a large number.

There was hardly a county in the southern half of the territory but felt the need of the completion of this hospital work, as no more patients could be received until this was accomplished unless the superintendent saw fit to discharge the partially cured or harmless patients to make a place for emergency cases. And that officer had already consented to such a change in really urgent cases.

The question of the propriety of political party control of public institutions, particularly those of a charitable nature, became quite prominent in connection with the differences which now sprung up between the governor and the board of trustees of the hospital. Governor Church, during the legislative session of 1887, had appointed a board of trustees, consisting of Frank L. Van Tassel, Marin J. Lewis and Charles H. Brown, democrats, and William M. Powers and B. S. Williams, republicans. Three of these, Van Tassel, Williams and Powers, had been members of the former board, and the superintendent, Doctor Cravens, and steward, Dr. Joel A. Potter, and in general all the hospital officials and employes, had been giving not only excellent satisfaction, but had improved notably on former administrations, and the trustees regarded the institution quite fortunate in its management and had no thought of making a change. The hospital officials had not been selected on account of their political predilections.

It soon transpired, however, that this position of the board was not satisfactory, for the reason that the principal officers were known as republicans, and an effort was quietly made, through the governor's confidential friends, who were also holding public offices under his appointment, to secure a change. The plans and stipulations for the extensions had been submitted by the board to the governor, for his approval as the law required, but the governor had failed to return these documents or give them any attention, though frequently requested. He quietly ignored them, and in the meantime the territorial auditor, Mr. Ward, visited Yankton.

In the further progress of the controversy between the hospital trustees and the governor, which consumed the remaining months of the year, it became pertinent and necessary to make a public statement of what occurred during Mr. Ward's visit at the time, and the following was given out by Mr. Van Tassel:

On April 27, 1887, James A. Ward, auditor of Dakota Territory, visited Yankton, calling on me at my place of business. He represented that his visit was at the request of Gov. L. K. Church, who desired a change in the officers of the Dakota Hospital. That the present officers were placed there by republicans, and that now the democrats "were on top." I asked Mr. Ward if they, the officers, were considered incompetent, or had any charges been made that the patients were being abused. Mr. Ward replied, "No, that he believed they were good men, but reiterated that the governor desired their removal purely on political grounds. This conversation was substantially repeated at the office of C. J. B. Harris, in the presence of Mr. Harris, Colonel East, J. I. Sargent and C. H. Brown, trustee.

I declined to vote in favor of removal on any such grounds, and told Mr. Ward to say to the governor that I could make no promises. The interview that I had with Auditor Ward was also repeated to Governor Church, at Huron, in the presence of E. G. Smith and J. R. Gamble, and the governor did not deny that Mr. Ward had represented him in that matter.

Following Mr. Ward, the attorney-general, Mr. Templeton, visited the hospital, and after investigating, informed a democrat member of the board that there was nothing wrong with the hospital management, but the democrats "were on top now and must have the places."

Following this official inquiry into the condition and management of the Yankton Hospital, the governor issued a general order directed to the trustees of the various territorial institutions, a copy of which follows:

Gentlemen: I would call your attention to the necessity of keeping the expenditures of each of the territorial institutions within the limit of the appropriation made by the Legislature, and that the expenditures of 1887 does not encroach on that part that should be reserved for 1888, and if possible have a surplus when your next report is made. The appropriations are liberal, and should you exceed your appropriations you are running a risk of incurring a personal liability. Should the present incumbent remain as executive, he will, at the next session of the Legislature, look with disfavor on all legislation making appropriations for deficiencies. The fact that there has been legislation in the past making appropriations for deficiencies will be no precedent for the future. Further, no fund or part of any fund must be used for any other purpose than that which the Legislature designated in making the appropriation.

At the close of the last biennial term, June 30, 1887, the Board of Trustees of the Yankton Insane Hospital turned back to the territorial treasury $10,800 of the sum appropriated for the expenses of that institution, notwithstanding the extravagance alleged by the attorney-general and public examiner. The precautionary counsel of the governor, therefore, could not have been intended as a hint to the trustees of that institution.

The public examiner, Mr. Harris, of Aberdeen, came later still, and instituted an official investigation, examining some witnesses, and following this the attorney-general and public examiner came in company, and instituted a thorough investigation, going back to the transactions of the old board, prior to the incoming of Governor Church. The appointments of Van Tassel, Powers and Williams were the same under Church as had served on the former board appointed by Pierce, all being from Yankton, and because of the apparent delinquency of one member of the former board who was not now a member nor connected with the hospital, and who had been entrusted with a large share of the work of supervision, and being a professional architect, builder and sanitary engineer, was well qualified to supervise and estimate the expense of improvements made under authority of the board during the former term. Mr. Cobby, the member referred to, had been quite successful in his management, though provoking some criticism from his associates, but rendered a clear account of his work and accounted for every dollar of his disbursements.

These examining officials made much of Mr. Cobby's transactions, reporting their investigation and conclusions to the governor, who took official notice of the report, and improved the opportunity to say that Messrs. Van Tassel, Powers and Williams had been guilty of misfeasance or neglect of duty in granting such latitude to Cobby. Further than this the governor did not find from the report any evidence of dishonesty or inattention, or incapacity, on the part of the new board. The investigators, on the contrary, had commended the management of the new board as efficient and capable, but the governor was able, nevertheless, to gather enough from the report upon which to base a pretext for refusing to approve the plans for the improvement while the present board remained in control of the hospital. These proceedings took place before the 1st of July, on which date the bonds amounting to $92,000 to supply funds for the new buildings were sold. The situation at the hospital, its crowded and cramped condition, and the delay in the work of improvement had become publicly known throughout the territory, and was commented upon with more or less asperity by the newspapers. It seemed to be the general verdict that the governor's action in obstructing the new work at the hospital was not justified by anything that had transpired under the former board, and that a humane regard for the unfortunate insane and the public welfare demanded the enlargement of the hospital, provided for by the Legislature, at the earliest day practicable.

At this time the officers of the Board of Trade of Yankton, consisting of James H. Teller, ex-Governor Edmunds, Gen. W. H. H. Beadle, George R. Scougal, E. P. Wilcox, J. C. McVay, L. M. Purdy and W. H. Sanborn, joined in a lengthy communication to the governor, urging him, in the name of humanity, to arrange for the construction of the buildings, suggesting ways in which the governor could do this without compromising himself, but he declined to be guided by the humane reasons that were urged. Though he did not assert as much, it was well understood that he held uncompromisingly to his decision not to approve the plans while the present board remained in office. He seemed to feel that in order to vindicate himself before the people of the territory, and the proceedings he had already instituted, though these had cast no reflection upon the new board, the members thereof must resign and permit the filling of their places by new men. The position taken by the trustees was, that by resigning as the governor contemplated, that act would be a tacit admission of mismanagement on their part, and conscious that there had been nothing whatever to base such a charge upon, they refused to withdraw, though it was thought probable that had the governor made an avowal exculpating the board for all the charges that had been alleged against their management, they would have resigned, being well convinced that the enlargement of the hospital was urgently demanded.

The emergent situation at the hospital, caused by its crowded condition, and the daily pressure from the outside to secure the admission of patients, conditions better known in Yankton than other communities, led the Board of Trade of the city to make a second attempt to induce the governor to approve the plans for the enlargement of the institution, and let the improvement go forward. While the citizens of Yankton earnestly desired the improvement to proceed without delay, they could not consistently ask the members of the board to voluntarily retire while they were under charges by the governor of incapacity and dereliction of duty, coupled with dishonesty, especially as they knew, and believed the governor had been convinced that these charges were baseless, and made for the purpose of furnishing a pretext for his contumelious display of authority. Therefore, the Board of Trade, through its secretary, on the 5th of August, sent the following communication to his excellency:

Hon. L. K. Church, Governor, Bismarck, Dak.

Sir: Referring to our letter of the 6th ultimo, setting forth the urgent need of additional accommodations for the insane at the hospital at this place, we beg to say that the opinion therein expressed as to the importance of immediate action toward securing the additional room provided for by law has been strengthened and confirmed by subsequent events. Almost every day witnesses the arrival of patients whose admission must result in the further crowding of the wards, already filled far beyond their capacity, or in the discharge of unfortunates, who are sadly in need of the treatment and protection afforded by the hospital. The accommodations are now taxed to the utmost and to crowd them further is to impose hardships, discomfort and risk of life upon those whose condition calls for pity and protection. The situation is indeed one which appeals to the sympathies of all and may well demand the earnest efforts of the humanitarian to afford relief. In view of these facts, and in order to obviate your objections to approving the plans and permitting this proposed addition to the hospital to be constructed under the supervision of the present board of trustees, we submit the following proposition in behalf of the citizens of this city:

We will furnish a good and sufficient bond to the territory in such a sum as you may name, and to be approved by the chief justice, conditioned upon the honest, judicious and lawful expenditure by the trustees of the appropriation for the construction of the additions to the hospital. This will insure an economical disbursement of the funds, without possibility of misappropriation or loss to the territory. Hoping that this may meet your approval and open the way for an early remedy for the existing unfortunate situation, we are,

Very respectfully,

J. H. TELLER,

Secretary of the Board of Trade.

To this request the governor sent the following reply:

Territory of Dakota, Executive Office, Bismarck, August 10, 1887.

Hon. J. H. Teller, Yankton, Dak.

Yours of the 5th instant at hand, contents noted. I decline to place the care of the funds for construction of the addition to the asylum in the hands or under the control of the present board of trustees.

Truly,

L. K. CHURCH.

The governor's reply was looked upon as a virtual admission that his refusal to approve plans and let the improvement go ahead was not because he felt that the appropriation would not be honestly disbursed, as he had previously asserted. His true motive had been disclosed by Auditor Ward and Attorney-General Templeton. He wanted control of the hospital, and the law had stated that this should be confided to other officials with the view, among other advantages, of preventing frequent changes in the management for partisan purposes, and to the great detriment of the welfare of the patients for whom the institution had been constructed.

The crowded condition of the hospital was shown in a report made by the superintendent of the institution in September, 1887. The secretary of the board of trustees, Frank L. Van Tassel, had received from Governor Church, under date of September 12th, the following official request:

Frank Van Tassel, Esq., Yankton, D. T.

Dear Sir: I am requested to make my report on affairs of the territory to the secretary of the interior by October 1st. I would be pleased to hear from you concerning the condition of your institution, the number of inmates, and such other matters as you may think of general interest. Please answer at your earliest convenience.

Respectfully yours,

L. K. CHURCH.

Secretary Van Tassel procured from the superintendent of the hospital a special report giving the conditions and other facts as desired by the governor, and transmitted it to Bismarck five days later. Following is a copy of Superintendent Craven's report:

Dakota Hospital for the Insane, Yankton, Dak., September 15, 1887.

F. L. Van Tassel, Esq., Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Dakota Hospital for the Insane.

Sir: In compliance with request of the board of trustees of the Dakota Hospital for the Insane, I have the honor to make the following report:

Dakota Hospital for the Insane is located on section 36, township 04, north of range 56, west, in the County of Yankton. It is a substantial brick structure consisting of a center building 54 by 70 feet, three stories, basement and attic. Connected with it on the east and west are two wards, each 32 by 124, three stories, with unfinished basements. North of the center building, and connected with it by a corridor, is the chapel, underneath which is a kitchen. North of this are the wash house and ironing room, 18 by 20 each. Adjoining on the north are the engine room and coal shed. A small artesian well affords a limited supply of water.

The actual capacity of the hospital is 120 patients, but at this date, September 15th, we have 160.

To brighten and cheer as much as possible the lives of these afflicted ones, we constantly endeavor to make their surroundings as attractive as possible with pictures in the various wards, singing birds, plants, flowers and every available thing to interest and amuse them.

The overcrowded condition of this hospital renders it necessary for us, in the majority of cases in the male wards, to assign two patients to one bed in a room 8 by 10 feet, thus rendering recovery almost impossible. In the dormitories of the male department we are obliged to put from twelve to fourteen patients in a room designed for six.

The number of patients on hand at the close of our last biennial period, November 30, 1886, was 144, since which date 6 have been admitted, 29 discharged to make room for cases of more recent date, 25 refused admission for want of room and 12 sent home on trial visit and liable to return at any time.

Respectfully yours,

J. F. CRAVENS, Superintendent.

This report of the superintendent was sent forward to the governor, accompanied by the following letter from the secretary:

Dakota Hospital for the Insane, Yankton, Dak., September 17, 1887.

His Excellency, L. K. Church, Governor, Bismarck, D. T.

Dear Sir: In accordance with your request, dated September 12th, I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of the report made by Supt. J. F. Cravens, to the board of trustees, relative to the conditions of the Dakota Hospital for the Insane, near Yankton, September 15, 1887.

The last Legislature appropriated the sum of $92,500.00 for the purpose of enlarging the hospital, and the board of trustees caused plans to be prepared for two additional wings to the same, and forwarded said plans to his excellency, the governor, on April 27, 1887, for his approval, according to the requirements of the act. His excellency, the governor, has failed to either approve or reject the plans and specifications, at which late date it is not practicable to undertake the completion of the wings this season. Through this failure on the part of your excellency, we are unable to make such a report as would please you and the board, and therefore call your attention to that portion of the superintendent's report which contains the following items, to-wit:

Twenty-nine patients discharged to make room for cases of more recent date.

Twenty-five refused admission for want of room.

Twelve sent home on trial and liable to return at any time.

Sixty-six, total refused and discharged for want of room.

Capacity of hospital, 120.

Number of inmates September 15, 1887, 160.

All of which is respectfully submitted, by order of the board.

Respectfully yours,

F. L. VAN TASSEL, Secretary.

Governor Church made no allusion to this report in the annual report he made to the secretary of the interior, but in lieu thereof made the following statement:

The territorial legislature, at its seventeenth session, appropriated the sum of $92,500.00 for the construction of two additional wings and other improvements at this asylum. Charges of irregularity having been made against a majority of the board of trustees of this institution, and examination having been made by the public examiner, and report of such examination having been filed in this office, upon careful consideration of such report and the testimony taken, I have thus far deemed it my duty to withdraw my sanction to the expenditures of this appropriation under the direction of the present board.

The governor inserted the report of Superintendent Cravens in his report to the Interior Department.

Governor Church visited St. Paul about the 15th of August, and during his sojourn gave an interview to one of the newspapers, in which he spoke of the Yankton Insane Hospital embroilment, and President Cleveland's proposed western trip. Concerning the hospital matter, he said:

The people of Yankton need not worry about the injustice that will be done the insane by my refusal to allow $90,000.00 to be used for the asylum enlargement, to be spent by the present asylum trustees. I have power to provide for the insane of the territory, and will do so. If there are more than can be accommodated at Yankton, I will provide for them elsewhere. They will not suffer.

No, I can't remove the present trustees. I wish I could. There is no use in establishing a precedent by winking and conniving at such proceedings as have been going on. The only way that the trustees can be reached by law is to have them indicted by a grand jury and tried by the Yankton court. The law says that three members of the board must be from Yankton. As there are only five members of the board it is necessarily localized. I can't remove the trustees directly or appoint their successors. I would do so if I could and would be justified in my action.

The governor here says that he will provide for the insane at Yankton and none need worry. It is remarkable that he had not done so, if he had the power, for there were at least fifty insane patients in the various counties with the hospital jurisdiction at Yankton who could not be admitted because the institution was then caring for an excess of over forty. Possibly some of these could have been transferred to Jamestown by an agreement with that institution, but that hospital was likewise overcrowded, so that no effort appears to have been made in that direction, forewarned that it would be useless. His boast that he could care for the insane was simply "buncomb." He also says that he had no power to remove the trustees, and yet two months later he did remove them. He must have received light on the subject from some unexpected quarter in the meantime.

Speaking of the effort of the governor to influence public opinion by means of the pamphlet issued by Public Examiner Harris, the Redfield Journal, in September, 1887, took occasion to say:

Gov. Louis K. Church is flooding the territory with pamphlet editions of the report of the public examiner on the asylum affair. The people of Dakota are interested but slightly in the one-sided investigation of a public institution by a prejudiced officer for political purposes. They are as equally disinterested in the findings of the governor unless these "findings" are followed by a vigorous prosecution of the parties alleged to have been guilty of gross negligence and dereliction of duty. When the Governor causes the arrest of the asylum trustees and makes at least an attempt to punish them judicially for the alleged violation of their official obligations, the people may begin to realize that there is something more than mere buncombe in the matter. They may then begin to realize that the governor is not withholding the $90,000.00, appropriated for building improvements, for the purpose of permitting some one to have the use of the money and for the further purpose of making political capital for L. K. Church. Until something more than bluster comes from the chaotic mass in which the "investigation" left the affair, the public should be given a rest by the mugwumpian chief of our fair domain.

The Minneapolis Journal took occasion to express its opinion on the subject, as follows:

Governor Church is not a man to be envied. From the beginning, his administration has been characterized by carpet-bagism and political scheming, rather than an endeavor to provide for the best interests of the territory and its citizens. A long series of palpable mistakes has been redeemed by few wise and judicious ones. The course of the governor in regard to the Yankton Asylum appears to have been particularly reprehensible and has alienated the support of many good citizens of both parties who would cheerfully uphold their executive in the right. Governor Church is evidently of the opinion that a mistake well adhered to is better than a confession of error in judgment, no matter what the consequences. Public opinion and the exigencies of the Yankton Asylum call for the immediate expenditure of the fund appropriated by the last territorial legislature, but the governor, rather than retrieve his error, would let the helpless wards of the territory suffer. His only alternative, but that Van Tassel must resign, reflects no particular credit upon the governor. It is making a scapegoat of one man to vindicate the position taken by the governor. There does not seem to be any other reason why Van Tassel should be singled out for the sacrifice, and the opinion seems to be rapidly gaining ground in Dakota that the governor's pride is not worth enough to the territory to justify this unjust singling out of a victim who is no more guilty than the rest of the commission.

The Jamestown Capital, commenting upon the paragraph from the Minneapolis paper, said that:

The old democrat member of the board of trustees of the Yankton Asylum seems to be made of "sterner stuff." Being interviewed on the subject of his resignation so that Governor Church would approve the plans and allow the additional buildings to be erected, he replied with democratic emphasis that he would see the governor in that torrid region where the thermometer ranges above the boiling point in midwinter before he would resign with the charge of corruption hanging over him. Most any man of self-respect would do as Van Tassel is doing in that matter, and very few of the quality would do as the governor is doing, and the governor seems to be one of that very few. What with the insane of South Dakota restrained like felons in the jails, because the governor stubbornly obstructs the construction of additional buildings for their accommodation, for which the Legislature made ample provisions, and the public disgrace of two respected citizens of Northeastern Dakota by dismissal from his staff at the Huron encampment without just cause, the governor is making a bed of thorns and when he returns to New York after he steps down and out of office, he will perhaps entertain a prejudice against Dakota.

In the meantime the hospital trustees continued to supervise the affairs at the hospital, and to make such improvements as were urgent, and, in fact, indispensable, and could be made under the law without requiring the plans to be submitted to and approved by the executive. This irritated the governor, who sent his attorney-general and public examiner to investigate the matter. These officials held a session at the Morrison House, Yankton, on the evening of Tuesday, September 29th, and summoned before them Messrs. Van Tassel, Lewis, Powers and Williams, members of the board.

This investigation brought out the information in an authentic form, that the trustees were engaged in building at the hospital a boiler-room, also were boring an artesian well, and were putting in an electric light plant. They had let contracts for this work without advertising for bids, to men who had agreed to take their chances for payment, if necessary, through an order from the next Legislature. The work properly came under the same law that authorized the construction of the wings, but this fund was not available, because of the refusal of the governor to approve the plans for that extension, and the board had deemed it absolutely necessary for the welfare of the patients, to make the improvements named. The work had been ordered by the vote of all the trustees, and on motion of Trustee Brown.

This investigation occurred on the night of the 27th. The governor was then at Mitchell, where he remained until the report of the investigators was given him, and from whence, on the 30th, he sent the following telegrams to Secretary Van Tassel:

Mitchell, Dak., September 30, 1887.

To Frank Van Tassel, Trustee, Yankton, Dakota.

You have been suspended from further performance of duty as trustee of the Dakota Hospital of the Insane, near Yankton.

LOUIS K. CHURCH,
Governor, Dakota Territory.

And a second dispatch as follows:

Mitchell, Dak., September 30, 1887.

Frank Van Tassel, Secretary Board Trustees, Insane Hospital, Yankton, Dak.

Resignation of Trustees Lewis and Brown accepted. Trustees Frank Van Tassel, B. S. Williams and W. M. Powers, each suspended from further performance of duty as trustees of Dakota Hospital for the Insane, near Yankton.

LOUIS K. CHURCH,
Governor, Dakota Territory.

The resignation of Messrs. Brown and Lewis were handed to the governor in May, and their acceptance at that time created two vacancies on the board. Some time prior to this the governor had stated, in an interview which was published in a St. Paul newspaper, that he would remove the trustees but he did not believe he had the power given him to do so. In the present case he is presumed to have acted in suspending the trustees under authority he may have assumed was given under the new law by which the office of public examiner was made.

Section 4. It shall be the duty of the said examiners to order and enforce a correct and, as far as practicable, a uniform system of bookkeeping by territorial and county treasurers and auditors so as to afford a suitable check upon their mutual action, and insure the thorough supervision and safety of the territorial and county funds. They shall have full authority to expose false and erroneous systems of accounting, and when necessary, instruct, or cause to be instructed, territorial and county officers in the proper mode of keeping the same. It shall be their duty to ascertain the character and financial standing of all present and proposed bondsmen of territorial and county officers, within their districts. Each examiner shall require of county treasurers within his district, from time to time, as often as he shall deem necessary, a verified statement of the accounts, and he shall personally, or by duly appointed deputy, visit said office, without previous notice to such treasurers, at irregular periods of at least once a year, or when requested by any board of county commissioners, and make a thorough examination of the books, accounts and vouchers of such officers, ascertaining in detail the various items and receipts and expenditures, and it shall be his duty to inspect and verify the character and amount of any and all assets and securities held by said officers in public account, and to ascertain the character and amount of any commissions, percentages or charges for services exacted by such officers without warrant of law. Each examiner shall report to the attorney-general the refusal or neglect of county officers to obey his instructions, and it shall be the duty of the said attorney-general to promptly take action to enforce compliance therewith. The said examiner shall report to the governor, the result of his examination, which shall be filed in the executive office, as well as any failure of duty by financial officers, as often as he thinks required by public interests, and the governor may cause the results of such examinations to be published, or, at his discretion, to take such action for the public security as the exigency demands, and if he should deem the public interests should require, he may suspend any such officer from further performance of duty until an examination be had or such security obtained as may be demanded for the prompt protection of the public funds.

Inasmuch as the law did not cover the office of trustees but was directed toward another class of officials, and there being no other law authorizing the governor to suspend the trustees indefinitely, the trustees of the insane hospital, having been legally advised thereto, declined to recognize the authority of the governor, and continued to administer their office as trustees.

About the 10th of October, the governor having concluded to bring the Yankton Hospital difficulty to a climax, appointed a new board of trustees of the hospital. Members Brown and Lewis having resigned the old board would have been reduced to three, and these three, Messrs. Van Tassel, Williams and Powers, acting under legal advice, declined to recognize the previous order of the governor suspending them and continued to act as trustees and were supported by the superintendent and the management of the hospital.

The new appointees of the governor were Col. L. O. Gale, a banker of Canton and a member of the governor's military staff; W. T. Quigley, Esq., an attorney of Turner County; Robert Cox, merchant; D. N. Gross, merchant; and M. T. Woolley, civil engineer, all of Yankton. Gale and Quigley were appointed in place of Brown and Lewis, resigned, and therefore became members of the regular board with Van Tassel, Williams and Powers, but did not meet with them. The new board also organized with four members, Mr. Gross declining to act, and the new board was therefore composed of Gale, president; Quigley, secretary; Cox and Woolley. In the meantime the territorial auditor, Ward, had been instructed by the governor to issue no more warrants on the vouchers of the old board. The new board, claiming their right to perform the duties of trustees, went forward and transacted some minor business matters, holding frequent meetings at the hospital. The matter had now assumed a condition so serious as to threaten the discontinuance of operating the institution, and under the stress of these difficulties, the old board, on the 17th day of October, began an action in the nature of quo warranto in the District Court of Yankton County, for the purpose of charging the new board with attempting to exercise an authority they did not lawfully possess, and requiring them to show by what title they had assumed pretended control of the hospital.

The new board had held one meeting at the hospital, elected a president and secretary. The superintendent was requested to present the vouchers for September which had already been passed and approved by the old board, thus, "Examined and approved, October 1, 1887, Wm. M. Powers, president board of trustees." Under this endorsement, by the advice of Attorney General Templeton who accompanied the new officials, was written, "Examined and approved October 14, 1887. F. A. Gale, president board of trustees." This was done in order to satisfy the territorial auditor, who in view of the quo warranto proceedings was willing to act upon the authority of either board, but required the approval of both. The new board also adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the two wings and other improvements contemplated by Chapter 64, Laws of Dakota, be commenced and pushed to completion with all possible haste, and in pursuance thereof, be it further

Resolved, That this board immediately procure plans and specifications for said wings and improvements.

JUDGE TRIPP'S DECISION

The decision of Judge Tripp in this quo warranto proceeding was quite a long document, occupying about fourteen thousand words, disclosing a very thorough research of the authorities, the major portion being given to a discussion of the question of jurisdiction in the matter of removal from office—whether it came under the executive or judicial departments of government in our country.

The action, as stated by the judge, was in the nature of quo warranto, brought on the information of the district attorney of Yankton County, to oust the defendants, Robert Cox, Miles T. Woolley, W. Y. Quigley and F. H. Gale, from the office of trustees of the insane asylum at Yankton, D. T.

The defendants answered separately and the plaintiff demurred to the answers of defendants, Cox and Woolley, which raised the questions of law presented to the court for determination.

From the complaint and from the answers of the defendants, Cox and Woolley, which for the purposes of this hearing were admitted to be true, it appeared that B. S. Williams, Wm. M. Powers, Frank L. Van Tassel, Martin J. Lewis, and Chas. H. Brown, were during the last session of the Legislature of Dakota appointed trustees of said asylum by the governor, and they were duly confirmed by the Council, and that they duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of their duties on or about March 25, 1887.

That on or about September 30, 1887, said Lewis and Brown resigned, and the defendants, Gale and Quigley, were appointed by the governor to fill the vacancies. That on or about the 30th of September, 1887, while an examination was pending before the public examiner of the district embracing said asylum, the governor suspended said Williams, Powers and Van Tassel from further performance of their duties as trustees, thereafter, on the second day of November, 1887, upon the conclusion of such examination, he removed them from office and appointed in the place of said Williams and Powers, the defendants, Cox and Woolley. The question of law raised by the demurrers may be divided into two propositions:

1. That there was no power in the governor to remove the trustees, Williams, Powers and Van Tassel.
2. That if he had no power to remove them, he had no power to appoint the defendants, Cox and Woolley, without the advice and consent of the Council.

The first proposition, to-wit: That the governor had no power to remove these trustees, the plaintiff bases upon two grounds:

1. That under our organic law the power of removal is judicial and not executive, and that the Legislature could not authorize the governor to exercise such power.
2. That the Legislature had not authorized the exercise of such power, and that its acts do not admit of such construction.

The judge then proceeded with the discussion of the question whether the power of removal under our organic law was judicial or executive, and devoted a large part of the decision to an examination of that difficult problem, arriving at the conclusion that it was executive, and that the governor was authorized, under the law, to remove all officers appointed by the governor under the laws of the territory, and to appoint their successors.

INSANE HOSPITAL AS A PARTY QUESTION

Regarding the widespread attention the insane hospital matter was receiving, and its importance as affecting the fortunes of politics, the Jamestown Capital, possibly the ablest of the democratic newspapers in the territory, repudiated the responsibility of the democratic party for the inexcusable delay in constructing the extensions provided for by the Legislature, and remarked at the close of an article deploring the injury the party had suffered by injudicious leadership, thus:

As it is, the railroad tax scheme, the public buildings insurance deal, and the Yankton Insane Asylum obstruction embroglio will be all charged against the democratic party by the republicans. But we repudiate the charge in advance. The democratic party of this territory is not responsible for the administration of Governor Church any more than the republican party of this territory was responsible for the administration of Governor Ordway.

REMOVAL POWER OF GOVERNOR

The organic act declared that "whenever a vacancy occurs by resignation or death in any office which under the organic act is to be filled by the governor," then the governor shall make an appointment to last until the next meeting of the Legislature.

A case of this kind occurred in New Mexico Territory in 1885. Governor Ross was the executive. A disagreement occurred between himself and an appointed official and the governor attempted to remove him. The case found its way into the courts, and the latter decided not only that the governor could not remove the man, but that he could not do so and fill the vacancy, even if the law of the territory provided he might do it, as this would be in conflict with the organic act, which specified how and when a vacancy should exist, which was only by resignation or death.

Governor Ross thought this law ought to be changed, and addressed a letter to Governor Pierce, of Dakota, asking his co-operation in securing from Congress an amendment of the law which would enlarge the powers of the governors of territories in such cases. Governor Pierce relates that others joined him, and a bill was introduced in the House in 1886, which gave to the governors of territories greater powers. The bill failed to pass, however, indicating that Congress looked with disfavor upon its purpose.

It is evident, from the first interview Van Tassel had with Auditor Ward, that the primary purpose of the governor was to secure control of the management of the hospital for partizan purposes, and the subsequent proceedings were designed to furnish him a pretext for withholding his approval of the plans, expecting that his recalcitrant trustees would either agree to the change, or resign their offices, and permit the governor to appoint a new board.

In connection with this controversy the board of trustees published a complete list of the vouchers for Cobby's transactions, giving the items for every dollar that he had expended, amounting to $24,750. And accompanying this list was the list of the experts employed by the public examiner, to go over the improvements made under Trustee Cobby's supervision under the former board, for the purpose of discovering whether he had been over extravagant in his expenditures. The list furnished by the experts claimed that about four thousand dollars more than a reasonable price had been paid by Cobby and approved by the board, citing numerous items where the cost was, in their opinion, excessive.

It was on this showing of the old board's administration that the governor based his charge of misfeasance, or neglect of duty, against the new board.

As regards the findings of the experts there could be two opinions:

First, that the experts were employed, virtually, to find instances of extravagance. They knew the motive that led to their employment, and were expected to find how cheaply the work could have been done for. This they could have done without designing to wrong anyone, though probably had been informed before entering upon their investigation the amount which the several improvements cost as returned by Mr. Cobby.

It was discovered after the figures were made public that an important error had occurred in footing up the figures furnished by the experts, which reduced the differences between Cobby's list and that of the experts nearly two thousand dollars, and it was also discovered that the experts had entirely overlooked other items, amounting in the aggregate to about four hundred dollars, from which it may be inferred that the experts had also been guilty of misfeasance. Cobby's entire list of expenditures was made public, and was gone over, according to their report by the experts, but only a small portion of the items were found extravagant.

There were 131 items in Cobby's list, in twenty-four of which the experts found excessive charges as above. The experts also failed to include two cisterns at $260.46, a bill for nursery stock, $191.70, and cash on hand $6, a total of $458.16, which brought the total of the difference to less than twenty-one hundred dollars. The names of the experts who acted for the public examiner were C. McAllister and Charles Ackley.

This hospital controversy had now grown to be the "talk of the territory," the newspapers were discussing it, their comments as a rule being favorable to the trustees. The governor and the public examiner felt called upon to defend their course, and as the newspapers were largely against them, they had resort to the publication of a pamphlet as the best medium for placing their side of the unpleasant controversy before the people. The pamphlet was issued under the title: "Report of the Public Examiner, C. N. Harris, on the Examination of the Dakota Hospital for the Insane at Yankton, Made to Gov. L. K. Church."

REMOVAL OF OFFICERS

The difficulty formed a large part of the history of Dakota for the year 1887, and for the first time in the territorial career raised the question of the governor's authority to remove, at his discretion, territorial officers. Governor Church, himself, had stated that he had no such authority, but he finally concluded he would resort to it to accomplish his purpose of getting rid of a refractory board of trustees, and trust to the superior wisdom of the courts to overrule his preconceived opinion. It is at least a little remarkable that if the Legislature had believed the governor had the power to remove, that it did not include it in the public examiner law, in connection with suspension.

Governor Church's contest was simply a fight against Van Tassel. Had Van Tassel consented to the proposition made him by Auditor Ward as the governor's messenger to make the changes desired by the governor in the management of the institution, it is not probable that anything would have occurred to delay the approval of the plans, and the work would have gone forward. Van Tassel had been singularly efficient and diligent in his official duties, and no word of complaint was heard that the affairs of the institution were not under capable and honorable management, but he had dared to oppose the desire of the governor for a change in the officers of the institution, and that offense was one that Church, the governor and leader of the democratic party, could not condone without belittling himself, in his opinion, in the estimation of his political associates. The governor's pretext that he was afraid to trust the expenditure of the appropriation to the board as then constituted, with three democrats and two republicans, was effectually neutralized by the offer of Yankton citizens to put up a bond of $100,000 to indemnify the territory against any loss occasioned by the maladministration of the board, and the further fact that the governor would have a constant acquaintance with every detail of the contracts and work as it progressed, is sufficient evidence that his avowed apprehensions regarding the capability and honesty of the board were not sincere, and led thousands of Dakotans to believe that the place that most needed a successor was the gubernatorial office of the territory. The governor had destroyed the confidence of the people in his official integrity, and thenceforth his official acts were regarded with suspicion.

Following Judge Tripp's decision the old board retired, and the new one took control. This board was made up of F. A. Gale, or L. O. Gale, president;

W. V. Quigley, secretary; M. T. Woolley, Robert Cox and Otto Peemiller, and notwithstanding the desire of the governor for certain changes in the management of the institution, none were made until the following May, when Dr. R. F. Buchanan, of Parker, was appointed as superintendent in place of Dr. J. F. Cravens; Dr. A. N. Sisman of Lennox, in place of Dr. H. F. Livingston, assistant superintendent, and Paul Hamann of Yankton, in place of Dr. Joel A. Potter, steward. Mrs. Ruth Hughes of Mitchell was elected matron, in place of Mrs. Amy. The new appointees were all democrats, unless the matron could be excepted, and she was a relative of the democratic postmaster at Yankton. Messrs. Cox and Woolley, of the board, voted against these changes and for the officers under the former board.

Governor Church's studied and persistent effort, as he alleged, to improve the administration of affairs by turning out the old board of trustees, and giving control to a new board was a most lamentable, costly, and, sad to relate, a tragic failure, culminating in the killing of two worthy citizens, the destruction of much property, and the loss of much valuable time in the construction of the buildings which the Legislature had provided for nearly two years before, and which had deprived scores of insane people of a refuge and proper care and treatment for at least a twelve-month. He had appointed some worthy men on the new board, but they were handicapped in their work by the arrogant assumption of authority by Mr. Gale, the governor's favorite, whom they had elected president, and who, as it proved, was the least qualified of all the members to properly advise and direct the work of the board, which at this time was of the first importance. He was gay and giddy, assumed that he was not only the board, but the manager of the hospital as well. His course engendered division and serious strife in the councils of the board, and to such an extent was the prejudice felt that at the first annual meeting held in October, 1888, he was displaced, and Mr. Robert Cox made president.

The work of construction of the new buildings had proceeded through the summer, but had been hindered by divided councils, faulty material, inexperienced and ignorant supervision, the result of a favoritism that governed where much merit and knowledge of a technical sort was demanded.

In August an archway in one of the wings under construction went to pieces. No one was injured but it awakened an apprehension that like faults had been permitted in other portions of the structure, and on Monday, October 22d, this apprehension was abundantly and painfully verified. The heartrending accident occurred just as the workmen began work after dinner. Several brick arches upon the second floor of the northwest corner of the west wing fell in. Above these arches and about on a level with the third floor were three carpenters at work, and with them was the superintendent of construction. They were D. H. Kean, superintendent; Christopher Thompson, Jacob Lee and Michael Curry. These four were precipitated to the lower floor, and partially buried in the debris of brick, mortar and timbers. Christopher Thompson was taken out lifeless, a timber having fallen across his chest, crushing it in. Jacob Lee was found alive, but fatally injured, and expired within forty-eight hours after the accident. D. H. Kean was seriously injured. Michael Curry was considerably bruised and shocked, but was able to walk into the hospital. Mr. Thompson was a resident of Yankton and left a widow and two married daughters, Mrs. George Smith, of Pierre, and Mrs. George Hobson, of Yankton. Jacob Lee was a citizen of Yankton, with a wife and quite a large family of young children. Mr. Kean was a resident of Canton, and appointed upon the recommendation of Mr. Gale.

After the accident all the men employed on the construction of both wings abandoned work. These men complained that the walls were all weak, and consequently a constant menace to the workmen. It was obvious that there had been an impression in the minds of the workmen for some time that the buildings were not being properly constructed. At the time of the accident,

Thompson, Lee and Curry were standing on top of the large arch which first gave way. Lee noticed the arch spreading and called Kean from another part of the building to show him the fault. While the four were looking at the defect and commenting on its condition, it suddenly gave way with the terrible result above stated.

The old board had sent its plans and specifications for this work to Governor Church and he kept them, and so intense was his antipathy that he would not permit them to be used, but Mr. Gale was permitted to get new plans from an architect in Sioux City. The old board had employed Mr. Dow to make its plans. He was a very competent man, and had been making plans for public buildings of Dakota for a number of years, and had never failed to give satisfaction. The new board, or Mr. Gale perhaps, by request of the governor, steered clear of any connection with anybody or anything that savored of the old, and was resolved to show the people how badly they had been duped under the old order of things, and here in this awful calamity at the insane hospital was the result.

In describing the scene of the casualty it seems necessary to first give an idea of the general surroundings.

The insane hospital is a massive brick pile, several hundred feet long east and west and comparatively narrow north and south. Two additions to this main building were under construction, both of brick, resting upon a foundation of Sioux Falls stone. One of these additions was being attached to the extreme eastern end of the hospital, and the other addition to the western end. The additions were called the east wing and the west wing. The accident occurred in the east wing, on the east end of which a transverse wing was being built (the approved form of building insane hospitals).

This transverse wing when complete corresponds in number of stories, and in interior arrangement with the building it joins—all being designed for the habitation of insane patients. It was to be three stories high, accommodating three wards, and probably seventy patients each, if crowded.

In the northwest corner of this northwest wing, was the locality of the accident. The construction had reached the third story and a few feet above the floor.

The corner and adhering portions of the side and walls bulged outward, loosening some interior brick arches and precipitating them upon similar arches in the next story, thence to the first floor, carrying with them the unfortunate men, a distance of twenty feet, and literally burying them in the rubbish ruins.

The interior of the transverse wing, which is composed of three stories, consists in each story of a central corridor, fifty or sixty feet long, and about twelve or fourteen feet wide, surrounded by small rooms for the patients—each patient being allotted a room mainly as a sleeping apartment, as the patients are either at work or exercising outside when the weather permits, and when unable to be out of the corridor during the day. These small rooms were 8x10 feet in size, and 10 feet high. The ceiling of the corridor was formed by an arch of brick, and the ceiling of the rooms was a separate arch of brick for each room. These are the arches referred to as having given way when the wall crumbled and fell. This floor was a duplicate of the one beneath it, corridors and rooms being over and under each other, so that when these upper arches fell they struck a similar arch beneath and carried that down to the first floor. The partition walls were also of brick. In the early afternoon of the accident, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Kean and Mr. Lee were at work on top of the second tier of arched cells putting up window frames in the northwest corner for the third story. They were over the three first rooms on the northwest corner. Mr. Curry was passing along with a hod of brick, and he had stepped upon the fourth room when the crash came. The corner of the building bulged outward, loosening the first arch, and it fell. The partition wall below collapsed letting the second arch down, and in this way the other arches followed. It all occurred in thirty seconds. There were a number of witnesses to the disaster, but it came so abruptly that no attempt could be made to warn those imperiled. A score of workmen were engaged on the building, and all felt that the entire structure was doomed, and there was precipitate haste to get away from it, but no time was lost in rescuing the victims of the disaster from the tons of brick and mortar and timbers that had imprisoned them, one being killed outright and the other fatally injured. Before the dinner hour a dozen bricklayers had been withdrawn from work at the place where the accident occurred to give place to the carpenters who were setting the window frames. Probably seventy-five men were at work on the structure at the time, including convalescing patients.

There was urgent necessity for rapid work to get the large structure enclosed before freezing weather set in.

Faulty construction was alleged as the cause of the disaster. This appeared most plainly even to those not experienced in the building art. The small arches had no support. There was considerable public indignation felt toward the architect, the contractor and the superintendent of construction.

A coroner's jury was summoned by Coroner McGlumphy, consisting of J. C. McVay, L. M. Purdy, and J. M. Fogarty, and this body made a thorough inspection of the ruins, viewed the body of Mr. Thompson, and proceeded to take testimony. The architect, Charles P. Brown, was summoned from Sioux City and subjected to a rigid examination, concerning which the witness was unwilling to say anything for publication, believing himself lawfully bound to remain silent until after the jury had returned their verdict. But he declared, as the architect, that he felt perfectly safe so far as the plans were concerned, and he believed he had established that fact to the satisfaction of the jury. Mr. Brown said that "any man with the smallest amount of sense could tell at a glance, by viewing the ruins, what was wrong," but he refused to say what that "wrong" consisted of until the verdict was rendered.

Jacob Lee, suffering great pain, died two days after the accident. Mr. Thompson was a respected and active member of the Methodist Church.

The coroner's jury devoted about two weeks to their investigation, and did not give their findings to the public until the 12th of November. They listened to a great deal of testimony, expert and ordinary, and had a mass of documentary evidence to turn over to the prosecuting attorney with their verdict. Prior to rendering their verdict warrants were issued and the arrest of J. B. Pattee, the contractor, and D. H. Kean, the superintendent, were made, and the parties duly arraigned and admitted to bail.

The finding of the coroner's jury was made a part of the complaint to which the warrant to arrest was attached. The finding was a long document and that portion here given includes only their verdict concerning the direct cause of the disaster, and fixing the responsibility.

The verdict states that the jury viewed the bodies of C. N. Thompson and Jacob Lee, and upon inspection of the east wing of the insane hospital, found that the walls and arches had fallen, carrying the two men down in the wreck of brick and mortar, causing their death.

The jury found that the fallen arches had been constructed only from two and a half to four days prior to the accident. That the centers or supports to the arches were prematurely removed, in direct violation of the specifications. That the partition walls between the cells on which the arches rested were not properly bonded into the outer walls, according to the plans and specifications. That inexperienced workmen and boys were employed upon the work. That the arches were built with a turn or spring of from eleven to eighteen inches, in direct violation of the plans which call for a spring of from twenty-two to twenty-four inches. That no tie-rods or anchors were put in the second and third stories north and south through the east wing to properly tie and support the arches and bind the outer walls, in direct violation of the plans and specifications. That the building was rendered unsafe and liable to fall at any time. That the mortar used was not of the proportions required by the specifications, though of fair quality; that the brick were not hard burned as required by the specifications.

The jury found that J. B. Pattee, of Canton, Dakota, was the contractor under whose direction the building was being constructed. That Mr. Pattee failed to provide and put in the rods and anchors. That he allowed the removal of centers from under the arches before the roof was closed in, in violation of the plans. That he failed to give the arches the required spring. That he failed to properly bond the walls. That he failed to construct the building in a substantial and workmanlike manner. That he proceeded carelessly and seemingly without regard to the plans and specifications.

The jury found that D. B. Kean, of Canton, Dakota, was duly appointed superintendent of construction. That it was his duty to see that the building was constructed in a good and workmanlike manner as required by the plans and specifications, to see that all the rods and anchors were placed in the walls and arches and that no centers were removed until their removal was allowable under the plans and specifications. That the material be of good quality and properly placed.

It was found that Mr. Kean changed or allowed to be changed, the spring of the arches. That he allowed the removal of centers from under the arches. That he allowed the omission of the rods and anchors. That he permitted careless construction of the building, especially in the omission of north and south tie-rods through the arches and walls.

The jury concludes:

We find that C. N. Thompson and Jacob Lee came to their death by the culpable negligence of J. B. Pattee, contractor, and D. H. Kean, superintendent, in constructing the east wing, including the walls and arches that fell October 22, 1888, of the Dakota Hospital for the Insane, near Yankton, Dak., in the violation of the contract and contrary to the plans and specifications.

KEAN AND PATTEE INDICTED

The grand jury of Yankton County at the November term, 1888, returned indictments against Daniel H. Kean and John B. Pattee, charging them with manslaughter in the second degree, the alleged crime growing out of the killing of C. N. Thompson and Jacob Lee, by the falling of walls and arches in the east wing of the insane hospital on the 22d of October, Kean being superintendent of construction and Pattee contractor. The indictment recited:

That Daniel H. Kean is engaged in erecting two wings to the Hospital for the Insane in Yankton County, in capacity of superintendent of construction, having entire care, charge, control and supervision of the same. As such superintendent, it was his duty to cause the walls and arches of the building to be properly bonded and to cause all arches to be laid over centers, and to cause such centers to remain in position until each succeeding story was completed and the roof covered in, and to cause all the work to be firmly embedded in mortar, and thoroughly bonded together throughout.

(The details of proper and safe construction were also recited.)

And the said Daniel H. Kean, well knowing the premises, but being wholly unmindful and neglectful of his duty in that behalf, did feloniously and wilfully neglect and omit to cause the walls of said building to be properly bonded and solidly put together, and did feloniously and wilfully neglect and omit to cause all cell arches to be laid over centers and cause such centers to remain in position as required.

In consequence of this culpable negligence, a portion of the east wing fell, causing the death of Christopher N. Thompson. For acts of neglect and omission, Daniel H. Kean is indicted for manslaughter in the second degree.

The indictment against John B. Pattee was nearly identical in form and substance with the Kean indictment. The parties were arraigned, waived examination, and were admitted to bail, for their appearance at the spring term of the District Court, in the sum of $5,000.

CHAPTER XCIX

DAKOTA FARMERS' ALLIANCE

1887

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY—ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILWAY—FORETELLING BOUNTIFUL HARVEST—EXTERMINATING BUFFALO—GROWTH OF CATHOLIC CHURCH AND INSTITUTIONS—SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS—CENTENNIAL OF THE ADOPTION OF THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION—DAKOTA FARMERS' ALLIANCE—NATURAL GAS—NAVIGATION OF THE JAMES RIVER—BANKERS' CONVENTION AND PHARMACISTS' ASSOCIATION—PRECIOUS METALS IN THE BLACK HILLS—CROPS—TIN DEPOSITS IN THE BLACK HILLS.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY TO THE PACIFIC

In 1887, the Great Northern Railway, then called the Manitoba, was being constructed west of Minot, in Ward County, and the design was to complete the line for a distance of 550 miles to the Great Falls of the Missouri, in Montana, during the year. For that purpose unprecedented preparations had been made and every device utilized that would promote progress. The world was to witness an achievement in railway construction that would surpass all precedents. For this purpose there had been accumulated at Minot, probably the largest quantity of construction material ever assembled at one point. It consisted of vast piles of steel rails, spikes, ties, timber, and piling, covering an area of forty acres. The work of construction was begun April 1st. The grading had been finished twenty-seven miles west of Minot in the fall of 1886, and partly finished for ninety-two miles. The track laying was begun at Minot in a small way on the 2d of April, but operations on a scale gigantic and novel did not begin until early in May, when was inaugurated a system of railroad building unprecedented for speed in any part of the world. The track was being put down at the rate of about four miles a day, which it was claimed was the most work of railway construction ever witnessed on this continent or any other. The contractors were Shepard, Winson & Co., who had previously won distinction for rapid work of this character but they were now eclipsing their former triumphs. In their employ were 3,300 teams and about seven thousand men on this work alone, and while their trackmen were putting down the superstructure of rails, a veritable army ahead were cutting the way through hills and leveling valleys and preparing the grade with equal rapidity. The superintendent of this colossal industry was a marvel for system. His name was Egan, and he had planned to reach the Great Falls of the Missouri by the 1st of September.

The railway was practically completed from Minot to Fort Buford about the 1st of July, 1887. As Fort Buford was the extreme western station on the line within the Territory of Dakota, it may be said that the road was completed across Dakota at the date named, as Buford is within a dozen miles of the 104th meridian of longitude which was the western boundary of Dakota. Between Minot and Buford the track laying had progressed at an average of $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles a day, but this record breaking speed was to be "thrown completely in the shade" by the world-famous performance of the same army of men and teams in the progress of the line through to the Great Falls of the Missouri.

The rapidity which had marked the construction of the Pacific coast line of the Manitoba during 1887 attracted the attention and admiration of the railroad people of the entire country. It was setting up new records. On Saturday, July 16th, its trackmen laid $7 \frac{2}{10}$ miles of track, which eclipsed any prior performance in this branch, and on Tuesday, August 11th, this was surpassed, and $8 \frac{2}{10}$ miles were laid from one end. The Canadian Pacific record of 6.38 miles had held first place up to this date. This fast work was done in the Milk River Valley, between Fort Buford and Fort Belknap.

The Duluth and Denver Railway, a subordinate of the Manitoba or Great Northern was completed to Watertown, and graded as far as Huron, in 1887. This line was projected across the territory nearly, and designed to cross the Missouri River at Wheeler, Charles Mix County. A bill was pending in Congress granting to the company a franchise to bridge the river at Wheeler. It was then expected to push the work and complete it before the close of another season.

James J. Hill, of Minnesota, though connected with the transportation interests of Minnesota and Dakota for some time as the president of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, popularly known as the Manitoba, was beginning to take his rightful place as the leader of railway enterprise in the Northwest in 1887. The great achievement of building the 750 miles of road from Minot, North Dakota to the Great Falls of the Missouri, established a new world's record, but more than this it was regarded as a most daring enterprise considering the sparse population of the region penetrated and the meagre development of its resources. The Grand Forks Plaindealer said of him at this time, 1887:

The future of the Manitoba system can be more readily guessed at than figured out. One thing is certain, however, that if nothing happens to its present management, it will be one of the largest transportation systems in the world. One cannot read daily of the vast enterprises that President Hill not only conceives but carries out in such an incredibly short space of time without paying him the deserved tribute of being one of the leaders of the transportation interests of the United States and the most prominent among them.

The title of the company was changed to "Great Northern" a few years later, and under that title both Mr. Hill and his Great Northern system have won world wide honorable mention.

In February, 1887, a railroad organization was formed at Yankton having for its object the building of a railroad from Sioux Falls to Yankton, under the title of the Yankton, Sioux Falls and Nebraska Railroad Company, which company designed to co-operate with the Manitoba (Great Northern), in the extension from Sioux Falls of its Duluth and Denver line, then approaching Sioux Falls by way of Willmar, Minn. The following board of directors was elected: S. B. Coulson, Geo. R. Scougal, J. C. McVay, C. J. B. Harris, H. J. Campbell, A. Adler, W. S. Bowen, J. R. Hanson, W. M. Powers, L. M. Purdy, of Yankton, and Henry T. Corson, T. H. Fairfax, and W. W. Brookings, of Sioux Falls. The officers chosen were J. C. McVay, president; C. J. B. Harris, secretary, and George R. Scougal, treasurer. The outcome of this organization was the extension of the Manitoba, later known as the Great Northern from Sioux Falls to Yankton, during the year 1888. The extension into and through Nebraska, from Yankton, has not yet been made, though a grade has been built from Yankton to Norfolk, Neb.

The Great Northern surveyors reached Sioux Falls in June, 1887, and spent several days in studying the lay of the land and water for the purpose of selecting the best and most practicable line after reaching the territory contiguous to the city. Sioux Falls was so environed with river, hills and valley, that the selection of a practicable railway route was a problem requiring more than ordinary study and skill.

The grading of the line from Willmar had been delayed to await the completion of the grading on the Montana main line of that company which had been under way during the entire season. A large number of the workmen there engaged were released about the first of August, and this force was sent to the Sioux Falls extension. Sioux Falls gave the Manitoba $50,000 and right of way as a bonus for extending its Duluth and Denver line to that city in 1887.

The survey for the Manitoba from Sioux Falls to Yankton was completed in the winter of 1887-88, and the road was built during the ensuing summer and fall. The winter had been particularly severe on railroads operating in Dakota, and nearly all of them were blockaded a good portion of the time with snow and ice.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL TO SIOUX FALLS

Up to the spring of 1887 the Illinois Central Railroad had been operated through Iowa on leased lines owned by the Iowa Falls & Sioux City Railroad Company, and the older Dubuque and Pacific or Sioux City Railway Company. In that year the Central Company purchased the property, and soon thereafter began developing its plans for improving its line and extending it into new territory. The extension from Cherokee to Sioux Falls was one of the extensions decided upon, another went southwest to Onawa, and a third, or central extension, continued the main line west from LeMars, crossed the Big Sioux River near the mouth of Brule Creek, at Richland, thence through Union, Clay and Yankton counties to the Missouri River at Yankton.

Superintendent Gilleas visited Sioux Falls early in June, and stated that the work on the survey of the line to that point had been started, and the company's plans were to push the work to completion, unless unforeseen difficulties were met with.

At a citizen's meeting held in Sioux Falls, July 14th, Superintendent Gilleas and Mr. Knight, representing the Illinois Central Railroad Company were present and Mr. Knight, after stating the object of the meeting, said that Superintendent Gilleas and himself came to Sioux Falls with a definite proposition, namely:

The Illinois Central Railroad Company agrees to let its grading contracts within twenty days from this meeting, and to complete and have in operation by the first of December, if the weather is favorable, and if not, at the outside by the first of July next, a line of railroad from Cherokee, Iowa, to Sioux Falls, Dak. Provided, that Sioux Falls donate to said company the depot grounds, room for stock yards, and the right of way through the city. The depot grounds were located north from Eighth Street between the Omaha track and the river, a plat of ground 2,000 feet long by 300 feet wide; also the right of way to the packing house, mills, brewery, and polishing works.

On motion of Harry Corson the proposition was accepted.

Following this meeting, Mr. E. A. Sherman devoted two days to securing a popular subscription of $42,500, the land the Central Company demanded having been estimated to cost $40,000. This information being telegraphed to the superintendent, he let the contracts for grading and this work began within a week after the meeting.

Later in the same month a large party of surveyors and their helpers began work at Yankton and made a preliminary survey eastward, crossing James River near the Northwestern bridge and crossing to the south of the Northwestern after leaving the James. This party was in charge of D. C. Rice, chief engineer, and their orders were to run a line to Richland on the Big Sioux, at which point they were expecting to meet one or two parties of surveyors who were then engaged in finding a way from LeMars to Richland, the greater difficulty apparently being in finding a practicable route through the Broken Kettle country. Mr. Rice, in charge, had run the preliminary line from Cherokee to Sioux Falls, and it was definitely settled that that line would be built, but the Yankton line, although the survey had been ordered by the company, depended upon the further action of the directors. It was held that the present prospect of business would not justify the building of the Yankton extension, but it was asserted that it was the intention of the company to extend this line to the Black Hills just as soon as the Sioux Reservation was opened, an event that though long delayed promised fruition during the present year or very early in 1888.

The preliminary line was run on over the Missouri bottom lands parallel with the Northwestern track, bearing south before Volin was reached and following the bottom six or seven miles, ascended the highlands by an easy grade not far from Meckling.

About the first of July a delegation of Illinois Central officials visited Yankton for the purpose of getting acquainted with the people, learning something of the country and its resources. This party included Horace Tucker, general freight agent, M. Gilleas, superintendent of the road west of Dubuque; W. J. Jeffrey, general traveling freight agent and brother of the general manager; D. C. Rice, engineer in charge of Dakota extensions. Mr. George R. Freeman, of Elk Point, was with the party, being deeply interested in the success of the enterprise, and had already rendered a valuable aid in securing a practicable route from the Big Sioux to LeMars. This party had come to Yankton for the purpose of following the proposed survey for the Illinois Central back from Yankton to LeMars, and also to let it be understood that the company expected that Yankton, Richland, Akron, and LeMars would secure the right of way for the extension.

Superintendent Gileas stated that the company had been delayed in arranging for the Sioux Falls and also the Onawa line, but that work was now provided for, and they would now take up the Yankton and LeMars. Two surveys had been run from LeMars to the Big Sioux, a difficult country to build railways through, but finally Geo. R. Freeman, of Elk Point, had directed the surveys over a route that was entirely satisfactory.

The Fargo & Northern Railway Company held its annual meeting in July, 1887, at Fargo. Charles Sweatt, R. S. Tyler, W. B. Douglas, O. W. Francis, George R. Freeman, C. T. Clement, Terence Martin, S. E. Roberts, and T. E. Yerxa were elected directors. The directors selected Sweatt, president; R. S. Tyler, vice president; W. B. Douglas, secretary; F. W. Parrott, treasurer.

MISSOURI RIVER IMPROVEMENT

In August, 1887, Captain Sears, in charge of the Upper Missouri and Yellowstone River improvement work, the Upper Missouri including all above Sioux City, gave out the following official opinion:

I see no use in spending any great amount of money in improving the Upper Missouri. There is another view of the matter, however, that may commend itself as an affair of wise policy. As long as there is, during the season of navigation, a good, permanent channel from the Mississippi Valley into the heart of Montana, so long will the public be benefited by lower freight rates on competing railroads. The channel may never be used, but its existence, ready for use, will act powerfully as a check on extortionate freight rates.

In his report he recommended an appropriation by Congress of $160,000.

FORETELLING A BOUNTIFUL HARVEST

The farms produced abundantly in 1887, and the aggregate yield of all the staple grains added greatly to Dakota's reputation as a food producing region. There had been an abundance of moisture during the growing season and it had been, as a rule, seasonable so far as crop conditions were concerned. In this connection a somewhat remarkable prediction, pronounced by the Press and Dakotan newspaper during the month of February may be reproduced here because of its value in pointing out a "forecast" by which the farming community may with safety be governed in making their preparations for farm work as the planting season approaches.

The farmers and people of the territory will remember that the winter of 1886-87 had been one of abundant snows, unusually cold, and the breakup of the Missouri in the spring of 1887 was marked by serious freshets. In February, as before stated, the Press and Dakotan said:

We can say, with full confidence in the prediction, that the farms of Dakota will this year give their maximum yield of crops of all kinds. It comes as a tradition from the former Indian occupants of this land, and has been demonstrated in the experience of white settlers from the opening of civilization here that a winter which fills the mountains with snow is followed by a summer of abundant rains. Evaporation from the mountain region supplies the foothills and the plains with moisture. The present winter has filled the mountain reservoirs with material for profuse evaporation. This supply is not exhausted by the first touch of summer, but is held in store to be drawn upon in response to the demand of the producing sections. The lower levels give us the spring floods, saturating soil and atmosphere with moisture for the seed-time. Higher altitudes yield later in the season to the influence of solar heat, and produce what is known in Missouri River parlance as the June rise, which lasts into July in good growing seasons. After this the sun climbs the mountain sides, slowly releasing the moisture there congealed, transforming it into vapor and sending it off over the plains country to descend again upon the maturing crops and effect the fullest development.

So it happens that when the mountains are covered from base to apex with the wintry deposit, and the foothills and plains lie buried in snow, the conditions for a growing summer are all fulfilled and farmers may plant with full confidence in an abundant harvest.

The farmer in Dakota can accurately forecast the conditions of a coming growing season by taking into account the mountain conditions at this season (February) of the year. The mountains are now laden with snow and ice and the plains of the river slope are buried. The Missouri River is certain to have a heavy spring flood and an extensive June rise. From the same sources which are to produce this flood and this rise we are to be favored with abundant rains during the period of summer disintegration and consequent evaporation. These signs have never failed.

This favorable result of farming operations in Dakota in 1887 was given prominence and was also considered remarkable because of the partial failure of crops in nearby states, indicating that our Indian tradition and the observation of our "weather prophets" through a series of years may be safely applied only to the Territory of Dakota, north and south. That the rainfall in the plains country, due to abundant snows in the mountain region west, is not a reliable asset east of longitude 96 west from Greenwich.

EXTERMINATION OF THE BUFFALO

Regarding the brief period of time that elapsed when it was known that vast herds of the American bison, numbering millions, covered the plains of the Northwest, and the almost complete extermination of the animal, a great deal was said and printed about the methods of their sudden destruction. That they were practically a stranger to the vast feeding grounds of the Northwest which they had occupied for many centuries, furnishing to the moderate demands of the Indians, for food and clothing, and for barter, an adequate supply without making any noticeable decrease in their numbers which were annually augmented by many thousands of young stock. But it seemed that their destruction came suddenly, almost within a year, not without warning, for the Indians and military men of the plains had foretold what would occur unless a stop was put to building railroads through the buffalo country, and unless some way was found by which their wanton slaughter by hunters and emigrating colonies could be prevented. But the herds were observed covering their pastures and swimming the broad rivers in 1886 and were nowhere to be seen or found in 1887 except a few straggling animals that had escaped the avaricious and inhuman slaughter of the preceding year. Their practical extermination, however, would have been inevitable, had it been brought about by more humane methods. Their feeding grounds were being rapidly occupied by the aggressive pioneers who were every month advancing the standard of civilization over the plains of the "great American desert," and who with the Indians, would have made a conmendable and essential use of the food and raiment material which the animal could supply.

Colonel Dodge, who was the chief engineer of the Union Pacific Railway, gathered valuable statistics regarding the wholesale slaughter of these animals which followed the extension of railways across the great plains west of the Missouri and in Texas. He states that the building of the Union Pacific Railway in 1886-87, from Omaha to Cheyenne (which at that time was in the Territory of Dakota) cut through the center of the great buffalo range, and from the railway the hunters swarmed north and south, slaying as they went. Here the main herd was cut in twain, never to be reunited.

The staked plain of Texas presently became the geographical center of the southern herd, and Glendive, Mont., that of the northern. In a short time the building of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, and the Kansas Pacific to Pueblo, Colo., opened up all parts of the southern buffalo country, and in 1879 there came a demand for buffalo robes that proved fatal to the species. The war of extermination began. The years 1882, 1883 and 1884 saw the slaughter of nearly four and a half million in the southern range. This great herd was slaughtered out of existence in about three years time. The market became overstocked with hides and buffalo bull robes sold as low as $1.35 each, and the cows were slaughtered for skins that were worth only the paltry sum of 65 cents. And there were hundreds of thousands of animals that were heartlessly slain for their tongues or their humps, or for no purpose except to furnish sport for the hunter. The colonel stated that "never in the history of the animal kingdom had there been such another bloody and cruel carnage, or one that yielded so little in proportion to the total value involved."

In 1876 the northern herd was much larger than the southern, and covered twenty times as much territory. It was estimated by the buffalo hunters that the herd numbered over a million within the Miles City buffalo district.

The Northern Pacific was opened for traffic from Glendive eastward in 1881. Buffalo hides were thereafter shipped eastward by this railway and by the steamboats by tens of thousands until 1885, when the work of extermination was practically finished. The following year not a fresh hide was in the market. The buffalo were gone forever, not only from the United States, but from the British possessions as well. In 1886 the largest fur house in Montreal asked from $30 to $40 each for robes, and some of the leading furriers of New York had none at all.

Thus ended the career of "bos Americanus," an animal that had contributed much of priceless value to promote the subjection of the country to the purposes of a civilized race, and in return had been rewarded by a merciless extermination.

Verily, civilization smote the hand that had been her mainstay through all her pioneer pilgrimage.

GROWTH OF CATHOLIC CHURCHES, SCHOOLS AND INSTITUTIONS

The growth of the Catholic religious and educational institutions in Dakota had been a matter of some discussion early in 1887, and a census of the number of Catholic institutions of various kinds, including church edifices that had been added since the beginning of the year 1880, when the Federal census was taken, was made and given out in February, 1887, showing that the growth of that religious denomination had kept pace with the unprecedented growth of the territory generally during the interval of six years which included the period which must ever be known as marking the most remarkable movement of immigration from the East to the West, in the entire history of our country. In 1877, ten years previously, Dakota had but three Catholic priests and small congregations. In 1880, Right Rev. Martin Marty was consecrated bishop and appointed vicar apostolic in and for the Territory of Dakota. At that time Dakota contained about eight thousand or nine thousand Catholics, and had, estimated, a dozen priests, and churches and chapels. With the beginning of 1887 it had one bishop, Rt. Rev. M. Marty, one vicar general, Very Rev. George L. Willard, headquarters at Yankton, 125 churches, 52 chapels where mass was celebrated at least as often as once a month, 75 stations without church or chapel, visited occasionally, 4 academies, 22 parochial schools, 26 ecclesiastical students for the priesthood, and a Catholic population of over 50,000. Bishop Marty was a remarkably aggressive and enterprising man in the field and in the position he occupied. He was born in Switzerland, was appointed abbot of the Benedictine Monastery, at Minrad, Ind.; later he was transferred to Standing Rock Agency, Dakota, as an Indian missionary; was appointed vicar apostolic of Dakota Territory; was made bishop of Dakota Territory, August 9, 1879. He conducted an Indian school at the Standing Rock Agency after the Indians had taken up the avocations of a peaceful life. He visited the redoubtable Sitting Bull a few years after the Custer massacre. The great chieftain had taken refuge in British America, and claimed protection of the British Government. It was presumed that the reverend prelate desired to induce Sitting Bull to return to his people and share the beneficence of the Government that had been provided for his race, but Sitting Bull demurred, and suspecting the bishop, who was accompanied by a military officer, denounced him as a spy, and he would probably have been killed had not some friendly half-breeds assisted both the visitors to escape.

Father Marty died in St. Cloud, Minn., in 1896. He was succeeded by Bishop O'Gorman. The eminence west of Yankton, upon which the hospital of the Sacred Heart, built by the Benedictine Sisterhood, has been founded, was named Mount Marty in memory of the bishop. But late in territorial years the mount had been occupied by an Indian school established by Bishop Marty, which was followed by the erection of a large brick edifice by the Benedictine Sisters, and a seminary for young women conducted there. This structure was subsequently converted into the hospital by the Benedictine Sisterhood.

The Roman Catholic See for the Territory of Dakota, which had been located at Yankton from the first establishment of the church in Dakota, was removed to Sioux Falls by the church authorities in 1889, and a fine diocesan residence erected for the bishop. Yankton made pardonable efforts to retain it, but Sioux Falls was the principal commercial town in the territory, and presented inducements that outweighed the personal preferences of the excellent bishop.

SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS

The Seventh Day Adventists had gained a strong foothold in Dakota when in June, 1887, they held a camp fire reunion and gospel anniversary near Mitchell which was numerously attended. Their denomination had been represented in the territory from the earliest time, and some of its adherents were members of the Dakota Cavalry during the Civil war and were esteemed as efficient soldiers. Their encampment at Mitchell was quite attractive. At the entrance to the grounds stood a superb pavilion, 60 by 100 feet, displaying from its flag-staff two banners, on which were inscribed, respectively, the following: "What is Truth?" and "Thy Word is Truth." In the rear of this pavilion were the residence tents, and still further in the rear, on either side, were two forty foot tents set apart for religious services in the German and Danish languages. The floral hall came next, a picture of rare beauty, then a commodious tent for children's meetings. Floral hall was a frame structure, two stories, and quite commodious. A dining hall was found on its upper floor, and the secretary's office was there, and family groceries were also sold to the tent dwellers. The origin of the Christian denomination was of modern date, say about a half a century earlier. It had already grown to number about three hundred and ninety thousand and its membership had come largely not from other sectarian denominations, but from that class that had not been identified by membership with any of the church denominations. At this meeting it was claimed in one of the addresses its followers numbered over 300,000, that they had 800 churches and 400 ministers. The disparity between the number of churches and ministers was due to the fact that not all their church congregations occupied special houses of worship, some meeting in private dwellings, nor were all supplied with ordained ministers. They had a large number of evangelists called mission workers. Their growth had been encouraging and they had gained a substantial foothold.

While confidently believing that prophecy can be understood and is nearing the time of its fulfillment, they repudiate the occasional time setting announcements that appear in the public prints announcing the day when the second advent will occur. They are not responsible for these proclamations, and make no pretense of knowledge concerning it except that which is revealed in holy scripture.

Their creed and organization are simple and effective. The Bible constitutes their only creed, and their only bond of union a covenant to keep the commandments of God and faith in Jesus Christ. The officers or official representatives are elders, deacons, and clerks. Their ministers are principally evangelists, and are styled elders instead of reverends, as being more in accord with holy writ. They acknowledge the ten commandments as of supreme authority, and as a consequence observe the seventh day, or Saturday, as the Sabbath. They insist upon conversion, and adopt immersion as the only true baptism. They maintain that life and immortality are the gifts of God through Christ, and that the finally impenitent will perish by being consumed in the fires as stated in the Bible, after which the earth is to be renewed and become the eternal home of the saved.

Their church associations are formed into state conferences, and these state conferences, embracing a number in Europe, are again combined in a general conference having the oversight of their work throughout the world. Their conferences already numbered twenty-eight, with missions in Switzerland, Germany, Scotland, England, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, France, Italy, Russia, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand. They had seven publishing houses, three of which were in America, and one each in England, Switzerland, Norway and Australia, with a combined capital of $500,000. They were publishing twenty-two periodicals in eight different languages, the combined monthly circulation of which was more than a quarter of a million.

This conference at Mitchell was attended by a large concourse, but some had doubtless come as onlookers. A more intelligent and decorous assemblage, one seldom attends. All seemed to have obeyed the mandate, "Study the Scriptures, or search the Scriptures, for in them ye believe ye have eternal life."

The meeting at Mitchell was one of fifty or more that were now in session, or would be held in different states during the summer. These conferences were considered of the first importance to the members, and were attended by a number of the ablest elders of the denomination from abroad. Elders E. H. Farnsworth, of Iowa; G. H. Umy and S. Johnson, of Minnesota, and H. Shultz, of Nebraska, were present at this Dakota conference, beside the ministers or deacons from Dakota, among whom were A. D. Olsen, of Mitchell; G. H. Smith, of Aberdeen; S. H. Ells, of Iroquois; J. C. Mikkleson, of Milbank; Jacob Reiswig, of Milltown; and S. B. Whitney, of Bridgewater.

These people were well in the advance as advocates of education, and already had a number of colleges and academies established which were represented to be in a flourishing condition. They are also ardent temperance workers, apparently founding their faith upon the abstinence of the famous Rechabites that are mentioned in the 35th chapter of Jeremiah. They are also uncompromisingly opposed to many other hurtful and popular indulgences. With their temperance work they connect hygiene generally, the principles of which are at the foundation and are enforced in their sanitarium at Battle Creek, Mich., which is managed by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, a physician and scientist of favorable reputation. They have also a similar institution on the Pacific coast.

The important and current business of this conference was in charge of a number of committees. On nominations, M. Strenien, J. A. Chilas, C. Keiswig. On resolutions, Elder G. H. Smith, Elder R. M. Kilgon, Prof. W. W. Prescott. On credentials of ministers, S. B. Whitney, Elder J. Reiswig, J. J. Devereaux. New churches were admitted from Ellsworth, Cresbard, Huron, Watertown, Lakeside, and Rapid City.

One of the topics for an evening discourse was a sermon favoring an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which will place all Christian laws, institutions and usages of our Government and people upon an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

The convention that framed the Constitution of the United States, which met at Philadelphia, of which George Washington was president, and William Jackson secretary, finished its arduous and important labors and signed the Constitution on the 17th of September, A. D. 1787. The 100th anniversary of the great event occurred September 17, 1887, and a celebration commemorative thereof was held at Philadelphia on that date. Hon. John T. Kasson, an Iowa statesman of national renown, was president of the formal exercises. President Cleveland and ex-President Hayes participated, together with committees of Congress, the Supreme Court, the army and navy, all the state governors, and scores of ambassadors and special envoys from foreign capitals.

The Constitution framed by Washington and his compeers was submitted for adoption or rejection to a vote of the state governments. There were thirteen sovereign states at this time and a population in all of about four million. The names of the states were Virginia, New Hampshire, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia. Rhode Island was the thirteenth, but was not represented among the signers to the Constitution. It required the affirmative vote of nine of the states to ratify the instrument and make it the fundamental law of the land. The convention proceedings had been marked by acrimony, and agreements were in many instances, reached by compromises. It was a succession of compromises, the important issues being what power to give to the Federal Government, and second, slavery and the slave trade. All sovereign power not given to the National Government was reserved to the states and the people. When the grand charter was completed and signed by the delegates, few of those who had participated expressed entire satisfaction. Benjamin Franklin said he had expected no better, and was not sure it was not the best. John Randolph said that "nine states would never ratify." (It required a three-fourths vote of the states.) Elbridge Gerry feared a civil war. George Washington was the first to sign. As he did so, he held up the pen and said, "Should the states reject this excellent Constitution the probability is that opportunity will never again offer to cancel another in peace. The next will be drawn in blood."

The Constitution, though finally ratified, many months of effort and anxiety were consumed before this was accomplished. Washington was inaugurated the first President under it, in April, 1789, at New York, the seat of Government.

Dakota does not appear to have observed this occasion in any formal or public manner, being possibly too intently occupied at the time in trying to get into the Union of States which were formed under this "excellent Constitution."

DAKOTA FARMERS' ALLIANCE

The executive committee of the Dakota Territorial Farmers' Alliance met at Huron on the 20th of July, 1887, for a two days session. Representatives were present from nearly every county in the territory. H. L. Loucks presided. It was decided to incorporate the alliance with a capital stock of $200,000, for the purpose of transacting such business as the purchasing of such articles as they may deem advisable for the interest of the producer, for the borrowing and loaning of money to the members of the alliance, on chattels and real estate, at greatly reduced rates of interest. The following board of directors was elected to serve until the first annual meeting in January, 1888.

H. L. Loucks, Clear Lake; T. B. Fancher, Jamestown; J. W. Harden, Starkey; C. A. Soderburg, Hartford; Z. D. Scott, Milbank; A. D. Chase, Watertown; Alonzo Wardell, Tin Brooks; J. B. Wolgemuth, Aberdeen; D. C. Needham, Crow Lake; Hon. Geo. G. Crose, Bramhill; D. W. Sprague, Portland.

These directors then elected the following officers: President, Geo. G. Crose; vice president, D. S. Dodds; secretary, Don C. Needham; treasurer, D. W. Sprague.

Aberdeen was selected as the home office of the organization.

It was decided to organize a fire and cyclone insurance department in connection with the hail department already being worked. Several thousand dollars was subscribed to the capital stock, and it was resolved to organize the entire territory into subordinate alliances. It was shown that through the territorial purchasing department more than a quarter of a million dollars was saved to alliance members, and through them prices had been reduced 25 per cent on machinery, and that all farmers had the advantage of this whether members of alliance or not.

This meeting was the beginning of energetic and widespread progress of the farmers' movement which was to exert a remarkable influence in the agricultural industry of the territory, and also make its voice heard in its political affairs, which were now engaged in matters of the first importance to the people of all classes.

NATURAL GAS

In May, 1887, a farmer named R. M. McClure, residing in Summit Township, Sully County, on section 23, town 113, range 77, while engaged in boring for water struck a vein of gas at a depth of 190 feet. Not being satisfied with this result, he abandoned boring at that point, and sunk another hole about twenty-five rods farther north. He had ignited the escaping gas at the abandoned well and left it burning. In this second venture, at a depth of 194 feet the gas vein was again tapped, and poured out through the tubing with apparently greater force and volume than the first. Mr. McClure was somewhat discouraged with this second failure but it is presumed that he persevered and finally succeeded. The flame at the first hole had not been extinguished, but had been made use of to melt the snow, which appears to have remained later than usual, and this melted snow was made use of for domestic and farm purposes.

Mr. Dempsey, who had charge of the drilling operations for Mr. McClure stated that before he struck the gas vein he drilled for a number of feet through soft slate stone. There was very little odor to the gas, and what there was favored the fumes of evaporating kerosene.

Mr. Edward Thompson, proprietor of the Blunt Roller Mills, became interested and quite enthusiastic as he became acquainted with this discovery, but Mr. McClure seemed to treat the matter somewhat indifferently. The second hole was not ignited but was entirely neglected and allowed to fill up with dirt and gravel which were washed into it from melting snows and rains, and was in this condition when, some time later in the presence of Mr. Thompson and company of visitors who had come to learn something about the discovery, Mr. McClure held a lighted match over the neglected and partially filled hole, when a broad flame, two or three feet high and of corresponding breadth burst forth, much to the astonishment of the visiting people. Here we have the beginning of the natural gas wells which later became locally famous in the territory, and furnished the illuminating material for South Dakota's capital city.

A corporation was soon after organized at Blunt with a capital stock of $50,000 for the development of the gas belt, and through the medium of this or other agencies, a large number of prospect holes were sunk, and in many cases were successful. One of these holes or wells was within or near Pierre, and it was there that the illuminant was brought into domestic and municipal use quite generally, and became a matter of general knowledge.

Scientists support the claim that gas, oil, and coal in quantity underlie the superficial area of Dakota. The Government geologists whose professional investigations cover the United States and territories have given out an authentic statement which, in a general way, will answer as a guide to the sections where gas and its companions may, with reason be searched for and probably discovered. These people tell us that:

In general it may be said that natural gas is found in varying quantities all through the territory from the Hudson River, New York, to California. In New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Louisiana, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, Colorado, Dakota, Utah, Wyoming and California its existence is reported.

Where can it be found in paying quantities? This same authority, discussing this question, says:

It is almost impossible to put down the drill anywhere in the State of Ohio without finding natural gas in greater or less quantities. Outside of the localities in which the Berea and Trenton limestone have been found, the gas is produced in very small quantities. Perhaps the most suggestive and instructive statement in regard to "surface indications" is that made by Professor Leslie touching Pennsylvania. He says:

"First of all there can be no gas stored up in the oldest rocks. This settles the question in the negative for the whole southeastern third of Pennsylvania. To bore for gas in Bucks, Philadelphia and Delaware counties would be simply absurd.

"Second—There can be no gas left underground where the old rocks have been turned up on edge and overturned, fractured and recemented, faulted and disturbed in a thousand ways. If there ever was any it has long since found innumerable ways of escape into the atmosphere. This settles the question for all the counties of the great valley, as anyone can see by looking at the present condition of their limestone, slate and sandstone formations.

"Third—There is not the least chance that any gas is left underground in the greatly folded, crushed and hardened formations of the middle part of the state. Where the oil and gas rocks rise to the surface in these counties they show that all their oil and gas has escaped long ago.

"Fourth—Where the rock formations are approximately horizontal and have remained nearly undisturbed over extensive areas, as in all of the counties west of the Alleghenies, there is always a chance of finding gas, if not oil, at some depth beneath the surface, determined by the particular formation which appears at the surface.

"Fifth—Wherever the bituminous coal beds have been changed into anthracite or semi-bituminous coal, it is reasonable to suppose that the same agency which produced the change, whatever it was, must have acted on the whole column of formations, including any possible gas rock at any depth.

"Sixth—Wherever rock oil has been found, there and in the surrounding region, gas is sure to exist."

At this time, 1887, the discoveries and utilization of natural gas were exciting the interest and comment of the intelligent people of the entire country, and it would seem that Dakota had secured an early and conspicuous position in the "natural gas column." People somewhat remote from the gas centers read with amazement that populous cities in Ohio and contiguous states were throwing out the ordinary coal gas of municipal factories and other illuminants, and incurring large expense in substituting the gas that poured up from the earth in substantial volume.

Natural gas, however, was not a novelty, though it had not been known to exist in sufficient quantities to furnish an illuminant for even the villages in the neighborhood of the various places where it was detected in escaping from its subterranean ocean. Its existence had been known and recognized for a century, but it was not suspected that it existed in sufficient volume for practical purposes, as an illuminant, hence no effort appears to have been made to develop it, except here and there an instance where private parties, finding it forced upon them, displayed their enterprise by subjecting it to their service. In this connection it was related that in Findlay, Ohio, natural gas had been known to exist ever since its settlement, and was met with in digging cellars and wells, and found in springs and rock crevices. In 1838 it was utilized in a small way for lighting a residence or two in the village, and had been ever since. The earliest use of natural gas for practical purposes in this country was at Fredonia, N. Y., where natural gas was found escaping from rock crevices and springs when the Holland Land Company made its survey of the "Holland Patent." In 1821 a well was sunk to the depth of twenty-seven feet for the purpose of gathering some of the escaping gas, and it was utilized with iron pipes with small holes at the side for its escape. Burned in this way it made a flame about equal to two candles. By 1824, the date of LaFayette's visit, the enterprise had progressed so far that the town used natural gas on the occasion of his visit.

Probably the first reported discovery of natural gas was in the Kanawha Valley, where it was rediscovered nearly a century later. The earliest explorers of the Kanawha Valley found "marsh gas," the modern natural gas, issuing from springs, and it was told of George Washington, in locating lands deeded to him for his military services during the Revolutionary war, found a burning spring, which he proposed to deed for public uses, but which, through some informality, was never completed. It was claimed that it was used in the Kanawha Valley during the first Harrison's administration for boiling salt. In Illinois, where the gas excitement had absorbed public interest in 1887, there had been gas wells for over thirty years, the product being utilized in a small way for an illuminant.

NAVIGATING THE JAMES RIVER

Whether the James or Dakota River was such a waterway that by the wise expenditure of a reasonable amount of Government money could be made a commercial highway for fair sized steamboats, was a question that had not been officially determined during all the long and prosperous years of Dakota's probation as a territory, though the subject would occasionally flame up from the columns of some enterprising and aggressive newspaper, claiming that with a very moderate expenditure on the part of the parent government an ample channel could be provided to float steamboats of moderate tonnage between Yankton, near the mouth of the river to Jamestown, on the Northern Pacific, a distance of 400 miles by the waterway, which would be a great boon to the thousands of farmers who had settled in the fertile lands tributary to the James Valley, who could transport their surplus products to market at less than one-half the cost of railway carriage, while it would have a tendency to prevent excessive railroad rates throughout the territory.

There had been comparatively long stretches of the river through Brown, Dickey and LaMoure counties where the experiment of operating steamboats for transportation had been tried by private parties, and reports that these ventures had been successful induced the Government, through the importunities of Delegate Gifford to make an appropriation in 1886, and send an engineer officer of the army to make a survey of the river. This official selected a substantial light spring wagon, waterproof on top, instead of a row boat for his investigation and carrying his outfit. He made his way along the valley propelled by a team of strong mules, frequently halting to make or take observations of the river bed. In this way the officer made a very safe and sufficient preliminary survey of the stream. There had been two dry seasons just preceding the survey which noticeably reduced the stage of water in the channel, and though this was explained to the engineer it failed to convince him that dry seasons were any more exceptional than wet seasons.

Much had been expected, in favorably influencing the report of the officer, from the presence of one of the steamboats which had been used as a part of the fleet of the Columbia and LaMoure transportation line in previous years and which was at this time moored to its landing near the port of Columbia; but by a stupid oversight on the part of the friends of navigation, when the Government officer made his visit to the vessel it was found lying almost out of water on the bank, with a placard displayed conspicuously on the deck, announcing that the vessel would be sold at sheriff's sale at an early day. Delegate Gifford having been apprised of these unlucky incidents was not surprised when the engineer returned a report so unfavorable that the project has not since been revived.

BANKERS' CONVENTION

The Bankers' Association of Dakota organized in 1884, held a session at Watertown during the latter part of May, 1887. President Anderson, in his address, stated that the membership of the association had increased from eighteen to eighty-two members since its organization.

H. W. McDonald, of Pierre, secretary, in an address somewhat statistical, gave some information regarding cultivated lands and farm mortgages, and kindred subjects that were interesting. For example:

In 1886 Dakota contained 1,150,413 acres of improved lands. In 1885 this had increased to 6,560,750 acres, an increase of 5,410,335 acres. The cost of putting this land into a state of cultivation was about four dollars an acre, hence the total value added to the improved lands of the territory was not less than twenty-one million, six hundred forty-one thousand, four hundred and forty dollars.

Farm mortgages formed a large portion of the Dakota banker's business at that time, and Mr. McDonald proceeded:

The character of the mortgagor has much to do with the strength of the mortgage. It is proverbial that the most active and energetic people, usually young men and women, leave the East to make farms and homes for themselves in the new West. This kind of homeseeker is supplemented by the immigration of the hardy foreigner. It is evident that from these two classes an excellent line of mortgages can be selected.

The average amount of lands mortgaged in Western New York, in proportion to the whole area of improved lands in that section, is as great as is the case in Dakota. The average amount of the Western New York mortgage is much larger than the average Dakota mortgage. The New York farm of 160 acres usually carries a mortgage debt of not less than five thousand dollars with interest at 5 per cent. The average mortgage in Dakota on 160 acres is $800 at 8 or 10 per cent interest. The net profit accruing to the western farmer over that of the eastern farmer is as much greater as are his living expenses less. Farm mortgages are the effect of failure of crops as a rule, though some are made to permit of substantial and needed improvements. The high rate of interest has a tendency to overloaning which in many instances would seem to amount to a virtual purchase of the land.

The members of the association present were: M. P. Bebee, Ipswich; W. W. Watte, Blunt; A. H. Everhard, Highmore; C. S. Shelly, Gary; W. H. Waters, Miller; D. W. Diggs, Milbank; Charles E. Judd, Canton; J. L. Wells, Ipswich; S. Guillander, Britton; E. L. Hopkins, Hillsview; F. W. Thomas, D. Gesley, W. E. Sibley, H. D. Walrath, S. B. Sheldon, W. E. Scarrett, W. D. Morris, H. L. Sheldon, C. E. Boyden, of Watertown; William Fisher, Volga; J. F. Haney, Clear Lake; B. J. Kelsey, Aurora; F. E. Hale, Scotland; S. M. Sprowls, Faulkton; F. M. Hopkins, Roscoe; H. H. McDowell, Eugene Steere, Pierre; B. A. Wade, Gary.

BOARD OF PHARMACY

The South Dakota board of pharmacy consisting of J. L. Kreychie, of Iroquois; H. K. Warne, of Mitchell, and D. S. White, of Flandreau, appointed by the governor under the law passed by the late Legislature, met at Woonsocket on the 17th of May, 1887, and organized by electing Druggist Warne, president, and Druggist Kreychie, secretary. At this meeting the board prepared blanks for applications, and settled their affairs preliminary to the important duties which had been devolved upon them, and decided to hold the first meeting for the examination of candidates for registration at Huron on the 28th day of June, 1887, when certificates to qualified druggists would be issued. The pharmacists, anticipating a division of the territory at an early day, were among the first of the business classes to organize a South Dakota Association.

PRECIOUS METALS IN THE BLACK HILLS

The director of the United States mint made a special report on the production of the precious metals in Dakota for the year 1886. He stated that the Homestake, Deadwood-Terra, Caledonia, Highland, and Father deSmet, had, as in the past furnished about all the gold. Among the silver producing properties the Iron Hill occupied the foremost position. Of the Dakota bullion product, nearly all came to the assay office in New York, and the figures given represent the receipts at that office from Dakota for the year 1886.

Name of Mine.	Gold.	Silver.	Total.
Caledonia	$ 197,698.17	$ 2,529.12	$ 200,227.29
Deadwood-Terra	582,724.79	6,931.91	589,658.70
Father deSmet	72,106.24	963.37	73,069.61
Highland	512,989.95	5,396.68	518,386.68
Homestake	1,018,235.38	12,522.68	1,030,758.66
Iron Hill	324.66	371,795.29	372,119.95
Uncle Sam	15,038.39	128.55	14,166.94
Richmond	453.27	16,682.15	17,135.42
Unknown	121,449.64	5,631.66	127,081.30
Totals.....	$2,520,030.49	$422,581.41	$2,942,601.90

The amount of gold bullion in 1886 was affected by unusual injurious causes. First, depreciation in value of ore produced. Second, the Father DeSmet property, formerly a large producer, ceased operating early in the year. The Caledonia closed for two months owing to a cave in.

Concerning the silver production a marked change was noted. During 1885 the total value of the silver reported was but $65,526, while in 1886 it was $422,881, an increase of $357,055. The number of producing mines in the Hills, both gold and silver, was never greater than at this time. Railway facilities have been a valuable factor in stimulating the mining industry. Outside of the Homestake lode, reaching from Deadwood to Whitewood Creek are the Bald Mountain mines. These, it was at the time predicted, would become the principal gold producing properties of the territory. These ores are rich in gold, carrying a small percentage of silver, and occur in flat veins or blanket lodes, extending over an area of four miles. They cannot be treated successfully by the ordinary free milling process so are shipped for separation.

The silver production had suffered from the fact that the Richmond mine (which now includes the Sitting Bull property), formerly one of the largest silver producers only commenced production in November, having up to that time been closed on account of legal difficulties. The steady output of the smaller mining properties in the Galena district and preparations to build works of greater capacity for reducing the ores of the carbonate district offered an encouraging outlook for an increased silver product. During the year 1886, $732,500 was paid in dividends by the following Dakota companies, Homestake Mining Company, $600,000. Caledonia Mining Company, $20,000. Iron Hill Mining Company, $112,500. This is taking no account whatever of the scores of mining properties that were being worked on a much smaller scale and only locally known, scattered throughout the great mineral belt. This was a condition of the mining industry nine years after the Hills were opened to white occupation, and quartz mining was yet an infant industry.

Concerning the fruitfulness of the soil in the year 1887 there was abundance of contemporary testimony, but that which was entitled to the implicit confidence of the reader was the report which had come down through an official channel, made by Hon. P. F. McClure, of Pierre, the immigration commissioner of the territory. He gathered his information with intelligent care from reliable parties, including county officials, from every county in the territory. His conclusions, therefore, while seemingly extravagant, were fully justified by the facts revealed by the harvest. The following brief summary was taken from his report:

Of wheat there was seeded 3,818,754 acres, which yielded 62,553,400 bushels. Of corn there was planted 608,807 acres, which yielded 24,511,726 bushels. Of oats there was seeded 1,172,289 acres, which yielded 43,267,478 bushels. Of barley, 235,155 acres, yielding 6,500,568 bushels. Buckwheat, 5,749 acres, 70,230 bushels. Flax, 412,741 acres, yielding 3,010,044 bushels.

Squirrels, cut worms and poor seed were responsible for the loss of many millions of bushels of corn in 1887.

In 1880 the value of all farm products, exclusive of live stock, in the territory amounted to $5,648,814, and the value of live stock in the territory was $6,453,274. In 1885, five years later, the value of farm products amounted to $36,808,131, and the value of live stock reached the total of $40,528,807.

TIN IN BLACK HILLS

Tin was discovered in paying quantities in the Harney Peak region of the Black Hills in 1883-84, and the event awakened much interest in the country generally, owing to the growing scarcity of the metal, and the consequent increase in price, and the poor quality of many articles of domestic use which were made wholly or partially from tin. England furnished the United States its tin and their tin trade was a valuable commercial asset, for they possessed practically a monopoly of the tin trade. A Professor Bailey, who had become interested and quite enthusiastic over the discoveries in the Harney's Peak district, and who was regarded as a safe authority on the useful and popular metal, gave out a statement of a general character concerning the tin mines of the world, showing that its production had been declining for half a century, and the demand increasing. The great deposits had been those of Cornwall, England, and the Saxon and Bohemian Erzgebirge; smaller veins were known in Brittany, Finland, Spain, Mexico, Bolivia, and New South Wales. These last mentioned were practically exhausted. The Saxon and Bohemian mines were producing an insignificant quantity, and those of Spain and South America still less. Cornwall had been the great source of supply for a thousand years for the world, but indications were that Cornwall would not be able much longer to supply the demand. Tin mining appears to have been very expensive, and its increasing cost had led to the use of substitutes that were in no case satisfactory, and to the general use of sheet iron plated or washed with tin, for every article which had been supplied from pure tin while that metal could be had at reasonable prices. In this way there had come about the manufacture of a substitution of an iron body covered with a short lived tin wash for roofing material, spouts, pails, pans, and scores of articles, that in earlier days had been produced wholly in tin, and had taken their names from it.

According to Professor Bailey the Black Hills region would be able not only to supply the United States but would have an abundance for export. The center of the district was claimed to be Harney's Peak, itself the principal mass, and from that point it spread over an area measuring twelve miles by seven or eight. The tin bearing rock, it was held, could be quarried from the surface, instead of being dug for and followed under ground, and veins of it had been discovered measuring more than fifty feet in width, which was a superior width to the Cornwall mines. The stream tin which could be obtained by sluicing, according to sample assays, yielded about 75 per cent of pure tin, and was so abundant that all companies that might desire to work in this field would find abundant material for a score of years, yet this stream tin was but the waste of the main deposits, that water and frost had detached, a small fragment at a time from the great source of the ore which was Harney's Peak itself nearly a mile high, and the surrounding tin-bearing rock which extended for miles.

Hill City was the principal town in the tin mining district of the Black Hills, and 1889 was a notable year in its history and in the work of developing the tin deposits. The Harney Peak company led the march of improvement. Hoisting works were erected on the Coates and Cambay mines, their completion and operation promising labor to a larger force of employes. A party of Chicago capitalists stood ready to put up a tin-plate manufactory as soon as the production would justify it. There had been some apprehension that a serious difficulty would be encountered in separating the tin from the mica, but that problem had been successfully solved at the Dakota School of Mines at Rapid City. Doctor Carpenter, the dean of that institution, had made a careful and exhaustive experiment with the machinery of the school metallurgical laboratory, and found that the average tin ores of the Harney Peak mines could be crushed and concentrated at a cost not to exceed fifty cents per ton. Vice President Claussen, of the Harney Peak company, resident manager, stated that the company would build about six miles of narrow gauge railway during the summer.

A sample of tin ore from the Etta mine, Black Hills, that was shipped to New York from the mine in January, 1886, was not only a beautiful sample of tin ore but a colossal specimen as well. It weighed $4\frac{1}{2}$ tons and was hauled to Buffalo Gap station on the Northwestern Railroad for shipment in a specially prepared conveyance. The nature of the rock was what experts call "green greisen," composed of feldspar and quartz, largely mingled with a greenish stained mica, while over all and through the whole mass the brown black crystals of cassiterite or tinstone were exposed. It was intended to exhibit the specimen in New York for a season, and then send it to Europe.

There was great interest manifested in the tin deposits of the Black Hills during 1887. Tin had been early discovered there, and certain lodes had been located and meagerly worked, but legal complications and lack of transportation facilities with lack of capital probably a chief hindrance, had delayed and interfered with the development of the mines, which were regarded as extensive and valuable owing to the scarcity of that metal among the known mineral resources of this continent, and the proximity of the Black Hills, when transportation facilities should be furnished. Cornwall, England, was the tin emporium of the world at this time and the United States its most profitable customer and consumer.

In 1884 a capitalist of New York, Mr. James Wilson, presumed to be representing an English company, spent the summer in the Harney Peak mining district, exploring and investigating the tin resources. Mr. Wilson appears to have been well qualified for such an investigation, and he became satisfied that there was an abundance of the metal there covering a large area, which could safely be made the basis for a large and profitable enterprise. During that and the succeeding two years he continued his examinations and purchased a large number of lodes from prospectors who had located them. In 1887 Mr. Wilson went to London and organized a company with a capital stock of £2,000,000, English money, £100,000 of which was set apart for the construction of a railway from the mines to Rapid City.

In July, 1887, a party of New Yorkers made up of ex-Governor Alonzo B. Cornell, Lewis F. Payne, a prominent statesman later, W. S. Williams, a banker, and P. D. O'Brien, a Black Hills miner, visited the Harney district and inspected the properties owned by the American Tin Company, in which they had large investments,—in fact were practically the owners. It was stated that Roscoe Conklin, the famous New York statesman, was interested also. As a result of this party's investigation it was announced that their company would put in a plant and work their properties, entailing an expense of $250,000. They intended to place an experienced Cornwall miner in charge. This company had already made considerable development of their properties, and had sunk one shaft 100 feet, and from this had cross-cut 135 feet on two levels, and from the result of these workings had concluded upon extensive and substantial improvements. The building of a short line of railway was a part of this company's plans. Thirteen tons of ore from their mines had been previously sent to Cornwall for a test run, and this resulted so favorably that a Mr. Gilbert, a Cornish expert, came over to negotiate for property in the new district. This gentleman sent back a report which awakened much interest in the circle of English capitalists interested in tin, and subsequent proceedings led the Americans to conjecture that Cornishmen were at work to get control of the Black Hills properties for the purpose of obstructing their exploitation and development, apprehending that Cornwall would be unable to control the United States market against such rival interests as the Black Hills could soon establish. It would seem that the Cornishmen were largely successful in their efforts from the moderate showing the home tin industry has since made.

Concerning the Black Hills tin ore it had been demonstrated that it contained a larger per cent of pure tin than the Cornwall ore, and could be more profitably worked.

In 1888, while the interest in tin held its own, the public mind became deeply interested, particularly in the southern hills, in new coal discoveries, and these, together with the tentative plans that had been set afoot, as before related, made a tin and coal mining camp of Rapid City, which appeared, by common consent, to be the rallying point for the tin and coal interests. Great blocks of tin ore were displayed in the hotels, banks and business houses of Rapid, and also specimens of bituminous coal found in the western portion of the county. The City of Rapid, impatient at the tardiness of the projected railroad to the tin country, constructed an excellent wagon way leading to Harney's Peak over which the heavy machinery for use in mining and reducing ores could be transported. The local representatives of the leading companies operating in the tin district made Rapid their headquarters.

In September, 1888, a new interest was awakened toward the tin deposits. An English expert and scientist, Professor Vincent, a member of the Royal Geographical Society of England, had made an extensive examination of the tin properties owned by the Harney Peak Tin Company, and which James Wilson, president of the company, had offered for sale to a great English company or syndicate, at $10,000,000, or £2,000,000, English money. Negotiations had been pending before Professor Vincent's examination looking to a sale of the property but negotiations were delayed, it was apprehended, awaiting further and surer evidences of the value of the property. It was to secure these that Professor Vincent was sent across the ocean and on to the Black Hills. His testimony would be ample evidence, if it confirmed the reports already in hand, to justify the transfer. Vincent made a thorough exploration of the property so far as depth had been attained in the various workings. Forty tons of the ore were packed and shipped to England just as it was taken from the ground. The ore was of excellent quality, showing a high percentage of tin. The professor made a written report to his English clients accompanying which was forwarded at the time the shipment was made, and it was believed by interested parties in the Hills that the report was favorable. But a long silence followed, which was quite discouraging to home interests, who did not properly weigh the deliberation and conservatism of our English cousins in matters involving so much expenditure. And no people of any nation have a more thorough appreciation of mineral properties than the English, or are better informed regarding their value.

Professor Vincent's report was finally made public, and was found to be a strong endorsement of the Black Hills tin deposits. He declared the veins explored to be permanent in character, well defined, carrying cassiterite or tin oxide in paying quantities, and throughout a considerable scope of country. In concluding his report the professor said.

Finally, I will state in distinct terms that which I have already indicated, namely, my conviction that with proper and adequate management the unique assemblage of magnificent properties under the consideration will show commercial results such as have seldom been equaled in the achievements of industrial economy.

The London Mining Journal commenting on the Vincent report, said:

It must now be considered as settled that America possesses tin mines capable of furnishing her own market, if not, indeed, entering other markets of the world. And further, that those who now control the tin supplies of the world may look for consolation to the fact that the American market is a great and rapidly growing one, carrying the idea that it may be expected to use the principal part of the tin from the Black Hills for years to come, and that thus they will not have to bear American competition in other markets.

CHAPTER C

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION YEAR—IMPORTANT TO DAKOTA

1888

DAKOTA BILLS IN CONGRESS—DEATH-DEALING BLIZZARD IN JANUARY—REPUBLICAN CONVENTION AT JAMESTOWN TO SELECT DELEGATES TO THE NATIONAL CONVENTION—ADDRESSES, RESOLUTIONS, ETC.—NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION AT CHICAGO—DEMOCRATIC TERRITORIAL CONVENTION—DAY AND CHURCH FACTIONS—NATIONAL CONVENTION AT ST. LOUIS—CLEVELAND AND HENDRICKS THE CANDIDATES—HARRISON AND MORTON NOMINATED AT CHICAGO—THE PROHIBITIONISTS NOMINATE A TERRITORIAL TICKET—DEMOCRATIC AND REPUBLICAN TERRITORIAL CONVENTIONS.

In January, 1888, the delegate in Congress from Dakota Territory introduced in the House many more measures than the average congressmen from the states. In order that the reader may see the variety of Dakota's needed legislation at hands of Congress, a list of Delegate Gifford's bills is here appended: For the admission of the State of South Dakota. For the admission of the State of North Dakota. Allowing the Duluth and Manitoba Railway right of way through the Fort Pembina Military Reservation. Throwing open to settlement abandoned and useless military reservations. Providing for a commission to negotiate with the Sisseton and Wahpeton Sioux Indians for a modification of present treaties and agreements. Allowing the Duluth and Manitoba road the right of way through the Fort Pembina Military Reservation. And throwing open to settlement abandoned and useless military reservations. Providing for a commission to negotiate with the Sisseton & Wahpeton Sioux Indians for a modification of present treaties and agreements. Granting section 16 near Rapid City to that town. Granting certain sections of land near Grand Forks to the North Dakota University. Granting the Yankton & Missouri Valley Railroad right-of-way through the Yankton Indian Reservation. Providing for the opening of the Great Sioux Reservation. This bill was practically the Dawes bill, which appears in this work in a chapter of 1885, and which was not defeated, but passed the Senate and failed to reach a vote in the House. Nothing had been done in this matter for two years. The tribal patent clause of the Dawes bill had been omitted from the Gifford bill. Granting the Duluth, Watertown & Pacific Railroad the right to build a bridge across the Missouri River at some available point in Charles Mix County, Dakota. To establish two new land districts with the land offices at Pierre and at Chamberlain, contingent upon the opening of the Great Sioux Reservation. Granting a section of land to Aurora County, Dakota, for the establishment of a reform school. Providing for an inquiry into the losses sustained by settlers who had been deprived of their rights on the Crow Creek and Winnebago reservations by the summary closing of the reservations by order of President Cleveland.

The democrats had lost heavily in congressmen at the election in 1886, and the two old parties were very near a tie in the House, the Democrats two or three in the lead. It was confidently expected that the Dakota State bills would be passed in some form before the session was ended. A presidential election occurred this year (1888), which would be an important factor in influencing the action of Congress on Dakota affairs. It was expected that Springer would be unfriendly to Gifford's state bills, owing to their provisions for two states, whereas Mr. Springer wanted to include the entire territory in one.

THE DEATH DEALING BLIZZARD OF 1888

Preceding the terrible blizzard of January 13, 1888, with its unprecedented fatalities, the winter had been unusually rigorous and stormy. From all portions of the territory had come accounts of heavy snows that blockaded the railroads, covered the wagon roads to a depth that with the drifts rendered them almost impassable. The inhabitants of many villages were practically isolated from the surrounding country and from neighboring towns by the impassable condition of the thoroughfares. There must have been considerable suffering in the newer settlements where the recent settlers had not prepared for a season of such extreme severity, and these newer settlements were in large numbers, for Dakota had gained many thousands in population during the season preceding. The farming people had been accustomed to predicate an abundant harvest following such real wintry weather, and found much consolation in anticipating a profitable and adequate reward as a compensation for the discomforts that attended their winter labors.

The most disastrous winter storm that had ever occurred in Dakota or the region covered by it, according to Indian testimony, came up on the 12th of January, Friday, about noon or a little later, 1888, and continued for nearly twenty-four hours when the blizzardy features of the storm subsided but the intense and dangerous cold continued. Two hours after the storm broke out the temperature had fallen below the coldest of any previous cold spell during the winter, and soon reached to 25° below zero while the heaviest snowfall of the winter prevailed, and the wind blew with hurricane strength. It soon grew into the most dangerous blizzard that ever visited the territory. The quantity of snow, the force and fitfulness of the wind which kept the snow in the air and effectually concealed objects outside while the constant and powerful gusts of wind, laden with the fine snow, prevented a person from seeing anything if they stood exposed to the air.

Had the storm broken out in the night it is not probable that it would have cost the life of any human beings in the territory, but it came up while the rural schoolhouses were filled with pupils, many of tender years, and a mile or two, possibly more from home, and raged with such strength and fury that neither strong men or animals could make their way against it, in fact animals utterly refused to face it and became frantic when exposed to it. Farmers who had gone to town or market, or who were even in their fields engaged in hauling home their hay and fodder crops, found themselves lost, not knowing which way to turn, the roads entirely obscured by the whirling clouds of snow, and huge drifts rapidly accumulating.

Many thousands of the people of the territory were sufficiently exposed to the fierceness of this tempest in its earliest stages to satisfy them that they had narrowly escaped serious injury and possibly fatal freezing, and after the worst of the storm was passed and people could get abroad in search of missing members of the family, it was then that the heartrending cries of the bereaved were heard in a hundred homes. School children were largely the victims.

Following the storm came the reports of the dead, maimed and missing. And a scene that became quite familiar in many localities was the arrival of a party in quest of a doctor and bearing either on their arms or in some sort of conveyance, the half frozen body of a neighbor or two who had been exposed to the storms. The demand for medical assistance called the fraternity into the field early and kept them there, the whole scene covering almost the entire territory reminding one familiar with battles of the scene around the hospital camps while a hotly contested battle was in progress and the wounded were being borne to the rear and turned into the surgeon's care. In Bon Homme

County alone there were nineteen cases of death by freezing. In Yankton County two near Lesterville and a number permanently disabled by the loss of limbs that were amputated. In Clay County, three near Wakonsda. The blizzard extended through all parts of the territory. A report sent from Bismarek on the 15th, stated:

The streets of the city are entirely deserted and not a team or vehicle of any kind is to be seen. It reminds one of the ancient depopulated cities. The terrible swirling masses of snow prevents objects from being seen across the street. The big drifts are so hardly packed that teams can drive over with perfect ease without breaking through. The city schools are closed indefinitely, or until the storm abates. Many children started to go to school this morning, but were obliged to turn back. No freight trains have passed through for several weeks. The hard packed snow derails trains. This was the cause of the wreck above here, where the engineer and fireman lost their lives.

In the early years of Dakota's settlement by the whites a number of serious blizzard storms were experienced which are mentioned at length in the early chapters. There were a number of similar experiences related by people in various portions of the territory, which proved that the peculiar and furious tempest which bears the name of blizzard had lost none of its tragic nature or pitiless features. But there were thousands who survived the fury of the storm-fiend in 1888 to one who could tell of personal perils from a like cause back in the '60s. The blizzard was as fierce, fatal and prolonged in Nebraska and Kansas as in Dakota, and about the same time a similar storm swept over New York and the East carrying death and destruction in its path.

The known fatalities in Dakota of human beings found frozen to death after the storm abated numbered 148, and were divided among the counties named, as follows:

Stutsman County, M. A. Ryan, one; McCook, Henry Bliss, one; Ransom County, two sons of B. Cleveland, unknown man, Cora Curtis, four; Pembina County, Miss Jacobson, Mrs. Grande, Miss Brandee, unknown boy, four; Codington County, Miss Sarah Doland, Rev. Mr. Springer, Mrs. J. M. Westfall, three; Ward County, James Smith, two sons of James Smith, Mr. Davis and son, five; Clark County, Wm. Drivers, two sons of Wm. Drivers, Charles Heath, four; Edmunds County, Mr. Paine, Peter Terhune, two; Hamlin County, Mr. Tittloff, one; Brule County, Annie Anderson, Joseph Bieyers, two; Deuel County, Hugo Sheaf, Joseph Hutchinson's two children, three; Day County, Harrison Smootz, one; Brown County, Wm. Love, Judson Westgate, Miss Stoneburger, Wm. Morrill, four; Spink County, W. G. Carthwaite, Charles Osman, Bessie Stansfield, Mr. Buethen, Emil Gilbertson, Lewis Merriman, and his son, seven; Faulk County, Emma Lamar, Carrie Auman, Joseph Metz, Mr. Clamp, Mr. May, five; Hand County, W. Gassler, William Bowman, Jerry Bowman, Alex Thompson, farmer name unknown, Mrs. Holtz, Maggie Dan, seven; Beadle County, T. E. Gilkerson, Robert Chambers, Emil Gilman, Thomas Nelson, William Nelson, J. W. Goslee, Mrs. Devine, Adam Gerner, John Newcomber, Frank Frierson, William Frierson, J. F. Wilson, Wm. Norton, Frank Norton, Mrs. Phillips, and her grandson named Bardel, Burdette Scofield, Katherine Drue, eighteen; Lake County, Mrs. T. O. Owens, one; Sanborn County, Miss Lizzie Ashton, Miss Fisher, an unknown boy, Mr. Davis and wife, five; Minnehaha County, Miss Jacobson, Miss Grinde, Ole Gunderson's hired man, P. Grandstrom, John Bessler, Mrs. James Kennedy, and Mrs. Kennedy's son, Eric Ericsson, eight; Bon Homme County, J. O. Robinson, A. J. Winters, Nels Hullibarton, Mrs. F. Bambas, son of Michael Huff, Mrs. Bose, Joseph Kocorek, two children of John Bonza, Mrs. A. J. Wilson, child of Matthew Weisse, three children of Christian Kaul, five children of George Gishert, nineteen; Yankton County, Jacob Kurtz, Mrs. Elizabeth Neth, Frederick Milbeyer, Frank Weisner, four; Turner County, four children of Peter Wrenza, Lizzie Dwyer, five; Clay County, Miss Shoefeldt, Miss Annie Shoefeldt, two; Hutchinson County, W. B. Hadley, three children of John Kaufman, child of John Albrecht, child of Peter Graber, Mrs. John Gunn, Joshua Saylor, son of Joshua Saylor, Wm. Reiswig, and his hired man, daughter of P. H. Sweet, George Lang, George Verlhauer, son of Jacob Brunt, fifteen; Douglas County, Jacob McBreame, Charles Rhodes, two; Davison County, George Allen, Walter Munger, Allen Munger, three; Lincoln County, John Bessler, four children of Peter Weinenger, Edward Kylling, L. Seibert's hired man, three children of Mr. Heines, ten; Hyde County, Sister Wilhelmain, Mrs. Anthony Haby, two.

The fatalities so numerous among young women and children has each a separate story of heroic but futile effort of a country school, its dauntless and faithful teacher in a struggle with the pitiless storm to guide her pupils to a safe refuge. There were many instances of this, and fortunately a large majority were successful. As a rule teachers had been warned against such a danger, and lost no time in dismissing school. Others delayed, expecting the storm would subside and when they ventured forth they were soon bewildered, lost, and fell easy victims to the relentless fury of the maelstrom.

A weather item caught from the news of the day during this unprecedented period of heavy snows and frigid temperatures stated that the temperature in Wisconsin ranged from 42° to 62° below zero; in Iowa, 42° in Dakota 22° to 34°; Minnesota, 24°, and Michigan, 42°.

In the vast area covered by it, its intense cold, its fatalities, and heavy deposit of snow, this midwinter cataclysm established a precedent. It was generally regarded as a nation-wide and calamitous visitation.

The railways were greatly annoyed by the snow before as well as after the great "blizzard" of January 12th. There was an unusual amount of cold, hard freezing weather. There were no trains on the east and west lines at Huron for two or three weeks in January, and the same was the condition at points on the Milwaukee west of Canton and Egan and Big Stone, though there appeared to be a diminishing of the annoyance on the more northernmost lines, but there was unusual delays and snow filled cuts on the Northern Pacific and Manitoba lines that ran west. Central Dakota was visited by a greater depth of snow than either the north or south. Points in the territory not touched by north and south lines were practically without rail connection after the great "blizzard" until the spring breakup.

The ice gorged near Elk Point April 1st, causing a rise in the Missouri, and backed the water up stream for seven or eight miles, overflowing the bottom lands. The railway tracks below Elk Point were under water for some weeks. There was no overflow above Vermillion, and no serious flood conditions caused by the rise in the Missouri, but the valleys of many tributary streams in the northern portion of Dakota, notably Heart River, were submerged and the settlers were driven to the highlands. Considerable live stock was drowned.

REPUBLICANS ELECT DELEGATES TO NATIONAL CONVENTION

The Republican Central Committee met at Aberdeen on the 31st of March, and called two republican conventions, the first to meet at Jamestown, May 16th to elect delegates to the National Republican Convention to be held at Chicago, in June, to nominate a candidate for President, and the second to meet at Watertown, August 22d, to nominate a candidate for delegate to Congress. The apportionment was one delegate for each 200 votes cast for Delegate Gifford in 1886. The contest in committee for the places to hold the conventions was quite spirited. Mitchell came within two votes of securing the first convention and the contest for the second, there being a number of candidates required nineteen ballots. The candidates were Deadwood, Sioux Falls, Watertown, Aberdeen, Mitchell, Bismarck, Brookings, Yankton, and Grafton. Deadwood and Watertown were the favorites, and ran neck and neck to the last ballot.

The convention called to meet at Jamestown to elect delegates to the Republican National Convention assembled May 16th, and was called to order in the opera house by Harrison Allen, chairman of the Central Committee who said:

I congratulate the gentlemen present upon being members of the largest and grandest convention ever held in the territory—a convention outnumbering by far in representation any territorial convention ever held in the United States.

Nearly six hundred strangers were present, and fully 525 of whom were delegates.

Col. N. M. Price, of Sanborn County, and Judge John E. Bennett, of Clark County, were placed in nomination for temporary chairman. It was decided to call the roll of counties and throw out the vote of counties where contests existed. Judge Bennett was elected by a vote of 420 to 93. The roll call showed contests in Logan and Rolette counties. Every county in the territory except Towner and Buffalo was represented.

Upon taking the chair, Judge Bennett referred in strong language to the gross injustice done Dakota by keeping this great territory out of the Union. He said the democratic party was responsible for it. The convention was stirred to wild enthusiasm by the speaker's reference to prominent presidential candidates, and especially by the name of Blaine.

The marked omission of any reference to Judge Gresham greatly disappointed many in the convention. The day before the name of Gresham produced long and loud approval from most of the club delegates, and in this convention the same expression would undoubtedly have been heard had opportunity been given.

C. T. Howard, of Spink County; R. W. Wheelock, of Davison County, and Fred Falley, of Richland County, were elected secretaries.

The following committees were then appointed by the chair:

On credentials—L. C. Taylor, of Hanson County; Frank Alexander, of Campbell County; Phil Skilman, of Brown County; C. E. Hayward, of Clark County; A. S. Stowe, of Edmunds County; A. S. Flemington, of Dickey County; S. B. Crist, of Lawrence County; J. W. Walker, of Kidder; D. S. Dodds, of Nelson; J. E. Hipple, of Hutchinson; E. L. Bates, of Charles Mix; C. J. Fry, of Clay; E. J. McMahon, of Steele; H. W. Coe, of Morton, and P. F. McLugh, of Cavalier. On resolutions—Judge Corson, of Lawrence; A. C. Mellette, of Codington; S. P. Jones, of Turner; Waldo M. Potter, of Cass or LaMoore; George W. Sterling, of Beadle; L. J. Bates, of Kingsbury; E. N. Neal, of Burleigh; John N. Norton, of Day; Fred Adams, of Griggs; Judge Poindexter, of Spink; J. W. Fowler, of Pennington. On permanent organization—E. W. Caldwell, of Minnehaha; J. McConnell, of Miner; H. C. Rorspaugh, of Lawrence; Fred S. Shore, of Benson; J. M. Cushing, of Spink; Fred Schnauber, of Yankton; E. G. Fahnestock, of Codington; P. Potter, of LaMoore; S. H. Elrod, of Clark; C. B. Edwards, of Traill County. To formulate an address to the American people setting forth Dakota's wrongs—J. L. Robinson, of Codington; N. W. Price, of Sanborn; N. M. Johnson, of Nelson; F. J. Correy, of Spink; G. C. Moody, of Lawrence; C. A. VanWormer, of Barnes; R. W. Wheelock, of Davison.

While awaiting the report of the Credentials Committee the convention listened to eloquent addresses from Colonel Plummer, of Brown, and Col. N. M. Price, of Letcher. Also the following telegram from ex-Governor Pierce to the chairman, dated San Francisco, was read:

Heartiest greetings and heartiest congratulations on the bright prospects which open before the republican party. With wisdom and unity we shall get there this fall and see a brighter day dawn for Dakota, and I wish the convention Godspeed.

The chair appointed S. H. Elrod, of Clark; Gen. Harrison Allen of Cass; and Colonel Fahnestock, of Codington, to draft a reply to the governor.

A recess was taken to 7:15 P. M. When the convention reassembled at 7:15 P. M. the Committee on Credentials reported. Their report showed eighty-six out of the eighty-eight counties in the territory represented either in person or by proxy.

E. W. Caldwell, chairman of the Permanent Organization Committee, reported the name of John H. King, of Rapid City, late of Chamberlain for permanent chairman, and recommended the retention of the secretaries. Mr. King was unanimously chosen chairman. Mr. King had been instrumental in securing the passage of the bill to provide for the opening of the Big Sioux Reservation, a matter of great importance to the territory, and on taking the chair he made a brief and appropriate address, saying in part:

I do not wish to detract anything from the laurels of that grand galaxy of statesmen named by the temporary chairman, but would add one more name to the list named by him—Walter Q. Gresham.

The chairman referred to Allison as his personal preference, which drew out but little applause, but the demonstrations that followed the reference to Gresham were more enthusiastic than those which greeted the name of Blaine.

No time was lost in speech making, but the convention entered at once upon its principal business of electing delegates to the National Convention. It had been agreed to elect ten delegates and ten alternates, though but two had been apportioned to each territory by the National Committee. It was assumed, however, that the peculiar political situation in Dakota justified the convention in electing the same number of delegates that the two states of North and South Dakota would be entitled to, that such action would call the attention of the voters of the nation more particularly to the injustice which had kept it from admission to the Union.

Delegate Caldwell, according to the caucus program, moved that a committee of ten be appointed by the chairman to suggest the names of ten delegates to represent Dakota in the National Convention, and the names of ten alternates also. A. C. Mellette, Judge Levisce and others objected to this manner of choosing delegates as an unrepubli can proceeding. Even democrats would not stand it, he said. Caldwell's motion prevailed, however, by a vote of 391 to 126.

The chair appointed as this committee the following:

E. W. Caldwell of Minnehaha, F. J. Washabaugh of Lawrence, J. N. McCracken of Pennington, G. A. Matthews of Brookings, C. T. McCoy of Brown, C. V. Pollock of Cass, T. F. Campbell of Burleigh, Solomon Wenzlaff of Yankton, G. N. Walsh of Grand Forks, C. J. Fry of Clay.

The committee on delegates reported the following names:

Delegates—Gideon C. Moody, of Lawrence County; H. C. Hansbrough, of Ramsey County; N. K. Hubbard, of Cass County; L. B. Richardson, of Grand Forks County; W. C. Plummer, of Brown County; G. W. Hopp, of Brookings County; Col. E. W. Foster, of Spink County; J. M. Bailey, Jr., of Minnehaha County; Boetus H. Sullivan, of Aurora County; T. O. Bogert, of Bon Homme County.

Alternates—J. A. Fowler, of Pennington County; G. Gilbert, of Turner County; Fred Schnauber, of Yankton County; J. H. Baldwin, of Hand County; D. C. Orr, of Walworth County; S. M. Laird, of Hughes County; Mr. Sprague, of Walsh County; Mr. Tuttle, of Morton County; Mr. Gray, of Barnes County, and Mr. Harris, of Burleigh County.

Mr. Mellette moved to amend the report by substituting the name of Johnson Nickeus for that of L. B. Richardson of Grand Forks, and referred to Mr. Richardson as a man of whom he had never heard. General Ward of Grand Forks retorted sharply.

The report of the committee was then adopted.

The delegates were mostly Blaine men. Moody was for Harrison but intended to remain noncommittal until after they had been admitted to the National Convention.

The committee appointed to prepare an address to the people of the United States then presented the following, which was adopted amid much enthusiasm, participated in by the spectators.

The address:

For five years have the people of Dakota asked Congress for division and admission. For five years has our prayer been ignored. We now appeal from the arbitrary decree of Congress to the American people. Herewith is our case:

We are 600,000.

We represent that we are intelligent, industrious, energetic, enterprising, moral, loyal.

We have never been charged with incapacity for self-government.

Our territory contains 150,000 square miles. Every acre is fertile and productive.

Our climate is healthful, invigorating and salubrious. An immense population is assured.

Dakota is four times as large as Ohio.

We ask that it be divided into two states of equal size.

We ask that these states be called North Dakota and South Dakota.

We ask this because the present territory is too large for convenient government, as one state; because our people desire to be near their own government; that they may supervise its actions; that it may be held responsible to them.

We ask it because we desire an equal representation in Congress with other states.

We ask it because we wish to have adequate representation in our state legislatures.

We ask it because small states are governed cheaper than extremely large ones.

We ask it because North Dakota and South Dakota are naturally separate communities.

We ask it because the natural separation has been augmented by the lines of travel, by the legislation of twenty years, by the location of public institutions, by the will of the people. And recognized by all the benevolent, religious and political organizations.

We further ask that both North and South Dakota be admitted at once.

These just requests have been refused and ignored by Congress.

We are oppressed and suffer great hardships because of the inaction of Congress in our case.

These are our grievances. We are disfranchised. We are permitted no voice in selecting our rulers. Our governors, our judges, even our clerks of court, and many other officials, are appointed by the federal power. Incompetent, dishonest, offensive and arbitrary officials are thrust upon us. The present democratic governor is thus arraigned by his party associates in delegate convention at Watertown, South Dakota, May 24, 1888:

"He has bartered his appointments away for his own benefit."

"He has called to his council a horde of mackerel traders."

"He has wielded his executive club over the Legislature by threatening to veto certain bills, and by promising to approve bills with jobs in them."

"He is a boor totally unqualified to appreciate the wants of a free people."

"His administration has been unrelieved by a single act of enlightened statesmanship."

"A continuation of his autocracy will leave the territorial treasury in bankruptcy irretrievable."

"He is an insurance broker."

"He is a jobber in notarial commissions."

So say his party friends after serious deliberation. Imagine the views of his political opponents.

We are taxed without representation. We annually pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in internal revenue. We annually pay hundreds of thousands of dollars to the post-office department. We are permitted no voice in the expenditure of this money.

We pay heavy taxes for the support of our public institutions. We pay heavy taxes to support our schools, while we are not permitted to sell an acre of our vast domain of school lands to lighten our burdens.

We are deprived of justice. Our courts are notoriously inadequate. Men charged with crime are denied speedy trials. Sometimes they are confined in jails from one to two years, only to be found innocent when tried. Civil cases are so far behind that men will suffer any sacrifice rather than risk a cause in court. But six judges are provided for our vast territory and population. And Congress will give us no more. Civil cases five years old stand on our calendars untried, and litigants have constantly clamored for trial. Why are these things permitted to be? Simply because we are republicans. This is the head and front of our offending. For this our requests are slighted. For this our grievances are made the sport of the House of Representatives. For this we are subjected to all manner of political oppression.

Hear us further: The republicans in Congress have used every effort for our relief. The democrats in Congress have bestowed every effort to keep us in our present condition. They announce openly that they do not propose to admit two republican states. And in truth they never intend to admit one. One recognized democratic leader recently declared that Congress can, at its option, keep us in this state of vassalage forever. Twice has the republican Senate passed bills for the division and admission of Dakota, only to see them killed in the democratic House of Representatives. Our only hope for relief is in the election of a republican Congress. We now make a personal appeal to every voter in America to come to our assistance. If you are a democrat, consider our condition. For once lay aside partisan feeling and come to the relief of an oppressed people. This you can do by casting your vote for a republican congressman. In no other way can you serve us. Because the majority of the democrats in Congress are inflexibly opposed to us, and the caucus is king. We here rest our case. Again affirming our oft-repeated declaration that we are unalterably opposed to the admission of Dakota as one state, and that we will resist such action by all constitutional means, we appeal for justice and assistance to you who have the power to help us, for we are helpless.

The Committee on Resolutions then presented the following resolutions which were adopted unanimously, after which the convention adjourned:

The republican party of Dakota, in convention assembled, takes this opportunity of renewing allegiance to the principles of the national republican party.

Resolved, That we are proud of its history and its achievements, and believe the day not far distant when it will be returned to power.

Whereas, We hail the advent of another presidential campaign, confidently believing that the discussions to be had this year will inform the people of the treatment the Territory of Dakota has received at the hands of the democracy, and hasten the recognition of our political rights;

Resolved, That the most vital questions to the people of Dakota at this time are those of boundaries and statehood, and we arraign the democratic party for the political crime of denying to Americans, who are rich in all the elements of enlightened civilization, the most cherished right of citizenship, and for the equally grave offense of attempting to dictate the policy in a territory embracing 150,000 square miles of land against often repeated and earnest requests for division of the same, ratified by a majority vote of the people. Having experienced the evils of an oversized territory in the increased cost of administration, and a tendency to ring rule by reason of the inability of the people to participate in representative assemblies, we demand and will continue to resist all attempts to make these evils the perpetual heritage of posterity. That as our only adequate protection we demand the division of Dakota east and west, on the line of the seventh standard parallel, and the immediate admission of the two parts into the Union as the states of South Dakota and North Dakota, as a right, by virtue of the wealth, population and resources of each. That we heartily endorse the action of the republican senators in Congress in the passage of the bill for division and statehood, and we assure our friends in the House of Representatives that their efforts in our behalf are warmly appreciated. Be it

Resolved, That while tariff revision is from year to year necessary, there is no relief afforded in the democratic measures now before Congress, which, under the pretense of reform, is not intrinsically political and sectional in its nature. We believe that a reasonable protective tariff is for the best interests of the country and the people, and such tariff should protect American labor and American industries yet in their infancy. That protection to the agricultural interests and labor deserves consideration in an equal degree with protection to manufacturing interests. That as far as consistent with protection to American labor and American industries, the tariff should be confined to the luxuries of life against the necessities. That a revision of the tariff should be in the hands of its friends and not in the hands of its enemies. Gratified at the patriotism of the nation which enabled the republican party to achieve their great objects, we acknowledge that there yet remains much noble work of statesmanship to be accomplished. There are relics of barbarism only partially eradicated still contesting their right of supremacy, and among them are polygamy and intemperance.

Resolved, That we denounce the doctrines of civil service reform as practiced by the present administration in this territory, as a fraud, a delusion and a snare, and we view with disgust the action of an executive, with powers unlimited as a despot, indicating and controlling the action of caucuses and conventions.

The ten delegates and alternates elected by the Territorial Convention attended the National Convention in Chicago June 17-20, and when Colonel Thurston of Nebraska, who had been elected temporary chairman, concluded his address, Judge G. C. Moody, chairman of the Dakota delegation, got the floor and moved that the Territory of Dakota be allowed to cast ten votes instead of two. The temporary chairman announced in reply that the National Committee had recommended and allowed Dakota ten votes and Washington Territory six votes.

John Sherman of Ohio was the leading candidate for the republican nomination. Other candidates were Alger, of Michigan; Gresham, of Kentucky; Lincoln, of Illinois; Rusk, of Wisconsin; Harrison, of Indiana; Depew, of New York; Blaine, of Maine; Allison, of Iowa. Sherman, Alger and Gresham led the balloting the first day. Dakota's ten votes were given to Benjamin Harrison from the first ballot, making Harrison ninety-five votes out of a total of 878.

Benjamin Harrison of Indiana was finally nominated for President, and Levi P. Morton of New York for vice president. Dakota's ten votes were cast for Harrison on each ballot.

The finance committee of the Huron Statehood Convention raised $25,000 as a campaign fund, $5,000 of which was contributed to the National Committee. They selected ten speakers from the territory who were assigned to several doubtful districts in the Eastern states. Col. W. C. Plummer, then of Casselton, made speeches during the summer and fall in Maine, New York, Indiana, and Virginia. The other speakers were Judge Edgerton, G. C. Moody, H. J. Campbell, John A. Owen, John R. Gamble, O. S. Gifford, Judge Brookings, Mr. Ramsey, of Woonsocket, and Johnson Nickeus, ex-Governor Pierce, A. C. Melleite, and Chas. Williams, of Watertown.

DEMOCRATIC TERRITORIAL CONVENTION FOR ELECTION OF NATIONAL DELEGATES

The Democratic Central Committee met at Bismarck on the last day of March, 1888, and called their territorial convention to elect delegates to the Democratic National Convention which would meet at St. Louis in June. Watertown was chosen as the place of holding the convention which would be held May 21st. No place was named or date set for the convention to nominate a delegate to Congress. The basis of representation was fixed at one delegate for every 200 votes cast for M. H. Day for delegate in 1886.

The peculiar division in the democratic party of Dakota at this time was not without its influence upon the history of Dakota. In general terms it may be said that M. H. Day represented the rank and file of the party, while Governor Church represented himself and his territorial appointees and possessed a certain influence north because of his official position. But he was not regarded by the people generally as a representative of anything substantial or valuable, and neither his words nor deeds were in accord with a governor who desired to do what was best for the territory. He appeared to be seeking to gain control of the democratic organization for the purpose of increasing his political standing at Washington and among prominent democrats. He was not a Dakotan and could not have intended to become one. In this respect he was very like Ordway.

Day was a Dakotan and his course had all along been consistent with his declaration that he sought only what was best for the territory and his party. In such a contest the people, regardless of party, upheld Day and suspected Church.

The conventions of the democratic party of Dakota Territory had enjoyed a reputation for peace and good order from the beginning up to 1888, when a simon pure New York democrat, having been made governor by President Cleveland, undertook to introduce some of the features of the Empire State method of doing things political, which resulted in transforming Dakota's orderly and brotherly democratic assemblies, in many instances, into veritable beer gardens. From decorous and fraternal associations, whose membership seemed governed by a hearty desire to give all the honors of position to his neighbor, there was turbulent strife to secure these places for himself or his dependable friend. The dove of peace had forsaken or been banished from democratic councils and in its place the hungry and angry vulture had succeeded.

The Territorial Democratic Convention that met at Watertown May 2d, to elect delegates to the National Convention to be held in St. Louis, was an unpleasant affair because of its Church and anti-Church factions which were unreconcilable, and resulted in two conventions. Both conventions favored the renomination of Cleveland for President (who had no opposition to speak of from any quarter), but were divided upon territorial matters, the causes being duly set forth in a statement made by the Day Convention, preparatory to having the governor impeached. The total number of delegates provided by the call was 412.

There were numerous contests from the counties, so that the temporary organization of the convention became a matter of the utmost importance, for it would undoubtedly control the convention, and in order to secure this the Democratic Central Committee held a meeting just prior to the assembling of the convention and resolved that all the delegates elected should submit their credentials to the committee and that body would decide which delegations should be admitted to the convention and allowed to participate in the temporary organization. There were twenty-eight members of this committee, seventeen of whom were known to be partisans of Governor Church and who it was claimed would admit enough of the Church contestants to control the organization. The remainder of the committee, including the chairman, Judge Bangs, of Grand Forks County, demurred to this unprecedented and arbitrary resolution of the Central Committee and refused to recognize it, and as no particular place had been named in which the convention should be held, Judge Bangs, the chairman, summoned the delegates to meet at Music Hall for organization, which took place at noon, May 2d. Accordingly the delegates who recognized the authority of the chairman, assembled at that hall and were called to order by Chairman Bangs and elected H. H. Reeves of Bon Homme County chairman, and Charles Parrot of Clark County and W. O. Fraser of Codington County, secretaries.

There had been no bolt; no disorderly proceedings.

Judge Bangs in a brief speech reviewing the action of the Central Committee, stated, "Should your credentials go into their hands, you would have no more show than a feather in the hottest corner of—well, you know where."

As there were sixteen counties present with double header delegations, as they were called, it was estimated that in place of 412 delegates, the combined number in both conventions, many represented by proxies, was over five hundred.

Mr. Day, who was present as a delegate from Bon Homme County, made a few remarks in which he paid his respects to Governor Church, at the opening of the convention.

The chairman then appointed the following committees, on motion:

Committee on Credentials—N. H. Wade, Deuel County; F. M. Hopkins, Edmunds County; G. W. Barrows, Pennington County; Chas. Furber, Marshal County; Chas. Keith, Brookings County; J. E. Thacker, Pembina County; Mr. Lavalley, Traill County.

Committee on Resolutions—W. R. Brierly, Grand Forks County; C. J. B. Harris, Yankton County; Henry Walsh, Spink County; B. Reeves, Traill County; Ed Flynn, Custer County; George Engle, Brown County.

Committee on Permanent Organization—G. W. Pratt, Charles Mix County; F. L. Rice, Dickey County; E. H. Compton, Day County; Edmund Cook, Roberts County; P. H. Wilson, Faulk County; Peter Couchman, Walworth County; Ira Bellows, Morton County.

The Committee on Credentials reported 309 uncontested delegates, who were admitted to seats in the convention.

The Committee on Resolutions reported resolutions endorsing President Cleveland. Also resolutions condemning Church and other office holders for the violation of Cleveland's letter of July 14, 1886, regarding pernicious activity in politics, also commending and endorsing M. H. Day. At Mr. Day's request the latter resolution was withdrawn and the others adopted. The temporary organization was made the permanent organization, on motion of the committee.

The following gentlemen were then elected delegates to the National Convention of the democratic party, to-wit: Judge Bangs, Grand Forks County, and T. J. Walsh, Spink County. Alternates, Capt. S. V. Arnold, Edmunds County, and F. B. Morgan, Bon Homme County.

The platform endorsed the platform of the national democratic party, favored just and equitable pension laws, favored minority representation, sympathizes with the Irish people in their efforts to obtain home rule, and arraigned the republicans of Dakota for their extravagance and mismanagement in conducting the affairs of the territorial government. It was opposed to constitutional prohibition as demanded by the republican party of South Dakota and favored a well regulated license law, which is accepted by the democracy of the country as the best method of controlling the traffic in intoxicating liquors and of lessening the evils of intemperance.

IMPEACHING GOVERNOR CHURCH

The following statement arraigning Governor Church and his administration was presented by Mr. Brierly, a delegate from Grand Forks County, and passed, though there was a few dissenting votes:

The unintimidated democratic voters of Dakota Territory, by their legally chosen delegates in convention assembled, hereby arraign Louis K. Church, and his office-holding emissaries, for flagrant violations of President Cleveland's wise and just order of July 14, 1886, given as a guide to the end that the civil service of the country might be removed from the baneful influences of corrupt political schemes.

We charge Louis K. Church with having both directly and indirectly attempted to influence caucuses, county conventions, and the territorial convention, by threats and promises, in that he, by his agents, threatened postmasters and others with removal if they did not support his faction, and promised appointments as postmasters, land officers, attorney generals and United States district attorneys to men for their endorsement of his imbecile, partisan and trafficking administration.

We further charge that in this indecent and unfair attempt to throttle the honest voters of the territory, he compelled every member of his military staff, the members of the railroad commission, the various boards of public institutions, the regents of universities, reform schools, the democratic judges, and their imported clerks, to do his disreputable work, and engage in packing caucuses with non-residents and republicans, capturing personal endorsements from county conventions controlled by fraudulent proxies and contests, methods which have caused the people to revolt at such dishonest tactics, and bring disrepute upon a party which was in a fair way to grow in numbers and influence, under the national policy.

We arraign Louis K. Church, as governor of Dakota, for having bartered his appointments away to republicans for his own advantage, and having insulted and ignored the members of his party, who were democrats before he was even a voter, and that he has called to his councils a horde of mackerel traders, who are incapable of comprehending the force of the maxim that "a public office is a public trust." He has wielded his executive club over the Legislature, threatening with his veto measures that did not conform to his ideas of propriety, and promising his approval on bills with jobs in them for his special friends as well as himself.

As commander-in-chief of the militia of Dakota, he appointed a large number of civilians on his staff whom he has sealed to his service by methods more honored in the breach than in the observance, and has squandered at one encampment the appropriation of the Legislature made for two

As recognized dispenser of patronage for Dakota, he has vilely abused his trust and betrayed the confidence of the President, by making recommendations and revoking them, as suited the purpose of his personal schemes, and he has secured the appointments to office of republicans over worthy democrats.

He has further been charged with appealing personally for the retention of Judge Francis in the Sixth Judicial District, after his resignation had been requested by the department of justice, on investigation of charges, and he has never seen fit to deny the charge.

He has sought to defraud and intimidate the democracy of Dakota out of its rightful voice in the matters which rightfully concern it as representative of freemen, and thus brought shame and reproach upon the party, and he has grossly misrepresented the true non-office holding, non office asking democrats of Dakota in his reports to the President.

Of his manifold acts of incompetency, indecency and breaches of public decorum, we will not speak. His public acts and utterances brand him as a boor, totally disqualified from appreciating the wants and wishes of an intelligent and free people. His administration of affairs in general, and in particular as governor of Dakota, has been unrelieved by a single act of enlightened statesmanship, or wise party policy, and a continuation of his incumbency will leave the territorial treasury in bankruptcy irretrievable, the democracy hopelessly divided, and reflect upon the administration discredit such as will cause thousands of independent voters to desert our phalanx in the great national contest near at hand.

We therefore respectfully but firmly petition, as is our constitutional right to do, that this monstrous imposition be removed without delay, and that some reputable, unfactional democrat of Dakota, familiar with the wants and necessities, and in harmony with the spirit of our democracy, be appointed in his place.

A committee of five was then appointed, consisting of M. H. Day, of Bon Homme County; W. R. Brierly, of Grand Forks County; W. H. Huntley, of Brown County; George S. Engle, of Hughes County, and C. J. B. Harris, of Yankton County, for the purpose of preparing specific charges and to collect the necessary testimony for the impeachment of Gov. Louis K. Church.

Upon motion the convention adjourned sine die.

THE CHURCH FACTION CONVENTION

The Church wing of the democratic party assembled at Armory Hall and was called to order by L. G. Johnson, of the Central Committee. Captain Stoddard of Sioux Falls was elected temporary chairman, and H. J. Henry, of Redfield, secretary. Upon call of the counties each delegation handed its credentials to the secretary, after which Mayor Gesley welcomed the delegates to the City of Watertown, and was followed by the Hon. C. G. Williams, whose remarks were also designed as further emphasizing the generous welcome extended by the mayor. Mr. Johnson then explained why Chairman Bangs was not present, and paid his respects to the members of the body assembled at Music Hall with whom Chairman Bangs was acting.

The following committees were then appointed by the chairman:

Committee on Credentials—M. Kauffman, of Minnehaha County; J. D. Bauer, of Lawrence County; M. Ryan, of Aurora County; E. A. Williams, of Burleigh County; Seth Lowell, of Cass County; D. C. Erwin, of Brown County; Chas. Freeman, of Union County.

On Permanent Organization—John Thompson, of Burleigh County; B. R. Frowley, of Lawrence County; H. C. Carpenter, of Sanborn County; R. James, of Pembina County; M. Fitzgerald, of Lake County; A. F. Kellar, of Kingsbury County; and James McHugh, of Foster County.

C. H. Price, of Highmore, moved the appointment of a committee on resolutions, but the chair ruled the motion could not be entertained until after the permanent organization. The convention then adjourned until 7.30 P. M., to give the Credential Committee time to make up its report. It reconvened at 7.30, when the Credential Committee reported.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported, recommending L. G. Johnson for permanent chairman; G. F. Shut, of Grand Forks, for secretary; G. P. Noble, of Bottineau, first assistant secretary; James P. Dalton, of Jerauld County, second assistant secretary.

Chairman Johnson then made an address which was principally devoted to bringing to the light the shortcomings of the republicans, who, he said, were directing their arrows at the vitals of the democratic party. And in the fight he asked to be planted where the shafts fall thickest.

AT THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

The only contest the National Democratic Convention was called on to decide was brought on by a conflict between the two Dakota delegations, which were characterized by the members as the "Home Rule," and "Carpetbag" factions. Thomas Walsh and Judge Bangs presented credentials from the former, and Messrs. Maguire and Colonel Steele were accredited by the latter. The "Home Rulers," it was reported, had a large contingent working up support.

The Dakota delegates were excluded from the committees because of the contest.

The Dakota delegation headed by Governor Church reached St. Louis June 5th on the same train with the Minnesota delegates. There were twenty-eight in Church's party. They were driven to headquarters of the Church delegation, at the Lindell Hotel. The Day delegates were quartered at Hursts. Day had been in the city since the 3d, and had been a busy man. He expressed confidence that his delegates would be seated in the convention. He said the fight would be in the Credentials Committee. The Day delegates, A. W. Bangs and Thomas J. Walsh, had been on the ground since the 3d.

The report of the Committee on Credentials, seating W. F. Steele and H. L. Maguire, the "Church faction" from Dakota, was presented June 6th and adopted unanimously.

The defeat of the Day delegates was not a defeat that left a sting. It was supposed that Governor Church brought unusual pressure to bear on the Southern delegates, making much of the importance of upholding Mr. Cleveland's appointee for governor. It was claimed that the Committee on Credentials spent four hours "thrashing out" the Dakota case. Day's forces were finally beaten before the committee by two votes. Virginia and Maryland, however, made an earnest fight for the home rule delegates, as Day's delegates, Bangs and Walsh, were termed.

Hon. M. H. Day, after his experience in this Democratic Convention, returned to his mining enterprise at Lookout, in the Black Hills.

President Cleveland was renominated by the convention by a unanimous vote, and Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, was named for vice president.

Eighteen hundred and eighty-eight was a memorable year in the great Territory of Dakota—a year long to be remembered. There was portent of an important change and this was so confidently expected, that the anxiety that had been experienced by the great body of citizens regarding the political situation in Dakota, seemed to have disappeared and its place taken by a feeling of hopefulness. The opposition to division remained, led by Governor Church and his official family, numbering over one hundred persons, and a few other prominent people, with ex-Governor Ordway in Washington pressing the one-state plan wherever he could discover an inviting place to work for its promotion; but in Dakota, north and south, there was union of hands and brains, and efforts now, in favor of two states where heretofore there had been the effort for one state and one territorial organization. The northern half of Dakota had grown out of the territorial class and could now present all the requirements demanded from an applicant for statehood.

Mr. Cleveland had been re-nominated for president, with Allen G. Thurman, of Ohio, for vice president. It was not doubted that the democrats, if they maintained their control of Congress, would insist upon the admission of Dakota as one state, for that had been their programme for two or three years, therefore statehood could be easily secured for the entire territory from that party, and though a majority of the people of the territory were opposed to this plan, there is no foretelling what might have been the result with a democratic Congress, President and the territorial officers from governor down—all favoring the one-state plan, with the central counties of the territory also inclined that way. The changing sentiment in Northern Dakota during the new administration of Governor Church, as witnessed by the vote of 1887, indicated that public opinion was liable to vacillate.

With the election of Harrison and Morton, however, and a republican House, it was felt that the two-state plan would be victorious. Mr. Harrison, as senator, had already actively exerted himself in behalf of the admission of South Dakota and a territorial organization for the northern half. The election of Harrison meant the election of a republican majority in the House of Representatives, that branch of Congress which had thus far defeated the efforts for division. The Republican National Convention had done its work with excellent judgment, if it was guided by judgment, though it might seem that the result was not premeditated from the outset, but was, possibly, fortuitous. Benjamin Harrison was a ripe statesman of unblemished character and reputation, a grandson of a president and a citizen of Indiana. The latter qualification of the first importance as insuring Indiana, a doubtful state, for the republican ticket. The vice president was Levi P. Morton, of New York, another doubtful state, and because of its large electoral vote, one of the states of first importance in presidential elections. Cleveland had carried it four years before over Blaine by the narrow margin of about twelve hundred or thirteen hundred majority. The outlook for Harrison's success was promising when the nomination was made, and it lost none of its encouraging features during the campaign.

CALL FOR REPUBLICAN TERRITORIAL CONVENTION

The following call was issued March 30th by the Republican Territorial Committee for a delegate convention to nominate a candidate for delegate to Congress:

The Territorial Republican Convention to select a candidate for delegate to Congress will be held at Watertown, Wednesday, August 22, 1888, and be called to order by the chairman of the republican central committee at 1 o'clock P. M.

In said convention the county representation will be one delegate for every 200 votes or a major fraction thereof of the total vote cast for delegate to Congress in 1886. All organized counties not having voted at that time will be entitled to one delegate each, upon the presentation of a certificate from the proper territorial officer of such organization. The convention will consist of 527 delegates, apportioned among the counties named as follows: Aurora, 7; Barnes, 9; Beadle, 12; Benson, 2; Billings, 2; Bon Homme, 8; Bottineau, 2; Brookings, 9; Brown, 15; Brule, 9; Buffalo, 1; Burleigh, 6; Butte, 1; Campbell, 3; Cass, 20; Cavalier, 6; Charles Mix, 4; Clark, 7; Clay, 7; Codington, 7; Custer, 4; Davison, 7; Day, 7; Deuel, 5; Dickey, 7; Douglas, 6; Eddy, 2; Edmunds, 6; Emmons, 2; Fall River, 1; Faulk, 5; Foster, 2; Grand Forks, 17; Grant, 7; Griggs, 4; Hamlin, 4; Hand, 9; Hanson, 5; Hughes, 5; Hutchinson, 7; Jerould, 4; Hyde, 3; Kidder, 2; Kingsbury, 7; Lake, 6; LaMoure, 5; Lawrence, 21; Lincoln, 7; Logan, 1; McCook, 6; McHenry, 1; McIntosh, 1; McLean, 2; McPherson, 2; Marshall, 5; Mercer, 1; Miner, 7; Minnehaha, 18; Moody, 6; Morton, 6; Nelson, 5; Oliver, 1; Pennington, 8; Pembina, 15; Potter, 4; Ramsey, 7; Richland, 5; Ransom, 7; Roberts, 3; Rolette, 2; Sanborn, 6; Sargent, 6; Spink, 18; Stark, 3; Steele, 4; Stutsman, 8; Sully, 3; Towner, 1; Traill, 11; Turner, 7; Union, 8; Walsh, 18; Walworth, 2; Ward, 1; Yankton, 10; Wells, 1. Total number of counties, 86.

REPUBLICAN TERRITORIAL CONVENTION

The preliminary delegate campaign on the republican side in 1888, was quite spirited. There were a number of candidates, and notwithstanding the probable early advent of statehood great interest was felt in the result of this year's election, owing to the general impression that it would have an important influence in promoting division and statehood for two states. The principal contention was based on sectional grounds, the northern sentiment favoring and supporting Harrison Allen, of Fargo, the United States marshal for the nomination for delegate, while the southern sentiment was divided, Mr. Gifford, the incumbent being a candidate, while Minnehaha County had endorsed Hon. Melvin Grigsby, who was also supported by other counties. Judge C. S. Palmer, of Sioux Falls, was also in the field as the candidate of the Ordway republicans, and had the favor of the prohibition people partially; and quite late in the pre-convention campaign, Hon. Geo. T. Matthews, of Brookings County, came into the field as the candidate of Central Dakota, where there was supposed to be a strong anti-division sentiment.

Hon. Melvin Grigsby, of Sioux Falls, had been put forward by the republican party of Minnehaha County, as a candidate to succeed Judge Gifford, who was then filling his second term. Mr. Grigsby was a veteran of the Civil war with an honorable and distinguished record, a pioneer settler of Dakota, a lawyer of ability, and withal a student of questions connected with the welfare of the people, upon which he had opinions of his own. He was something of a pioneer in the march of progress which was beginning to be noticeable in the trend of public sentiment on governmental questions, and in an address delivered at the celebration of Memorial Day, 1888, in Sioux Falls, he alluded to the possibility of future serious trouble growing out of certain menacing conditions which the unprecedented growth, development and apparent prosperity of the country since the close of the Civil war had brought about. He said in part:

One danger to the republic is the centralization of wealth and the tendency of wealth to trample on the rights and privileges of the laboring classes. As men become millionaires, the condition of those dependent on their daily toil for support becomes more burdensome and their future more discouraging.

Within the past three decades enormous fortunes have been made by the law with startling rapidity, and most of the fifteen thousand millionaires in America have amassed their great fortunes within that time. While this centralization of wealth is in progress, the laborer, the artisan, the farmer and the middle classes are growing poorer. The organization of trades unions, labor leagues, farmers' alliances, and the like, are the outcome of the mad race for colossal fortunes, and strikes and combinations against capital came in their train.

The organization of trusts menaces the future of the element which is antagonizing wealth, and the country is now only in the incipency of that new form of business organization for the acquirement of unlawful gains. Growing out of the conflict between these opposing elements, a danger greater than the danger of African slavery may be apprehended, and African slavery once deluged the land in blood.

The convention assembled at Watertown August 22d, and a temporary organization was effected, after much button-holing by the election of S. C. Nash, of Beadle County, for temporary chairman, a friend of Judge Campbell, against John E. Bennett, of Clark County, the Gifford candidate. Nash's majority was four votes. While this was the result of the vote, it indicated nothing as to the strength of the several candidates, and the frequent avowal was heard that no convention had ever been held in the territory where the opening proceedings afforded so little light on the outcome. The contest from Lawrence County attracted much interest. If the Moody faction won it would support Gifford—if the Bullock faction should be seated it would add Seth Bullock to the list of candidates. Lawrence cast twenty-one votes, the largest of any county.

The proceedings of the organization, more in detail, show that Chairman Allen called the convention to order, and Reverend Mr. Updyke, of Watertown, offered prayer. Charles P. Howard, of Redfield, Spink County; John E. Bennett, of Clark; J. H. Patten, of Miner; and S. C. Nash, of Beadle, were placed in nomination for temporary chairman. A ballot being taken, the northern delegates, aided by Spink County and other friends of Howard, cast 246 votes for Nash, as against 242 for Bennett, electing Nash. This looked like a victory for Allen. It was a long struggle. R. W. Wheelock, of Davison, W. R. Ruggles, of Edmunds, and J. A. Frye were elected secretaries, and without attempting further business the convention adjourned until evening.

The convention was made up of 528 delegates, allotted in this manner—to Northern Dakota, 169; to Central Dakota, 157, and to South Dakota, 172 votes, as follows:

North Dakota—Barnes County, 9; Benson, 2; Billings, 1; Bottineau, 2; Burlington, 6; Cass, 20; Cavalier, 6; Dickey, 6; Eddy, 2; Emmons, 2; Foster, 2; Griggs, 4; Grand Forks, 17; Kidder, 2; LaMoure, 5; Logan, 1; Mercer, 1; McHenry, 1; McLean, 2; McIntosh, 1; Morton, 6; Nelson, 5; Oliver, 1; Pembina, 15; Ramsey, 7; Ransom, 7; Richland, 10; Rolette, 2; Sargent, 6; Stark, 3; Stutsman, 8; Steele, 4; Towner, 1; Traill, 11; Walsh, 18; Wells, 1; Ward, 1.

Central Dakota—Beadle, 12; Brown, 15; Brookings, 10; Campbell, 4; Clark, 7; Codrington, 7; Day, 7; Deuel, 5; Edmunds, 6; Faulk, 5; Grant, 7; Hamlin, 4; Hand, 9; Hyde, 3; Kingsbury, 7; Marshall, 5; McPherson, 3; Potter, 4; Roberts, 3; Spink, 18; Sully, 4; Walworth, 2.

South Dakota—Aurora, 7; Brule, 7; Bon Homme, 8; Butte, 1; Buffalo, 1; Clay, 7; Chas. Mix, 4; Custer, 4; Davison, 7; Douglas, 5; Fall River, 1; Hanson, 5; Hutchinson, 7; Jerauld, 4; Lake, 6; Lawrence, 21; Lincoln, 7; Miner, 7; Minnehaha, 18; McCook, 6; Moody, 6; Pennington, 8; Sanborn, 6; Turner, 7; Union, 8; Yankton, 10.

When the convention reconvened in the evening Chairman Nash appointed the following committees:

On Credentials—W. C. Arnold, Beadle County; Sidney Mann, Kingsbury; O. C. Bashford, Spink; W. E. Dodge, Cass; F. LeCocq, Douglas; H. Hanson, Deuel; J. W. Fowler, Pennington; Wm. Elliott, Turner; C. A. VanWormer, Hughes.

On Resolutions—A. Thomas, Kingsbury; E. H. Huntington, Day; A. J. Edgerton, Davison; J. H. King, Pennington; Alex Hughes, Burleigh; Mr. Har-kinson, Richland.

On Permanent Organization—Joseph Allen, Turner; E. Huntington, Day; R. Buchanan, Minnehaha; G. W. Goodman, Ransom; G. W. Hopp, Brookings; B. J. B. Kelley, Beadle; C. E. Boyden, Codington; D. W. Yorkey, Walsh; H. Baldwin, Stutsman. The convention then adjourned until 10 A. M., the 23d.

Upon reconvening the Committee on Credentials submitted two reports on the contested case from Lawrence County, one signed by five of the committee, favoring the Moody delegation, and the other by four, favoring the Bullock faction. The issue was a peculiar one and hinged on the official standing of the men who called the Lawrence County convention to order. The chairman of the county committee organized the convention but it was claimed that he had forfeited his right to officiate by removal from the county. The Moody faction held that he had the right to officiate. To this the other faction, called the Bullock faction, dissented, and another member of the County Central Committee called a second convention to order in the same room, and each of these conventions selected delegates to the territorial convention.

Doctor Harding presided over the Moody faction, which selected as delegates: G. C. Moody, W. H. Parker, J. A. Harding, D. Corson, F. J. Wash-baugh, William Whealon, Geo. Beemer, L. P. Jenkins, F. M. Allen, Walter E. Smead, George Wadge, Hugh McKenna, J. W. Freeman, Chas. Weeden, L. W. Valentine, F. M. Rood, John T. Potter, H. A. Carpenter, E. T. Marshall, C. C. Grimm, Victor Dorne.

The Bullock convention was presided over by ex-Judge W. E. Church, and selected as delegates: Seth Bullock, A. J. Plowman, W. E. Church, W. W. Giddens, T. D. Edwards, Hy. Court, James Conzette, Chas. Hathaway, J. P. Belding, Ed. Van Cise, A. W. Hastie, Stewart Thompson, Frank Welch, Hy. Wytt-embach, G. G. Bennett, Porter Warner, Chas. Traver, Geo. H. Hurmort, H. Bischoff, J. H. Burns.

Both delegations were in favor of division and admission. The Moody dele-gation, however, favored the renomination of Judge Gifford, and the Bullock delegation favored the nomination of a Black Hills man, Seth Bullock preferred, and believed the situation at Watertown would be such as to favor a Hills candidate.

The report of the Credentials Committee on this case led to a long debate on the question of adopting either the majority or minority report, the ablest speak-ers in the convention taking part. The question finally came to a vote and the majority or Moody faction was seated by a vote of 285 for the majority report to 222 for the minority. The result encouraged the Gifford people.

The following named delegates were accorded seats in the convention:

Aurora County, B. H. Sullivan, A. Anderson, Mr. Bartow, D. A. Mather; Brookings County, G. A. Matthews, G. W. Hopp, Samuel Mortimer, Martin Trygstad; Pembina County, Judson LaMoure with proxies, Grant Hayes; Pen-nington County, John H. King, J. W. Fowler, John Brennan, J. B. Gossage; Kingsbury County, A. Thomas, Sidney Mann, A. C. Whiting, A. Barnes, John A. Owen; Beadle County, S. C. Nash, W. C. Arnold, John Cain, J. B. Kelley, A. Davis, J. W. Shannon; Spink County, Chas. P. Howard, O. C. Basford, H.

P. Packard, Dr. Issenhuth, E. W. Foster, Doctor Kutmewsky; Clark County, John F. Bennett, P. J. Conklin, S. H. Elrod, C. G. Sherwood; Cass County, W. E. Dodge, E. C. Garry, A. B. Tyler, A. D. Thomas, A. W. Edwards, Harrison Allen, W. C. Ball, J. E. Haggart, John Miller; Douglas County, F. LeCocq, W. E. Tipton, Thos. Roberts; Deuel County, H. H. Herrick, H. Hanson, Doane Robinson, A. W. Goodwin; Turner County, Wm. Elliot, C. A. VanWormer, Jo. Allen, C. F. Hackett, Vale P. Thielman, Wm. Aurner, C. B. Valentine, S. D. Childs; Day County, E. H. Huntington, D. Williams; Burleigh County, Alex Hughes, A. Linn, John A. Stoyell, E. A. Williams, Geo. L. Ordway; Richland County, Mr. Harkinson, A. W. Deming, John Q. Burbank, W. E. Root, Jas. Blanding, Fred Falley, P. J. McCumber; Minnehaha County, R. Buchanan, R. F. Pettigrew, E. W. Caldwell, B. F. Campbell, C. E. McKinney; Ransom County, G. W. Goodman; Walsh County, D. W. Yorkey, W. A. Mitchell; Stutsman County, H. Baldwin, Johnson Niekens; Brown County, W. C. Allen, C. T. McCoy, R. A. Mills, S. H. Jumper, Edward Lear, C. W. Starling, from Aberdeen, W. C. Allen and J. C. Kindschi, Groton, P. E. Taylor, Columbia, Geo. M. Drum, Frederick, L. C. Turner, Warner, T. E. Camburn, Riverside, F. Luse, Ordway, Geo. W. Krum, Claremont, J. J. Barnes, Westport, J. J. Jennings, Rondell; Brule County, A. J. Kellam, J. T. Stearns, D. H. Henry, C. M. Gregory, Dr. D. Miller, J. B. Long, Edward Beemer; Codington County, J. F. Keeley, J. E. Westover, J. B. Sweet, C. E. Boyden, D. A. Rankin, I. F. West, A. D. Chase, J. H. Rogers; Miner County, Thos. McConnell, J. H. Heatten, W. W. Girton, J. W. Loofburrow, Geo. R. P. Farmer, L. W. Aldrich, B. B. Saunders, Jr., J. H. Patten; Hutchinson County, J. E. Hipple, G. W. Murner, M. K. Bowen, Christian Buechler, W. A. Williams, G. W. Marchant, W. C. Bintliff, Chris Guenther; Nelson County, F. H. Kent, D. S. Dodds, H. K. Stearns, O. O. Forde, M. S. Searf; Hughes County, Johnson, J. C. MacManima, Besancon, Greenard and Lukes; Union County, A. O. Ringsrud, N. A. Kirk, John Larson, L. T. Kenny, Duncan Ross, A. D. Kellar, J. W. Ellis; Davison County, A. J. Edgerton, R. W. Wheelock, Geo. A. Johnston, T. F. Mentzer, H. D. Wiard, A. B. Kelsey, David Cole; Yankton County, R. J. Gamble, E. E. Hudson, J. P. Crennan, A. W. Howard, Peter Huber, E. G. Smith, J. A. Potter, Newton Edmunds, Anton L. Pfeiffer, A. O. Saugstad; Lawrence County, G. C. Moody, W. H. Parker, J. A. Harding, D. Corson, F. J. Washabaugh, William Whealon, Geo. Boomer, L. P. Jenkins, F. M. Allen, Walter E. Smead, George Wadge, Hugh McKenna, J. W. Freeman, Chas. Wooden, L. W. Valentine, F. M. Rood, John T. Potter, H. A. Carpenter, E. T. Marshall, C. C. Grimm, Victor Dorne; Minnehaha County, R. F. Pettigrew, S. E. Young, J. F. Norton, G. A. Uline, B. F. Campbell, W. E. Willey, C. E. McKinney, W. R. Burkholder, W. F. Kelley, J. B. Watson, E. W. Caldwell, R. Buchanan, A. B. Kittredge, Austin Risty, Chris Wangsness, M. R. Kenefick, C. A. Lindstrom, W. Warner; Custer County, A. D. Clark, A. P. Smith, J. A. Stanley, Logan Ayres; Butte County, Judge W. J. Larimer and S. A. Wheeler; Clay County, E. A. Burgess, John Noxin, F. E. Jones, A. O. Hubbard, A. R. Piersol, W. F. Mayer, George Richardson; Emmons County, Wm. V. Wade and E. T. Herrick; Eddy County, F. A. Sebring and H. M. Clark; Grand Forks County, S. S. Titus, H. R. Rucker, W. J. Anderson, A. B. Ward, J. G. Hamilton, George B. Winship, Rolla Noyes; Hyde County, Wm. Wooley, R. O. Parker, E. O. Vines; Hand County, W. H. Kephart, B. D. Milan, J. H. Baldwin; Jerauld County, T. W. Lane, W. W. Hillis, J. E. Reynolds, L. F. Russell, R. S. Vessey, W. H. McMillan; Kidder County, John Van Deusen of Tappen, Benjamin Gibbons of Dawson; Lincoln County, W. M. Cuppett, Thos. Thorson, W. B. Wait, W. F. Dunham, Frasier Gilman, H. Frinkman, A. P. Dixon; McPherson County, Charles N. Herried, F. H. Hooper and A. G. Barnard; McLain County, John Satterlund, chairman, S. A. Falconer; McHenry County, W. D. McClintock; Ramsey County, John A. Percival, John F. Cowan, D. McLeod, T. S. Benham, S. L. Wineman, Joseph Graham, George Copeland; Stark County, N. C. Lawrence, George Auld, T. S. Underhill, George Lee; Sanborn County, John T. Kean, S. T. Winslow, C. H. Van Tassell, Hiram Rhodes, H. H. Heath, H. E. Mayhew; Bottineau County, J. R. Hagar; Clark County, S. H. Elrod, J. H. Conklin, B. B. Bennett; Charles Mix County, E. L. Bates; La Moure County, Waldo M. Potter; Miner County, J. H. Patten, R. S. Persons, G. R. Farmer; Morton County, H. W. Coe; Nelson County, D. S. Dodds; Hamlin County, J. L. Witten; Fall River County, Doctor Stewart, T. G. Orr.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported as follows: For chairman, E. C. Garry, of Cass County; secretary, J. E. Westover, of Codington; assistant secretaries, W. A. Mitchell, of Walsh, C. F. Hackett, of Turner, W. C. Allen, of Brown; reading clerk, Grant Hayes, of Pembina.

The convention then adjourned until 9 A. M., the 24th, and the situation at that time gave Gifford the lead and Matthews second place. Balloting began on the morning of the 24th and continued all day, Gifford leading and Harrison Allen a close second. At 7 o'clock adjournment was had after a hard struggle, opposed, however, by Gifford's forces who were feeling that victory would be theirs after a few more ballots, but the field outvoted them and the day was lost. Judge Gifford, however, was the favorite, judging from the prolonged balloting, and would probably have received the nomination had a combination been made during the daylight hours of the battle in the convention.

When the motion to adjourn for an hour was taken at 7 o'clock in the evening, after the fourteenth ballot, Gifford's friends opposed it with 258 votes, while the entire field combined against him with 270 votes which carried the adjournment, and the combination in favor of Matthews was then effected, giving in exchange the chairmanship of the Central Committee to Allen of Northern Dakota. This was an unpleasant dose for the southern delegates to take. After reconvening at 8 o'clock balloting was resumed and on the third ballot taken, which was the seventeenth for the day, Matthews was nominated by a combination with North Dakota.

The Committee on Resolutions made a report as follows, it being the last platform of the territorial party, to-wit:

The republicans of North and South Dakota, in convention assembled, publish and declare:

1. That the present democratic administration at Washington, emulating the present tory administration in the government of Ireland, has maintained and exercised a tyranny over this territory, unjust, unwarranted and subversive of the principles of the founders of the republic in denying admission into the union of the states, for the sole and only reason that a majority of our people differ with the administration upon the political issues of the day.

2. That we arraign the present governor of this territory for prostituting his high office to personal and ambitious ends and purposes. That he maintains a perfect indifference to the wants of the people whom he rules. That he encourages large and unwise appropriations. That he threatens to veto measures unless the Legislature shall be subservient to his will. That his appointees in many cases are men who have no qualification for office, but are his personal retainers, supported at the public expense.

3. That we hail with joy and pride the action of the late Republican National Convention, and recognize in General Harrison a patriot, a soldier, a wise statesman, and the early and earnest friend of Dakota; and recognize the Hon. Levi P. Morton as an eminent statesman and philanthropist, a true and tried republican.

4. That by every precedent established in the history of the admission of new states into the Union, by the rights guaranteed by the constitution and the laws of the United States, it is the duty of Congress to admit both North and South Dakota into the sisterhood of states, and the refusal by a democratic house to so admit us is a violation of the duties and obligations of its members, and we hereby reiterate our unalterable opposition to admission as a whole.

5. That we as delegates in this convention will support no man for office whose position upon the question of division and admission is in the least equivocal or uncertain.

6. That the great agricultural interests of Dakota demand that they should be protected, fostered and guarded with jealous care, and such laws enacted as will secure equitable rates of transportation, allowing no unjust discriminations against sections or individuals. That we favor the improvement of the great waterways of the Northwest, so as to bring about close competition in the carrying trade. We favor a warehouse law which will give every farmer a free market for his produce and which will not leave him at the mercy of any elevator or railroad combination. That not a trust should be fostered or allowed, nor monopolies organized which have a tendency to inflate prices.

7. We declare ourselves in favor of a thorough revision of the revenue laws of Dakota, whereby all property shall be equally taxed and taxed to its owner. We declare in favor of a usury law which shall not encourage reckless and extravagant speculation, but which will provide sufficient money at a reasonable rate of interest for all honest and legitimate pursuits.

8. That we welcome with the open hand of fellowship the people who have come from foreign lands to better their fortune and find a permanent home in this, the country of their adoption, intending to render due obedience and respect to its laws.

9. That we favor a revision of the tariff and a reduction of the same upon such articles as can be made without sacrificing the interests of American labor, and that the necessities of life upon which the tariff is a tax should be admitted at the lowest possible duty consistent with the preservation of American industries. We charge the democratic party with being the enemy of northern soil and northern labor, and arraign it for the discriminations and sectional provisions of the Mills bill, by which northern productions are deprived of protection, while those of the South, the late confederacy, which declared explicitly against any tariff for protection, are protected by a high tariff, which in many cases are nothing more nor less than a tax.

10. Following the lead of the national platform of our party as executed in Chicago, and of the will of the people of this territory as duly expressed in the majority of counties upon the question of local option, we heartily endorse all just measures for the banishment of the saloon from our borders.

George A. Matthews, the nominee for delegate, was a lawyer, a citizen of Brookings. He was a native of the State of New York, and was born in 1852. He came to Dakota in 1878-79 and located in Brookings County. He was one of the parties who established the Kingsbury County News at DeSmet in 1880, Geo. W. Hopp being the other. He was connected with the board of trustees of Brookings Agricultural College, and was a member of the law firm of Scobey & Matthews at Brookings. Mr. Scobey was a member of the Territorial Council in 1883, and took a leading part in the passage of the capital commission bill for which he was amply rewarded by the appointment of his law partner, Mr. Matthews, on the commission, and an act authorizing the issue of $45,000 territorial bonds to build the Agricultural College. It might be presumed that it was due to some prejudice against Mr. Matthews, growing out of his connection with that commission, that he was not in greater favor with the southern delegates in the convention, and by the same reasoning it may be presumed that the northern delegates looked upon him with greater favor than any other candidate before the convention when they discovered that their candidate, Mr. Allen, stood no chance of being nominated. In addition to this circumstance was the desire of the Central Dakota delegates to secure the nomination for a resident of that rapidly growing portion of the territory. A combination of these circumstances secured a victory. However, Mr. Matthews had been a consistent advocate of division and statehood, which was the important issue, was an able man, a sound republican and his nomination was accepted and he was supported by the full strength of the party in all sections of the territory.

In return for the support of the Northern Dakota delegates for Mr. Matthews the victorious faction conceded to the North the chairmanship of the Territorial Central Committee, a position which had become of much consequence in the political arena, second only to the delegate in Congress. For this eminent place Gen. Harrison Allen, of Fargo, the incumbent under the appointment made two years before by virtue of a similar trade, was elected by the convention to continue as chairman.

Other members of the committee, selected by the delegates from each county, were: G. R. Farmer, Miner County; W. M. Smith, Aurora County; C. T. McCoy, Brown County; B. T. Budd, Codrington County; R. F. Wallace, Stutsman County; C. W. Stafford, Day County; C. T. Howard, Spink County; E. Y. Sarles, Traill County; H. W. Coe, Morton County; J. A. Percival, Ramsey County; J. F. Mentzer, Davison County; D. W. Driscoll, Walsh County; E. A. Sherman, Minnehaha County; K. G. Phillips, Lawrence County; F. A. Sebring, Eddy County; W. F. Coad, Pennington County; J. H. Baldwin, Hand County;

J. R. Hagar, Bottineau County; A. W. Howard, Yankton County; P. J. McCumber, Richland County; C. M. Harrison, Beadle County; J. E. Haggart, Cass County; Alex. Hughes, Burleigh County; Fred Snoor, Benson County; B. A. Dodge, Grant County; J. C. McManima, Hughes County; John N. Dennett, Barnes County; P. J. McLaughlin, Grand Forks County; J. L. Turner, Bon Homme County; O. S. Pendar, McCook County; L. E. Booker, Pembina County; Seth Bullock, Lawrence County; A. J. Pruitt, Turner County; W. G. Lockhart, Dickey County; A. O. Ringsrud, Union County; Frank Parson, Hamlin County; P. McHugh, Cavilear County.

This was the last Territorial Central Committee appointed.

The convention then adjourned.

In the progress of the campaign after the nominations it became of interest to inquire how the various members of the capitol commission voted on the question of locating the capital, and Mr. Ralph Wheelock, who was secretary of the commission, being the best authority on that point, gave out this brief statement:

Mr. Matthews voted and worked for Huron to the last, as the friends of Mitchell can all testify. The men who voted for Bismarck on the last ballot were: McKenzie, of course; Aleck Hughes and his man DeLong, John P. Belding from the Hills, and the delectable "Doc" Scott of Grand Forks. Spalding and Myers voted for Redfield, Thompson for Mitchell, and Mathews for Huron.

There was comparatively little interest taken in the campaign on the republican side for two or three weeks. Mr. Matthews, the candidate, was about the only republican speaker engaged in the canvass during this time.

Delegate Gifford, speaking of the canvass and the situation and the nominee, said:

I regard George Matthews as one of the best men in the territory. He is a staunch republican, and is a young man of ability, and popular wherever he is known. He is not idle, as you must know, and the entire republican party is united in his support.

And as to Mr. Day, the whilom democratic leader, Mr. Gifford said:

If the democratic party stood any show of electing a President this year, Day would come to the front again as a democratic leader. As it is, he is permanently out of politics.

Melvin Grigsby, of Sioux Falls, was a candidate for the congressional nomination before the Watertown convention, and on the thirteenth ballot received 82½ votes, having increased from forty-one during the last six ballots. Under instructions his own county, Minnehaha, voted for him from the first to the last ballot. There was said to have been a time in the proceedings of the convention when the votes cast for Mr. Grigsby by his own county added to the votes for Gifford would have given the latter the majority and nominated him. But the Grigsby delegates refused to violate their instructions without the consent of their candidate, and for this reason Mr. Grigsby was severely criticised by Mr. Gifford's friends in Minnehaha County and elsewhere.

It was a generally recognized fact during the preliminary stages of the campaign that Minnehaha County was probably in favor of ex-Judge Palmer, who resided at Sioux Falls and whose aspirations for Congress were looked upon with disfavor by a majority of the republicans in the southern part of the state. But with the support of his own county there were apprehensions that the Ordway element and prohibition faction north and south might secure for him the nomination provided he came to the convention with such powerful backing. Mr. Grigsby was the only man in the county who could carry its republican county convention against Palmer. It was felt that Palmer would defeat a Gifford candidate. It was either Palmer or Grigsby, and the latter entered the contest and accomplished Palmer's defeat, the county convention being practically unanimous for Grigsby.

Upon a previous occasion, in 1886, Mr. Grigsby had performed a like service for the Gifford element, and made himself a nominal candidate before the territorial republican convention for the congressional nomination, withdrawing in favor of Mr. Gifford. At this time, 1888, he had resolved to be a candidate in earnest or not a candidate at all, and with that purpose he went before the people of his county and in their caucuses and in their convention they said with unanimous voice that Mr. Grigsby was their choice. They did not present any second choice and there was no evidence that they desired the nomination of anyone except their own citizen, Mr. Grigsby.

The general political situation at the time, with statehood near, gave to the result of the Watertown convention as affecting the ambition of prominent men considerable importance.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION TO NOMINATE DELEGATE TO CONGRESS

An official call for a democratic territorial convention was issued by Mr. O. P. Kemp, of Pierre, secretary of the Central Committee, calling the convention at Jamestown, July 11th. It was issued June 10th. It provided for 412 delegates on the basis of one for each 200 votes cast for M. H. Day in 1886.

This convention was called to nominate a delegate to Congress and to promulgate a platform.

When the convention assembled at Jamestown July 11th it was found that there were at least two hundred and fifty delegates present. Prior to the convening of the body it was found that Judge Becker of Fargo had opened headquarters and was a candidate for delegate. There was a sentiment for Harden, of Jerauld County, a South Dakota man, and indications pointed to his nomination on the first ballot. There was a general disposition to let the dead past of the Watertown convention bury its dead. Harden had been a strong divisionist, but it was discovered that his division sentiments could be made to harmonize with the proposed one-state platform, by incorporating a clause in the enabling act authorizing a vote on division after the state was admitted. This was in accordance with the Yankton County platform. Judge Church was in control and Committeeman Day's opposition was no longer a factor. The party was said to be united and working harmoniously.

The convention was rapped to order by Judge Bangs, chairman of the Territorial Committee. Martin Ryan, of Fargo, was chosen temporary chairman of the convention, and Emmett O'Brien, of Yankton, secretary. The chairman appointed Otto Peemiller, of Yankton, chairman of the Credentials Committee, and Judge Bennett, of Bottineau, chairman of the Committee on Permanent Organization. The convention then took a recess until 5 o'clock. The Credentials Committee then presented its report, which was adopted. The report showed that every organized county was represented either in person or by proxy, and the actual attendance of delegates was over three hundred. Colonel Steele, of Lawrence County, chairman of the Committee on Platform, read the report of the committee, which, on the principal issue, declared as follows:

Resolved, That we favor the passage by Congress, at an early day, of an enabling act looking to the speedy admission of Dakota as one state, with a provision reserving the right to our people at any time to consider the propriety of its division into two states; and we arraign the republican party for its policy of obstruction which has thus far resulted in preventing the admission of Dakota to the sisterhood of states.

The agricultural interests of the territory was strongly supported by resolution, and Government control of railroads and telegraph was demanded.

The national administration of President Cleveland was highly commended and his renomination warmly endorsed. The territorial administration of Governor Church was approved, and its action in taxing Northern Pacific Railroad lands, hitherto claimed to be not taxable, was commended.

There was no resolution concerning prohibition.

The platform was adopted by a ye and nay vote and the convention then proceeded to nominate a delegate. All opposition to John W. Harden, of Jerauld County, had been withdrawn and he was then nominated as the candidate for Congress by a unanimous vote.

The new Democratic Territorial Committee for Dakota was made up of Martin Ryan of Fargo, chairman; Oscar P. Kemp of Watertown, secretary. Other members: Charles Freeman, of Union County; G. S. Mathews, of Douglas County; Daniel Glidden, of Minnehaha County; F. H. Hammer, of Davison County; George Henry, of Brookings County; J. E. Carpenter, of Sanborn County; T. W. Childs, of Mellette, Spink County; A. H. Yost, Faulk County; J. D. Hilger, Hughes County; James Ringrose, Brown County; A. H. Marsh, Brown County; Chauncey I. Wood, Pennington County; Ben Bear and W. B. Thornby, Lawrence County; Alexander T. Walker, Hamlin County; J. W. Venneida, Cass County; G. B. Vallandigham, Barnes County; John DeGriolat, Hillsboro, Traill County; F. R. Fulton, Grand Forks County; M. K. Merriam, Grafton, Walsh County; W. W. Miller, Pembina County; A. J. McCabe, Jamestown, Stutsman County; L. W. Harriman, Minnewaukan, Ramsey or Benson County; Joseph Hare, Burleigh County; G. W. Peoples, Morton County; James Collister, Dickinson, Stark County; Otto Peemiller, Yankton County; J. G. Thompson, Bottineau County.

The convention then adjourned, after listening to brief and eloquent addresses from Governor Church, Delegate Harden and Colonel Steele. It was said that Steele could have had the nomination had he been willing to accept. Mr. Harden, the nominee, was vice president of the Farmers' Alliance, and had been an open supporter of the division of the territory. He was also a prohibitionist, an able debater and speaker, with much experience as an educator. He was also a citizen of exemplary character.

The issue before the people was declared to be the admission of Dakota as one state, the democrats espousing the affirmative.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS NOMINATE

A territorial prohibition convention was held at Redfield on the 27th of June, 1888, which was quite enthusiastic. J. C. Bloodgood of Huron was made temporary chairman, and Irving Mutchler of Huron secretary. Subsequently R. B. Hazel of Redfield was elected permanent chairman and Rev. W. H. Selleck of Aberdeen secretary. The Dakota Standard of Huron was appointed the prohibition organ. S. H. Cranmer, of Ipswich, was nominated for delegate to Congress. Mr. Cranmer was a lawyer, thirty-four years old, and moved from Iowa in 1884. He was a member of the Sioux Falls constitutional convention from Edmunds County. A territorial central committee was appointed with R. B. Hassell, Redfield, chairman, and W. H. Hedges, Redfield, secretary.

Local option was an issue in a large number of the counties north and south and proved quite popular in rural precincts, but was not sustained in the cities. Still it was quite evident that an aggressive temperance sentiment pervaded all parties and would prove a strong factor in future elections.

CHAPTER CI

MITCHELL UNIVERSITY DESTROYED BY FIRE

1888

W. R. BIERLY, INDEPENDENT DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE—CONGRESS ADJOURNS—NOTHING DONE FOR DIVISION—NEW JUDICIAL DISTRICTS—DAKOTA MILLERS ORGANIZE—MITCHELL UNIVERSITY DESTROYED BY FIRE—DAKOTA FARMERS' ALLIANCE, ANNUAL MEETING—LOCAL OPTION—HARRY HUNTER—FARMERS OPPOSE TRUSTS—THE ELECTION, THE VOTE AND THE CANVASS—HARRISON AND MORTON ELECTED—CELEBRATING THE ELECTION—AFTER ELECTION—MANITOBA RAILROAD REACHES SIOUX FALLS—RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION IN THE TERRITORY—FEDERAL APPOINTMENTS—SOME PERSONAL ITEMS.

AN INDEPENDENT DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

A movement for the nomination of a third candidate for delegate to Congress, originated among the dissatisfied democrats of northern Dakota and culminated shortly before election in a convention at Grand Forks on September 21st, where W. R. Bierly was nominated as its candidate for delegate. Twenty-three northern Dakota counties were represented in the convention, all anti-Church democrats. This convention was a protest against the nomination of Professor Harden, who was held to be completely under the Church influence and an opponent of division and while esteemed for his many personal virtues was not deemed to be in any other sense a fair representative of the democratic party.

Mr. Bierly lived at Grand Forks. The platform claimed:

That it is necessary for all of the territory lying north of the north line of the State of South Dakota to elect a delegate to the United States Congress. Also demands statehood for North Dakota by the next Congress; the election of a Legislature pledged to abolish the railroad commission, and the abolition of all territorial laws enlarging the appointive powers of any and all federal officers. The speedy opening of Indian reservations. The passage of an act by Congress permitting county commissioners to lease school lands at a fair rental, prior to statehood. The speedy improvement of the rivers of North Dakota and Minnesota. The erection of safeguards in the insurance of live stock, grain, implements, growing crops, etc., and such legislation as may be petitioned for by the people under the constitutional right of petition.

In his letter accepting the nomination, which was addressed to Chairman Gray, the candidate said:

I hereby formally accept the nomination for delegate in Congress from North Dakota, so heartily and unanimously tendered me, and pledge myself unreservedly to the platform of said convention. In obedience to its demand, I will, on Friday evening, at the courthouse in Grand Forks, open the campaign with all the vigor I possess and devote my whole energy to the canvass from henceforth until the election, November 6th. I further authorize a challenge, in such form as you may deem proper, to any candidate for delegate to meet me in joint debate in North Dakota upon territorial issues exclusively.

Accordingly, Mr. Bierly opened the campaign as he stated he would and was greeted with a large audience. His speech was a severe arraignment of Governor Church and his administration.

Mr. Tracy Bangs, who was the chairman of the Democratic Central Committee, followed the nominee in a stirring address during which he said:

The democratic party has refused and neglected to hold a convention and place in nomination a candidate for delegate in Congress, but a few officeholders met at Jamestown and, feeling that something must be done to vindicate themselves and their bosses, placed in nomination one John M. Harden, hoping to use him as a tool with which to draw votes. Mr. Harden is a true democrat, a scholar, and a farmer, but unfortunately for him he has been used as a bait to catch votes, with which an attempt is to be made to vindicate the most corrupt administration that Dakota has ever seen, and she has seen some bad ones.

Prior to the advent of Mr. Bierly as a candidate for Congress, there was a listlessness connected with the territorial canvass that had an element of danger in it for the republican nominee, which consisted in the serene and almost blind confidence in the success of the republican candidate because of the overwhelming majority of republicans in the territory. There seemed a possibility that one-half of the voters would not improve the opportunity to vote, which gave a troublesome aspect to the event in the minds of republican politicians. Mr. Harden might easily defeat a republican candidate if the latter received but a 50 per cent vote, and in some of the recent elections even less than 50 per cent of the lawful vote was polled. Bierly's coming out awakened new interest in the contest among the voters generally, and probably brought thousands to the polls who would have paid no attention to election otherwise.

Near the close of November following the election, Mr. Bierly, the independent democratic candidate for delegate to Congress, came forward with an original proposition, claiming to be the rightfully chosen delegate from North Dakota, and filed his claim to a seat in Congress as such representative. The Tribune of Bismarck gave out a statement of the gentleman's claim, which follows:

Willis R. Bierly, the Grand Forks independent candidate for delegate to Congress in the recent election, and who claims a certificate as the duly elected delegate from North Dakota (assuming that South Dakota is already a state), has filed his brief with the secretary of the territory. In the way of introduction he gives a brief history of the division and statehood movement, as follows:

Dakota in 1882 sought admission into the Union. A committee of boards of trade of Northern Dakota visited Washington and opposed admission as a whole, in consequence of which, as well as for other reasons, Dakota was not then admitted. In 1884 South Dakota's agitation of the question obtained from the political conventions of both parties hearty expressions for the division of the territory. After satisfying themselves that South Dakota had a lawful right to proceed and form a state government, the Legislature of 1885 was appealed to for a law authorizing a constitutional convention for South Dakota. The act approved March 15, 1885, session laws page 51, was passed almost unanimously and signed by the governor. Said act created the machinery for a state south of the forty-sixth parallel and residuary territory north thereof to be North Dakota. In pursuance thereof a convention was held at Sioux Falls, a constitution formed and ratified by a vote of the people of the state. Simultaneously with such ratification, state officers, congressmen, judges, and a Legislature were chosen and Huron selected as the temporary capital. The Legislature thus chosen convened and elected two United States senators, who presented their credentials, which were accepted by the United States Senate and the senators-elect granted the courtesies of the Senate. Immediately thereafter a bill passed the Senate ratifying the action of the people of South Dakota, which bill is now pending in the House of Representatives, and of right ought and will pass prior to March 4, 1889. The congressmen-elect, Gifford and Kanouse, appeared in the House of Representatives. Gifford, as delegate, moved that Theodore D. Kanouse be admitted to the floor of the House, which resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules, where it still lies, but neither presented their credentials as representatives from the state.

In the summer of 1888 party conventions met in Dakota, nominating respectively George A. Mathews, James W. Harden and L. H. Cranmer, all residing then and now south of the forty-sixth parallel, or within the state. Another and unpartisan convention met at Grand Forks, N. D., and nominated Willis R. Bierly of Grand Forks for delegate for North Dakota distinctly upon the issue that South Dakota being in fact a state, North Dakota was entitled to the delegate.

At the election November 6, 1888, a large number of legal voters cast their votes for said North Dakota nominee and probably a large number for two of the South Dakota candidates, the returns whereof are now before you, with the claim of the North Dakota candidate for a formal certificate of election from North Dakota.

Mr. Bierley then quotes numerous authorities tending to show that South Dakota is a state de facto, and argues that acts prior to admission are valid and will be so considered by Congress, when final action is taken by that body.

"The vote cast for Mathews, Harden and Cranmer should be canvassed by the properly constituted authorities of the State of South Dakota. Whereas, the vote cast for delegate in North Dakota should be canvassed separately and distinctly, and all ballots for other than a resident of North Dakota counted as of no effect."

Concluding, Mr. Bierley says:

"South Dakota being a state, residents therein are disqualified from representing North Dakota, the residuary territory. The person to whom the certificate is to be awarded from the territory must be held to be the person at least qualified by residence, since that is prescribed by the Constitution. Hence all votes cast for non-residents of North Dakota are as if none had been cast for them, and the principle laid down in some of the states where the majority rule is fixed by the Constitution is not binding here, and a minority of legally cast ballots for an eligible candidate elects. The presumption is that had the majority known of the disqualification, their votes would not have been cast for any disqualified candidate, but for the qualified one. Congress, under the Constitution, possesses the right to pass upon all these questions, to raise which, in due form, a certificate of election as delegate should be issued to Willis R. Bierly."

Whatever opinion may have been held by others, there is no question about the sincerity of Mr. Bierly in the position he had taken. The board of territorial canvassers do not appear to have considered his claim at all. They were probably unable to meet his argument and felt that the safest plan was not to try, and thus avoid controversy. It was evident that Mr. Bierly had been impressed with Judge Campbell's view of "What constitutes a State," and on the Campbell theory determined to push his claim. He made his way to Washington, and was fortunate in obtaining the assistance of a democratic war horse in the House to present his petition claiming the seat of delegate from North Dakota. Judge Macdonald, known as the "Sage of Shakopee," preferred this favor for Mr. Bierly, and the petition was duly referred to the Committee on Territories of which Mr. Springer was chairman. This committee had a voluminous pile of Dakota matters on its table, one-state bills, South Dakota state bills, omnibus territorial-state bills, North Dakota territory bills, and Bierly's contribution promised to add to the tangle which the committee, being democratic, was endeavoring to separate in some way that would prove advantageous to their party, soon to be suspended from authority. Mr. Springer wished to relieve Mr. Bierly of responsibility for presenting such a petition, and declared that the man was evidently crazy, as he was no more entitled to a seat in Congress than he was to a membership of the Korean embassy. Mr. Barnes, of Georgia, declared the man a freak and it was reported that the committee concluded that in any event Mr. Bierly's claim had to do with the next Congress which would come in March, 1889, and they would not undertake to forestall the action of that body.

During Mr. Bierly's sojourn in Washington awaiting the report of the House committee on his application for a seat in Congress as the delegate from North Dakota, he called on the acting chief engineer of the war department, in his official capacity, with plans and specifications for the new bridges over the Red River at Grand Forks. The plans were approved, and a new bill, approved by the chief engineer, was drawn curing defects of former legislation.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS—NOTHING DONE FOR DAKOTA

The first session of the Fiftieth Congress finally adjourned on the 20th day of October, 1888. It had not been greatly vexed by Dakota during the session, which had been prolonged beyond the usual time, and for a presidential election year and the election of a new House of Representatives, it had been unusually tardy in adjourning. No particular attention was paid the event in Dakota, the people generally having settled down to the opinion that no important measure affecting the territory would be enacted.

It will be observed that there was, at least, the usual turbulency in the territory that had characterized it for a number of years. Great interest was felt in the national contest, for thereon hung the destiny of Dakota. But there was none so gifted with prophetic ken who had the confidence to proclaim that before the close of another year Dakota would be divided and constitute two sovereign states. The short session of the present Congress would convene in December, but owing to the brief time allotted to it—barely three months—it was felt that it could do little more than enact the numerous appropriation bills, and the House had already disclosed its opposition to a division of the territory. Springer's one-state omnibus bill was still pending, and the Senate was against it. It could not be passed through that body.

In 1888, for improving the Missouri River, Congress made unusually liberal appropriations. For improving the river from Sioux City to Fort Benton it allowed $75,000. For removing snags and other obstructions, $40,000. For a survey and examination of that stretch of river, $25,000. There was also $15,000 remaining of a former appropriation which was authorized to be added to the general survey fund.

THE ELECTIONS—HARDEN STUMPING

The presidential election to be held in November might change the aspect of political affairs. Dakota was impatiently awaiting it and its result, having only a very much one-sided delegate election of her own to interest her; so much one-sided and so much a "foregone conclusion," that less attention than usual was given to it save by the democratic standard bearer, who was a very intelligent and highly respected gentleman and a professor of the leading institution of learning in Jerauld County. He was said to be making a most vigorous canvass of the territory, and an occasional paragraph in a newspaper would disclose that he was "making it warm for his opponent." The professor was intensely opposed to the government policy of protection of home industries, and favored one state for the entire territory, hence he devoted a large fraction of his speeches to demolishing the citadel of protection, and while he favored the one-state idea, he treated it sparingly, having previously, as a member of the Alliance, favored it. He had practically the whole field to himself, though the republican nominee, obedient to party usage, spoke at a number of populous centers, informing the people of his views concerning the legislative needs of the territory.

The professor's selection as a candidate was ascribed to the sagacity of Governor Church, and owing to that circumstance the struggle to secure the democratic nomination at Jamestown was neither bitter nor prolonged.

TWO ADDITIONAL JUDICIAL DISTRICTS

Delegate Gifford's bill for the establishment of two additional judicial districts in the territory of Dakota was approved by the President and became a law, August 9, 1888.

This law divided the territory into eight judicial districts. It divided the Fifth District into two districts, which were to be known as the Fifth and Seventh. And the Third District was also divided and thereafter known as the Third and Eighth.

Sec. 5. That the Fifth Judicial District of said territory shall consist of the counties of Beadle, Kingsbury, Brookings, Hughes, Hyde, Hand, Sully, Faulk, Clark, Potter, Codington, Hamlin and Deuel.

Sec. 6. That the Seventh Judicial District of said territory shall consist of the counties of Spink, Brown, Day, Marshall, Grant, Roberts, Edmunds, Walworth, McPherson, Campbell, and the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indian reservation, and also shall include the following portion of the great Sioux Indian reservation, to wit: All that portion lying northward of the counties of Presho and Platt, and a line extending the north line of the County of Pratt to the twenty-fifth meridian of longitude west from Washington, thence eastward and southward of the north line of Bozeman and Schnasse counties.

Sec. 7. That the Eighth Judicial District of said territory shall consist of the counties of Grand Forks, Walsh, Pembina, Nelson, Ramsey, Cavalier and Turner.

Sec. 8. That the Third Judicial District of said territory shall consist of the counties now constituting the same, except as it may be affected by the formation of the Eighth Judicial District herein provided for.

The Legislature of the territory was authorized to change the formation of these districts.

All unorganized counties were annexed for judicial purposes to the Sixth Judicial District.

Under this law the President appointed Hon. A. W. Crofoot for the Seventh District (Aberdeen), and Hon. C. W. Templeton, of Fargo or Grand Forks, judge of the Eighth District (Grand Forks). The appointments were confirmed October 10, 1888.

MILLERS ORGANIZE

The flour millers of South Dakota held a meeting at Aberdeen on the 22d of November, 1888, and perfected an organization called the South Dakota Millers Association. The convention organized by electing William T. Tennant, of Aberdeen, temporary chairman, and J. D. Ward, of the Mitchell Mills, secretary. Committees were then chosen, as follows:

Credentials—Messrs. Stokes, Wood, Gould, Knittel, Pushmell, Wilson and Lovell. Permanent Organization—Messrs. Wilson, Smith, Kutnewsky and Bushnell. By-Laws—Messrs. Stokes, Oceanrider, Smith and Bushnell.

The secretary's record showed the following list of mills and millers represented:

G. E. Bushnell, of Valley Springs; B. H. Kutnewsky, Redfield City Roller Mills; D. R. Raymond, Huron; L. C. Gook, Howard; A. W. Knittel, Carthage; F. A. Morrison, DeSmet; R. Peckham, Frankfort; N. D. Smith, Madison; I. D. Wood, Mitchell; W. P. Stokes, Watertown; Wm. Tennant and C. A. Luns, of Luna, Aberdeen Roller Mills; E. Chrisenbach, Frederick; J. F. Sisson, Chamberlain; L. A. Foote, Kimball; Bryan & Wheaton, Plankinton; Excelsior Mills, Yankton; F. L. Van Tassel, manager; J. J. Brynon, Brookings; C. W. Colfield, Arlington Roller Mills; J. A. Thompson, Blunt; A. L. Lovell, St. Lawrence; F. H. Townsend, Columbia; E. M. Lewis, Groton; A. Wilson, Clark; T. F. Wilson, Waverly; W. Marshall, Casselton; Geo. W. VanDusen, Canby; C. R. Madison, Volga; E. Bemmer, Oakes; E. J. Clements, Ashton.

The object of the meeting, as stated by the chairman, was to perfect a millers' organization for South Dakota. Among the subjects to be considered were freight rates, coal, machinery, and methods of milling. Efforts were also to be made to secure gradings uniform with the products of flour manufacturing sections, and to advance the flour product of mills in South Dakota.

There was no intention on the part of this association to combine for the purpose of maintaining uniform prices, and it was stated by some of the speakers that no trust features were contemplated.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported the following names for officers for the ensuing year: W. H. Stokes, Watertown, president; A. L. Lovell, St. Lawrence, first vice president; N. B. Smith, Madison, second vice president; C. A. Luns, Aberdeen, secretary; executive committee, J. D. Wood, Mitchell; A. L. Lovell, St. Lawrence; E. Boehmeir, Oakes.

The Committee on By-Laws reported a constitution defining the organization and an order of business, which was adopted.

The Committee on Resolutions reported a declaration of the purposes of the association, declaring that a trust or combination was no part of the plans of the association, and defining its objects as above set forth.

METHODIST UNIVERSITY AT MITCHELL BURNED

The Wesleyan University at Mitchell, the finest and largest in the territory, was completely destroyed by fire on the morning of March 9, 1888. The fire broke out about 3 o'clock in the morning, and the building being outside of the fire limits of the city, no aid could be given the efforts to quench the flames by the Mitchell fire department. There were forty-two persons who lodged in the building, ten of whom were more or less injured in escaping, one fatally. Messrs. Taylor, Babcock and Stantor jumped from the second story and were injured internally. Professor Taylor and Students Smith, Parkin, James and Pitcher jumped from the third story. Pitcher died in two hours. The others were dangerously hurt. Professor Duncan came down safely from the roof on a clothes line.

Spontaneous combustion was responsible for the disaster, originating in a pile of oiled rags in the engine room. The loss was $50,000. Only $7,500 insurance was carried. The cost of the edifice, erected in 1885, was $50,000. Its walls had been built of Sioux Falls granite. It had been operated as a university for two years under the auspices of the Methodist conference, and was attended by 132 pupils at the time of its destruction. It was rebuilt.

After the fire it was discovered that had there been a piece of rope in each room, placed there for the purpose of enabling the inmate to escape in case of fire, it might and probably would have enabled all to have escaped without injury.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE—ANNUAL MEETING

The annual meeting of the Dakota Farmers' Alliance began its session at Jamestown December 11, 1888. President H. L. Loucks presided. There were in attendance about two hundred delegates. Addresses were made by E. H. Allison, of Brokings County; Judge Conklin, of Watertown; E. P. Conser, of Ellendale; and Mr. Lampman, of Valley City.

The annual address of President Loucks occupied the remainder of the first day's session. In this address the president recommended that "this meeting take official cognizance of national politics, namely, government ownership of railroads and telegraphs, and government ownership of coal lands to be mined on royalty." The address throughout was favorably received.

Secretary Soderburg read the annual report, showing 744 local alliances in the territory, of which 278 had been organized during the year. The total receipts were $1,130.70. Balance on hand, $31.70.

A resolution was adopted to demand of the next Dakota Legislature a railroad bill providing for the election of railroad commissioners by the people by ballot, and making the regular passenger fare two and a half cents per mile. Also requiring railroad companies to furnish cars for the shipment of grain within three days after notice. Also requiring railroad companies to build side-tracks to elevators and warehouses adjacent to their tracks.

The principal business of the succeeding day was the reception of reports from Alliance Insurance and incorporated companies. Here follows a synopsis of the report of President Crose of LaMoure, who was in charge of the purchasing department of the Alliance:

"Many goods we were at first unable to purchase because manufacturers were afraid to trust us. They were united in a combination or trust which forbade them dealing with an organization like ours. We were beggars for our first patronage, but during the year our business will aggregate over half a million dollars, and today our office is visited, not alone by traveling agents, but by the presidents and general managers of business houses in the East, asking us to deal with them."

The report recommends that each county alliance select some point for a county agency, that a county agent be appointed, and the number of agents thus largely decreased. Centralization of all alliance departments at some central and accessible point in the territory as headquarters, and the placing of the business of all under the supervision of a committee composed of the president and secretary of insurance and incorporated companies, and either the president or secretary of the territorial alliance is recommended.

President Wardell, of the Alliance Hail and Fire Insurance Company, reported as follows:

We have insured during the past year 10,000 members to the amount of $0,000,000, saving them in premiums alone nearly a quarter of a million dollars, as against the old line companies. We have paid every loss in full and before it was due. With nearly one hundred other companies doing business in the territory, we have succeeded in two years in building up a business equalling in volume one-sixth of the total transactions of all the other companies combined. We were unable to establish a mutual company, as the laws of Dakota do not permit it, but we have carried on an alliance department in connection with the fidelity, thus saving the expense of raising all the capital. It is carried on at a low rate of expense on the same mutual plan, in the same office and with the same officers. We would respectfully ask your honorable body to authorize the insurance department to establish a life branch, and be known as the Alliance Aid Association, and to be established and conducted on the mutual and assessment plan organization of life departments.

In accordance with the request of the last paragraph, it was ordered by the Alliance.

The following committees were then appointed by President Loucks:

Resolutions—Ira S. Lampman, E. N. Schultz, J. C. Langless, W. E. Boyse, Wylie Nelson, A. Slatten, E. J. Strong. Distribution—H. W. Smith, H. M. Clark, W. D. Chase, H. E. Pierce, A. W. Kuhn, H. W. Kelley. Finance—R. H. Bentley, A. B. Ashley, W. R. Merrick, D. M. Finney, J. B. Sweet. Constitution and By-Laws—Orange Wright, F. A. Leavitt, G. L. McGregor, J. W. Moore, A. Lawrence, H. M. Aiken, J. E. Sheridan. Transportation—A. B. Vajndoren, James Dobie, J. A. Tower, J. W. Goodrich, W. N. Burwell, James Mathews, D. Dunn. Good of Order—W. T. McCulloch, E. Nelson, Ed Reed, R. Watson, W. H. Emmons, A. Wadell, J. B. McGeary. Press—A. Wardell, P. A. Johnson, E. F. Conser. Taxation—L. F. Dow, B. Miller, A. C. VanMeter, Henry Miller, H. B. Stevens, W. J. Bennett, B. Lockman, W. H. Massey. Farmer's Institutes—J. C. Wade, Reverend Allison, A. D. Chase, J. J. Ahyers, John Smith, J. W. Harden. Legislation—S. J. Conklin, E. P. Conser, D. T. Dodds, Walter Muir, S. H. Goodfellow, A. B. Taylor, J. L. Parker, J. P. Day, E. J. Melnis.

Resolutions were presented and adopted, recommending that the Legislature appropriate $10,000 to aid in the promotion of farmer's institute work in the territory, indorsing the Agricultural College at Brookings and recommending that generous provision be made for it by the Legislature; by A. Wardell, president of the insurance company, recommending united and concerted action of the National Alliance, Grange, Knights of Labor, and kindred organizations to the end that national legislation in the interests of the industrial classes may be secured.

The most sensational feature of the session was the reading of a resolution from Alliance No. 701, protesting against the political interference of territorial alliance officials. The resolution was evidently intended as a rebuke to President Loucks, and was evidently by him so regarded from the fact that he expressed a wish that the resolution should be fully discussed, and if any one had any fault to find with him they would do so then and there.

After quite a lengthy discussion regarding the propriety of an economic association, through its principal officers, taking a leading part in the contests of political parties, and thus permitting the association itself to be given a partisan coloring in the estimation of the outside world, some contending that it was all right if the officer let it be known that he did not speak for the Alliance, and had no authority to speak for it in political assemblages, while others contended that the officers owed it to the Alliance to avoid such conspicuous discussions which would only drag the Alliance down and not build up politics, the resolution was finally tabled, but it was evident that the safest road for the Alliance to travel, was in the middle of the road.

President McLouth, of Brookings College, was present, and closed the proceedings with an address in the interest of his institution.

An early frost and unseasonable weather brought damage to the Dakota wheat fields in 1888. Oliver Dalrymple, the bonanza wheat farmer of Northern Dakota and of the territory generally, stated that in some large sections the wheat yield had been reduced one half. He further stated that the world's wheat crop would fall short 300,000,000 of bushels owing to natural causes, and predicted that wheat prices would go to $1.25 a bushel in Chicago and $1.50 in New York. He advised Dakota farmers to hold their crop for a few months, and they would do well on the short crop.

FARMERS AGAINST TRUSTS

The beginning of the crusade against trusts in which the people took part may be traced to the efforts of the agricultural population of Dakota, whose intelligence enabled them to propose practical remedies by the law-making power, for the injustice inflicted by pernicious combinations for the purpose of restraining trade and controlling prices. At a mass convention of the farmers of North Dakota held at Fargo in May, 1888, to consider the attitude of the National Legislature toward the agricultural interests, there was a platform adopted of which the following is a copy:

That in our judgment it is the duty of Congress to appoint a special committee of investigation, with full powers to compel any and all persons with books, papers, etc., to appear before it, who are in anyway officially connected with the formation and direction of any trust or combination whatsoever, that has for its object the increasing of price of any article of commerce or trade above the price of the same with open competition in a free market, or by any combination whatsoever to decrease the market value of any article of farm produce below the price paid for the same in the open markets of the world.

That when it is clearly proven that such trusts exist, it should be the duty of Congress, if a tariff tax protects the manufacture of such articles, to put the same on the free list.

That the Territorial Farmers Alliance of Dakota, an organization which has for its objects the upbuilding, protecting, elevating and defending of all the interests of the farmers, whether territorial or national, at least are entitled to our thanks for the determined efforts they are making in battling against monopoly and trusts that have for their object the destruction of free competition and a free market. That it is the duty of all farmers to unite with and help support the organization known as the Farmers Alliance.

The Farmers' Alliance had taken an active part in the territorial election, or rather its leading officers, Messrs. Loucks, Crose and others, supporting the democratic candidate, Mr. Harden, on the ground that Mr. Matthews' record had been antagonistic to the interest of the farmers when he was acting in a legislative capacity two years before.

Secretary Crose of the Territorial Farmer's Alliance issued a circular a few days before the election, declaring in favor of Mr. Harden, the democratic nominee for delegate. This came as a great surprise, Crose having been an ardent supporter and speaker for Matthews. The leaders of the Alliance were now nearly all bending their energies to elect Harden, which gave the republicans considerable anxiety because the antecedents of these new converts to Harden's one-state and free trade theory were republicans, and they had trained with that party and been prominent in its councils. Crose was afterwards nominated by the democrats of his legislative district which included Hughes County, for the Territorial Council, but was defeated by Coe I. Crawford.

OFFICIAL CANVASS

The territorial board of canvassers assembled at Bismarck on the 3d of December, 1888, and canvassed the vote returned for the office of delegate to Congress, which is here given by counties, that of North Dakota first, South Dakota returns in a separate table:

NORTH DAKOTA

County.	For Mathews	For Harden	For Bierly	County.	For Mathews	For Harden	For Bierly
Barnes	953	727	1	Mercer	93	18	0
Burleigh	714	383	12	Nelson	640	250	130
Benson	117	459	1	Oliver	31	44	0
Bottineau	314	414	7	Pembina	1,348	1,355	1
Billings	33	15	0	Richland	1,098	978	0
Cass	3,395	1,550	5	Ransom	1,324	102	0
Cavalier	475	862	7	Ramsey	1,069	554	1
Dickey	1,000	650	0	Rolette	229	337	45
Eddy	273	233	3	Stark	229	337	0
Emmons	374	93	0	Stutsman	715	858	0
Foster	227	130	13	Steele	548	173	0
Grand Forks	2,273	510	1,378	Sargent	1,029	360	0
Griggs	296	506	0	Traill	1,356	794	1
Kidder	321	124	1	Towner	172	185	73
LaMoure	566	264	1	Walsh	1,848	1,718	3
Logan	50	5	0	Wells	149	182	0
Morton	684	335	0	Ward	355	252	29
McHenry	277	62	2
McLean	259	58	0	Total.....	25,310	15,801	1,723
McIntosh	273	17	0

SOUTH DAKOTA

County	For Mathews	For Harden	County	For Mathews	For Harden
Aurora	713	634	Hutchinson	1,087	328
Beadle	1,556	600	Hyde	379	201
Brown	2,370	1,613	Jerard	438	316
Brookings	1,411	552	Kingsbury	1,207	556
Buffalo	127	74	Lake	939	625
Brule	728	852	Lawrence	2,067	1,523
Bon Homme	1,001	580	Lincoln	1,532	352
Butte	205	108	McCook	655	788
Custer	517	396	McPherson	471	226
Campbell	474	182	Marshall	655	498
Clark	1,110	524	Miner	790	537
Codington	1,033	677	Mitchell	2,441	1,444
Charles Mix	673	221	Moody	860	256
Clay	1,149	269	Pennington	980	549
Day	914	806	Potter	463	324
Douglas	738	275	Roberts	247	117
Deuel	614	436	Sanborn	818	355
Davison	858	572	Spink	1,822	872
Edmunds	778	475	Sully	477	142
Fall River	441	155	Turner	1,425	170
Faulk	718	336	Union	1,045	700
Grant	772	601	Wailworth	201	265
Hamlin	475	541	Yankton	1,479	588
Hand	1,046	871
Hanson	627	451	Total.....	44,995	25,045
Hughes	528	245

Total for the territory, 114,130; 70,245 for Mathews, 40,846 for Harden, and 1,753 for Bierly. Bierly received 30 votes in South Dakota, 27 of them being cast in Yankton. Mathews' majority was 20,369.

Mr. Cranmer, of McPherson County, who ran for governor on the prohibition ticket, received 421 votes north and 895 in the south, 1,316 in all. The total vote of the territory was 114,130, a gain of nearly ten thousand in two years. Harden appeared to get the average full vote of his party, which was a surprise to those who kept track of the canvass. He received some unlooked for assistance from the leaders of the Farmer's Alliance, and it would seem that he had made a favorable impression upon the public during his long canvass to which he had devoted himself with commendable vigilance. The democrats as well as republicans gained materially over their vote of 1886, the former casting over two thousand votes more for Harden than for Day in 1886, in South Dakota. The democratic gain in North Dakota had been but 295.

CELEBRATING THE ELECTION

The national election in November resulted in a republican victory, insuring an administration in sympathy with the claims of Dakota for division and statehood, while within the territory Mr. Matthews had a plurality over Harden of about thirty thousand.

One of a hundred election celebrations may be alluded to as showing the exultant gratification of Dakotans over the result of the election. It took place at Yankton Saturday evening following election day, when it had been learned beyond a doubt that Harrison and Morton, and a republican Congress by a very narrow margin had been chosen, and it would appear that the voice of Dakota had been heard and heeded in the campaign in the states where the Dakota speakers did their pleading before the voters.

For two hours the entire city was aglow. A local paper tells us that there were blazing bonfires on the hillsides and on the streets; residences and business places were brilliantly illuminated, and the air was filled with showers from sparkling fireworks to which was added the constant glare of red lights. In this brilliant sea of flame the national colors floated from many flag staffs, and decorative designs in red, white and blue, embellished the fronts of residences and business places. To the spectacular display was added the din of gunpowder explosions, the ringing of bells, mingled with the music of bands and the shouts of exultant victors.

The celebration was as unanimous as it was spontaneous. It spread all over Yankton. It spread from limit to limit and was tempered only by the ability of the participants to show the earnest vigor of their joy. It was a carnival of exultation which spent itself only when the forces were exhausted. If there were any nonparticipating members of the opposition party in the city, they were so very few that their presence was unnoticed in the wild delirium of the hour.

The procession formed on Broadway at 7 in the evening, in the light of blazing bonfires and torches, and a half hour later the head of the column moved down Third Street headed by the Yankton Cornet Band in full uniform. As the cavalcade slowly unwound itself the brilliancy of the display evoked the wildest enthusiasm from a multitude of people of all ages, both sexes, waving flags, handkerchiefs, or uplifted hands. Along the walks and in the windows of buildings, stretching from Broadway to Capitol Street and around that thoroughfare and northward, there was a half mile of moving column ablaze with torches, fireworks, colored lights and transparencies, wending its way between two walls of illumination and under a canopy of flame and sparks and smoke from burning fireworks.

The order of the procession placed the Yankton Cornet Band in the lead, followed by a body of mounted torch bearers. Behind these was a broom brigade, typifying the clean sweep, and torch bearers, and in their wake stretched a long column of wagons, carrying mammoth transparencies, and various unique designs. At proper intervals were two other bands, one a fife and drum corps, and the other the Knights Templar Cornet Band.

An interesting feature of the display was a log cabin mounted on wheels and drawn by four horses. This cabin was constructed from Dakota logs by William Box and was a complete affair—a veritable log cabin with a shingle roof and doors and windows. A coon skin was nailed under the gable of the structure and in the doorway was a barrel of cider with tin drinking cups on a pine table. Inside the cabin rode Rev. D. B. Nichols, J. W. C. Morrison, C. N. Tyler (or Taylor), Barney Mohan, Doctor Van Ostrand, D. C. Gill, and H. L. Briggs, veteran republicans and whigs who voted for Grandfather Harrison in 1840. This party was chaperoned by Col. Nic Morgan, who did not vote for Grandfather Harrison because he lacked some three years of being old enough, but he pounded a drum all through the Tippecanoe campaign, and shouted for the cause. The log cabin attracted much attention.

There were numerous transparencies scattered throughout the procession. The department was under the direction of Ed Palmer, who had taxed his genius in producing original designs and sentiments. One of the large wagon transparencies represented a pair of stallions engaged in a fierce combat. One was labelled "Free Trade," and the other "Protection." An accompanying sketch showed the Free Trade horse down and Protection in the attitude of Conqueror. Another presented an unmistakable jackass in the act of hurling Cleveland from his saddle. Upon the saddle was the word "Democracy," and underneath the cartoon was a farewell legend—"Good-by, Grover."

Upon another wagon there was a transparency showing two enormous eagles but only the republican eagle was occupying the victor's perch, and the ruffled and generally disordered condition of his feathers indicated that he had had a fight and only narrowly escaped with the fruits of victory.

A large wagon bore a transparency showing a map of Dakota Territory with the dividing line indicated, and on the reverse side another smaller map covered with mottoes, among which was quoted Chairman Quay's telegram to John R. Gamble, "Dakota's hopes are realized. Harrison is elected." Other expressions were, "Church's jig is up." "We're out of the woods." "Turn the rascals out." Surmounting the huge transparency was a triangle upon the sides of which were painted, "Dakota's inheritance—$26,000,000 worth of school lands."

Extract from one of Harrison's speeches—"Six hundred thousand intelligent and loyal people entitled to the rights of statehood." "Educate the voter and he generally votes right." There was a scroll which bore the legend "Peace and plenty—good will to all." A transparency furnished by William Blatt, furnished Vice President Thurman's remark, "I foresee mischief by the republican party, and fear it will admit Dakota."

This procession rounded up at the club room, Turner Hall, and an impromptu meeting was held, with Maj. J. R. Hanson in the chair. A speech from the chairman was called for but he claimed that he had something better to offer than a speech consisting of some lines he had written to send to his son Joe who was away at school. Accordingly he gave his audience the returns of the election in rhyme, as follows:

From the pines of old Maine come wafted a song,
The hills of New Hampshire speed it along;
The rocks of Vermont, sweet freedom's redoubt,
And dales of Mass'chusetts swell the loud shout.

Like the storm king's sweep o'er the trembling earth,
The roar of New York now belches forth;
The heart of Rhode Island with sympathy stirred,
And an answering shout from Ohio is heard.

Pennsylvania, whose hosts are legion by name,
And Michigan's thousands swell the acclaim;
So, Wisconsin hath heard the wild, wild strain,
And shouts from Indiana's war worn plain.

From the chain of lakes, o'er the prairie's wide sweep,
Where the vanguards of liberty never sleep,
Iowa, Minnesota and great Illinois,
And Kansas, Nebraska, shout for joy.

Up over the mountains' loftiest peak,
 Colorado, Nevada and Oregon speak;
 California at freedom's behest,
 The song of her people joins the rest.

Hark, hear the burst of Freedom's token—
 "The Arm of the Oppressor is Broken,"
 West Virginia sings his song of doom.
 "Make room for Liberty," "Make room."

After this poetical introductory, which was greeted with stentorian applause, eloquent speeches were made by General Beadle, Robert J. Gamble, Hugh J. Campbell, George H. Hand, and Judge G. W. Roberts.

It was one of those occasions which are styled "never to be forgotten."

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE

The result of the national election gave Harrison and Morton a majority of the Electoral College, as shown by the following table, which gives the names of the states and their electoral vote for president and vice president.

CLEVELAND AND THURMAN		HARRISON AND MORTON
Alabama	10	California	8
Arkansas	7	Colorado	3
Connecticut	6	Illinois	24
Delaware	3	Indiana	15
Florida	4	Iowa	13
Georgia	12	Kansas	9
Kentucky	13	Maine	6
Louisiana	8	Massachusetts	14
Maryland	8	Michigan	13
Mississippi	9	Minnesota	7
Missouri	10	Nebraska	5
New Jersey	9	Nevada	3
North Carolina	11	New Hampshire	4
South Carolina	9	New York	36
Tennessee	12	Ohio	23
Texas	13	Oregon	3
Virginia	12	Pennsylvania	30
		Rhode Island	4
Total.....	162	Vermont	4
		Wisconsin	11
		West Virginia	6
		Total.....	239

AFTER ELECTION AT WASHINGTON

Quite a change was observed in the attitude of the democratic majority in the House of Representatives soon after that body convened in December, 1888, though Mr. Springer, possibly wishing to remain consistent, still held to his one state program for Dakota. But the divisionists had obtained a powerful ally in Hon. S. S. Cox, of New York, nicknamed Sunset Cox, a leading and influential democrat, who was chairman of the first democratic caucus held that session, and who courageously and ably espoused the division of Dakota and the admission of two states. The omnibus bill had not been agreed upon at this time, but in its early stage, rather crude, was before the House, and subject to amendment. This was just before the holiday recess. Mr. Cox took occasion, just at this time to make a statement designed for the public ear.

That he should offer an amendment to the Omnibus bill giving South Dakota two congressmen, and allow her to come into the Union, just as soon as the President could issue his proclamation after the act was approved. He intended also to provide an enabling act for North Dakota, admitting her as soon as she could qualify herself. He did not believe another election on the question of division was necessary or wanted by the people of Dakota. As far as he could learn he believed that the people of both sections were practically for division. He said he had been hard at work trying to induce some of his associates to consent to the division of Dakota, and had finally succeeded, and was then prepared to proceed with the consideration of the measures without delay.

OBITUARIES

The death of Prof. F. V. Hayden, the celebrated Government geologist and explorer, occurred in December, 1887. The early chapters of this work tell of his explorations and work in the Territory of Dakota. He made the first report to citizens of Dakota of the mineral riches of the Black Hills, and was greatly interested in the wonderful discoveries he had made in exploring the Bad Lands. He was born of Puritan descent in Westfield, Mass., September 7, 1820. He emigrated to the Western Reserve, Ohio, and was brought up on a farm and educated at the common schools. He entered Oberlin, Ohio, College when sixteen years of age, and graduated in 1850. He also studied medicine, and graduated from the New York Medical College at Albany in 1853. He was a member of the National Academy of Sciences, and of nearly all the other scientific bodies of America, and honorary and corresponding member of a large number of scientific bodies in foreign countries. He occupied more than twenty years in the exploration of the west, and extended his investigations over the greater portion of Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico, Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Utah.

George W. French, chief justice of Dakota from 1860 to 1873, died in Florida, where he was spending the winter on the 20th of December, 1887. Judge French resided at Thomaston, Maine, from which place he was appointed chief justice through the friendly efforts of Vice President Hannibal Hamlin.

HARRY HUNTER

Harry Hunter, who figured prominently in the politics of the last decade of the last century came into the political arena as a member of the Territorial Legislature of 1888-89 from Spink County, residing at Mellette. He had been elected from Spink County by a farmer constituency, and owes his election to the fact that during the disagreements in Spink County between the Alliance grain producers and the railroads, growing out of the neglect of the roads to furnish cars for the shipment of the farmers' wheat, thus depressing the price in the local market, Hunter organized a detachment of farmers and forcibly took possession of a large number of the railroad cars, loaded them full of wheat, and compelled the railroad company to come to terms. This did not indicate that he was in sentiment an Alliance man, for he was inclined to advocate a liberal policy toward the roads during this period. He made a very consistent, able and useful member. The railroad people of the Milwaukee Company must have become acquainted with young Hunter and formed a very favorable opinion of his abilities notwithstanding his friendliness to the farmers in the grain shipment affair, for a few years later he is found in an important representative position as an employee of that company, and made it a part of his duty to attend all the legislative sessions, and take an advisory part as a lobbyist in railroad legislation. He became also a prominent leader in the republican party and withal a popular citizen, and secured valuable recognition of his abilities by promotion in the important affairs of the company.

NORTH DAKOTA LOCAL OPTION

Under the new territorial law for the management of the liquor traffic by local option, which authorized the referring of the question whether intoxicating liquor should be dispensed to the voters of each county, a convention for the counties of the proposed new Territory of North Dakota was held at Jamestown, Stutsman County, on the 28th of September, 1887, to arrange for a local option campaign in that half of the territory during the coming month of October. A permanent organization was perfected with the title of the North Dakota Anti-Saloon Alliance, and the following officers were elected:

President, L. W. Starbird, Fargo; vice president, Rev. J. Hartmann, Jamestown; secretary, M. H. Kniff, Cass County; treasurer, S. S. Lyon, Cass County.

An executive committee composed of one member from each county in the proposed new territory was selected in addition to the officers as follows:

Barnes County, C. E. Helde, Valley City; Burleigh County, Rev. George Klein, Bismarck; Cass County, Hon. Frank English, Casselton; Eddy County, Judge Henderson, New Rockford; Emmons County, James Conner, Williamsport; Foster County, J. Morley Wyard, Carrington; Griggs County, A. N. Adams, Cooperstown; Grand Forks County, H. E. Lickenson, Reynolds; Kidder County, E. Barlow, Steele; LaMoure County, M. Franks, Grand Rapids; Morton County, Doctor Coe, Mandan; Pembina County, Jacob Welhelm, Bathgate; Ransom County, Judge Ellis, Lisbon; Ramsey County, Alexandria Walker, Devil's Lake; Richland County, Rev. G. B. Barnes, Wahpeton; Stutsman County, Rev. N. D. Fanning, Jamestown; Steele County, H. H. Wasson, Hope; Sargent County, Judge Vale, Foreman; Traill County, D. B. Clayton, Mayville; Towner County, E. N. Dickemson, Cando; Wells County, Marshall Brinton, Sykestone; Walsh County, W. C. Kennedy, Grafton.

Most of the counties had already petitioned for the privilege of voting upon the question, and the election would be held in connection with the election on the division question.

LOCAL OPTION IN SUPREME COURT

The local option law enacted by the Legislature of 1887 was tested before the Supreme Court of the territory at its session in February, 1888, at Bismarck. The cases before the court were from Grand Forks and Sioux Falls. The first Sioux Falls case was based upon the authority of their special city charter, which it was contended granted license and had not been repealed by the local option law. Another case from Sioux Falls contended that the petition for the election upon the local option proposition did not contain the requisite number of names and that the county commissioners had no authority therefore to submit the question to a vote. In the Grand Forks case it was contended that the local option law had not been legally enacted, and therefore was not a law. In all these cases the court decided against the contestants and upheld the law. The temperance sentiment was predominant in the territory at this period of its career and the courts were inclined to resolve doubtful points in favor of the restricting statutes.

This session of the court was held at Bismarck. Their decision in the Grand Forks case was instructive as to the powers granted the territory by the Organic Act. The case was entitled "Territory of Dakota ex rel. Patrick McMahon vs. Michael J. O'Connor, a deputy sheriff of Grand Forks County." The decision of the court recites that:

The petitioner, Patrick McMahon, was arrested upon a warrant issued by a justice of the peace of Grand Forks County upon complaint filed charging said petitioner with violating the provisions of the local option law, and he having been held to answer at the next term of the District Court of said county, he has sued out of this court a writ of habeas corpus alleging his imprisonment to be illegal upon the grounds, first, that said act of the Legislative Assembly is unconstitutional and void; second, that said act was never enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the territory.

Numerous objections are urged against the validity of the laws, which we have examined in the order presented, and in answering the objections raised it would be well to note that it is considered that the states have power in their sovereign capacity to enact such laws as police regulations, but it is denied that such powers are granted to the territory by the organic act, and it is contended that the act in question is in contravention of the organic law and the Constitution of the United States. It is sufficient now to say that the organic act of the territory is so far a constitution in character, and the temporary government thereby created is so far sovereign that it has the power to enact any and all laws in the nature of police regulations not in conflict with the statutes and Constitution of the United States. That the power of legislation which extends to all rightful subjects of legislation includes police powers. That the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors is a rightful subject of legislation and is included within the general grant of legislative power granted the territories. That police regulations are necessarily local in their character and could not well be exercised by Congress over all its outlying territory. That it intended to and must necessarily have placed somewhere outside of Congress, but subject to its ultimate control, the power of regulating the affairs of municipal concern in a manner and by means adapted to and in consonance with the character and necessities of the different localities and people to be affected thereby. This law is not open to the objection that it impairs the right of private property, further than all prohibition laws may be open to a similar objection. "It rests upon the fundamental principle that every one shall so use his own as not to wrong and injure another."

We have only to inquire as to the legality and not the expediency of legislative enactments, and that the laws regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors are within the class of rightful subjects of legislation is now too firmly established by uniformity of action both by the Legislature and the courts to be now denied by this tribunal. Nor is it, as suggested, in contravention of the revenue law which grants licenses to sell intoxicating liquors. They were never presumed to grant authority to do the acts licensed, but contemplate a raising of revenue merely through the means employed for its collection. It is not a delegation of legislative power, nor is the law within the prohibition of Congress upon special legislation. Under our theory of government the municipality always had the power of local government. It is in a certain sense inherent in the town, in the city, the county and the sub-divisions of the sovereign government. In a sense it is dormant, but is brought into life and allowed to be exercised by the legislative will. Municipal governments have, from the existence of the nation, been permitted to exercise their police powers in their own way. The municipal charters of this territory have always granted police powers varying in character according to the wishes or necessities of the locality, and unchallenged by the courts. General legislation is often unsuited to the requirements of a large and sparsely settled country, and when such legislation is purely police in character it is not in violation of congressional legislation, but is general in character though local in execution. Nor is the claim open to the last and final objection that it was not enacted in conformity with the organic act and laws of the United States.

It is true that the journals are silent as to some steps which it is urged, the court must say, were necessary to its enactment by the joint action of the two houses of the Legislative Assembly. The court does not necessarily take judicial knowledge of the rules of the Legislative Assembly so far as to determine that the act could not have been passed in accordance therewith, contrary to the certificates of the officers of those bodies. The journals are merely silent. They do not contradict the authenticity of the acts given, by the signatures thereto of the president of the council, the speaker of the house and the executive himself. If this court can examine the journal of the Legislative Assembly in any case to determine whether an act was actually passed, it is sufficient for this case to say it will not declare the law invalid by reason of the failure of the journal to record its passage, and in absence of any affirmative record that it did not secure the affirmance and concurrence of both houses, we cannot say that the certificates of the sworn officers of the two departments of the Government do not upon their face import verity.

The defendant must be remanded to the custody of the officer until discharged by due course of law.

All the judges concurring except Judge Thomas, who dissents on the ground that the law is in conflict with the organic act of the territory, which forbids the Legislature from passing any act impairing the rights of private property.

THE SIOUX FALLS SPECIAL CHARTER CASE

In the case of Burton B. Champion, an appeal from Minnehaha County from a decree granting an injunction against selling liquor under the local option law, the following was the decision which settles the dispute as to general and special laws. The judgment in this case must be affirmed, following the opinion of the court in the case of the Territory ex rel Patrick McMahan v. Michael J. O'Campbell, above cited, and the court further holds that chapter 72, laws of 1887, is amendatory of and must be construed as a part of chapter 26 of the laws of 1870, and that this latter, as amended, is subject to and modified by the local option law in so far that while the penalties prescribed by the act of 1870 are continued in force, the proviso of the sixth section of the said law repealing all acts, special and general, have the effect to so far modify the charter of the City of Sioux Falls as to make said local option law operative therein.

Following these decisions of the court in the land of the Dakotahs, quite a number of the retailers of intoxicants, who had thought the local option law might be declared invalid on constitutional grounds, disposed of their business and embarked in some line not so exposed to the requirements of law.

MANITOBA RAILWAY AT SIOUX FALLS

The Manitoba Railway (later named the Great Northern) was completed to Sioux Falls early in December, 1888, and the citizens through their Commercial Club celebrated the event with a social and festive occasion including a banquet, on the 11th day of the month. It proved to be the most notable event of that pleasing character, Dakota had been favored with. The invited guests included 15 Manitoba officials, 21 citizens of St. Paul, 22 from Minneapolis, 14 from Wilmar, 28 from Granite Falls, 10 from Henley, 2 from Cottonwood, 28 from Marshall, 1 from Rathven, 23 from Pipestone, 14 from Jasper, 2 from Sherman, 5 from Palisades, 4 from Madison, 3 from Hurley, and 7 from Yankton.

At the banquet in the evening something of the importance of the event as viewed at the time can be gathered from the proceedings and addresses which followed the feast, and which in a largely abridged form are here given.

E. W. Caldwell, editor of the Sioux Falls Press, acted as chairman of the occasion.

Mayor Norton on behalf of Sioux Falls extended to Assistant General Manager Mohler and other representatives of the Manitoba, and to the visiting business men a very cordial welcome, and then called upon Attorney J. M. Bailey to express more fully the feeling entertained by Sioux Falls toward President Hill and his important work in aiding the development of the Northwest.

Mr. Bailey reviewed briefly the history of the various efforts Sioux Falls had made to secure the five railroads then centering there, and in doing so paid a high tribute to R. F. Pettigrew, E. A. Sherman, Melvin Grigsby, C. E. McKinney and other citizens who had labored persistently and intelligently in promoting the material interests of Sioux Falls. He said that Sioux Falls had paid liberally for what she had secured and had met every obligation. While reflecting not a particle upon the importance of the other lines obtained, the Manitoba guaranteed the city greater and more wide-reaching results than any other. On this account the welcome to it was most cordial, and the feeling of interest in it and its management prompted this reception.

A. L. Mohler, manager, responded on behalf of the railroad company. He regretted very much the absence of President Hill, who could talk so well upon occasions of this character, but he desired it to be understood that, however little he would be able to say, down deep in the heart of every man connected with the company present on this occasion was a most ardent appreciation of this welcome which had been extended to the company and its representatives.

E. A. Sherman, vice president of the Wilmar & Sioux Falls Road, responded also for the company, and spoke for the city also. He declared that he had been merely a herald in his connection with the movement that had secured the Manitoba, and to its management he paid a very cordial tribute. A more honorable and cordial set of gentlemen couldn't be found. They were ever ready to remedy any wrong and always desirous of meeting any suggestions which may promote the welfare of its patrons.

R. F. Pettigrew, president of the Commercial Club, spoke on behalf of the business men of Sioux Falls. He regarded the advent of the Manitoba as the cornerstone of the city's future. The great cities of commonwealths were built on their eastern borders. St. Paul and Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Omaha, and St. Louis; Kansas City whose growth was the product of the development of Kansas, and so on. The same law was certain to make Sioux Falls a city of 150,000 in twenty years, and St. Paul and Minneapolis must in the meantime look out that a good share of the business of the twin cities was not captured by the queen city.

J. M. Spicer, president of the Wilmar & Sioux Falls, was called on for remarks, but he begged to be excused from anything further than to acknowledge his appreciation of the hospitality of Sioux Falls, and belief in her prosperous future.

A. S. Tallmadge, secretary of the St. Paul Jobbers Union, and her Chamber of Commerce, responded for the business men of St. Paul. He described St. Paul and Minneapolis as being rather husband and wife than twins—the heads of the family spreading out their steel arms to their children all over the northwest. No city in the country could boast the residence of three such railroad presidents as St. Paul can number—Hill, Oakes, Stickney. The cities were particularly proud of the Manitoba, and the advent of this line into South Dakota would work wonders. All honor to the men responsible for such an enterprise. He found in Sioux Falls not only a wonderful development at the time, but the nuclei of immensely grander possibilities—the Commercial Club, the manufacturing institutions, and the series of enterprises in their infancy. In the prosperity of Sioux Falls, St. Paul rejoices and her business men sincerely congratulated them.

Capt. T. M. Gilmore, of Minneapolis, gave an address in behalf of the business people of that thriving city which brimmed with wit and humor. The progress observed here since his last visit was simply marvelous, and to the people who have achieved this and who have organized such a reception he extended most cordial congratulations and acknowledgments in behalf of those for whom he spoke. Minneapolis was a wooer for the commerce of such communities, and would spare no pains to win it. He advised Sioux Falls to bear down hard on the traffic managers of her lines, and make them give such reductions in rates as the conditions deserve.

P. H. Kelley, of St. Paul, was loudly called for, and despite his declaration that he couldn't say anything, he said many good things. He wanted South Dakota to be erected into a state. With the magnitude of what this visit has revealed regarding Sioux Falls, he was astounded and amazed, and the city is only on the eve of a wonderful era. The Manitoba would promote this, and St. Paul's business would struggle for their share in the prosperity.

Col. James H. Drake of both St. Paul and Sioux Falls, delivered an admirable speech, reviewing the history of railroads, their wonderful effect upon the civilization of the century, and the indebtedness which all classes were under to them—the poor as well as the rich. Great wildernesses and prairies have been made thriving commonwealths within a single generation. The genius and pluck of one man within their knowledge had done this in one instance—and now he extended his system to Sioux Falls and on to the southwest, in the direction pointed by that great index linger of Lake Superior he must go—so that it was not impossible that through this city the traffic of Europe and China might pass. The Manitoba and Illinois Central touch here, and nowhere else—another great thoroughfare from the great lakes to the great gulf.

John R. Gamble, of Yankton, spoke for the Missouri slope which was then expectantly awaiting the coming of President Hill's railway:

Not alone because the country needs it in its future development, but we feel that it will speedily bring about the building of a bridge over the Missouri at or near Yankton, and thus add to the commerce of Dakota's enterprising towns an empire of fertile Nebraska lands already fairly settled and productive. The first link the Manitoba will add to its southwestern system will be one that unites Yankton and Sioux Falls by a direct line, and this we look forward to as an enterprise the Missouri slope people will be able to celebrate in connection with our rejoicing over the admission of South Dakota into the Union, and I take this occasion as one of the most appropriate that will offer to extend to all here present, and to Mr. President Hill and whomever he may bring with him, a cordial invitation to visit Yankton and our country at our celebration of the completion of the Manitoba to the Missouri River, not later probably than Thanksgiving day, 1880. Speaking for the delegation from Yankton here present, we are proud of this occasion, and congratulate Sioux Falls that it has been able to give the Manitoba Railway System such a praiseworthy and timely welcome to this portion of our territory.

This concluded the formal reception. The following year the railroad was extended to Yankton.

Surveyors were at work on the Sioux Falls, DeSmet and Northern Railroad in the summer of 1888. The road was designed to run from Sioux Falls via Madison to DeSmet, Clark, Groton and Columbia with a prospect of going on to Oakes, Dickey County. The enterprise proved to be the forerunner of the Dakota Central Railway from Sioux Falls to Watertown.

The Deadwood Central Railroad Company with a capital stock of $1,000,000, filed its articles of incorporation in Deadwood on the 18th of September, 1888. The officers of the company were J. K. Miller, president and treasurer; Edwin Van Cise, vice president; A. W. Coe, secretary. These officers with John R. Watson and E. M. Dale, composed the board of directors. This road connected Deadwood and Lead City.

The survey of the Manitoba line from Yankton to Sioux Falls was completed about March 1, 1888.

The Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company located an important branch from Alliance, Neb., to Deadwood, Dak., in 1888. The line was built in 1889. It entered Dakota at Ardmore, Fall River County, and thence touching at all important points within the Hills, terminated for the time at Deadwood. This road with its numerous branches, one of which reached Rapid City, was about three hundred and fifty miles in length.

Articles of incorporation of the Yankton, Norfolk & Southwestern Railroad Company were filed November 19, 1888. James H. Teller, J. T. M. Pierce, J. P. Crennan, W. H. H. Beadle, and F. H. Van Antwerp were the incorporators. The company designed to build a railroad from Yankton south through the counties of Cedar, Knox, Pierce, and Madison to Norfolk, Neb.

Oscar E. Rea was appointed register of the Bismarck Land Office July 21, 1888, and Joseph J. Rogers, receiver of the Grand Forks Land Office. Rea was a resident of Northern Dakota.

John E. Carland, of Bismarck, United States district attorney for Dakota, was appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court of Dakota in February, 1888, to succeed Judge C. S. Palmer, of Sioux Falls.

Roderick Rose, appointed United States district judge to succeed Judge Francis, of Bismarck, was a resident of Jamestown where he had resided since 1882, and had been engaged in the practice of law. He was a native of Iowa, and had lived at Davenport, where he began his political career as superintendent of schools. He afterward ran for Congress in the Davenport District in 1880, but was defeated by S. S. Farwell. He had also been mayor of Davenport. He was supported for the appointment of judge in Dakota by the Jamestown bar, ex-Judge Dillon of Iowa, and Governor Church. His appointment gave general satisfaction. With Judge Rose's advent into the circle, the judiciary of Dakota was now all democratic for the first time in the history of the territory.

Frank F. Randolph, of Dakota, was appointed receiver of the Watertown Land Office, Vice D. T. Bramble, deceased.

Samuel T. Leary, of Kentucky, was appointed agent of the Yankton Indians. James P. Luse, of Indiana, was appointed register of the United States Land Office at Deadwood.

J. D. Jenkins, of Osage, Iowa, was appointed agent at Sisseton Agency, Dakota.

J. R. Whitehead, of Vermillion, was appointed register of the land office at Deadwood, Dak., in November, 1887.

Myron O. Rowley, who was the locator of the townsite of Mitchell, was appointed register of the Mitchell Land Office, January 20, 1888, to succeed G. R. Everett. Mr. Rowley was a close friend of Governor Church and president of the Security Bank of Mitchell.

The territorial fair for the year 1887 was located at Mitchell, the city paying to the board of agriculture $2,000 for the privilege and the distinction.

A large colony of German Russian emigrants from the fatherland located in McIntosh and Logan counties in the spring of 1887. There had been a large settlement of German Russians in Campbell and McPherson counties adjoining for two seasons, and this addition made the entire settlement one of the most numerous and, as it soon became, one of the most thrifty and wealthy in the United States.

A spacious wing and dormitory was added to the Territorial University at Vermillion in 1887, R. H. Booth & Son, of Sioux Falls, having the contract at $33,000.

The extension to the north wing of the territorial penitentiary at Bismarck was built in 1887, at a cost somewhat less than the amount of territorial bonds voted for the improvement, which was $25,000.

Hon. H. A. Jerauld, of Lincoln County, who figured prominently in the capital removal affair of 1883 as a member of the council from Lincoln County, removed to California in 1887.

Hon. John O'B. Scobey of capitol commission fame, removed from Brookings to Chicago in 1888, and became connected with the Farmers' Voice, a publication devoted to promoting the principles and purposes of the Farmers' Alliance.

CHAPTER CII

BENJAMIN HARRISON ELECTED AND INAUGURATED PRESIDENT

1888-89

TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE IN EIGHTEENTH AND LAST SESSION—FARMERS' ALLIANCE ORGANIZED BOTH BODIES—THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE WITH VALUABLE STATISTICS—PROCEEDINGS INTERESTING—THE OMNIBUS BILL PASSED CONGRESS—COLONEL LOUNSBERRY WRITES A LETTER—MELLETTTE APPOINTED GOVERNOR TO SUCCEED CHURCH—RICHARDSON APPOINTED SECRETARY—BIOGRAPHY OF MELLETTTE—CENTENNIAL OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT—COUNTY INDEBTEDNESS, NORTH AND SOUTH—CORN IN NORTH DAKOTA—CEMENT PLANT AT YANKTON—NEW YORK TRIBUNE FIGURES.

LAST TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE

The organization of the Territorial Legislature of 1889, if it possessed any party significance was in the interest of a new third party which had been gaining strength for a number of years, and as it appeared, without other influences than those growing out of industrial and other economic conditions of the current period. It was a part of a greater movement that was stirring the producing class in every quarter of the Union. In Dakota it was known as the Farmers' Alliance, and secured a majority of the members of the Legislature by being able to control the nominations made in the various legislative districts, and in some cases by making a third party nomination direct. In the Council it secured the election of one of its leading members to the presidency of that body, and through him a controlling representation on all committees. In the House it secured the election of a republican who it was claimed was pledged to their interest over another republican who was claimed to be an older and sounder friend of the Alliance than the one chosen. But in this apparent inconsistency the Alliance was consistent with its profession of nonpartisanship. Its purpose was to effect an amelioration of certain industrial conditions with which the welfare and material interests of the farming classes were closely and naturally identified, and therefore it pursued the course that promised the speediest way for obtaining through legislation the remedies for the burdens that oppressed them. Transportation, or the carrying of their produce to market, with its attendant marketing, storing and timely delivery was a principal purpose of the organization, hence the territorial laws governing the railroads became of the first importance to them. It can safely be stated that in their efforts along this channel they were warmly supported by the industrial classes generally, whose interests would be favorably affected by the success of the plans of the agriculturists. The organization foreshadowed the entrance into the political field of an element that was destined to wield a potent influence in the shaping of legislation and in the ambition of party leaders.

The Legislature of the territory convened at Bismarck for its eighteenth and last session on Tuesday, January 8, 1889. The Council was called to order by the secretary of the Council of 1887, Hon. Theodore A. Kingsbury, of Codington County, whereupon prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Klien, of Bismarck. On call of the roll the following members answered to their names:

Rodger Allin, Irenus Atkinson, Peter Cameron, A. W. Campbell, M. H. Cooper, Coe I. Crawford, Robert Dollard, E. C. Erickson, S. L. Glaspell, James Halley, G. A. Harstad, Alexander Hughes, Robert Lowery, Hugh McDonald, John Miller, J. H. Patten, David W. Poindexter, Joseph C. Ryan, C. A. Soderburg, George H. Walsh, F. J. Washabaugh, James A. Woolheiser, A. L. Van Osdel.

All members were present and there were no contests. The oath of office was administered by Governor Church.

The election of the officers of the Council being next in order Smith Stimmel, of Cass County, and Frank Washabaugh, of Lawrence County, were placed in nomination. Mr. Stimmel was supported by the Farmers' Alliance, or rather he was the farmers' candidate, and Mr. Washabaugh the republican candidate. Mr. Stimmel was elected, receiving the vote of the following members:

Messrs. Soderburg, Van Osdel, Patton, Atkinson, Woolheiser, Cooper, Miller, Harstad, Walsh, Allin, McDonald, Cameron, Ryan, Glaspell and Stimmel.

Voting for Washabaugh were Messrs. Poindexter, Crawford, Lowry, Hally, Dollard, Ericson, Hughes and Campbell.

Mr. Washabaugh voted for Mr. Poindexter.

President Stimmel, of Cass County, had been elected as a candidate of the Farmers' Alliance over a republican candidate. On taking the chair he acknowledged his appreciation of the honor, and trusted that the feeling developed in the race had all been born of a kindly spirit, and would not be allowed to interfere with the cordial relations of the members, or with the important duties before the body.

The following subordinate officers were then elected:

R. E. Wallace, of Stutsman County, chief clerk; S. H. Goodfellow, of Brookings County, assistant clerk; Eric Iverson, of Yankton, enrolling clerk; W. W. Girton, of Lake County, engrossing clerk; W. H. Ellis, of Diekey County, sergeant-at-arms; Rev. Geo. Kline, of Burleigh County, chaplain; Frank W. Hanscomb, of Grand Forks County, messenger; Walter J. Himes, of Union County, doorkeeper; Brisbane, of Sanborn County, watchman; M. Forrest, of Clay County, assistant sergeant-at-arms.

The organization of the House was also determined upon by a republican caucus held at the same time. There were forty-seven republicans and one democrat in the caucus, the democrat being the only representative of his party, did not feel justified in holding an independent caucus, for he would have been obliged to elect himself chairman of the body, make all the motions, and finally nominate himself as the candidate of his party for the office of speaker of the House.

The speakership was the only office considered by the caucus at this evening session, the remainder of the offices of the House being agreed upon at a meeting held Tuesday morning. The proceedings were attended with much excitement, and two hours were consumed in reaching a decision. Judge Aikens had relied upon the support of the Alliance, owing to his well known sympathy with its avowed purposes, but he found the majority arrayed against him after the caucus had assembled. Col. M. M. Price, of Sanborn County, presided. On the first informal ballot for speaker, Hosmer H. Keith, of Minnehaha County, received 27 votes, Judge Frank R. Aikens, of Lincoln County, 19 votes, O. R. Van Etten, of Hyde County, 1 vote, and M. M. Price, of Sanborn County, 1 vote.

Judge Aikens then withdrew his name, and at the same time warned the farmers to be careful how they nominated a railway attorney and bank director for speaker.

J. W. Burnham, of Cass County, was substituted for Mr. Aikens with a view of securing a larger proportion of the northern vote, but on the first formal ballot Keith was nominated, receiving 27 votes again, Burnham 18, J. H. Fletcher, of Barnes County, 1, and H. H. Sheets, of Kingsbury County, 1.

The following named were the members of the House of Representatives-elect, all of whom responded to the call of the roll. First District, Frank R. Aikens, of Lincoln County, and J. V. White, of Clay County. Second District, Joseph Allen and John Turnbull, of Turner County.; Frank Morris, of Hutchinson County. Third District, J. G. Jones, of Charles Mix County. Fourth District, H. H. Keith, of Minnehaha; Oscar C. Potter, of McCook; William S. Logan, of Hanson. Fifth District, D. M. Powell, of Davison, and Joseph M. Greene, of Brule. Sixth District, Charles J. Miller, of Lake, and William Ramsdell, of Moody. Seventh District, H. H. Sheets, of Kingsbury, and P. P. Palmer, of Hamlin. Eighth District, Daniel F. Royer, of Jerauld, and Milton M. Price, of Sanborn. Ninth District, Harry Hunter and Burr F. Bixler, of Spink County. Tenth District, John B. Cook, of Faulk, and George W. Ryan, of Walworth. Eleventh District, Frank Lillibridge, of Sully, and Orsamus R. Van Etten, of Hyde. Twelfth District, Thomas A. Douglas, of Day, and Albert L. Patridge, of Grant. Thirteenth District, James H. Fletcher, of Brown; S. P. Howell, of McPherson. Fourteenth District, John D. Patton, of Lawrence; Charles J. Trude, of Butte, and Avery D. Clark, of Custer. Fifteenth District, C. C. Newman, of Sargent, and H. J. Mallory, of Dickey. Sixteenth District, Edwin McNiel, of Cass, John W. Burnham, of Cass. Seventeenth District, Thomas M. Elliott, of Ransom; Ira S. Lampman, of Barnes. Eighteenth District, James O. Smith, of Steele, and Fred H. Adams, of Griggs. Nineteenth District, C. H. Baldwin and R. L. Bennett, of Grand Forks. Twentieth District, Nathan Upham, of Walsh, and Wm. E. Swanson, of Ramsey. Twenty-first District, E. H. Bergman, of Bottineau, and Patrick McHugh, of Cavalier. Twenty-second District, Asle J. Grona, of Nelson, and David R. Wellman, of Eddy. Twenty-third District, Henry S. Parkin, of Morton, and John B. Wellcome, of Ward.

The House of Representatives convened at 12 o'clock, Tuesday, January 8th, and organized by electing Hon. H. H. Keith, of Minnehaha County, speaker, and John G. Hamilton, of Grand Forks County, chief clerk; E. R. Ruggles, of Day County, assistant clerk; T. G. Orr, of Walworth County, enrolling clerk; W. P. Moffitt, assistant enrolling clerk; W. G. Eaking, of Hughes County, bill clerk; Jas. Rorapaugh, of Lawrence County, sergeant-at-arms; Fred Snore, of Benson County, assistant sergeant-at-arms; Rev. C. S. Lane, of Morton County, chaplain; J. B. Flick, of Emmons County, watchman; H. E. Ward, of Stutsman County, postmaster; Michael McDermon, messenger; Mr. Robt. Dowdell, of Sanborn County, doorkeeper.

Speaker Keith, on taking the chair, made a brief acknowledgment, and stated that he recognized the agricultural interest as foremost of all and the foundation upon which all others rest, and declared that he would endeavor to prove by his acts that those having these interests specially in mind, had not made a mistake in choosing him to preside over the deliberations of the House.

On the first day of the session, Mr. Thomas Elliott, of Stutsman County, introduced the Jamestown Convention's North Dakota bill for a Constitutional Convention. It provided for an election of delegates on March 5th, to a Constitutional Convention to be held at Fargo, the second Tuesday of April, to be composed of seventy-eight delegates as follows:

Barnes County, 3; Burleigh County, 2; Cavalier County, 2; Dickey County, 3; Grand Forks, 7; Morton County, 2; Richland County, 3; Ransom County, 3; Ramsey County, 3; Stutsman County, 3; Pembina County, 4; Cass County, 8; Traill County, 4; Walsh County, 6; Sargent County, 2. All others, including Pierce and Buford, one each.

1888 had been a poor crop year in some counties, and Mr. F. H. Adams introduced in the House a bill authorizing counties to issue bonds to provide seed wheat for those who had lost their crop, limiting the amount of seed to be furnished to 200 bushels to any one applicant.

The joint convention for the purpose of receiving the governor's message was held on the 9th. At this joint session, Judge Aikens introduced a joint resolution, which was passed by an unanimous vote, declaring for the division of Dakota Territory, and the admission of both sections into the sisterhood of states, under the names respectively of South Dakota and North Dakota. Copies of the resolution were ordered sent to the President of the United States, the vice president of the Senate, the speaker of the House, Mr. Springer, and all members of the committees on territories, and to Delegate Gifford.

MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR CHURCH

On the second day of the session, the message of the governor was delivered to the Legislature by Governor Church in person, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Council and House of Representatives:

In pursuance of custom and as required by law, I have the honor to transmit, for your consideration, a summary of the condition of the public affairs of Dakota and recommendations for legislative consideration.

The sanitary condition of the territory is excellent. Health and contentment reign within our borders in a marked degree and I respectfully submit for your consideration my reports for the years 1887 and 1888 to the Department of the Interior for a full statement of the progress and development of our territory:

FINANCES OF THE TERRITORY. Total bonded indebtedness to date, $1,098,800, expended in building and furnishing the following public institutions:

Date of Issue	Purpose of Issue	Rate Per Cent	Maturity	Amount
May 1, 1883	—Insane Hospital, Yankton.....	5	5.20	$ 77,500
May 1, 1887	—Insane Hospital, Yankton.....	4½	5.20	92,500
May 1, 1883	—Deaf Mute School, Sioux Falls.....	6	10.20	12,000
July 1, 1885	—Deaf Mute School, Sioux Falls.....	6	10.20	16,000
May 1, 1887	—Deaf Mute School, Sioux Falls.....	5	10.20	23,000
May 1, 1883	—University of Grand Forks.....	6	10.20	30,000
July 1, 1885	—University of Grand Forks.....	6	10.20	24,000
May 1, 1887	—University of Grand Forks.....	4	10	20,000
May 1, 1883	—University of Vermillion.....	6	10.20	30,000
May 1, 1885	—University of Vermillion.....	6	5.20	57,000
May 1, 1887	—University of Vermillion.....	4½	10.20	30,000
May 1, 1883	—Penitentiary, Sioux Falls.....	6	5.20	30,000
May 1, 1887	—Penitentiary, Sioux Falls.....	4½	10.20	14,300
May 1, 1883	—Penitentiary, Bismarck.....	6	5.20	50,000
July 1, 1885	—Penitentiary, Bismarck.....	6	10.20	14,600
May 1, 1887	—Penitentiary, Bismarck.....	4½	10.30	29,000
May 1, 1883	—Agricultural College, Brookings.....	5	10.20	23,000
July 1, 1885	—Agricultural College, Brookings.....	6	10.20	20,000
May 1, 1887	—Agricultural College, Brookings.....	4½	10.20	54,500
May 1, 1884	—Insane Hospital, Jamestown.....	6	10.20	50,000
May 1, 1885	—Insane Hospital, Jamestown.....	6	5.20	63,000
May 1, 1887	—Insane Hospital, Jamestown.....	4½	15	153,000
July 1, 1885	—Normal School, Madison.....	6	10.20	13,600
May 1, 1887	—Normal School, Madison.....	4½	15	35,800
July 1, 1885	—School of Mines, Rapid City.....	6	10.20	10,000
May 1, 1887	—School of Mines, Rapid City.....	5	10.20	23,000
May 1, 1887	—Reform School, Plankinton.....	5	10.20	30,000
May 1, 1887	—Normal School, Spearfish.....	5	10.20	25,000
May 1, 1887	—Refunding bonds to refund 6 per cent 5.20 year bonds issued May 1, 1881.....	4½	10.20	90,000
Total.....				$1,098,800

The bonds authorized by the last Legislature were for the building of additions to our overcrowded public institutions, benevolent and penal. It seemed an absolute necessity for the health and safety of the inmates of these institutions that large additions be provided for, and necessarily bonds must issue.

It is also true that our educational institutions, growing with our territory's great growth, needed more room and better accommodations and equipments. The applications for admission were greater than the facilities would accommodate. The buildings themselves are not shells, or in any sense temporary structures. They are on the contrary well built structures of solid brick, heated by steam, thoroughly ventilated, and fitted with all the modern improvements, excelling in convenience and adaptability many of the famous schools in the eastern states.

The bids for the bonds authorized by the last Legislature were received and opened May 30. The highest bid was par and 0.52 per cent premium. Five-sixths of the bonds issued and sold bore 4½ per cent interest, the balance 5 per cent, most of them subject to an option clause reserving the right to redeem in five and ten years. This clause was a great hindrance in the sale of the bonds, as investors and those controlling trust funds prefer long time bonds or a definite day for payment. This fact, coupled with the other fact that Dakota is still a territory and the date of admission into the Union uncertain, made investors over-cautious. This timidity existed in spite of our showing that we had $1,570,000 assets for every thousand dollars we owe.

I predict that when Dakota is a state her 3 per cent bonds will sell more readily than the 4½ per cent bonds did. Nevertheless, this is the first time in the history of the United States that a territorial bond sold for less than 5 per cent, and we have conclusive proof that Dakota's credit is better than many of the states and rich municipalities of the East.

Total receipts and disbursements for the years ending November 30, 1887 and 1888: Balance in treasury November 30, 1886, $232,982.63; received for the sale of bonds, from territorial tax, railroads, insurance companies and surplus insurance fees and other lesser items, $1,888,388.00, during the two fiscal years named; and paid out for auditor's warrants, counties proportion of railroad tax, interest, bonds refunded and other lesser items, $1,773,498.22, leaving a balance in the treasury, November 30, 1888, of $94,800.58.

The total value of property in the territory, as shown by the assessment roll for the year 1888, amounts to $161,420,974.30. As 4,300 miles of railroad and other property in the territory belonging to railroads is not assessed and form no part of the above valuation (railroads being taxed upon their gross earnings), and as property is usually assessed at from one-half to two-thirds of its actual value, it is a moderate and safe estimate to place the actual property value or wealth of the territory at $320,000,000.

The unsurpassed development of the territory has necessarily led to large increase of government expense. I am of opinion that the public welfare will in no instance be promoted by an appropriation for any new institution, or for improvements or additions to present institutions. On the assembling of the last Legislature some of our institutions were not completed, others not completed to the extent necessary to place them in condition for the object intended. The asylums undoubtedly needed enlarging. The Madison Normal School had been destroyed by fire and rebuilt under the encouragement that an appropriation therefor would not meet with executive disfavor. This condition of affairs does not now exist. All of our institutions are completed, and as completed are ample for the needs of the territory for some years to come, or future state or states for some years to come. I earnestly recommend a most rigorous scrutiny in matters of appropriation. The financial credit of the territory could hardly be better and the ability of the territory to provide for and meet all its obligations is extremely gratifying.

Reports from the auditor, treasurer, superintendent of public instruction, commissioner of immigration, adjutant general, public examiners, board of health, board of railroad commissioners, veterinary surgeon, boards of agriculture, dental examiners, boards of pharmacy, the School for Deaf Mutes, the North Dakota University, the University of Dakota at Vermillion, the Agricultural College, the Normal School at Madison, the Normal School at Spearfish, the School of Mines, the insane hospitals at Jamestown and Yankton, the Plankinton Reform School, and the penitentiaries at Bismarck and Sionx Falls are all respectfully submitted, and I especially urge careful consideration of the report of the auditor and the many important suggestions therein.

THE YANKTON HOSPITAL TROUBLE. The last Legislature appropriated a sum of $92,500 for the construction of two additional wings and other improvements at the asylum at Yankton. Charges of irregularity having been made against a majority of the board of trustees of this institution, and an examination having been made by the public examiner, and a report of such examination having been filed in this office, as provided by law, upon careful consideration of such report and testimony taken, I deemed it my duty to withhold my sanction to the expenditure of this appropriation under the then existing board.

After due consideration of the report of the public examiner, on September 30, 1887, I suspended from further performance of the duties of the office of trustee a majority of the members of the board, and on the 2d day of November, after further considering the report of the public examiner and the evidence submitted on his examination, removed for official misconduct and neglect of duty the majority of the board affected by my order of September 30, the balance of the board having tendered their resignation, and thereupon appointed and commissioned an entire new board consisting of five members. The removed members took legal proceedings to test the power of the governor to make such removals, which proceedings were decided adversely to the old board and the action of the governor sustained. The new board have proceeded with the construction of the two additional wings, provided for by the act of the Legislature above referred to, and such improvements are rapidly approaching completion. I respectfully submit the report of the public examiner and the evidence taken on such examination.

The trustees of the Jamestown Insane Asylum exceeded their appropriation by some $20,377 for two years ending March, 1887, which deficiency was provided for by the last Legislature. In their report now submitted, it appears a deficiency again exists. At this time, January 8, the amount is $8,023.05. My attention was called to the management of the fund appropriated for this institution and I directed the public examiner to examine and report. Considering the near approach of the session of the Legislature I concluded to take no action in the premises until your honorable body had opportunity to pass upon the matter. The evidence shows a laxity of management, which amounts to a disregard of care in the management of the funds for its maintenance.

In June, 1887, the following circular letter was issued from the executive office and a copy mailed to each trustee, superintendent and warden of each of our public institutions:

Territory of Dakota, Executive Office, Bismarek, June 27, 1887.

Gentlemen: I would call your attention to the necessity of keeping the expenditure for each of the territorial institutions within the limit of the appropriation made by the Legislature, and see that the expenditure for 1887 does not encroach on that part that should be reserved for 1888, and if possible have a surplus when your next report is made.

The appropriations are liberal, and should you exceed your appropriation you are running the risk of incurring a personal liability. Should the present incumbent remain as the executive he will at the next session of the Legislature look with disfavor on all legislation making any appropriation for deficiencies. The fact that there has been legislation in the past making appropriations for deficiencies will be no precedent for the future.

Further, no fund or part of any fund must be used for any other purpose than that which the Legislature designed in making the appropriation.

Respectfully, LOUIS K. CHURCH, Governor.

The manner of managing our public institutions is extravagant. Until the passage of the public examiner's act there was no connecting link between the territorial government proper and the various boards, and while that law has proved very beneficial in its operation, yet there is no law that enables the governor or auditor, or any other official, to restrain extravagance and curtail expenses of the various boards. An examination will show the payment of large and excessive salaries, and the employment of unnecessary help in many instances, when good management and the application of business principles to a reasonable degree would result in the same service being rendered to the public, at a large saving to the territory.

I believe that the whole system of boards of trustees for our different institutions should be abolished and the establishment of a non-partisan board of charities and corrections, which should have charge of our charitable and penal institutions, with power to appoint the wardens and superintendents and chief officers of said institutions. Said board to regulate the number of employes and the salaries of the same, and to have general control thereof. And a board of regents, with full power to regulate and control our educational institutions, are suggestions worthy of your consideration. The cost to the territory during the past two years for the different boards has amounted in the aggregate to $29,777.32, certainly an exorbitant amount considering the nature of the duties performed.

If the above suggestions are not followed, the number of meetings of boards, for which they receive compensation, should be limited and the amount of compensation therefor fixed, and no other compensation should be allowed save for such service as may be performed by the order or consent of the governor and allowed by the auditor. Large bills for expense of traveling and services rendered without the territory are frequently presented.

The cost of conveying insane to and from asylums and prisoners to penitentiaries should be a charge upon the respective counties, and the expense appertaining to requisitions should likewise be chargeable to the counties. Excessive bills are constantly being presented in matters of this kind. Were these matters referred to the counties the county commissioners would exercise a care and scrutiny in allowing bills or claims that would result in a large saving, and in no way interfere with the public service.

Expense of carrying insane last two years.....	$20,081.33
Transportation of convicts.....	7,530.08
Requisitions	7,714.61
Total.....	$44,335.92

This amount, together with cost to the territory for various boards of trustees ($29,777.32) amounts to $74,113.24.

The auditor is powerless in many instances to prevent overcharges, having no power to reduce extravagant bills and no power to examine into the justness thereof.

The original bills or vouchers from all institutions should be presented and filed with the auditor before any warrant on the treasury is issued.

The power of the auditor should be enlarged so that he may examine into and allow or disallow, in whole or in part, claims against the territory.

Allowing students from other states to attend our educational institutions without requiring a payment into the territorial treasury of an amount which will be a fair equivalent for the privilege enjoyed should be prohibited, and in no event should such sum be paid to the board of trustees or treasurer thereof. Such a practice encourages the filling of our institutions with non-residents (because of the increase of revenue to the boards) and also tends to limit accommodation for our own pupils.

There should be some restriction regarding a class of insane that come within our borders. There can be no good reason advanced why those entitled to admission to our insane asylums should not have resided within the territory for a certain period of time, and provision should be made for the prompt return to the states or territories where they belong of that class of insane who have not a habitation or residence in this territory and have not acquired one as may be required by law. And provision should be made to compel those parents or guardians, who are financially able to do so, to contribute towards the support and care of such relatives as may be inmates of our asylums, and the law should further provide that such fact should be ascertained by the committing officer or officers, and the evidence taken on such examination filed with some competent authority to act in the premises.

In case the trustee system of our institutions is not abolished, the law that requires a majority or any number of trustees from our public institutions to be appointed from the county where the institution is located should be so amended as to abrogate such requirement.

The result of the law as it now stands localizes many of our institutions and deprives them of their territorial character and management. The territory in effect has a minority representation on these boards. Our institutions are not only localized but controlled by local influences, and too often to the detriment of good financial management. The control of our institutions should be purely territorial in character. The administration of the affairs of the same would thereby be improved and cheapened, and they would be removed as a factor in local politics.

A number of cells in the penitentiary at Bismarck are vacant and I have been communicated with in reference to receiving prisoners from other territories. I suggest the propriety of enabling the proper authorities to contract for the care of prisoners from other states and territories.

COMPILED LAWS.—At the last session of the Legislature an act was passed providing for the compilation of the laws, and provided that the governor should, by proclamation, announce the acceptance of such compilation, and that thirty days after such proclamation said compilation shall be as valid as original enrolled acts. The compilers completed the work as required by law, but after careful consideration I deemed it wiser to withhold said proclamation and submit the work to the Legislature for consideration and approval, as there was not, by the act providing for such compilation, sufficient time allowed for the examination, which a work of the kind required; and the further desire on my part not to risk the creation of questions which would disturb our whole legal system and give rise to endless litigation. I respectfully submit said work for your consideration and action.

APPROPRIATIONS.—A general law should be passed fixing the time when all appropriations shall begin and terminate, unless otherwise provided in the act making the appropriation, and the auditor should be empowered to cover back into the territorial treasury all balances of appropriations remaining, when new appropriations are made.

There remains a balance in the territorial treasury from the appropriation of funds raised for the purpose of the constitutional convention for South Dakota. Provision should be made for repayment to the counties from which it was received of any amount remaining in the treasury after the object contemplated shall have been attained.

A general law empowering the governor to restore citizenship to such as may have lost the same would relieve the executive of numerous applications for pardon and would be just and wise in many instances.

ASSISTANT COUNSEL.—The trial of cases of importance where the public are concerned often require assistant counsel. Judges of courts of record, where such causes may be pending, should be authorized to appoint a counsel or assistant counsel and fix their compensation, when in their opinion the public service requires such employment.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.—The auditing and allowing of claims by county commissioners and the issuing of warrants where there is no money in the county treasury is contrary to sound business principles and tends to produce financial discredit and injury and leads to the paying of excessive prices for county needs. The passage of a law prohibiting the auditing or issuing of warrants in excess of funds in the treasury would be in the interest of an economical administration of affairs and beneficial to the public credit.

STOCK COMPANIES.—The incorporation of companies and the issuance of stock and bonds by companies representing little or no value, and the increasing of capital stock by the same, should be regulated and controlled by law so as to render it difficult if not impossible to impose upon the public through the medium of powers exercised and sanctioned by law, leading many to believe there is stability and substance where in reality there is nothing. Thus the power of the state is in fact loaned to the accomplishment of imposition and wrong.

INSURANCE COMPANIES.—The present laws pertaining to the business of insurance are so imperfect that it is impracticable to attempt to correct them by amendment. If it is not thought best to enact an entirely new law which shall cover the numerous branches of insurance, some legislation should be had, at least in the matter of the organization and control of life insurance companies, and the present laws made general as far as they apply to Dakota companies, preventing as far as possible the abuse of using fictitious or borrowed capital, and subjecting all insurance companies organized under the law of Dakota to the examination and control of the insurance commissioner or auditor, and protecting policy holders from imposition and fraud.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.—The board of railroad commissioners have, during the past two years, endeavored to carry out the provisions of the grain and warehouse law, passed at the last session of the Legislature, and also discharge their duties applicable to railroads so that the same might meet with approval.

In consequence of the very limited power this has been very difficult. Such good as they could accomplish comes as a matter of courtesy, not as a recognized right, or by virtue of any power of the commission. This is not only humiliating to the commission but a sacrifice of dignity on the part of the territory.

The power of the commission should be greatly enlarged. They should have power to recommend and compel roads to connect their tracks with other roads at terminal or junctional points, to locate side tracks, to require running connections to be made with other roads, and to exercise such other powers as prudence and the public welfare require over railroads, express companies and telegraph lines. And the grain and warehouse law should be amended so as to confer upon the commission a proper degree of authority in the regulation of warehouses and elevators. The commission should have power to, and the courts provided with, a speedy and specific remedy to enforce recommendations when in their judgment proper.

CAUCUSES AND PRIMARY ELECTIONS.—I would further recommend that the law applicable to caucuses or primary elections be enlarged, to the end that all political parties or associations of individuals may, in their caucuses or primary elections, be protected in the same, and the conduct thereof be free from interference or annoyance from those of a different political belief. This could easily be accomplished by allowing each political party or association, through the medium of their organizations, to fix the qualifications of those who would be entitled to vote at a caucus or primary, and as far as possible the general election laws should be made applicable thereto, imposing the same penalties.

COUNTY TREASURERS.—The passage of a law making county, city and other treasurers ineligible for election or appointment to successive terms would be a step in the direction of subjecting financial accounts regularly to careful examination, and would operate as a protection against the mismanagement of public funds.

PUBLIC EDUCATION.—Great confusion exists in the laws applicable to public education. The existing two systems, known as the township system and the district system, leads to embarrassment in construing the statutes and necessarily to great annoyance to those who act under the law. I would suggest a uniform system for the entire territory.

MILITIA.—The militia of the territory consists of twenty companies of infantry (two mounted) and one of artillery (two regiments). The infantry is fully equipped with late improved model Springfield musket, caliber 45. The artillery company is furnished with two three-inch rifled cannon, with carriages and equipment complete. The command is under the supervision of Col. Mark W. Sheafe, senior ranking colonel. All orders issue through the adjutant general's office. The general staff consists of an adjutant general, a quartermaster, a commissary of supply, inspector, judge advocate general, chief engineer and ordnance, surgeon general and usual number of aides-de-camp. The effective strength at the present date is 1,020 enlisted men and eighty-four commissioned officers of the field, staff and line. The general staff consists of twenty-two commissioned officers.

Blunt's system of rifle practice, the same as adopted by the United States army, was commenced at the encampment held at Huron in September, 1887. Tactics and uniform conform to United States regulations. The command is required to attend an annual muster and inspection, and each company is required to perform not less than twelve additional drills, parades, musters and inspections per annum. An annual muster is provided for. The Legislature appropriated $18,000 for militia purposes. Experience, however, has shown that two annual musters or encampments cannot be held and the expense be confined within the appropriation.

The annual expenditure for armory rent is $6,250; clothing allowance, $7,014; total, $13,064. In 1888 no encampment or muster was held owing to the disinclination to incur an expense in excess of the appropriation.

As at present organized the companies are all located east of the Missouri River. Certainly a reorganization should be provided for. If an organized militia is necessary or desirable, the same should be reorganized. The companies should not be located in one part of the territory to the exclusion of the other, especially when the cost of maintaining the establishment is borne by the entire territory. I am constrained, however, to recommend the abandonment of the annual encampment, and providing for no more than ten companies of fifty men each, or that the force be not allowed to exceed 500 officers and men, or two regiments of 250 men each. The governor could be empowered in case of emergency to increase the number.

The militia now costs the territory $18,000 a year and is entirely too expensive. The annual allowance of $300 to each company for armory rent is too large and is often an excessive rent for accommodations furnished, but the law is arbitrary and fixes the sum at $300. The amount of rent paid for armory purposes should be approved by the adjutant general and governor and should not be more than a fair compensation for the accommodations furnished.

TAXATION.—All property, tangible and intangible (except such as from sound policy may be made exempt) should be taxed. While it is impossible to subject every interest to its just share of taxation, it is possible to adopt a system of laws which will be uniform in its character and equitable in its application.

A large amount of property invisible in character and shifting in nature, now escapes taxation, and which is largely, if not entirely, in the hands of those who are best able to pay taxes. Some means should be devised to reach and tax this class of property. Legislation must be had, not only to enforce taxation, but against temptation to evade taxation. The inability to discover property and our defective system should be remedied as far as possible. Our taxes should be deprived of a personal character and our tax system be impartial in its application, exacting the public revenue from all persons and classes in proportion to their ability to pay. All the following (in addition to real estate) should be subject to a judicious tax:

"Incomes, inheritances and bequests, railroad and steamboat and transportation companies, express, palace car and sleeping car companies, telegraph and telephone companies, banks (territorial and national), loan and trust companies, insurance and indemnity companies and their bonds and evidences of indebtedness, public elevators, warehouses and storehouses for grain, insurance agents and agents for all companies or corporations of other states, horse car, ferry, gas, electric, light, and all franchises and licenses granted, and all corporations or quasi corporations organized and doing business in the territory should pay a tax on the actual value of their capital stock after deducting the assessed value of their real estate, and in addition a tax measured by their dividends. A tax with propriety might be adjusted to some of the interests above named, on the principle of gross earnings."

Personal property belonging to non-residents should be listed for taxation in the tax precinct where the property is located. While some of the interests above named pay their just proportion, others pay only a portion of what they should pay and others pay none at all. Bank stock is assessed under chapter 140, laws of 1887.

The territorial treasurer received from all telegraph companies in the territory during the last two years $3,778.10; viz., $1,655.80 in 1887, and $2,122.30 in 1888, certainly a very inadequate sum considering the telegraph property in the territory.

Real estate, by its nature, generally pays not only its full share, but the great burden of taxation is borne by that class of property. When we leave real estate and go nearer the realms of property, personal in its nature, the nearer we can indicate, specify and describe the property or interest to be taxed the better. Our statutes in many instances are so wanting in precision and so general in their wording that while it may be possible for assessors to reach much property not now assessed, this general language of our laws enables assessors to either neglect or to exercise a discretion without open violation of duty.

In all matters relating to taxation the duties of assessors and collectors and boards of equalization should be clearly defined and the law applicable to the duties of assessors and collectors mandatory in its nature, no discretion should be allowed them but to assess and collect as indicated, and they should be liable to a severe penalty for breach or neglect of duty.

A general law requiring that all licenses or privileges, in the nature of franchises, hereafter granted by all cities or towns, shall be disposed of at public auction for a percentage of gross revenue. While not of great value, perhaps, at present, it would in time to come result in great benefit.

A system of taxation that would eventually lead to exemption of real estate from taxation for territorial or state purposes, would be very desirable and could largely, if not entirely, be accomplished by the territorial taxes being collected from a class of property, corporate and personal in its nature. I would also suggest the propriety of allowing taxes to be paid semi-annually, especially on real estate, allowing a rebate to those who pay the full amount of the tax at the time the first payment is due.

TAXATION OF RAILROADS.—The question of the taxation of railroads has received a great deal of attention. In 1870 the Territorial Legislature passed an act providing, among other things, for the taxation of railroads under the gross earnings system. I quote the following from section 24:

"The percentage of gross earnings hereinbefore specified to be paid in pursuance of this section shall be in lieu of all other taxation of the road bed, right of way, station or depot grounds, track, rolling stock, water stations, water tanks, turn tables, engine houses, machine shops, depots and necessary buildings, tools, machinery for repairs, gravel beds, furniture, telegraph instruments and lines, and fuel of such railroad corporation used in or incident to the operation of such railroad. All property of railroads not above enumerated, subject to taxation, shall be treated in all respects, in regard to assessment, equalization and taxation, the same as similar property belonging to individuals, whether said lands are received from the general government or from other sources."

In 1883 the Legislature passed another act providing for the collection of taxes on railroad property. The following is a part of section 1 of said chapter:

"In lieu of any and all other taxes upon any railroads, except railroads operated by horse power, within this territory, or upon the equipment, appurtenances or appendages thereof, or upon any other property situated in this territory belonging to the corporation owning or operating such railroads, or upon the capital stock or business transaction of such railroad company, there shall hereafter be paid into the treasury of this territory a percentage of all the gross earnings of the corporation owning or operating such railroad, arising from the operation of such railroad as shall be situated within this territory as hereinafter stated, that is to say: Every such railroad corporation or person operating a railroad in this territory shall pay to said treasurer each year for the first five years after said railroad shall be or shall have been operated, in whole or in part, two (2) per centum of such gross earnings; and for and in each and every year after the expiration of said five years, three (3) per centum of the said gross earnings, and the payment of such per centum annually, as aforesaid, shall be and is in full of all taxation and assessments whatever upon the property aforesaid."

It is to be observed that in 1879 there were but few miles of railroad in the territory, while at present there are nearly four thousand five hundred miles. As the law stood prior to 1883 it is plain that the Legislature did not intend to exempt from the ordinary and usual method of taxation only such property as was actually used in, or necessarily incident to, the operation of the roads.

Whether said chapter 99, Laws of 1883, goes further and exempts more property than is used in and incident to the operation of the roads is a disputed question between the officers of the territory and the railroad companies.

In the year 1880 the officers of the County of Traill, authorized by law to assess property therein, for the purpose of taxation, assessed and levied taxes for that year upon lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said road, said lands not being a part of the road bed, or any way used for railroad purposes. The county treasurer proceeded to advertise said lands for sale for non-payment of taxes. An application was made to the Territorial District Court to enjoin the collection of such taxes. On appeal the Supreme Court of the territory gave judgment for the defendant. Appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States (Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Traill County, 115 U. S. Reports, page 600), and the decree of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota was reversed, with directions to cause a decree to be entered perpetually enjoining the treasurer of Traill County from any further proceedings to collect the taxes, the court holding the provisions in the act of July 17, 1870 (16 Stat. 291, page 205), that the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 365), shall not be conveyed to the company or any party entitled thereto "until there shall be first paid into the treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting and conveying the same by the company to party in interest," exempt these lands from state or territorial taxation until such payment is made into the treasury. "That the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has acquired no equitable interest in the lands so granted to it by reason of completing its road and thus earning its granted lands which are subject to state or territorial taxation before such payment is made into the treasury of the United States." The doctrine promulgated by the Supreme Court in this case was set aside by act of Congress, approved July 10, 1886, which provided as follows:

"That no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation by states, territories and municipal corporations, on account of the lien of the United States upon the same, for the costs of surveying, selecting and conveying the same, or because no patent has been issued therefor, but this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed; provided, that any such land sold for taxes shall be taken by the purchaser subject to the lien for costs of surveying, selecting and conveying, to be paid in such manner by the purchaser as the secretary of the interior may by rule provide, as to all liens of the United States, all mortgages of the United States, and all rights of the United States in respect to such lands; provided further, that at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser, and in such case the lands sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as provided by the laws relating thereto."

The territorial officers caused the surveyed lands belonging to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to be assessed both in 1887 and 1888. As yet the company has not paid the taxes upon said lands. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company refused to pay the installment of percentage upon its gross earnings, which became due August 15, 1887. For the purpose of satisfying said tax the territorial treasurer distrained a large amount of rolling stock. The corporation brought suit to prevent the sale, and obtained a permanent injunction from the District Court restraining it.

The company made its return of earnings on the 31st day of December, 1886, as required by law, and from such return the tax for 1886 was, in round numbers, $76,000, one-half of which became payable on or before February 15, 1887, and the other half on or before August 15, 1887. The statement filed by the company included earnings arising from the operation of its road in transporting goods and passengers through the territory from points without, to points within, and from points within to points without the territory, as well as between points local within the territory.

The company in its complaint showed that the tax upon its earnings local within the territory, would not for the year exceed twelve thousand dollars. The $38,000 which became due February 15, 1887, was paid by the corporation, and the suit was maintained upon the grounds that the tax upon all the earnings not local within the territory was a tax upon interstate commerce and void, and the company having already paid more than the whole tax on local earnings for the year, no more could be collected. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of the territory, and the decision of the District Court affirmed, following the cases of Fargo vs. Michigan, 121 U. S. 230, and Philadelphia Steamship Company vs. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326.

Section 1925 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows:

"In addition to the restrictions upon the legislative power of the territories contained in the preceding chapter, section 1925, the legislative assemblies of Colorado, Dakota and Wyoming shall not pass any law impairing the rights of private property, but all property subject to taxation shall be taxed in proportion to its value."

The question then arises whether the gross earnings law above referred to is not in conflict with this section of the Revised Statutes. This question was not raised in the late suit by the territorial treasurer to enforce collections under the gross earnings law. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company during the year 1888 has paid about ten thousand dollars tax under the gross earnings law.

The following interstate railroads paid on total gross earnings:

Chicago & Northwestern.
Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha.
Minneapolis & St. Louis.
Minneapolis & Pacific.
Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern.

The following paying on their local or territorial earnings:

Northern Pacific.
St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba.
Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul.

Section 2 of the act incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Company provides as follows:

"That the right of way through the public lands be and the same is hereby granted to said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad and telegraph as proposed. Said way is granted to said roads to the extent of 200 feet in width on each side of said railroad where it may pass through the public domain, including all necessary ground for station buildings, depots, machine shops, switches, side tracks, turn tables and water stations, and the right of way shall be exempt from taxation within the territories of the United States."

In the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Carland (Fifth Montana, 146), the Supreme Court of Montana held that:

"By virtue of the above (section 2 of the company's charter), exemption from taxation formed a part of the consideration for the undertaking and contract on the part of the company, and that such contract cannot be impaired by the National Legislature, much less by an act of a Territorial Legislature, which owes its existence to its organic act given by Congress. As well might such Territorial Legislature undertake to repeal the organic act which called it into being as a territory. * * *

RESTRAINING TAX SALES.—The practice of courts or judges granting injunctions or stays in matters of sales for unpaid taxes should be prevented and prohibited by proper legislation. No temporary injunction should in any case be allowed to issue, unless the amount of tax is first paid. This would in no way impair the remedy of a party to proceed by action to procure the vacation of an improper or unlawful tax. Under the pretense of a tax being void upon its face, injunctions or stays of tax sales are often procured that are predicated on no merit and collection of the public revenue is consequently delayed and embarrassed.

There is ample time between the levy of a tax and the time provided by law for a sale for delinquent taxes to enable any person aggrieved to have his action testing a tax determined by the courts, and those who wait until sales are about to occur should not be favored by extraordinary remedies which operate unjustly to the public. (Pardons and communications from various parties are here mentioned by their titles. The message then concludes.)

The executive welcomes to the legislative halls of Dakota, that branch of its government to whom largely if not entirely is confided the welfare of the people. Through your instrumentality abuses may be corrected and prevented, the great and growing interests of Dakota fostered, protected and advanced. Let legislation be just to every individual and interest, equitable in its application and indiscriminating in the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense, to the end that every individual may rejoice in the fairness and wisdom of your enactments and every interest be content and satisfied with the impartiality thereof. And with a strong desire on my part to be in accord with the Legislature in considering and disposing of the public business in these closing hours of territorial government and joining in the prayer and hope that the mantle of statehood may soon rest upon the Dakotas, I respectfully submit my message for your consideration.

LOUIS K. CHURCH, Governor.

In the Council, Mr. Forest, of Barnes County, was appointed assistant sergeant-at-arms; Henry Ward, page; A. J. Parshall, of Hanson County, messenger.

Representative Morris, of Hutchinson County, on the 9th, offered an amendment to the rules of last session to be known as rule 56, which provided that any bill offered or introduced by request of the territorial Alliance may be called up at any time for any purpose, regardless of its regular order by a majority vote. The amendment to the rules was agreed to, though Representative Mallory, of Dickey County, said he favored the Alliance, "but he had not gall enough to vote for such a measure at that." The speaker voted for it. This rule was afterwards repealed. Mallory's lack of gall proved contagious after a few days of experience.

Judge Aikens, on the 11th of January, introduced in the House a bill to reconvene the South Dakota Constitutional Convention in order to adopt the Platte amendments contained in his Senate bill for South Dakota's admission then pending, and to submit the constitution so amended to a vote of the people, and it also provided for a new election of state officers and members of the Legislature.

On the 11th, Councilman Van Osdel presented a resolution for an investigation of the Yankton Insane Hospital, suggested by the governor's message.

Representative Fletcher, of Brown County, introduced a railroad bill which made the railroad commissioners elective by the people instead of appointive by the governor, and also made important changes in the law, adding new features and giving the commissioners increased powers.

On the 12th, Councilman Hughes, of Burleigh County, introduced a bill providing for the Australian election system.

On the 14th, Col. M. M. Price, of Sanborn County, introduced a bill establishing a Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, Fall River County, and authorizing the issue of $60,000 territorial bonds therefor.

The seat occupied by Hon. George Walsh, of Grand Forks County, was contested by George M. Winship also of Grand Forks. The case was heard in Committee of the Whole on the 15th of January, and decided in favor of Walsh, the sitting member.

A Woman's Suffrage Committee was appointed by the House on the 15th of January consisting of Representatives Van Etten, Cooke, Lillibridge, Newman, Price, Burnham and Potter. On the same date Councilman Van Osdel introduced a bill to appropriate $1,000 cash to the widows of each of the men killed by the falling walls at the Yankton Insane Hospital, and $250 to Rannie Vognild, injured.

On the 19th the Yankton Hospital bill for an investigation of its affairs had passed both Houses, with Councilmen Washabaugh and Campbell and Representatives Fletcher, of Brown, Burnham (democrat), of Cass, and Harry Hunter, of Spink, as the committee. The governor vetoed the bill on the ground that it was the duty of the public examiner to make the investigation. He said he favored the investigation but advised economy. The bill was passed over his veto.

January 19th, the members visited the Grand Forks University.

January the 23d the governor sent to the Council the nomination of J. A. Ward, of Sioux Falls, to be territorial auditor, and P. F. McClure, of Pierre, to be commissioner of immigration. The council went into executive session to consider the appointments, and without confirming them, adjourned. The sentiment of the Council was that it was too early in the session for the appointment of officers, and as Governor Church would probably be superseded by an appointment made by President Harrison soon after March 4th, they were not disposed to act upon any appointments for the time being. It was claimed that the governor was not disappointed by this negative action of the Council, and wanted to test the temper of the body on the subject of appointments. He made no further effort in that direction until the close of the session when he sent a full list of officers subject to gubernatorial appointment, but the Council refused to act upon any.

January 25th, woman's suffrage was defeated in the House by a vote of twenty-eight to seventeen. On the 26th the North Dakota Constitutional Convention bill passed, amended not to take effect until March 5th, and not then if Congress provides an enabling act for North Dakota. Representative McNiell introduced a bill locating the Agricultural College of North Dakota at Casselton, and appropriating $10,000. Congress, in the enabling act, donated 50,000 acres to the Agricultural College at Fargo. Mr. McNiell's bill had to give way.

January 30th, the governor vetoed the bill to provide seed wheat for farmers who had lost their crops the season previous, and another measure was passed to cover the governor's objections, but he also vetoed that, which called for the Legislature to remonstrate, which it did by passing the bill over the veto.

A memorial to Congress urging the passage of the Platt Dakota Division bill was introduced early in the session, but objections were alleged against it in the Council because its phraseology was somewhat dictatorial coming from the Legislature of a territory to the Congress of the United States and the document was held up for more mature deliberation. Soon after the prospect of Congress doing something definite and at once to divide and admit, influenced further delay, and very soon the enabling acts came along and the memorial became a "back number." Dakota's memorial days, pleading for division and admission had been limited by law, and in the meantime there would be no place for our time honored and well worn phrase, "Your Memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota." "Requiescat in pace," was inscribed on this final one, and it should have been filed in the archives where it could repose undisturbed.

The Woman's Suffrage bill was lost in the House on February 8th, by a vote of twenty-six to twenty-two. Those voting for the bill were Messrs. Bennett, Burnham, Cooke, Douglas, Elliott, Greene, Lampman, Logan, Lillibridge, Malory, McNeil, Miller, Palmer, Partridge, Potter, Powell, Price, Royer, Ryan, Sheets, Van Etten, Wellman—22.

Those voting in the negative were, Messrs. Adams, Aiken, Allen, Baldwin, Bergman, Bixter, Clark, Fletcher, Gronna, Howell, Hunter, Jones, McHugh, Morris, Newman, Parkin, Patten, Ramsdell, Smith, Swanson, Trade, Turnbull, Upham, Wellcome, White, Crawford—26.

February 8th, Councilman Sheets introduced a bill to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor within three miles of a college.

The governor vetoed a bill that repealed the law requiring a fee of $5 paid to the governor for each notary public appointment he made. The House passed the bill over the veto by a unanimous vote save one, the democratic member. In the discussion over the passage over the veto it was shown that the governor had received $3,018 from this source in addition to his salary from the Government. The Council also passed the bill over the veto.

February 21st the members of the Legislature accepted an invitation from the Legislature of Montana in session at Helena to pay them a visit, which was summarily accepted and a car full of law makers with a delegation of Bismarck citizens responded and were absent nearly a week. The Dakotans and Montanans joined in celebrating the emancipation of their people from the territorial condition, and a pleasant occasion was the result.

President Cleveland signed the Enabling Act February 22d at 11 o'clock A. M., and the intelligence reached Bismarck before their local clocks had struck that hour.

The North Dakota Convention bill was passed and approved.

After the passage of the enabling acts by Congress, legislation at Bismarck grew irksome, and there was a disposition to "quit work," and leave all but the necessary appropriation bills for the new State Legislatures. The Soldiers'

Home bill was passed and was vetoed by the governor mainly as he claimed because the appropriation was insufficient for the purpose. The bill, however, was passed over the veto in the House by a vote of thirty-three to ten, and in the Council by fourteen to three. The home was located at Hot Springs or Minnehah-tah. An effort had been made during the pendency of the bill to secure the institution for Pierre, and Representative Coe E. Crawford, of Hughes County, who was then entering upon quite a successful professional and political career, introduced a bill for that purpose. Pierre claimed to have an abundance of warm medicinal waters impregnated with gas that had the reputation of being a healing beverage, and wonderfully efficacious in restoring health to those invalids who had bathed in it sufficiently long to give it a fair trial. But it lacked the mountain climate, it was a candidate for capital honors, while the Black Hills section had as yet received slight attention in the way of institution favors.

There was now a strong sentiment in the Legislature in favor of resenting the governor's vetoes by combining to override them by a two-thirds vote, and the feeling also extended to antagonizing the premature appointments he proposed making, which feeling foreboded a disturbance of the harmonious relations which should exist between the executive and legislative departments during the remainder of the session to insure wise and impartial legislation. It was the confident belief of the members at this time, and which belief must have been shared by Governor Church, that Arthur C. Mellette, of Watertown, would be appointed governor of Dakota Territory, and that the appointment would be made as one of the first acts of the new administration which would come into power March 4th, hence it was held that Governor Church should not exercise the appointing power, but should leave his successor free to select his associates in the various positions provided for by the territorial laws.

On the 1st of February, a resolution inviting Mr. Loucks to address the House was introduced by Representative Morris, of Hutchinson County, and was defeated by a tie vote, a number of Farmer Alliance members voting against it on the ground that it would meet with disfavor by many, and could not be of any material assistance to the farmer measures before the Legislature which were already assured of a majority support. The Executive Department needed the physician possibly. A telegraphic message was received from Washington February 1st, presumably from the delegate, asking the South Dakota members of the Legislature whether they desired that the location of the temporary capital of the proposed state should be submitted to a vote of the people with the Sioux Falls Constitution. This led to a caucus of the parties interested at the close of the day's session, which passed a resolution, by a vote of twenty-five to eleven, to this effect:

Resolved, That we do not favor re-submitting the capital question.

The temporary capital of the proposed new State of South Dakota was then presumed to be at Huron, though no vote of the people had been had to designate it, and no law could have been passed locating it, but Huron had been designated in the Sioux Falls Constitution of 1885, and it was probable that it would be recognized as the temporary seat of Government under the omnibus bill then pending in Congress. The vote in the legislative caucus did not indicate a preference for any point for the temporary capital, but expressed the sentiment of a majority of the members that it would be much better to have the question of its location submitted at a special election, when it would not influence the sentiment on other questions. There were then seven or eight cities in South Dakota in the list of capital candidates.

A resolution was introduced in the House requesting the territorial auditor to make a statement of all expenses of past legislatures in excess of the amount the Government had allowed, and which had been paid by the territory. The purpose of the resolution was to memorialize Congress for an appropriation in favor of the territory to cover the amount so expended.

About February 1st, and for some days thereafter appeared to be a critical period for Dakota matters before Congress, and telegrams asking for advice from the legislative members and from the public officials and business associations of the cities were daily received in Dakota, asking for advice and opinions regarding amendments to the Springer omnibus bill. It seemed to be generally recognized by the Dakota delegations in Washington as well as by the people at home that the Springer bill, with all its objectionable features held the germ of a successful law that might be so modified that it could be enacted at the existing session, and thus hasten statehood for the two Dakotas, hence the wires were used by the people at home to suggest amendments, and by the representatives at Washington asking for direction and instructions. The peculiar situation in Congress together with the change soon to take place in the administration of national affairs, gave assurance that the Springer bill could be "whipped into shape" so that it would meet the approval of the people of Dakota, and it was the only measure that could be passed during the remaining days of the short session. Hence there was a general approval of all efforts to promote the passage of that bill with its objectionable features eliminated, and these could be left largely to the discretion of the Senate which was apparently in full sympathy with the home sentiment.

This was the situation at the time the Legislature was considering its memorial to Congress relative to the measure of Mr. Springer. The memorial had been delayed owing to a sentiment that unless certain apparently dictatorial sentences were modified it might work more injury than benefit.

The act of Congress authorizing the formation of the two states of North and South Dakota passed February 22, 1889, but the legislative session of the territory continued the full sixty days allowed by law, and proved an important session. There was much diversity of opinion between the governor and the legislative body which led to frequent exercises of the veto power. The Soldiers' Home Bill was vetoed on the ground that there was no pressing necessity for it, and the territorial treasury had been emptied, but the veto was overruled. The governor also vetoed the General Appropriation Bill, alleging that it contained extravagant appropriations. The measure, however, was promptly passed over the veto. The governor also submitted a full list of nominations for the subordinate territorial offices, numbering in the neighborhood of seventy. These the Council refused to consider, explaining that there would be a change in the governorship after the inauguration of President Harrison, March 4th, and the new appointee should be permitted to name the subordinate officers. It was one hour past midnight, on the morning of Saturday, March 9, 1889—the sixty days granted to the Legislature having expired—when the speaker of the House and president of the Council declared the final adjournment of the last of the territorial legislatures.

COLONEL LOUNSBERRY'S VIEW

Col. C. A. Lounsberry, of Bismarck, a journalist and an active and influential North Dakotan, who had favored division and two states from the beginning, made a public statement at this time regarding the influence and interference of railway corporations on the question of division, and also in vindication of the course of the northern people in their relation to this and other questions, which contradicted some popular opinions. He was then at Bismarck and wrote as follows:

There is a great deal of anxiety here among the members of the Legislature and the citizens, as to the possible fate of the Springer bill. Amendments are, of course, desired, but some of them want the bill passed even without amendments. The memorial passed in the House was amended in the Council, and this idea was plainly expressed, but lest it might embarrass or at least annoy some of our friends in Washington, and perhaps be used against securing necessary amendments, the memorial was reconsidered, and this provision was stricken out. As it stands, however, it is a clear cut expression in favor of the Springer bill.

When the Associated Press reported that Dakota people in Washington sought to defeat the bill by going before the committee and alleging that the influence of the railroad companies would be used to defeat division if the admission of South Dakota was made contingent upon the result of a vote in the north, there was no little indignation. It is not true that the railroad companies have ever sought to influence the people upon this subject. As to the Northern Pacific, the officers of the company in Dakota, at St. Paul and in New York, have always refrained from taking any part in the agitation of this question, though all are in favor of division, nor has the Manitoba Company sought to influence the people in any way, though they, too, are known to favor division.

The people of the north pay fully one-half the territorial taxes, but they have never received one-half of the advantage resulting from that taxation. The public institutions, for instance, cost the territory, for expenses and interest, over six hundred thousand dollars per annum. Of these institutions, eight are located in South Dakota and three in North Dakota, and yet the north is required to pay about one-half of the expenses of all. The luxury is an expensive one, and the people of the north have become tired of it. They have also become exceedingly tired of being always forced into combinations with one faction or the other in South Dakota, in order to maintain any standing in legislation, in conventions or elsewhere, when they come in contact with South Dakota. Until the present session they have been compelled to do these things in order to get anything even approaching justice in the Legislature.

If there were any doubt about what was to the interest of the north among the representatives from this section, those doubts were removed from the minds of all who attended the Watertown convention. If any further arguments are needed to convince them as to where their interests lie, it is only necessary to examine the reports of the auditor and see who pays the taxes and what is done with the money.

It is true the north voted against division three years ago, but it is also true that it was proposed to rob the north of its interest in the name of Dakota, and that the democratic party seemed to offer early statehood while division appeared to be a thing impossible. But the railroads had nothing to do with that result. They were in no wise responsible for it. It was the loss of the name more than anything else that brought about the result.

Up to that time and since then the north has been persistent and consistent in its support of the division movement, and not a man in the north who has favored division from the start and under all circumstances, doubts as to what the result will be if the question is again submitted to a vote of the people.

When Dakota men in Washington appear before Congress and urge that there is opposition to division in Dakota, they place arguments in the hands of our enemies which will be used to delay if not to defeat division. Dakota men in Washington have before now defeated themselves by their excessive zeal. They defeated division when Pettigrew was in Congress, and no man contributed to that result more than Judge Moody, although not intending to do so.

The trouble with the judge is that he is not content with being an equal with others and work shoulder to shoulder with them. He must be in the advance. He must be the recognized leader. His opinion must be adopted. His strength, his power must be acknowledged. He is unbending, unyielding, and unwilling to accomplish the same results by means other than his own.

DAKOTA IN CONGRESS

The proceedings of Congress during the short session of 1888-89 reveal that its most prominent legislative features were connected with the Territory of Dakota, and a large portion of its time consumed in deliberating over Dakota measures. The framing of laws for the admission of the Dakotas as states were apparently regarded as of the first importance and entitled to the right-of-way. The democrats, in view of the impending change in the administration, desired to enact something definite that would leave the republicans no pretext for calling an extra session, and at the same time give their own party a prestige for the admission of new states.

The Sioux treaty had been hanging in Congress for about eight years, and no progress had been made under Mr. Cleveland's administration owing to the failure of the last commission. The time had come when the Government must propose a bargain that the Indians would accept, or enact a law opening a portion of the reserve, without further consultation with the Indians, and allow them such compensation and aid as justice required. There was much attention given to this matter.

No attempt was made to secure a territorial form of government for North Dakota, it being well understood that that half of Dakota was prepared to accept statehood, and its people were then demanding it. Should the exigencies of legislation place them in the territorial class with South Dakota a state, it was plain that it could continue no longer than would be necessary to prepare for statehood.

The political complexion of the new House of Representatives that would come in with Harrison was in doubt for some time after election. It was apparent that the democrats had lost heavily, but in many districts the result was painfully close. Both sides claimed the House; the official canvass would be necessary to decide it, and even then there were a number of cases where a contest before the House seemed probable. Dakotans were intensely interested in this phase of the election returns. The new House would be in control with the inauguration of President Harrison, March 4, 1889, but unless an extra session was called would not meet until December, 1889. The early returns relied upon as authentic, gave the republicans 166 members and the democrats 159. The new Congress would be the fifty-first.

MELLETTTE FOR GOVERNOR TO SUCCEED CHURCH

It would probably be many months and possibly a year before the Dakotas would be admitted as states, and in the meantime the territory would require a governor and secretary. Governor Church had become exceedingly unpopular with all parties. A resolution had been introduced in the Legislature by Dr. D. F. Royer, of Jerauld County, demanding his removal on personal and official grounds, which had been referred to a committee. As the session was near its close there was small expectation that it would be adopted, but there appeared to be no organized sentiment opposed to it.

As inauguration day, March 4th, drew near there was a large delegation of Dakotans called to Washington to witness and participate in the inauguration of Harrison and Morton. These, with the number who had been on the ground lobbying for the Dakota measures, made up quite a respectable colony of Dakotans in numbers, and included all of the men of prominence that could get away. Among the new and old members of the colony was Judge A. J. Edgerton, of Mitchell; Hon. A. C. Mellette, of Watertown; M. Hansbrough, of Devil's Lake; John R. Gamble, of Yankton; T. F. Singiser, Esq., of Mitchell; Hon. Judson LaMoure, of Pembina; Hon. R. F. Pettigrew, Judge Moody, of Lawrence County, and the delegates, Gifford and Matthews. It had been agreed among these Dakotans and others to ask President Harrison to appoint a new governor for Dakota at the earliest day practicable. The governor of the territory had important duties to perform in connection with forming the new state governments. He would order the delegate elections by proclamation and make the apportionment of delegates. He would be called upon to issue proclamations giving effect to the vote on the constitutions, and he would be required to certify the result to the President, before the latter could proclaim the new states admitted. The Dakota people were not satisfied to entrust these duties to an executive who had opposed every step of the progress toward statehood thus far made, and earnestly desired a new man and one of their own people. Hon. A. C. Mellette, who had been elected governor in 1885 when the Sioux Falls Constitution was adopted, a citizen of the territory, was naturally and spontaneously suggested by the Dakota people as a suitable person for the important position, and though there were a few who desired General Allen, of Fargo, or former Governor Pierce, the Mellette sentiment prevailed. Mr. Mellette was then about fifty years of age, and was considered a fairly able man, but he had one advantage not possessed by many in Dakota; he had been a personal friend of General Harrison for the past twenty years, supporting him in his newspaper and upon the stump in the memorable campaign of 1876, when Harrison was a candidate for governor of Indiana. Mellette was a native Hoosier. He was an original Harrison man before the nomination, and during the campaign can-

ARTHUR C. MELLETTE

Tenth governor of Dakota Territory,
March to November, 1889

THE NEW YORK
PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX AND
TILDEN FOUNDATIONS

vassed Dakota for speakers to send to the states and money to pay their expenses. It therefore came about that the President, fully realizing the importance of the reasons assigned for a change in the Dakota governorship, acted in the matter within about a week after his inauguration, and appointed Mr. Mellette governor of Dakota Territory. Mr. L. B. Richardson, of Grand Forks, was appointed secretary at the same time, Mr. McCormack having tendered his resignation.

The termination of the Church administration and the beginning of the Mellette, which was to be the closing administration in Dakota Territory took place on Friday, March 22d. Mellette became governor at precisely 2.48 o'clock, P. M. Church threw his spring overcoat over his arm and left the capitol building with a pleasant salute to the republicans present. Associate Justice Rose administered the oath of office. Governor Church was first after Judge Rose to congratulate the new governor. Secretary McCormack was next in extending congratulations. McCormack was still secretary, his successor, L. B. Richardson, of Grand Forks, was not due to arrive before the 1st of April. Territorial Auditor Ward, Treasurer Lawler and Immigration Commissioner McClure tendered their resignations immediately after the oath of office was taken—the resignations were in writing. The first private interview, which soon followed, took place with Hon. E. G. Smith, of Yankton. There were no office seekers present. In the evening a public reception was tendered the new executive at the residence of ex-Governor Church, where a large number called and paid their respects. The governor assured the people that he intended to be governor of all Dakota and treat all sections fairly. The early impressions of the new official at Bismarck were quite favorable.

The resignations of the auditor and other officials were immediately accepted. J. M. Bailey, of Sioux Falls, was appointed territorial treasurer, he was president of the Minnehaha National Bank. The governor took personal possession of the auditor's office, and placed it in charge of a clerk. On the 28th of March, J. C. McManima, of Pierre, was appointed territorial auditor, and F. H. Haggerty, of Aberdeen, commissioner of immigration.

When Hon. Arthur C. Mellette was appointed governor of Dakota Territory in March, 1880, by President Harrison, a Washington newspaper gave the following brief sketch of his public career and his general qualifications:

A. C. Mellette is an Indianian by birth and moved to Dakota some years ago. He is in the prime of life, a man of vigorous mind, of stalwart physical proportions, and of the highest principles and most exalted integrity. He served his country during the War of the Rebellion faithfully and well. After the war he located at Muncie, Ind., and entered into law partnership with Gen. Thos. J. Brady, the firm taking at once a leading position. Mr. Mellette was chosen prosecuting attorney for his judicial circuit, a position he filled with the greatest credit.

He was chosen a representative in the State Legislature and there displayed high and sound qualities of statesmanship, leaving as an enduring monument to his name, as a legislator, the present public school system of the state, one of the most perfect public school systems known, and the model after which the systems of several western states are patterned.

In conjunction with Mr. Brady Mr. Mellette entered into the newspaper business as joint owner and editor of the Muncie Times, the republican organ of Delaware County, and one of the leading weekly papers of the state, becoming after a time sole owner of the paper. He established in connection therewith a large paper house and did for several years an extensive business extending through Indiana and extending into Western Ohio and Eastern Illinois. In conducting this enterprise with his usual energy and ability, he especially excelled as a traveling salesman.

Finally, in 1878, he was appointed register of the land office at Springfield, Dak., afterward removed to Watertown, his present home. Mr. Mellette went to Dakota to make that territory his home, being primarily influenced thereto by considerations for the health of his family. That being secured, he cast his lot, for weal or woe, with the enterprising people who were building up a future empire state in the Sioux wilderness.

He at once assumed, as he had done in his old home, a prominent place in the counsel of the people. His ability and integrity, his legal training and business habits, his legislative experience and political acumen, all combined to give the people of Dakota confidence in him. He is a man of the people. Unaffected in manner, direct in speech, and plain in dress. He is a fine public speaker, earnest, honest and logical. He is a vigorous and perspicuous writer. He is a man of intellectual and moral as well as physical courage. His sense of honor is high and his personal character without stain. His honesty is proverbial among all who know him. He is a man of whom no bond may be exacted to compel him to keep his word or do the square thing. He is without greed as he is without guile. He is one of the few men we have ever known whom we believe to be beyond or rather above temptation. We do not believe that this earth holds a prize great enough to tempt him for an instant to even think of doing a mean, dishonorable or dishonest act. Just, generous, kind, courageous, honest and honorable, it may truly be said of him that he is without fear and without reproach.

The proceedings of the conventions and elections of 1889, which appear to have occupied the time quite fully, appear in chapters on Statehood.

CENTENNIAL OF THE UNITED STATES

On Monday, the 29th day of April, 1879, George Washington arrived in New York City from his home at Mount Vernon, where on the day following he took the oath of office as the first President of the United States Republic. On Tuesday the oath was administered by Chancellor Robert Livingston, on the steps of Federal Hall, Washington reverently repeating the oath as the chancellor pronounced it. The bible was raised and as the President bowed to salute it with a kiss, as a token of sincerity, he said in a clear voice, "I swear," then closing his eyes, added, "so help me, God."

These proceedings and vastly more were duplicated during a three days' celebration in and about New York, on sea and land, President Harrison representing Washington. There was moreover a general observance of the important event throughout the Union, including the principal towns in both North and South Dakota. Occurring the same year that the Dakotas were admitted as states entitles the two sisters to the title of centennial states. The ceremonies here and elsewhere were largely of a religious character and participated in by all religious denominations.

As a type of the exercises employed in the Dakota celebrations, Yankton has been selected, the citizens observing it as a holiday. From the account handed down by the local scribe we are informed that .

The first centennial of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States has been celebrated all over the Republic today (April, 30th), and Yankton has taken its share in the glories of the occasion. Decorations have been numerous and tasteful and appropriate, and the city was in patriotic attire early in the forenoon. The morning exercises in commemoration of the day were at the Congregational Church, the Catholic Church, and the Episcopal or Christ Church, and these sanctuaries were filled by interested audiences.

At the Congregational Church there were union services, the Methodists and Congregationalists uniting. Rev. F. A. Burdick made some appropriate remarks at the opening, and Reverend Doctor Ward delivered the address of the day.

At Christ Church, Rev. W. H. Wyatt-Hannath conducted services and delivered a sermon.

At the Catholic Church mass was held, the te deum rendered, and the prayer prepared by Archbishop Corrigan, given. Father Redmond made an appropriate and interesting address.

At the Lutheran Trinity Church commemorative services were held at 9.30 A. M., conducted by Reverend Mr. Welo.

The out-door exercises were begun at 2 P. M., when the marching column fell in on Broadway and after dress parade, marched over the selected route. At the head of the procession was a fife and drum band typical of the Revolutionary period, and following the various military and civil organizations came George Washington, seated on a white horse, represented by E. A. Gray, who was clad in the fashion of attire of the time when Washington lived. The remainder of the procession was thus composed:

Company E, Dakota National Guard; firemen; Grand Army of the Republic; Turners; Modern Woodmen; citizens, college students, school children.

A noticeable feature of the procession was a boys' hook and ladder company drawing a miniature truck. The line of march was from Broadway east on Third Street to Mulberry, north on Mulberry to Fifth, west on Fifth to Broadway, south on Broadway to Third Street, east on Third to Walnut, thence to Turner Hall, where the parade disbanded.

Turner Hall was then occupied by a closely seated audience with many standing, to listen to the formal program prepared for the occasion. E. A. Gray arrayed in the Washingtonian costume, personated the first President, and read his inaugural address. Appropriate addresses followed from Professor Swain, Hon. L. B. French, Hon. Geo. H. Hand, and Judge V. V. Barnes.

COUNTY INDEBTEDNESS

The summary of the county indebtedness of Dakota counties at the close of 1888, as returned to the territorial statistician, shows the total bonded indebtedness have been $2,648,905, and the amount of warrants outstanding $759,749, or a total indebtedness of $3,408,654. By counties:

Aurora	$ 35,400	Walworth	9,142
Beadle	67,940	Wells	8,000
Billings	1,151	Barnes	81,331
Bottineau	16,445	Benson	23,740
Brown	1,500	Bon Homme	27,500
Buffalo	7,064	Brookings	8,057
Campbell	14,555	Brule	17,029
Cass	219,000	Burleigh	129,600
Charles Mix	12,900	Butte	22,433
Clay	5,500	Cavalier	1,600
Custer	75,768	Clark	22,526
Day	15,075	Codington	17,122
Douglas	14,093	Davison	70,805
Edmunds	17,200	Deuel	11,500
Fall River	14,149	Eddy	5,739
Foster	18,000	Emmons	32,265
Grant	107,550	Faulk	22,736
Hamlin	52	Grand Forks	42,150
Hanson	20,000	Griggs	73,880
Hutchinson (and $18,000 in the treasury)	3,780	Hand	10,811
Hyde	40,540	Hughes	59,100
Kingsbury	13,000	Jerauld	100,000
LaMoure	8,507	Lake	33,375
Lincoln	400	Lawrence	633,358
McCook	20,000	Logan	12,895
McIntosh	5,794	McHenry	7,991
McPherson	9,495	McLean	23,871
Mercer	17,134	Marshall	9,451
Minnehaha	12,000	Miner	15,036
Morton	65,000	Moody	43,500
Oliver	33,370	Nelson	31,200
Potter	20,629	Pennington	133,497
Richland	33,652	Ramsey	58,000
Rolette	20,966	Roberts	23,231
Spink (with $11,536 in the treasury)	11,684	Sargent	29,300
Stark	15,000	Steele	22,811
Stutsman	75,700	Sully	12,000
Towner	26,415	Traill (with $22,060 in treasury)	105
Turner	22,000	Union	31,150
Walsh (and $24,200 in treasury)	25,000	Ward (and $2,646 in treasury)
		Yankton	334,618

Yankton County's railway debt, incurred in behalf of the territory's vital need at the time, gave it the post of honor in the foregoing list.

CORN IN NORTHERN DAKOTA

It had long been a disputed question whether the growing of corn could be successfully prosecuted by the farmers of Northern Dakota. Experiments had been tried by skillful farmers acquainted with the cultivation of that cereal, but they had not demonstrated that corn could be relied upon owing to the liability of late spring and early frosts in the fall. The soil was found to be unobjectionable, but the climatic obstacles stood in the way of producing marketable grain of that variety. There were, however, some who hesitated to give up trying, and had concluded that one serious mistake they had made was in using for seed corn grown in latitudes south of their own corn belt, and for the purpose of testing this feature of the problem, Mr. Elijah Boley, who came in from Iowa and settled west of the Missouri in the northern part of the territory had been conducting experiments with the Arickaree Indian corn for seed. Other farmers were also engaged in growing the same variety, but Mr. Boley's experiments had been made with intelligent method, and the results were quite gratifying and encouraging. It was found that the Indians had made a practice of eating the best corn and using the poorest for seed. Mr. Boley reversed this process and carefully selected the best for seed. From short ears with four and six rows on each ear he has got some so much improved that he now raises ears with twelve rows of corn, and being something of a horseman Mr. Boley states it thus: "I started improving in 1880, and there is as much difference in the corn I began with and that I produce now, as between Maud S. and an Indian broncho." He claims that there are far more nutritive properties in the Ree corn than in any other kind, and he attributes this to the superior quality of Northern Dakota soil, which had already earned for that section of the territory such world wide fame for its wheat and potatoes. He claims that the Ree corn matures rapidly, and because of its hardy nature it is not liable to fail if it is planted early enough.

NORTHERN DAKOTA WHEAT THE BEST

In the fall of 1889, Mr. H. D. Porteous, a wheat and flour merchant of Liverpool, England, visited Dakota for the purpose of examining North Dakota wheat for the purpose of comparison with other grades of wheat that were seeking the English market. In explaining the object of his mission to this country Mr. Porteous said:

I have long entertained the idea that North Dakota wheat was the best grown in the world. We handle, in England, wheat from all parts of the globe—Russia, India and America, and American flour is extensively sold in our market, but we know of no grade of wheat or flour that is specifically designated as "North Dakota," and furthermore, I find that the so-called North Dakota wheat is not North Dakota wheat, but a lower grade of wheat which contains a percentage of North Dakota wheat. In short, your best North Dakota wheat is sold to the millers, who use it to mix with other grades for the purpose of grading up these grades to a point where they are readily salable, and the flour made is sold to a much better advantage than it could be were it not for the North Dakota wheat mixed in. Flour made from the pure North Dakota wheat never reaches our market. And my mission here is to aid the North Dakota millers in effecting a sale for pure North Dakota flour. I find that it is a much higher grade of flour than that made anywhere in the United States, and it will bring a higher price in our market than any other flour, and while we desire to handle this flour unadulterated by eastern millers, we feel that it is only fair that North Dakota should receive her due credit, which she never has received in the past.

CEMENT PLANT AT YANKTON

The Western Portland cement plant, one of the notable industries of the Northwest, was established at Yankton, Dakota, in 1889. Mr. John F. Summers, the practical head of the industry, spent a number of months in the early part of the year, making practical tests of the cement material in the Missouri bluffs, from below St. Helena to some distance above Yankton, finally deciding upon the locality where the extensive factory was built.

There had been considerable interest manifested in the chalk rock ledges, inexhaustible in extent, and there were some indications that the material was being examined with care, but at the time presumed to be in the interest of a railway corporation. Reports were rife that Omaha was on the eve of building a railroad to Yankton, and Robert Yates, a very competent civil engineer and surveyor, had been engaged in making extensive investigations and land purchases in the vicinity of St. Helena, which was taken to mean that the Omaha road had decided to cross the Missouri River at that point. A little later it was learned that Mr. Yates had been acting for an English company, that he had

JUST BEFORE WOUNDED KNEE BATTLE

SOLDIERS' HOME, HOT SPRINGS
Founded by 1st Territorial Legislature, 1889

THE NEW YORK
PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX AND
TILDEN FOUNDATIONS

found an abundance of material for the making of cement near St. Helena, and had acquired for the foreign company a large tract of Nebraska land. The next step was the establishment of a factory for the manufacture of cement, which at that day was being used in great quantities, the major portion of which and probably all of the best quality, was imported and bore the name of Portland Cement. Yankton offered inducements, due to its location and railway facilities, that St. Helena did not at the time possess, and hence was fixed upon as the locality for the factory, the intention being to ship the raw material up to the factory by steamboats. About this time Mr. John F. Summers appears in the field, having been sent over from England, as an expert, to test the quality of the chalk cliffs nearer Yankton. A series of elaborate experiments were made by Mr. Summers, and the fact that he came from a cement manufactory in England that employed a working force of 700, and had been selected as the one most competent for this important mission, his final decision that equal if not superior beds and ledges of the raw material, could be had in inexhaustible quantities close to Yankton, induced the company to make a change of base for procuring their supply and to hold the St. Helena ground in reserve.

Cement is a combination of clay and chalk, burned and ground together and mixed in proper proportions. These produced a hydraulic cement which, mixed with water, hardens into a smooth stone similar to the stone quarried at Portland, England, and from this similarity it takes the name of Portland cement. The peculiar clay which is a part of its composition and the most important when it is considered that half a continent may be examined without revealing it, was discovered in quantity about five miles west of Yankton in the Missouri highlands. It was taken out originally only in the valley of the Midway River, in England.

Messrs. Plankinton & Yates, a Milwaukee firm, who had large interests in the Milwaukee Railroad and in the packing industry at Milwaukee, arranged for the erection of extensive cement manufacturing works near Yankton, which were connected with the several lines of railroad entering in the city by a four-mile spur, which the city paid for. The plant was one of the most complete in the United States and was operated for fifteen years, its product, called the Western Portland, winning its way on its merits to the confidence of consumers in at least the western half of the United States. Mr. Joseph Wilde and Mr. John Summers were in charge of the operation of the plant, and it employed an average of eighty men. It is presumed to have passed into the control of a trust which ordered it closed. Cement factories had been increasing in number in the states and also in the western portion of the Canadian Dominion, resulting in an oversupply and a consequent depression of prices which yielded no profit to the large producers.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE FIGURES

The Territory of Dakota, north and south, was visited by a number of special writers of excellent ability and experience, representing the leading journals of the United States, during 1889. These gentlemen as a rule paid less attention to the existing political conditions than to those which displayed the material resources of the land, the industries and characteristics of the various nationalities that made up its population, and the progress that had been made in settlement and development. This was important as showing the widespread interest felt at that period in the proposed new states of the northwest, and it must be conceded that the Dakotas had enlisted a large share of this popular quest for information. These correspondents were intelligently diligent in supplying it. The New York Tribune, a national newspaper, ascertained that the territory, in round numbers, possessed 250,000 horses, 250,000 milch cows, 800,000 cattle, 230,000 sheep, and 600,000 hogs. They were worth $50,000,000, and he claimed that their increase amounted to 10 per cent annually. The growing harvest he estimated at 35,000,000 bushels of corn, 70,000,000 bushels of wheat, 5,000,000 bushels of flax, 10,- 000,000 bushels of barley, 50,000,000 bushels of oats, and 5,000,000 bushels of potatoes. He further stated that of the domain stretching from a central point, 200 miles north, east, south and west of the 96,000,000 acres that constituted the territory, barely 7,000,000—less than one-thirteenth—had felt the touch of the harrow. This particular writer was quite well known in the territory, traveling over it not by rail only but on horseback and afoot. He was personally familiar with every general portion of it except the Black Hills, and he was quite desirous of making a visit there, and may have done so.

Crops of all kinds were super-excellent in the Black Hills in 1889. Wheat, oats, potatoes, and even corn, returned a bountiful harvest. In eastern Dakota there were many localities where the staple grains suffered from drouth, hail and unusually heavy winds.

CHAPTER III

MANY TERRITORIAL SOCIETIES MEET AND DIVIDE

1889

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION—DAKOTA SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION—S. S. CONVENTION—ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN—MASONIC LODGE—INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODD FELLOWS—BLACK HILLS OLD SETTLERS—RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS' ASSOCIATION—FIREMEN'S ASSOCIATION—MANITOBA RAILROAD MEETING AT SIOUX FALLS—THE YANKTON EXTENSION—COUNTY STATISTICS: WHEN ORGANIZED, SQUARE MILES—PARTIAL CROP FAILURE—ORGANIZATION OF THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA—APPOINTMENTS—ALTITUDES.

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Nearly everybody appeared to have something to do in order to get ready for statehood. The making of constitutions for the two states, the holding of elections, was only a delightful part of it, for there were a score or so of associations, societies and lodges, and unions that had grown up as territorial affairs that demanded to be divided into a north and south half and then made over again to fit their new and diminished dimensions. The women of the territory came in for a share of this dividing-up work when the popular and populous and universally respected Woman's Christian Temperance Union gathered for the last meeting of the weather-beaten but still hale and vigorous association of "D. T.," gathered for its farewell session. It was an occasion for tears and words of affection and regret as well as tears of joy because of the more ample opportunities that would offer for the commendable work of the association which had grown to be highly prized and affectionately regarded in every commonwealth of the republic, and was not enjoying much of the fruition of its humanitarian labor.

The eighth annual session of the association assembled at the Congregational Church edifice in Yankton, the elder city of the territory, on Thursday, September 12, 1889, and at 9:15 o'clock a. m., was called to order by the president, Mrs. H. M. Barker, of Fargo.

The auditorium of the church was decorated with national flags, banners of different unions, flowers and plants, a portrait of Miss Frances Willard adorned the front of the organ back of the president's desk.

On either side of the organ the date of the first organization of the association, 1874, and the date 1889, were displayed. On the wall of the right wing the word "Welcome," on the wall of the west wing the motto of the association, "For God and Home and Native Land."

Devotional exercises were led by Mrs. O. J. Ward, of Parker, consisting of singing, reading of the Scriptures and prayer. Mrs. Barker, the president, then made a brief speech appropriate to the occasion and declared the convention ready for business.

The roll of officers and superintendents was called, when the president announced the regular committees, as follows:

Credentials—Mrs. Bill of Jamestown, Mrs. O. M. Leader of Black Hills, Mrs. O. J. Ward of Parker, and Mrs. Burton of Miller.

Resolutions—Mrs. R. B. Hager of Madison, Mrs. Goff of Bismarck, Mrs. J. A. Pickler of Faulkton, Mrs. F. B. Swift of Yankton, and Mrs. French of Chamberlain.

Courtesies—Mrs. Selleck of Aberdeen and Mrs. Walker of Huron.

Finance—Mrs. M. E. Cline of Mitchell, Mrs. Irene Adams of Webster, Mrs. Caswell of Grand Forks, Mrs. Spears of Wessington Springs.

The report of the several meetings of the Executive Committee was read by Mrs. Meyers, the recording secretary, and adopted.

The report of the corresponding secretary was read by Miss Addie Kinnear, which showed the total number of organizations in the territory to be 300, with a total membership of 3,094. The number of new organizations within the year was 151. There were eighty-five organized counties in the territory. The report was received by a unanimous rising vote.

The report of the treasurer was read by Mrs. M. E. Kline, which showed the total amount received for dues to be $828.24; pledges, $654.28; minutes sold, $52.50; Miss Willard's birthday fund, $25; for temperance temple, $100; for advertisements in minutes, $39; day of prayer, $19.53; miscellaneous, $219.16. Total receipts, $2,168.26. Total disbursements, $2,052.13. Balance on hand, $116.13.

The report was received by a rising vote of thanks and referred to an auditing committee consisting of Mrs. A. F. Bartlett of Yankton and Mrs. Williams of Miller.

The banner Union of North Dakota for money raised was Grand Forks, $57.25; the second, Larimore, $36.87.

The banner Union of South Dakota was Yankton, $71.88; the second was Mitchell, $33.

The reports of the following county unions were received, time limited to five minutes each: Douglas County, by Mrs. Pease of Grand View; Clay County, by Mrs. Stanley, Vermillion; Brookings County, by Mrs. Will, Brookings; Codrington County, Mrs. Geo. Williams, Watertown; Beadle County, Mrs. Walton, Huron; Lake County, Mrs. Hubbell, Madison; Lincoln County, Mrs. Keefe, Canton; Jerauld County, Mrs. Miles, Wessington Springs; Brown County, Mrs. Selleck, Aberdeen; Day County, Mrs. Irene Adams, Webster; Yankton County, Mrs. J. King, Yankton; Minnehaha County, Mrs. Riley, Valley Springs; Hyde County, Mrs. Parker, Highmore; Hand County, Mrs. Williams, Miller; Dickey County, Mrs. Boyle, Ellendale; Cass County, Mrs. Baskerville, Tower City; Marshall County, Mrs. Beach, Britton; Hutchinson County, Miss Emma Swartz, Olivet; Grand Forks County, Mrs. Caswell, Grand Forks; Hyde County, Mrs. Parker, Highmore; Turner County, Mrs. Smith, Parker.

After miscellaneous business and announcements, the noon-tide hour of prayer was offered by Miss Emma Swartz, and the session adjourned singing, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

The afternoon session was introduced by devotional exercises, led by Miss Emma Swartz, and the minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

The Credentials Committee reported the following persons entitled to seats in the convention: President, Mrs. H. M. Barker, Fargo; corresponding secretary, Miss Addie M. Kinnear, Fargo; recording secretary, Mrs. D. W. Meyers, Vermillion; treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Kline, Mitchell; executive committee, Mrs. F. A. VanVelsor, Yankton.

Superintendents: Mrs. E. H. Wilson, Bismarck, jail and prison work; Mrs. C. G. Clark, Yankton, flower mission; Mrs. Olive M. Leader, Whitewood, foreign; Mrs. O. J. Ward, Parker, heredity; Mrs. C. M. Spear, Wessington Springs, soldiers; Mrs. Nettie C. Hall, Wessington Springs, hygiene; Miss Clara A. Stephens, Mitchell, Union Signal; Mrs. J. M. King, Yankton.

Parlor meetings: Mrs. Alice Pickler, Faulkton, franchise; Miss Emma Swartz, Parkston, evangelistic; Mrs. Olive M. Leader, Whitewood, miners;

Mrs. R. B. Hager, Madison, Y. W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Minnie B. Horning, Miller, organizer.

Delegates: Aberdeen, Mrs. E. A. Cranmer, Mrs. E. F. Selleck, Mrs. C. J. Cressey; Amenia, Mrs. A. F. Johnson; Alpena, Mrs. Ella V. Milliken; Almont, Mrs. R. A. Pease; Athol, Mrs. W. W. Brown; Asenath, Miss Jennie Stover, "Y's"; Bloomingdale, Mrs. J. M. Clelland, Mrs. M. M. Graham; Broadland, Mrs. Ruth Hackett, Miss M. M. Graham; Brookings, Mrs. M. M. Will; Bremer, Mrs. A. Philips, Mrs. A. A. Rowen; Burbank, Miss Teresa Vinson; Carthage, Mrs. M. K. Patton, Mrs. E. J. White; Clark, Mrs. E. E. Walker, Mrs. O. P. Kline; Chamberlain, Mrs. Cora R. French, Miss Millie Findlay; Canton, Mrs. L. J. Fitzgerald, Mrs. F. A. Keep; Cass County, Mrs. G. S. Baskerville; Clay Point, Mrs. F. E. Bronson; Canton, "Y's," Miss Anna Bailey, Miss A. Hannah Schie; Dell Rapids, Mrs. Nellie Way; Day County, Mrs. Irene G. Adams; Davison County, Mrs. E. L. Rugg; Elk Point, "Y's," Miss Nettie Murphy, Miss Aggie Bovee; Ellendale, Mrs. J. A. Bouker, Mrs. J. H. Boyle; Estelline, Mrs. L. J. Abbott; Ellendale, "Y's," Miss Hayttie Consee; Faulkton, "Y's," Miss Lulu Pickler; Fairview, Miss A. Stephenson, Miss E. Keyes; Fargo Central, Mrs. M. E. Gilman; Fargo, "Y's," Mrs. J. Monson; Fairmont, Mrs. W. T. Williams; Flandreau, Miss S. E. Twitchell; Gayville, Miss Mina F. Faulk; Grand Forks, Mrs. S. R. Caswell; Huron, Mrs. Sarah Luckey, Mrs. Anna Wilcox; Henry, Mrs. C. Emma Cawthorne; Highmore, Mrs. Maria Parker; Highmore, "Y's," Miss Josie Gundy; Hitchcock, Mrs. E. A. Mouser; Hurley, Mrs. Fanny G. Kingsley, Mrs. James Stout; Jerauld County, Mrs. Jennie H. Miles; Jamestown, Mrs. R. A. Bill; Tyndall, Mrs. A. F. Huntley; Lisbon, Mrs. A. F. Norton, Mrs. A. S. Norton; Lyons, Mrs. H. L. Lyman; Madison, Mrs. J. A. Trow, Mrs. E. W. Dyre, Mrs. Hubble; Madison, "Y's," Miss Nora Scoggin, Mrs. Geo. D. Winter; Miller, Mrs. Mattie Burton, Miss Stella Green; Marion, Mrs. H. M. Tyler; Mickley, Miss Anna Hollingsworth, Mrs. M. Arthur; Marshall, Mrs. E. J. Beach; Mount Vernon, Mrs. J. E. Hanson; Mansfield, Mrs. J. E. Robinson; Mission Hill, Mrs. Stevens; Norway, Mrs. R. J. Mines, Mrs. E. J. Cotton; Olivet, Mrs. G. P. Harben, Mrs. W. B. White; Parker, Mrs. L. M. Cutter, Miss L. Chase, Miss Alice Penney; Pierre, Miss Lora Blair, Mrs. Eugene Steere; Palisades, Miss Hattie Beardsley, Mrs. Edith Healy; Parkston, Mrs. H. E. Whipple, Mrs. E. F. Blackly; Raymond, Mrs. J. E. Bennett; Rapid City, Miss Grace French; Redfield, Mrs. W. G. Barrows; Ree Heights, Mrs. G. E. Willett, Miss Allie Young, Miss Minnie Fuller; Ripon, Mrs. J. B. Meacham; St. Lawrence, Mrs. E. F. Dewey; Scotland, Mrs. L. W. Miller, Mrs. G. G. Lindley; Tower City, Mrs. G. S. Baskerville; Tyndall, Mrs. H. Thomber; Vermillion, Mrs. H. T. Cornes, Mrs. R. J. Stanley; Valley Springs, Miss Hortie Buzzell, Mrs. J. E. Riley, Mrs. Mary Banister; Valley City, Mrs. M. H. Sanderson, Mrs. Ida S. Fox; Wessington Springs, Mrs. F. A. Smith; Woonsocket, Mrs. C. H. Moore, Mrs. G. S. Nave; Watertown, Mrs. Eva Wilson, Mrs. M. A. Grossbeck, Mrs. A. D. Traveler; Webster, Mrs. Irene G. Adams; Yankton, Mrs. A. F. Bartlett; Armour, Mrs. E. A. Sidener, Mrs. Meyer, Mrs. R. A. Pease; Abion, Flora Eastman; Artesian, Mrs. J. W. Elliott; Bethel, Mrs. Laura Eldredge; Burbank, Mrs. Alma Maynard; Bismarck, Mrs. O. S. Goff; Beresford, Mrs. J. E. Bookce, Mrs. Anna Smith; Beulah, Mrs. G. W. Pine, Mrs. W. W. Gardner; City Point, Mrs. Clara Bronson; Elk Point, Mrs. H. Murphy; Ethan, Mrs. Louise A. Rugg; Huron, Mrs. Walton; Lennox, Mrs. Jennie Wait; Mitchell, Mrs. C. M. Keith; Mitchell, "Y's," Miss Mattie Foster; Miller, Mrs. L. T. Williams; Mabel, Mrs. Esmay; Mount Vernon, Mrs. A. L. Bell, Mrs. M. M. George; Meckling, Mrs. Margaret Arthur, Miss Anna Hollingsworth; Parker, Mrs. Z. E. Ward; Pierre, Mrs. Eugene Steere; Pierre, "Y's," Mrs. Lora Blair; Palisades, Mrs. Hattie M. Beardsley; Richland, Mrs. Carrie Kirk; Roscoe, Mrs. M. A. Huck; Plankinton, Mrs. George Maxwell, Mrs. L. A. Waters; Sandham, Mrs. Ward; St. Lawrence, Mrs. C. Shepherd, Mrs. L. L. Jager; Spink County, Mrs. Jennie L. Dennett; Vermillion, Mrs. G. E. Culver; Vermillion, "Y's," Misses Vernie Fauss and Mamie Hanson; Valley City, Ida G. Fox; Yankton, Mrs. F. M. Swift; Columbia, Mrs. Z. M. Horseley; Claremont, Mrs. Geo. D. Ward; Chamberlain, "Y's," Miss Millie Findlay; Jamestown, Mrs. J. M. Graham, superintendent of temple work; Frankfort, Mrs. R. Packham, Mrs. M. N. Kanel; Brookings, Mrs. M. H. Will.

Visitors: Mrs. Mary Fox, Mission Hill; Mrs. L. O. Webster, Parker; Mrs. Mary E. Balch, Frankfort, Ind.; Mrs. Addie M. Estey, Fayette, Iowa; Mrs. F. A. Sabin and Mrs. Andrew Pickett, Vermillion; Miss Carrie Robinson, Gayville.

Sessions were held morning, afternoon and evening, and a programme of exercises given out for each session.

The president appointed Mrs. Johnson of Highmore, Mrs. Dyre of Madison and Mrs. Swift of Yankton a committee to supply speakers for the meetings at Gayville and the city pulpits of Yankton on Sunday.

The reports of superintendents were limited to six minutes. The evangelistic work was reported by Miss Emma Swartz; jail and prison work by Mrs. E. H. Wilson; flower mission work by Mrs. C. G. Clark.

Miss Grace French, of Rapid City, and Mrs. O. M. Leader, of Whitewood, were introduced to the convention and gave some account of the work in the Black Hills.

Mrs. J. M. King reported drawing room work. Mrs. C. M. Spears, work among soldiers. Mrs. P. E. Johnson, on legislation and petition. Mrs. J. E. Hanson, on influencing physicians not to prescribe alcohol.

Mrs. Barker, president, gave some account of railroad work done by Mrs. Luckey, of Huron.

The president's address was delivered at 4 o'clock, which was an able paper, picturing in glowing words the two armies arrayed the one against the other, in the battle which is now raging in the Dakotas for and against the prohibition of the liquor traffic. The address was given the tribute of a rising vote of thanks.

Judge V. V. Barnes, chairman of the Non-partisan Prohibition Committee of South Dakota, made some remarks, when a solo was rendered by Mrs. W. H. Smith of Yankton and the convention was dismissed with the benediction by Rev. J. P. Cotton.

The evening session was devoted to the Y. W. C. T. U. programme under the direction of Mrs. R. B. Hager, superintendent of young women's work.

"Coronation" was the opening hymn when prayer was said by Miss Addie M. Kinnear, of Fargo, who also read the 146th Psalm.

Vocal music by the choir, "Fair Freedom's Land."

Mrs. F. M. Swift, of Yankton, gave a most hearty welcome to the members of the young women's convention, to the homes and hospitality of the people of Yankton.

The response for the "Y's" was given in a most happy manner by Mrs. M. Monson, of Fargo, thanking the people for their charming, unfeigned and assuring welcome.

The president of the convention responded for the parent order and said it was a great relief to come to a town which was not selling corner lots to secure the capital. A question of far more importance than the location of the capital will meet the voters of Dakota at the ballot box, October 1st, namely, the perpetuity of the home.

The report of the secretary was read by Miss Scoggin, showing that twenty-three new "Y" unions had been organized during the year, two have been reorganized, making forty-five unions in the territory with a membership of 500.

Miss Bovee, of Elk Point, gave a reading.

Mrs. R. B. Hager gave a very valuable talk on the work of the "Y's."

The spirit of the union is to help others.

Miss Chase, of Parker, followed with an interesting paper entitled, "Our Sphere."

Miss Hattie Consor, of Ellendale, gave an appropriate essay, which was warmly approved.

An address full of sound common sense was given by Miss Estey.

Mrs. Horning, of St. Lawrence, gave an amusing talk, following which a collection was taken for the benefit of the local and the state unions to be formed. Vocal music, "To the Rescue." Benediction by Rev. J. P. Cotton.

Friday morning's session opened with devotional exercises led by Mrs. Huntley of Jerauld County.

Mrs. P. E. Johnson, of Highmore, Miss Grace French, of Rapid City, and Mrs. S. R. Caswell, of Grand Forks, were appointed a committee to recommend working constitutions for the states of South Dakota and North Dakota.

Mrs. Balch, of Indiana, and Miss Estey, of Iowa, were elected honorary members of the convention.

The report of the foreign work was made by Mrs. O. M. Leader, of White-wood, who also reported work among miners.

Mrs. Hall, of Wessington Springs, reported on hygiene.

Mrs. O. J. Ward, of Parker, reported on heredity.

Mrs. D. W. Myers, of Vermillion, reported on scientific instruction.

Mrs. J. M. Graham, of Jamestown, reported on temperance temple work. Mrs. Graham's report was accepted with a unanimous rising vote of thanks.

Mrs. H. Murphy, of Elk Point, reported on Sunday school work.

Mrs. A. A. Pickler, of Kaulkton, reported on franchise.

The report of Mrs. Anna Simmons, of Columbia, on juvenile work was read by Miss Clara A. Stevens. The number of Loyal Legions in the territory was fifty-one, with a membership of 2,178.

Ex-Governor Faulk was introduced to the convention and spoke for a few moments, declaring himself heartily in favor of prohibition and woman's suffrage.

Hon. J. H. Patten, of Miner County, spoke with reference to the work of the last two sessions of the Legislature. Rev. W. J. Johnson, of Sioux City, made a cheering neighborly speech, and Rev. F. A. Burdick defined his own position on the temperance question.

Rev. Dan F. Bradley commended the work of the W. C. T. U. and testified that prohibition prohibits in some places in Massachusetts as well as in Iowa. It will do as well in South Dakota.

Mrs. Myers read the report of Mrs. L. W. Slaughter, of Bismarck, on the subject of press work.

Mrs. E. T. Selleck, of Aberdeen, reported with reference to the official newspaper of the W. C. T. U., the Appeal, of Aberdeen, which had been conducting itself in a reprehensible manner, and Mrs. Kline introduced the following resolution which was adopted by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, That we deprecate the course taken by the Appeal in giving the influence of the official organ of our State W. C. T. U. to the support of men not pledged to prohibition, and who do not claim to be in sympathy with our principles. While an editor may speak his own private opinion, he has no right to give the organ of a prohibition society to the support of men known to be neither abstainers or prohibitionists, without the knowledge or consent of the society. Hence we approve the action of the executive committee in withdrawing our support from the Appeal.

The report of Mrs. Clara Parsons, of Grand Forks, on state and county fairs was read by Mrs. R. S. Caswell.

Miss Clara Stephens reported with reference to the Union Signal.

A prayer by Mrs. Hanson preceded adjournment.

In the afternoon session of the principal association, Friday, devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. M. E. Gilman, of Fargo. Mrs. E. A. Cranmer, of Aberdeen, assistant organizer and lecturer, reported her work.

Mrs. Nettie C. Hall, of Wessington Springs, reported her experiences as an organizer, some of which was very thrilling.

Miss Addie Estey reported her work as organizer, giving valuable hints and suggestions.

Mrs. Harning reported what she had accomplished as an organizer.

Mrs. H. M. Barker reported what had been done by herself in the organizing field.

Mrs. M. E. Kline read the report of the Finance Committee, and pledges were taken from the different unions.

Mrs. Williams, of Miller, sang a solo, "O Rest in the Lord," with fine effect.

Prof. F. L. Stead gave a very fine organ voluntary, which was received with a rising vote and the chautauqua salute.

The call of the unions for pledges was completed. The largest pledge was made by the Yankton union, $50. Next were Huron and Watertown, $30 each. The report of the Finance Committee was adopted.

The report of the Committee on Resolutions was taken up seriatim, amended and referred back to the committee. Miss Swartz offered the following, which was adopted:

Whereas, The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has always recognized prayer as the great motive power of their work, and in every emergency have sought special divine guidance and help, therefore

Resolved, That we, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dakota, in convention assembled, appoint Thursday, September 26, 1889, as a day of prayer, beseeching God that he will so influence the minds and hearts of the voters of both North and South Dakota that they will vote conscientiously, and that constitutional prohibition may be ours on election day, October 1st.

Mrs. Swift, of Yankton, offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we extend our sympathy to our sister, Mrs. R. J. Smart, who is detained at home by her great bereavement in the death of an only son.

The convention was then dismissed with prayer by Rev. J. P. Cotton, and singing "Praise God from whom All Blessings Flow."

In the evening, after singing by the choir, Mrs. E. T. Selleck, of Aberdeen, led the devotional exercises.

Mrs. Mary Balch, of Indiana, a national organizer, reported her work in the territory. The Demorest medal contest was in charge of Mrs. Balch.

The first recitation was entitled, "A Barrel of Whisky," by Miss Belle Anderson of Scotland. The second recitation was "Eli Perkins on Prohibition," by Miss Maude Perry of Vermillion. The third was on "Personal Responsibility," by Miss Nellie Hundson of Armour. The fourth recitation was entitled "The Battle Cry Should Be 'Absolute Prohibition,'" by Miss Grace Boyles of Yankton. The fifth recitation was entitled "The Walls of a City," by Miss Mattie Foster of Mitchell. The sixth was entitled "Arrest Alcohol and Liberate the Man," by Miss Annie Bailey of Canton.

The judges were Mrs. J. G. Graham of Jamestown, Mrs. Johnson of Highmore, and Miss Harning of St. Lawrence, who awarded the medal to Miss Nellie Hundson of Armour. The second prize went to Miss Foster of Mitchell.

Miss Estey, in a few well chosen words, called for the collection.

After singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," the association was dismissed with prayer by Rev. J. F. Cotton.

Devotional exercises were under the direction of Miss Swartz at the beginning of Saturday's morning session.

Miss Frances E. Willard was introduced to the convention by Mrs. Baker, and the distinguished lady and celebrated temperance reformer was received by the convention rising and giving the chautauqua salute. Miss Willard spoke briefly expressing her pleasure at being present and meeting the renowned association of Dakota whose voice had been heard throughout the republic demanding the abolition of the cruel and relentless tyrant, Alcohol, King Alcohol. We cannot claim to be free people until he is dethroned. Miss Anna Gordon followed Miss Willard in a very happy vein. The Committee on Resolutions made their report. Miss Willard spoke a good word for the resolutions, approving the prohibition plank of the Huron convention. The resolutions are here given. They were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we recognize God as the source of all power in civil government, and his word as of supreme authority in national affairs, and that as we believe the work of the W. C. T. U. to be excellent discipline for womanhood everywhere, as well as a work that tends to the glory of Christ's kingdom, we pledge ourselves to endeavor to increase its membership during the coming year.

Resolved, second, Believing with our national president, that "the three-fold curse of intemperance, the tobacco habit, and impurity, is based on the inheritance of the past," we strongly recommend to our unions, thorough work in the department of heredity the coming year.

Third. Recognizing that the body is the temple of the living God and that God's health decalogue are as binding as are his spiritual laws, and that there is not a branch of study of hygiene but bears the closest relation to the temperance reform, we urge the local unions to give earnest attention to this department of work.

Fourth. Believing we have a blessed guarantee for the future in diligently teaching the principles of purity to our children, and feeling that mothers and teachers need to be aroused and educated on this subject, we therefore pledge special effort in establishing and maintaining mother's meetings. That we faithfully circulate the white shield pledge among the women, the pledge for purity among the boys and girls, and that we co-operate most heartily with the white cross movement in our territory.

Fifth. That we endorse the work of the National Temperance Hospital and will do all we can to further its power and influence.

Sixth. Whereas, Dakota is dotted with military and G. A. R. posts, Resolved, that the department of soldiers' work be specially encouraged during the coming year.

Seventh. That our observation teaches us that the use of narcotics is one of the great causes of the drink habit, and that we follow our national superintendent in her efforts to secure legislation against the sale of tobacco to miners.

Whereas, a love of strong drink may be cultivated, and an inherited one aroused, by the use of alcoholics and narcotics, therefore, resolved, that as white ribbon women we patronize, as far as possible, physicians who do not prescribe alcoholic stimulants, and in every way try to inform ourselves as to the best substitutes for the same.

Ninth. Whereas, we have a large foreign population scattered all over the Dakotas, we most earnestly urge that all unions appoint local superintendents who will use their influence by means of distribution of literature, and otherwise, to secure the foreign vote, and try to secure the co-operation of the foreign speaking sisters, and get them enlisted in the W. C. T. U. work.

Tenth. That we urge upon all local unions to take up the department of legislation and petition, as a means of securing wise laws for our new states as well as a means of personal education for intelligent citizenship.

Eleventh. Believing the parlor meeting department to be helpful to all other departments of W. C. T. U. work, and calculated to enlist many who would not otherwise be interested, we earnestly recommend that in order to build up the union in knowledge and in numbers, the unions already having superintendents, support them, and that all those not having already taken up the work do so immediately.

Twelfth. Recognizing in the Demarest medal contests a great boon to the advance of prohibition sentiment, as well as an education to the young participants, we urge upon every union the importance of pushing this work in every township of Dakota.

Thirteenth. Since by the admission of the Dakotas as states, we lose the benefit of our national educational law, we will work diligently to secure state laws for scientific temperance instruction.

Fourteenth. That we express our gratitude to our Heavenly Father for his blessing upon the labor of the W. C. T. U., by which the Union Signal has obtained a circulation of 70,000, and more than twelve hundred in Dakota. We urge upon each union the necessity of having a superintendent to increase the circulation of our national organ; also among the "Y's," to increase the circulation of the Oak and Joy Leaf, the organ of the society. Also among the loyal legions to increase the circulation of the Young Crusader. Also that each superintendent report promptly to state superintendent. We would also urge the importance of increased circulation among the Germans of the Deutch Amerikaner, also Swedish and German Handbuch, for distribution.

Fifteenth. That we reaffirm our belief in the inherent right of the ballot for women, and that justice and good government demand her enfranchisement. We therefore consecrate our efforts to the accomplishment of this end the coming year.

Sixteenth. We acknowledge with thanks the gallant generosity of the Dakota press which has enabled us to keep our cause so well before the public.

Seventeenth. That the Dakota W. C. T. U. appreciates and hereby acknowledges the valuable assistance rendered by those lecturers and organizers from abroad who have responded to our call for help in the campaign, Mr. Balch, of Indiana, and Miss Estey, of Iowa. At the same time we put on record our appreciation of the work of our own Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Cranmer, Mrs. Morning, and Miss Kinnear.

Eighteenth. That we re-affirm our former expressions of loyalty to our National W. C. T. U., pledging it our hearty support in its broad policy for woman's suffrage, for national prohibition, and for the redemption of the world from the legalized saloon.

Nineteenth. That we congratulate our territory on the leadership of so true a friend to equal suffrage and prohibition, as our present governor, A. C. Mellette.

Twentieth. While we recognize the grand work done by the prohibition party in Dakota, impressing forward the great temperance issues upon the attention of our voters, we hail with gratitude the position taken at the Huron convention by the republican party of South Dakota in declaring so unequivocally for constitutional prohibition, state and national, and since the dominant party in South Dakota has adopted the platform so long asked for by the W. C. T. U., therefore,

Resolved, that we pledge that organization our sympathy and support so long as it adheres to prohibition principles and places in nomination for office only those who can stand on a prohibition platform.

We also rejoice at the growth of prohibition sentiment in the Dakota democratic party as manifested by the action of the brave fifty-six in their recent state convention at Huron.

By this action we place ourselves in line with the action of the prohibition party, that calls no convention and puts no candidates in the field this year, but, makes common cause with the republican party in the brave fight for God and home and native land.

Twenty-first. That we most heartily endorse work of the department of Sabbath observance, pledging ourselves to earliest efforts to secure the best possible laws for the preservation of the sanctity of the day.

Twenty-second. We rejoice in the advanced ground taken by the Farmers Alliance, unanimsly declaring for prohibition and the same rights for their wives and their daughters that they ask for themselves.

Twenty-third. That we recognize in our girls, the future womanhood and motherhood of our country, and believing that the work of the "Ys," is eminently fitted to qualify them for the increased responsibilities and usefulness which this country is bringing them, we pledge ourselves to help and encourage them to organize for this work.

Twenty-fourth. That a loyal legion superintendent be appointed for each county, and that at least a half hour be given children's work at county conventions.

Twenty-fifth. As our beloved Dakota is soon to be divided, we trust we may as unions work as earnestly to accomplish the desired results in our separate interests as we have in the grand undivided whole, and hereby pledge, each to the other, our undivided sympathy and prayers.

Twenty-sixth. That we rejoice in the action taken by the Knights of Labor in unanimsly declaring for prohibition and woman suffrage.

The Auditing Committee reported that it had examined the treasurer's report and found it correct. Report adopted.

Dr. Joseph Ward, of Yankton College, was introduced to the convention and spoke briefly.

Professor Bartlett addressed the convention, urging the W. C. T. U. to push the work of the Prohibition Alliance, and suggested that an Appeal be sent out to voters. He also recommended that W. C. T. U. have an organ of their own.

The time for division having arrived, Mrs. Baker made a few appropriate remarks. The convention joined in singing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

The North Dakota delegates retired to the chapel, while the South Dakota delegates sang "God Be with You till We Meet Again."

NORTH DAKOTA W. C. T. U.

The convention was organized by electing Mrs. Barker temporary president and Mrs. R. A. Bill temporary secretary. The election of permanent officers resulted as follows: President, Miss Addie M. Kinnear, of Fargo; recording secretary, Mrs. R. A. Bill, of Jamestown; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Ida G. Fox, of Valley City; treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Boyle, of Ellendale.

SOUTH DAKOTA W. C. T. U.

The South Dakota convention organized by electing Miss Frances E. Willard temporary president and Mrs. F. A. Van Velsor, of Yankton, temporary secretary. A constitution was reported and adopted. Officers were elected, as follows: President, Mrs. H. M. Barker, of Huron; vice president, Mrs. E. A. Cranmer, of Aberdeen; corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. M. Swift, of Yankton; recording secretary, Mrs. D. W. Myers, of Vermillion; treasurer, Mrs. M. E. Kline, of Mitchell.

DAKOTA SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 1875-1880—FIRST AND LAST CONVENTIONS

The Dakota Sunday School Association was organized 1875, at Vermillion, and held its first annual meeting at Yankton, beginning June 14th and continuing three days. The sessions were held at the First Congregational Church. Rev. Joseph Ward delivered the welcoming address, which was responded to by Rev. J. P. Coffman, of Elk Point. Rev. Ralph Wells, of New York, was present and acted as conductor of the convention. Mr. Wells had spent much time as a missionary in Palestine. Committees as follows were appointed:

On Credentials—E. H. Withee, T. H. Judson, B. B. Scott. On Constitution—Rev. A. W. Hilton, Finlay; Rev. James Oakley, Elk Point; Dr. W. P. Pike, Vermillion. On Resolutions—Judge G. G. Bennett, Vermillion; Rev. James Buchanan, Yankton; Rev. B. B. Scott, Sioux Falls. On Nominations—Rev. J. E. Williams, Elk Point; Rev. Joseph Ward, Yankton; Rev. T. H. Judson, Swan Lake; Rev. A. Jamison, Yankton; W. S. Bell, Vermillion.

The Committee on Credentials found the following named persons to be the representatives of the Sunday schools of the territory as delegates to the convention: Elk Point—Rev. James Oakley, E. W. Laird, Judge H. H. Blair, Mrs. Blair, Mr. D. P. Putnam, Mrs. D. P. Putnam, D. W. Hasson, Rev. J. P. Coffman. Vermillion—Judge G. G. Bennett, Miss Clara Pratt, K. B. Finlay, Mrs. K. B. Finlay, Miss Effie Grange, Miss Hollenbeck, Mrs. J. B. Dailey, W. C. Bower, O. Pickett, S. S. Sparks, Mrs. H. J. Austin, Mrs. T. K. Hovey, Mrs. W. P. Carr, Miss G. Carr, Wm. O. Devay, Rev. A. J. Fernes, William Bell, and Mrs. G. J. Owens. Lodi—Mr. S. Sherman, Mrs. S. Sherman, V. B. Losee, Mrs. V. B. Losee. Spring Valley—David Conway and S. Andrews. Pleasant Valley—John W. White. Swan Lake—Rev. J. H. Judson, Miss V. Judson, E. R. Withee. Yankton—Rev. Joseph Ward, Rev. James Buchanan, Rev. A. Jamison, S. K. Felton, N. M. Buchanan, Mrs. Dunlap, Miss Case, J. R. Sanborn, Mrs. John Bremner, Miss S. L. Higbee. Yankton Agency—Rev. John P. Williamson. Canton—Rev. Joseph Gallup and Daniel Slack. Star Corners—L. Ruddle and John Babb. Meckling—Mrs. M. J. Taylor and Miss Anna Sponage. Riverside—Rev. L. Bridgman. Bon Homme—Mr. David Devol. Finlay—Merritt Smith, Oak Hall, and Isaac Wilcox. Sioux Falls—Rev. A. W. Hilton, Mr. Dobson, Mrs. Dobson, Mrs. Skinner, Mrs. Dr. Phillips, Rev. B. B. Scott, Mrs. E. J. Scott, Miss Josie Rest, C. W. McDonald, W. R. Williams. Dakota River—Rev. D. W. Cook. Gayville—Rev. W. J. Gardner.

Scripture reading, prayer and singing followed, succeeded by various motions and suggestions. Elk Point was selected as the place for the next annual meeting.

Mr. Wells introduced blackboard exercises as a means to make the Sunday schools of greater interest. He had used the blackboard for twenty-five years. "Nine-tenths of all our teaching is lost," he declared. "Eye teaching, or object teaching will remain." A Bible lesson in Chronicles was conducted by Mr. Ward. He urged careful study and research of the Old Testament. The question drawer, a prolific source of discussion, closed the second day's session.

The reports from the various Sunday schools occupied several hours at the evening session. The report from the Yankton Indian Agency awakened considerable interest. It was made by Mr. Williamson, the missionary there. He said that none of his pupils knew how to read when he began seven years before, and the school was like one infant class with pupils seventeen years of age. The Sioux language was spoken. The school had progressed from one superintendent and one teacher to four teachers, two of whom are Indians. The school then numbered fifty Indian children, large and small. Thirty-five had been gathered into the church. Nearly all knew how to read, now eighty-eight.

The statistical report by Mr. Bell gave to the territory over seventy working Sunday schools, only a portion of which had been able to send delegates to the convention.

The treasurer reported $30 in the treasury.

The Committee on Nominations reported the following, which were ratified: President, W. P. Pike; vice presidents, A. J. Furman, Baptist; B. B. Schott, Methodist; E. Miner, Congregationalist; Reverent Chase, United Brethren; recording secretary, S. F. Andrews; statistical secretary, W. S. Bell; treasurer, N. T. Lewis; executive committee, J. P. Coffman, E. W. Laird, J. Williams, Emory Morris.

How to teach the pupils of the Sunday school, was the principal topic of the closing day. Among the resolutions adopted were:

Resolved, That we recognize in the Territorial Sunday School Association work, a means of great good in uniting the various denominations in the success of a common cause.

Resolved, That this convention recommend that as far as practicable county Sunday school conventions be organized in each county during the ensuing year.

Resolved, That we place ourselves on record in favor of total abstinence and prohibition

Then follows the convention thirteen years later.

The Dakota territorial Sunday school convention met at Jamestown June 4, 1889, and divided into two separate associations, one for North and one for South Dakota.

There were about seventy-five delegates in attendance upon this, the fifteenth annual meeting. Delegates were welcomed at the opening of the convention by an address by Hon. Alfred Dickey. Superintendent W. S. Bell, of the Sioux Falls Normal Institute, Miss E. L. Swartz and Assistant Superintendent William Ewing, of Jamestown, made reports of the work of the past year. These reports show that there were fifty-two county Sunday school organizations in the territory. Thirty-five of these were in the South and seventeen in North Dakota. Two county organizations had been formed in South Dakota during the twelve months past and thirteen in North Dakota. Addresses were made by Rev. C. G. Cressey, Aberdeen, subject, "Teacher's Bible and Its Study;" E. E. Saunders, Fargo, subject, "House to House Visitation;" Rev. V. M. Yergin, Fargo, subject, "The Sunday School and the Nation;" Rev. D. S. McCaslin, Huron, "Christ and the Common People." President Kent of Huron and D. P. Hard of Sioux Falls were in attendance.

A North Dakota and South Dakota association was organized as the legitimate successors of the territorial parent. The South Dakota association elected officers as follows: President, R. V. Kratz, Mitchell; first vice president, Rev. J. Rowe, Redfield; second vice president, Rev. J. P. Coffman, Dell Rapids; third vice president, Rev. D. S. McCaslin, Huron; secretary, Rev. E. W. Carter, Lake Henry; executive committee, Hon. V. V. Barnes, Yankton; Rev. W. H. Brearly, Jasper; D. P. Ward, Sioux Falls; C. M. Peck, Mitchell; Rev. W. B. Hubbard, Chamberlain; Rev. W. B. D. Gray, Lake Henry; F. H. Kent, Huron; Eugene Steere, Pierre; T. W. Diggs, Milbank; F. H. Hagerty, Aberdeen; Rev. C. H. Cressey, Aberdeen; L. W. Stillwell, Deadwood; Rev. W. L. Moll, Sioux Falls.

After the death of Dr. Joseph Ward the trustees of Yankton College resolved to establish a memorial fund of $150,000 for Yankton College. When this project was laid before the Indians at Santee Agency they responded with promptness with a purse of $200. Some of the contributors to this fund were Indians who, twenty-seven years before, were engaged in the Little Crow hostilities in Minnesota.

BUSINESS AND SOCIETY INTERESTS DIVIDE

The grand lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen for the Territory of Dakota was organized at Huron on Thursday, the 22d of August, 1889.

The following officers were elected and installed on the second day of the session by the supreme master workman of the United States, W. R. Graham, of Cedar Falls, Iowa: grand past master workman, C. C. Huff, of Huron; grand master workman, J. L. Houtz, of Blunt; grand foreman, C. D. Hughes, of Jamestown; grand overseer, A. G. Smith, of Lead City; grand recorder, J. D. Lavin, of Columbia; grand receiver, H. C. Sessions, of Columbia; grand guide, A. F. Thompson, of Faulkton; grand inside watchman, G. W. Elliott, of DeSmet; grand outside watchman, J. C. Banks, of Sheldon; grand trustees, E. J. Moore, L. W. Arnold, and A. Barker; representatives to supreme lodge, H. C. Sessions, C. C. Huff and J. I. Boutz; medical director, Dr. F. M. Crane, of Doland.

The order was in a very flourishing condition with a membership of a score of thousands and yearly increasing.

No movement appears to have been made at this time to divide and establish separate orders for the two Dakotas.

The Bankers Association of the Territory of Dakota met at Fargo in 1880. It was its fifth and last convention, as one of the principal features of the meeting was a formal division of the convention into two associations of North and South Dakota, respectively. During this session a committee was appointed to confer with the Farmers' Alliance with the view of arriving at a mutual understanding and co-operation in matters in which both were interested. The division came with the North Dakota association adopting the old constitution, with some modifications, and electing Charles A. Morton, president; George B. Clifford, secretary; and R. S. Adams, treasurer. The southern association adopted the old constitution and elected Frank Drew, president; Eugene S. Steere, secretary; and N. P. Beebe, treasurer.

BLACK HILLS OLD SETTLERS ORGANIZED

A society of Black Hills pioneers was organized at Deadwood on the 8th of January, 1880. The officers chosen were: President, Capt. T. H. Russell, Deadwood; vice presidents, John Gray of Terraville, R. B. Hughes of Rapid City, Samuel Shankland of Custer City, E. G. Dudley of Hot Springs, Frank Phalen of Minnesela and James C. Ryan of Cook County, Wyoming; L. F. Whitbeck of the Deadwood Times, secretary; Gen. A. R. Z. Dawson, Deadwood, treasurer; directors, Capt. C. V. Gardner, John P. Belding, George Carle, Noah Newbanks, and N. M. Booth.

There were over three hundred old settlers present.

RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS ORGANIZE

The retail liquor dealers of South Dakota organized for the purpose of opposing the adoption of the clause of the constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor. The executive committee of the association met at Yankton in June, but its proceedings were not of a public nature, they claimed, and no clue could be had of the plans that were matured. They expected to be able to defeat the adoption of the prohibitory clause by an energetic campaign in which platform addresses and anti-prohibition literature would perform the most important part. They claimed that the result of prohibition in the states, of late years, does not justify the positive assertions of the prohibition advocates that temperance reform or better government is promoted by its adoption. They claimed further that the people who have tried it are not satisfied with it owing to the difficulty of enforcing it. They further asserted that from 1880 to 1885 six of the seven states voting on the subject adopted it, while from 1885 to 1880 (the present year) nine states voted on the question, and it failed of adoption in any one of them.

The Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons for Dakota Territory met at Mitchell in June, 1880, and after attending to the usual business of the order, the delegates from North Dakota withdrew and formed a grand lodge for North Dakota, electing the following brethren as officers of the new grand body: W. G. Cloes, worshipful grand master, Jamestown; F. J. Thompson, deputy grand master, Fargo; J. A. Shelby, senior grand warden, Hillsboro; A. B. Henick, junior grand warden, Lisbon; C. H. Jackson, grand treasurer, Pembina; D. S. Dodds, grand secretary, Lakota.

The South Dakota body elected officers as follows: Geo. V. Ayers, worshipful grand master, Deadwood; T. D. Kanouse, deputy grand master, Woonsocket; H. J. Rice, senior grand warden, Huron; George A. Johnson, junior grand warden, Mitchell; H. S. Murphy, grand treasurer, Elkton; C. T. McCoy, grand secretary, Aberdeen.

The Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows met at Jamestown in May, 1889, and divided into two grand lodges, one for the north and one for the south.

The Sons of Veterans of the Territorial Association met at Jamestown in May, and formally divided into two military orders, one for the north and one for the south. W. A. Ellsworth, of Forman, was elected colonel, commanding the North Dakota society, and Colonel Brass, of Mount Vernon, was re-elected for South Dakota.

The organization of the Dakota Soldiers' Home at Hot Springs, Fall River County, took place June 8, 1889. Thomas A. Bones, of Webster, was elected president; W. V. Lucas, of Chamberlain, secretary; J. J. Kleiner, of Pierre, treasurer; W. P. Phillips, Hot Springs, superintendent of construction.

FIREMEN'S TOURNAMENT

The South Dakota Firemen's Association held its fifth annual tournament at Yankton in June, 1889. It was something more than an annual assembling of these people owing to the proposed changes in Dakota's political status. Every local department in the jurisdiction was represented liberally and preparations for a grand occasion had been made on an unusually grand scale. There were $2,000 in cash prizes to be competed for by the various companies, with a number of special prizes, and a championship cart to be won, worth $400. The tournament began on Wednesday, the 19th of June, and continued four days. The local associations represented were those of Sioux Falls, Scotland, Mitchell, Kimball, Miller, Madison, Tyndall, Huron, Pierre, Dell Rapids, Yankton.

The names of the visiting bodies were:

From Pierre—S. C. Garnell, chief, C. W. Richardson, Ben. Andrews, Fay Smith, Frank Fairan, Will Kelsey, A. S. Brown, George Harris, Eugene Cutting, J. W. Pratt, H. F. Cutting, F. Hunt, Will Albright, L. R. Thompson, A. G. Geiger, G. H. Bront, Fred. Aleyon, H. J. Gardner, W. E. Smith.

Scotland—Thomas Truin, Abel Stafford, A. D. Ardery, W. Youngwrith, S. Wietenmeyer, Anton Sailer, J. A. Ganoring, J. Piroutek, P. Jasman, J. A. Stafford, W. J. Stafford, R. L. Harben, J. A. Brown, G. Barrows, Emil Schamber, Emil Kirk.

Dell Rapids—T. S. Galbraith, foreman, A. D. Good, captain, R. Howland, W. Stewart, W. DeGood, W. Adamson, G. Burns, E. Gregory, R. Weston, W. Landers, R. Richardson, Jas. Meldrum, A. Griswold, Ed. Lunt, J. Tuffield.

Madison—J. W. Davison, chief, D. H. Gilsey, assistant chief, A. T. Fuller, foreman, R. C. Hart, assistant foreman, C. E. Gage, delegate, E. M. Prentice, E. Melville, O. E. Snowden, W. H. Farren, A. Green, J. Coffee, E. Martin, J. L. Williams, C. M. Koehler, F. E. Fisher, W. Molumley, H. Boswell, E. V. Lombard, George Perry, C. Thomas, L. A. Elwill, C. L. Faulkes, J. A. Collins, J. F. Farran, Mike Tobin, W. Say, J. Slack, J. Orr, D. R. Davis.

Huron—W. C. Sterling, C. H. Hudson, Sim. Gombon, T. M. Stives, E. A. Spinden, D. K. Bugant, S. S. Butterfield, C. Stallman, H. P. M. Finney, A. E. Beaumont, Mike Springer, H. Hamley, F. C. Bloodgood, H. M. Hollister.

Sioux Falls—Hose Company No. 1, T. C. Carleton, foreman, W. DeGood, first assistant, T. Moore, second assistant, F. H. Gillett, engineer, W. G. Hickox, T. Fotman, W. Brant, T. L. Robbins, D. Hort, W. Wolf, D. Donahue, C. Hyer, D. S. Smith, T. Smith, H. Taffield, A. DeGood.

Drake Hose, No. 3, Sioux Falls—T. Skinner, foreman, B. Dirgen, secretary, G. B. Merwin, H. Stringham, Ed Manning, A. Dennis, C. Smith.

Mechanics Hose, No. 2, Sioux Falls—Oscar Gast, foreman, P. Mullen, first assistant, F. Palm, E. Johnson, H. Paulson, P. Pesh, G. Peck, G. Harris, P. Tharldson, H. Mullen.

Sioux Falls Hook and Ladder Company—F. L. Richardson, foreman, T. Sampson, first assistant, T. Glasser, second assistant, G. A. Donahue, secretary, W. Whalen, M. Walsler, F. Mantshaff, C. Lynn, T. Higgins, T. Alberg, E. Ges-sell, T. Fleming, B. F. Bean, W. Raabe, C. Austin, T. A. Scott, Carl Rogers, W. S. Shay, G. F. Fenton, Andrew Carlson, R. Arnold.

Yankton Hose Team—Gus. Seibert, captain, A. Loffler, E. Zeinert, G. Steph-enson, M. Walsh, W. Walsh, F. Lynch, G. Fox, J. L. Boone, H. Higbee, H. T. Todd, G. Summer, J. Fanslow, R. McGuire, J. Todd, J. Preston.

Yankton Hook and Ladder Team—G. R. Hobson, foreman, J. Fanslow, assist-ant foreman, J. T. Williams, Gus. Brauch, T. M. Brisbane, A. Loffler, J. Brauch, E. Stubbs, J. H. Balmat, C. B. Taylor, M. Madden, H. Darnley, M. Welsh, A. Seibert, A. Peterson, P. Reddy, W. Walsh, C. S. Winter.

Teller Hose, Yankton—Frank Zeinert, foreman, Louis Gust, Wm. Ward, John Lang, F. Ruther, E. T. White, K. Gunther, E. Zienert, George Baumann, R. Pederson, assistant foreman, E. A. Odiorne, Josiah Gray, Wm. Foard, H. O. Colkins, G. W. Frostensen, M. Frank, E. T. Stockwell, Harry Baker, G. Steph-enson.

Champion Hose Company, No. 2, Yankton—J. Boone, foreman, F. Burgi, assistant foreman, Ed. Johnson, secretary, L. M. Caya, treasurer, G. Fox, J. Todd, G. W. Peterson, Asa A. Grant, Joe Campbell, D. M. Pettibone, M. P. Dolwing, H. Levi, F. Begelmeier, J. T. Coxhead, O. E. Sampson, Amos Bowyer, Ed Stone, G. A. Baker, W. Lagan, A. G. Osborn.

Some of the towns appeared to have been represented by individual members.

A fine parade opened the exercises for the first day in which the following participated: Knights of Pythias Band, Sioux City; two carriages containing board of control and committee men; Miller Hook and Ladder; Scotland Hook and Ladder; Sioux Falls Cornet Band; Sioux Falls Uniformed Company; Sioux Falls Steamer; Second Sioux Falls Uniformed Company; Kimball Hose; Madison Hook and Ladder; Mitchell Hook and Ladder; Scotland Hook and Ladder; Tyndall Cornet Band; Huron Hose; Pierre Hose; Pierre Hook and Ladder; Yankton Hose; Rescue Hook and Ladder, a Yankton boy organization with miniature truck; Yankton Hook and Ladder; Steamer from St. Paul.

After the parade the exercises were held on the Garfield school grounds, west of the River Rhine, not then occupied.

The first of these was the single man's coupling contest. The entries were: George Fox, Joseph Boone, Harry Higbee, Yankton; A. Hilton, Huron; J. W. Stiver, Huron; Fred Elce, Parker; A. McMullen, W. G. Richards, W. E. Klingman, G. R. Wilson, Kimball; Chas. Nicholzen, Mr. Schofield, Mitchell. Nicholzen and Schofield were protested on the ground that they lived in Council Bluffs, but the protest was not sustained. Geo. Fox won the contest, in $4\frac{1}{4}$ seconds; Fred Elce, second, in $5\frac{3}{4}$ seconds. Nicholzen made the coupling in 6 seconds, Schofield in 7, McMullen in $12\frac{3}{4}$, and the others were given no time. Richards, Klingman and Wilson had withdrawn. Fox took \$15 and Elce \$10. Timers, John Waugh of Castalia, Tracy Pratt of Pierre, Alex Knerster of Miller. Judges, James Barney of Sioux City, Geo. Harris of Pierre, C. Gibson of Council Bluffs.

For the green hose race there were but two entries—the Kimball team and the Dell Rapids team. The Kimballites were the first to appear on the grounds, and at the sound of the pistol started in good form and covered the 300 yards and made their coupling in the creditable time of forty-four and three-fourths seconds. Dell Rapids followed, and although they made fully as good run as their opponents, they were slow in coupling, and had forty-five and one-half seconds registered against them.

No delay was caused in starting the hook and ladder teams. Scotland was the first to face the starter. Their run was exceedingly rapid but their man failed to stroke the topmost round of the ladder, and was sent up again when halfway down to complete his task, thus losing much time. Fifty-five seconds was the time officially announced. The Madison team were the opponents and they, without exception, stuck to their cart manfully to the end, their ladder man reaching the top round in forty-eight seconds. A heavy wind and rain storm soaked the earth the second night, interfering somewhat with the third day's programme.

The ladder man's contest, run fifty feet and climb ladder. For this the entries were C. Smith, T. W. Coquette of Miller, Milt Floss of Mitchell, W. Ray, W. Malamby and Clark Elliott of Madison. The time was, Smith, $5\frac{1}{4}$; Coquette, $5\frac{3}{4}$; Floss, $6\frac{1}{4}$; Rae, $6\frac{1}{4}$; Malamby, $6\frac{1}{4}$; Elliott, $5\frac{1}{4}$ seconds. Smith and Elliott tying, they decided it by another contest, and Elliott won in $7\frac{1}{4}$ seconds, Smith losing by a mishap. Elliott took purse and championship badge.

The forty-seven-class hook and ladder race followed. Three hundred-yard run, place and mount ladder. Entries, Scotland and Madison teams. Time, Scotland, $50\frac{1}{4}$ seconds; Madison, $46\frac{3}{4}$ seconds. Madison took the heavy end of the \$125 purse, Scotland receiving \$50.

The championship hook and ladder contest was now on—300-yard run, place and mount ladder. The entries were Miller, Scotland and Madison. Miller held the championship banner won in the tournament last year, and worked heroically to keep it and succeeded. Ladderman Smith made a wonderful climb. The Miller team came in first in 43 seconds; Madison second, 46 seconds; Scotland third, 50 seconds. The time made by the Miller team beat its last year's championship record by two and three-quarter seconds, and also of greater importance to the South Dakota firemen, it beat the world's record. Miller took the $200 purse and retained the $300 banner. One hundred and twenty-five dollars went to Madison and seventy-five dollars to Scotland.

For the forty-six class, a hose race, 300-yard run, lay hose and couple, there were three entries—Dell Rapids, Parker and Kimball. In this contest Parker made a false start and was called back and given time to rest. The race was won by Kimball in $41\frac{1}{2}$ seconds; Dell Rapids second, $42\frac{1}{2}$; and Parker third, 48. There were two purses, \$75 and \$50. The free-for-all hose race was taken by the Yankton team in $40\frac{1}{4}$ seconds; Huron second, in 41 seconds; and Pierre third, no time owing to an accident.

Under the rules, teams participating in a "free-for-all," can pick their membership from the crowd, and the three teams entered, Pierre, Huron and Yankton, were made up partly from those cities and partly from other places. The Pierre boys made a splendid race, covering the distance, 300 yards, in thirty-three seconds. As the hose unreeled the coupling struck one of the hubs of the cart, making a dent in the screw threads, and the coupler was not able to do his part. But for this accident the Pierre team would probably have performed the feat in 38 or 39 seconds. The Yankton won in $40\frac{1}{4}$, Huron coming in 41. The time was unprecedented—the best on record. The winning team was made up from the Yankton and Kimball companies, namely: Yankton, A. Loffler, E. Zienert, G. Stephenson, M. Walsh, W. Walsh, F. Lynch, G. Fox, J. L. Boone, H. Higbee; Kimball, F. A. Graft, A. L. Findley, A. M. Millen, W. Klingman, F. A. Ray, W. Richards, C. Hooper, G. Wilson, T. Stransky.

The wet test for special prize offered by Harry Katz, of a forty-dollar pipe and coupling, was a 200-yard run, lay hose, attach to hydrant, fix nozzle and throw water. The Sioux Falls team took the prize in thirty-six seconds.

The novelty ladderman's contest was 100-yard run and climb the ladder. Entries were Smith of Miller, Malmby of Madison, Elliott of Aberdeen and Coquette of Miller. Elliott won in 16 seconds; Coquette, 16½; Smith, 16¾; Malmby, 17.

The coupling contest for the championship and purses brought the following entries: Fox and Boone of Yankton, Higbee and Seibert of Yankton, Hilton and Stiver of Huron, Elee and Marshall of Parker, Tuffield and DeGood of Sioux Falls. Higbee and Seibert, and Hilton and Stiver tied at five seconds, the tie was run off, Higbee and Seibert winning in 4¾ seconds; Hilton and Stiver, 5½; Fox and Boone, no time; Elee and Marshall, 5¼; Tuffield and DeGood, 6¾.

The championship hose race was for the championship hose car, held by the Yankton team, and $200, two other purses of $125 and $75 going to the second and third. The entries were Dell Rapids, Kimball, Parker, Huron and Yankton. The Yankton team ran first and made the run and coupling in 40¼ seconds; Dell Rapids second, scoring 44 seconds; Kimball, third, scored in 42 seconds; Parker, 46½ seconds. Huron last, made the run and coupling in 40 seconds, winning the high purse and cart from Yankton by a quarter of a second.

The slow race for the two hook and ladder teams who had made the slowest time in the previous races, was contested by teams from Madison and Scotland. The run was 300 yards. Madison won, time, 39½ seconds, Scotland, time, 41 seconds.

The last race of the tournament came off on the fourth day. It was a championship hook and ladder contest which included the scaling of the ladder in addition to 300 yards run. Miller and Madison competed for this and Miller took first honors with the phenomenal time of 40¼ seconds. Madison's time was 43 seconds.

The handsome hose cart was surrendered to Huron by the Yankton firemen accompanied by a few speeches and suitable ceremonies. Mr. James Kingsbury for the Yankton department congratulated the victors and delivered the vehicle into their possession. Mr. W. B. Sterling, president of the board of control, on behalf of Huron, made an excellent and eloquent reply.

The various cities represented in the contest carried away prizes, as follows: Huron took one prize, cash $200.00; Aberdeen took one prize, cash, $30; Miller took four prizes, cash, $430; Scotland took three prizes, cash, $150; Madison took five prizes, cash, $345; Dell Rapids took two prizes, cash, $75; Kimball took three prizes, cash, $225; Parker took two prizes, cash, $30; Sioux Falls took one prize, cash, $40; Yankton took five prizes, cash, $540.

In addition to these cash prizes, Huron took the championship hose cart, Miller took the championship hook and ladder banner, Madison took the ladderman's championship badge, and Yankton took the coupler's championship badge.

The annual meeting of the association was held at the city hall, President Sterling presiding. Officers for the ensuing year, who would constitute the board of control, were elected, as follows: President, Richard Woods, of Sioux Falls; first vice president, Z. C. Tucker, of Aberdeen; second vice president, H. Schatz, of Scotland; recording secretary, James Kingsbury, of Yankton; treasurer, B. L. Moffat, of Miller.

Fred Kincl, of the Yankton department, who had died since the previous tournament, was remembered by resolutions of respect, and the sympathy of the association was tendered to his bereaved family to whom a copy of the resolutions was directed to be present.

The visitors pronounced the tournament to have been superior in all essential features to any previously held.

MANITOBA MEETING AT SIOUX FALLS

A notable gathering of business men from the cities of Duluth, St. Paul, Sioux Falls and Yankton occurred at Sioux Falls on the 29th of June to felicitate over the new railway connection between Eastern Dakota and the great lakes, and to talk over the extension of the Great Northern line to Yankton. As a banquet was deemed an incidental feature of such an occasion, such a collation was prepared at the Cataract Hotel where the several addresses were delivered which explain the purpose of the gathering. On the stage was the Damon Division Orchestra, and with the Duluth party was a quartette consisting of Fred Reynolds, H. S. Moody, J. P. Johnson and P. B. Doran, which added a delightful feature to the occasion. Hon. E. W. Caldwell acted as toastmaster.

Judge C. S. Palmer had been designated by the mayor of Sioux Falls, Mr. Willey, to welcome the guests on behalf of the city. Judge Palmer said:

The experience of the guests of the previous evening and the day, must have led them to know how delighted the people of the Queen City are to greet you all. The keys of the city are all yours. Our only regret is that we haven't more to give and are not able to do more than we have done. Sioux Falls is particularly delighted to shake hands with Duluth—for the experiences of the two cities have been similar, rustling against great odds, and finally triumphing. Nature has done wonders for both localities. She has destined a great city at the head of the great lakes, as certainly as she swung the planets whirling in their orbits. She has certainly destined a great city where a wonderful agricultural country is cleft by a river tumbling in cascades a hundred feet over the most remarkable deposit of building stone and paving material in the country. We welcome you all—from Duluth, St. Cloud, Willmar, Pipestone, Yankton, or elsewhere. As you came into the city, and our people first saw your faces and your style, you would have blushed to have heard the compliments bestowed. It was a case of "love at first sight."

The speaker deferred in complimentary terms to President Spicer of the Willmar and Sioux Falls road and Secretary Phelps of the Duluth Chamber of Commerce to whose work Dakota owes much of its success in procuring the railway connections which made this excursion a possibility.

Mr. Costello most earnestly thanked Sioux Falls for her cordial welcome and entertainment, and declared that with all the visitors it had been most certainly a case of "love at first sight"—love for the queen city and her royal people.

We want to do business with such a city and such a people. You are our style of folks. Come and see us and we will attempt to repay your delightful courtesy and hospitality.

Charles F. Blake, Esq., secretary of the Sioux Falls Commercial Club, spoke on behalf of that organization, saying substantially:

We have all looked forward with pleasure to this visit of representative citizens of Duluth and points down along the line, and however much may have been the delights of anticipation, they are cast in the shadow by those of realization. The actual fact has proven to be something broader, and deeper, and richer, than our forecasts of it. And certainly a retrospect of this day and this evening will in the coming months and years bring gratification to every participant. It has been a great time—one whose influence will develop tremendous results in the destiny of every locality represented. The coming years are wrought with pleasant surprises, the seed of which has been sown by this visit. We have been delighted by your presence as genial gentlemen—we will depend upon it that this gratification will expand until it shall touch also the great commercial relations which are to grow up among us. We shall always remember you most cordially, and shall hope at no distant date to renew and broaden the acquaintance so auspiciously begun.

W. F. Phelps, Esq., secretary of the Duluth Chamber of Commerce, responded most felicitously for that association. He said:

While it was to be expected that the business feature of the occasion should be uppermost with business men, I am determined that the social feature shall not go unrecognized. Our entire party has not only been captivated but captured by the hospitable treatment which had been so lavishly extended. We are yours "for keeps"—and you are ours. Neither St. Paul, Minneapolis, nor Chicago, nor any other city could have done more or better by us. Come up and give us a chance to retaliate. And now,—what are the business aspects of this occasion? Among others they are these: By recent development in railroad transportation you have been brought 200 miles nearer the seaboard—the difference between the distance to Chicago and the distance to Duluth. The great eastern transportation companies have been compelled to arrange matters so that, for northwestern traffic, Duluth may be just as near New York as is Chicago—the two lake ports being put on the same basis of local rates to the west. In traffic this means millions to the producers. Now, I want you to swear that you will not let up until you have taken advantage of this. It is within your reach. The Manitoba and the Eastern Minnesota have made it possible. They are in the hands of broad gauge men. You want to cultivate especially President Minot of the Eastern Minnesota, whom I now name as "The Little Railway Giant,"—only twenty-nine years old, level-headed as a Nestor. I propose that we rise and give him three cheers.

And they were given heartily.

D. G. Cash, Esq., on behalf of the Duluth Board of Trade, said:

I have the pleasure of assuring the people of Sioux Falls of the earnest concern of the Zenith City in the struggle which South Dakota has been making for statehood. We have been proud of her—our big and rugged sister—our favorite—proud of her because she is so fair a type of what has been dubbed the "rowdy west." Proud of her because of her independent common sense. Proud of her because she is going to give her boys and girls an object lesson in patriotism by holding a regular old fashioned Fourth of July celebration. Proud of her because she is a rustler and not afraid to let the world know her advantages and resources. We want you to do business with us, we can do you good.

The speaker then detailed the facilities which Duluth possesses for accommodating the trade of the Northwest. He also drew a parallel between Sioux Falls and the New Jerusalem, giving the queen city the pointer that the vision of St. John on the Isle of Patmos, when he saw the foundation of jasper and chalcedony must have been a revelation of what Sioux Falls can show today. The speaker concluded with expressions of profound appreciation of the courtesies the visitors had received, and begging Sioux Falls to come nearer to them than mere acquaintanceship—to be bound by the ties of a closer relationship.

Mayor Harry B. Wynn spoke for Yankton, as follows:

Yankton appreciates the kindly feeling that Sioux City extends to her, and I assure you the people of Yankton have the most kindly feelings toward the people of Sioux Falls. Her interests were identical with yours, and I trust that we can accomplish ere long the completion of the Manitoba Railroad into Yankton. It is advertised that on the 10th of July the grading of the Yankton and Norfolk Railroad will be let. When that road is built we have only the short link between Sioux Falls and Yankton to connect the Pacific Ocean with Duluth and the great chain of lakes. To our Duluth friends I beg to say that it is with great pleasure we greet you. Yankton has long had her weather eye upon the city at the head of the great chain of lakes. It is to your matchless location that our people have been for years looking for cheap lumber, cheaper coal and salt, as well as for a better market for our surplus grain, beef and pork products. We have for long years realized the fact that your city is 150 miles nearer to us than any other on the great chain of lakes. We also realize that this means to our people vastly cheaper freight rates. It now requires but the building of sixty miles of railroad to connect the Missouri River at Yankton with your great commercial metropolis. Less than one million of dollars will connect your city directly, by rail, with the great valleys of the Missouri and Dakota rivers at Yankton. These two valleys are unsurpassed for productiveness by any country in the northwestern states of equal extent, and the 60,000 agriculturists found in the five counties of Southeastern Dakota, stand ready to furnish your merchants with thousands of cars of grain, beef and pork, seeking a market over the cheapest line of transportation, which they would gladly exchange with you for your money, coal, iron, and salt. We ask your earnest and hearty co-operation in securing the early construction of this sixty miles of road. Shall we have it?

With the remarks of the Yankton representative the occasion closed, Mayor Wynn being assured in the midst of many farewell handshakes that Yankton's claims were very soon to be recognized. The hour had arrived for the Duluth special train to depart, leavetaking was had, and to the martial strains of the Minnesota band, the gentlemen from the lake and intermediate cities were waved a regretful adieu to which they responded with waving of hats, handkerchiefs, and a final salvo of cheers for the queen city and its enterprising people.

The Yankton citizens who accompanied Mayor Wynn were Alderman M. P. Ohlman, Maj. J. R. Hanson, Robert J. Gamble, J. T. Sargent, F. M. O'Brien, Rev. Joseph Ward, Paul Hamann, George F. Atwater, F. J. Kahn, and E. M. Hills.

DESTITUTION, CROP FAILURE

During the growing season of 1889 there was a severe drouth affecting large sections of the country west of the Upper Mississippi, and extending across the Dakotas to the mountains. There was not a failure of crops, but the aggregate was greatly lessened by the dry period which in some large sections caused practically a complete failure, and in other large sections also there was a high average of production, and owing to the increased acreage in old and new counties, the total production of wheat, for instance, amounted to about forty-four million bushels, and corn 25,000,000 bushels.

This, however, did not relieve the sections where the blight of drouth was severely felt, and it was generally recognized during the late fall of 1889, that outside help would be needed to carry many of the settlers of the stricken sections through the winter.

The first complaints from Northern Dakota were from Ramsey and Nelson counties, and from Southern Dakota, from Miner and from the Missouri Valley counties above Pierre.

Governor Mellette succeeded in arousing a general interest for the relief of the needy in Miner and adjoining counties, and various civic, social, religious societies as well as towns and cities gathered and shipped supplies to the destitute. At one time it was reported that from two to a half dozen carloads daily were shipped from various points in the state, consisting of food and clothing and fuel supplies, and also seed grain. No contributions were asked for from outside the state except by unauthorized persons. So far as the people had spoken of the matter they had forbidden any appeal in their names to the people of other states, alleging that it was not in the least necessary, and because it might serve to keep intending immigrants away at the very time the Great Sioux Reservation was first opened and about ten million acres of land thrown open to settlement.

The Farmers' Alliance had been quietly aiding the sufferers, but the number of destitute had continued to grow until it got beyond the financial ability of the Alliance to care for it. In this emergency Governor Mellette was appealed to, and before taking any official action he made a personal visit to the scourge stricken sections and the afflicted settlers in December, early, and after quite thoroughly investigating the matter, visited a number of the towns and cities in the southeast, held public meetings, and reported a serious situation that was altogether a surprise to the people.

At Yankton, at a meeting held for the purpose on December 6th, the governor stated that he had come direct from Miner County. That there were 600 families on the list of absolutely destitute in Miner County, and the committee in charge had been very conservative in its enumeration, admitting to aid only those who had nothing upon which to maintain themselves. Many of these people would die, if we did not furnish them relief. It was better to aid them here at home than to go abroad and solicit. The people needed food, coal, clothing, boots, shoes, and would need grain for seed in the spring.

The following day a half carload of miscellaneous supplies was shipped from Yankton to various parties for distribution, and the Honorable Abe Van Osdel loaded a car with corn meal that had been contributed by the local Alliance.

So far as known there were no fatalities as a result of the partial famine nor any outside aid requested. The necessities of those in need were supplied largely by local organizations.

COUNTIES—WHEN ORGANIZED—AREA

Name	Boundaries Defined	Organized	Square Miles
Aurora	Feb. 22, 1879	Aug. 8, 1881	750
Barnes	Jan. 14, 1875	Aug. 5, 1878	1,725
Beadle	Feb. 22, 1879	July 9, 1880	1,250
Benson	Mar. 9, 1883	Nov. 6, 1883	850
Billings	Feb. 10, 1879	Oct. 25, 1883	1,150
Bon Homme	Apr. 5, 1862	May —, 1862	600
Bottineau	Jan. 4, 1873	May 13, 1884	1,325
Brookings	Apr. 5, 1862	Jan. 13, 1871	875
Brown	Feb. 22, 1879	July 20, 1880	1,735
Brule	Jan. 14, 1875	Sept. 8, 1879	825
Burlingh	Jan. 4, 1873	Apr. —, 1873	1,250
Butte	Mar. 12, 1883	July 11, 1883	1,150
Campbell	Jan. 8, 1873	Nov. 6, 1883	750
Cass	Jan. 4, 1873	Oct. 27, 1873	1,725
Cavalier	Jan. 4, 1873	June 10, 1884	900
Charles Mix	May 8, 1862	Sept. 1, 1879	1,225
Clark	Jan. 8, 1873	Dec. 21, 1880	1,200
Clay	Apr. 10, 1862	Apr. —, 1862	432
Codington	Feb. 15, 1877	July 19, 1878	725
Custer	Jan. 11, 1875	Apr. 3, 1877	1,400
Davison	Jan. 8, 1873	Jan. 15, 1874	432
Day	Feb. 22, 1879	Dec. 5, 1881	1,450
Deuel	Apr. 5, 1862	Apr. 26, 1878	675
Dickey	Mar. 5, 1881	July 1, 1882	1,150
Douglas	Jan. 10, 1873	July 7, 1882	475
Edmunds	Jan. 8, 1873	July 14, 1883	1,150
Emmons	Feb. 10, 1879	Oct. 16, 1883	1,550
Fall River	Mar. 6, 1883	Nov. —, 1884	1,635
Faulk	Jan. 8, 1873	Oct. 25, 1883	1,000
Foster	Jan. 4, 1873	Sept. 27, 1883	1,500
Grand Forks	Jan. 4, 1873	Jan. 12, 1875	1,375
Grant	Jan. 8, 1873	June 5, 1878	750
Gregory	Apr. 5, 1862	Nov. 20, 1880	725
Griggs	Feb. 17, 1881	June 10, 1882	900
Hamlin	Jan. 8, 1873	Aug. 12, 1878	550
Hand	Jan. 8, 1873	July 19, 1882	1,450
Hanson	Jan. 13, 1871	Jan. 13, 1871	440
Hughes	Jan. 8, 1873	Jan. 13, 1871	850
Hutchinson	Apr. 5, 1862	Aug. 1, 1883	850
Hyde	Jan. 8, 1873	Nov. 9, 1883	750
Jerauld	Mar. 9, 1883	Dec. 21, 1880	1,450
Kidder	Jan. 4, 1873	Dec. 13, 1879	875
Kingsbury	Jan. 8, 1873	Oct. 6, 1873	575
Kittson	Apr. 5, 1862	June 20, 1881	850
Lake	Jan. 8, 1873	Apr. 5, 1862	6,000
LaMoure	Jan. 4, 1873	Mar. 5, 1877	2,600
Lawrence	Jan. 11, 1875	Dec. 30, 1867	625
Lincoln	Apr. 5, 1862	Apr. 17, 1884	1,000
Logan	Jan. 4, 1873	May 16, 1878	1,500
McCook	Jan. 8, 1873	Apr. 15, 1884	1,500
McHenry	Jan. 4, 1873	Sept. 25, 1884	1,000
McIntosh	Mar. 9, 1883	Oct. 16, 1883	1,000
McLean	Jan. 8, 1873	Nov. 6, 1883	1,150
McPherson	Jan. 8, 1873	Nov. 6, 1883	1,100
Mercer	Jan. 14, 1875	Nov. 8, 1880	575
Miner	Jan. 8, 1875	Apr. 5, 1862	850
Minnehaha	Apr. 5, 1862	Jan. 4, 1868	850
Moody	Jan. 8, 1873	July —, 1873	575
Morton	Jan. 8, 1873	Feb. 21, 1881	2,700
Nelson	Mar. 9, 1883	May 15, 1883	1,000
Pembina	Jan. 9, 1867	Jan. 9, 1867	1,600
Pennington	Jan. 11, 1875	Mar. 5, 1877	1,500
Potter	Jan. 14, 1875	Nov. 6, 1883	900
Ramsey	Jan. 4, 1873	Feb. —, 1888	925
Ransom	Jan. 4, 1873	Mar. 7, 1881	850
Richland	Jan. 4, 1873	Apr. —, 1873	1,325
Roberts	Mar. 8, 1883	Aug. 1, 1883	1,500

Name	Boundaries		Organized	Square Miles
	Defined
Rolette	Jan. 4, 1873		Nov. 6, 1883	1,325
Sanborn	Mar. 9, 1883		June 23, 1883	575
Sargent	Mar. 3, 1883		Aug. 1, 1883	800
Spink	Jan. 8, 1873		July 22, 1879	1,500
Stark	Feb. 10, 1879		May 1, 1883	1,150
Steele	Mar. 8, 1883		June 8, 1883	425
Stutsman	Jan. 4, 1873		June 20, 1873	2,000
Sully	Jan. 8, 1873		Apr. 4, 1883	1,050
Towner	Mar. 8, 1883		Nov. 6, 1883	1,100
Traill	Jan. 12, 1875		Jan. 12, 1875	850
Turner	Jan. 13, 1871		Jan. 13, 1871	650
Union (Cole)	Apr. 10, 1862		Apr. 10, 1862	450
Walsh	Feb. 18, 1881		July 30, 1881	850
Walworth	Jan. 8, 1873		May 5, 1883	725
Wells	Feb. 23, 1883		June 25, 1884	1,075
Yankton	Apr. 10, 1862		Apr. 10, 1862	550

APPOINTMENTS IN 1889

Cyrus J. Fry, of Vermillion, was appointed the first United States marshal of South Dakota in December, 1889, succeeding Marshal Daniel Marratta, who had been in service under Cleveland's appointment.

Solomon Wenzlaff was appointed register of the United States Land Office at Yankton in December, 1889, succeeding Hon. Hughes East. Mr. Wenzlaff was a worthy representative of the German-Russian people, many thousands of them having settled in both Dakotas during the nearly two decades preceding. His father was among the most influential of the pioneer immigrants from Russia in 1873.

A. D. Thomas, of Fargo, a son-in-law of Judge A. H. Barnes, of Fargo, was appointed United States district judge for the District of North Dakota. Hon. M. N. Johnson, who had such a close call for the senatorship, was an applicant for the place.

Col. F. W. Foster, of Frankfort, Spink County, was appointed United States agent of the Yankton Indians in December, 1889.

John D. Lawler, of Mitchell, was appointed territorial treasurer, January 12, 1889, by Governor Church.

A. D. Chase, prominent in the Farmers' Alliance, was appointed one of the railroad commissioners for South Dakota. The other members of the commission were H. J. Rice, of Huron, and John H. King, of Chamberlain. This was one of the state appointments.

John C. Murphy was appointed United States district attorney for Dakota Territory in May, 1889, to succeed John E. Carland, of Bismarck, who had resigned. Mr. Murphy had been assistant attorney for eight years having been appointed by President Garfield in 1881, and continued in office by President Cleveland. He was well qualified for the office.

Charles G. Williams, of Watertown, was appointed by President Harrison register of the Watertown Land Office to succeed Mark W. Sheafe. Mr. Williams held this position prior to the appointment of Mr. Sheafe, having taken it upon his retirement from twelve years' service in Congress as a representative from the Janesville, Wis., congressional district.

James A. Stokes, of Dakota, was appointed receiver of the Grand Forks Land Office in June, 1889.

William McKeesick, of Dakota, was appointed Indian agent at Sisseton Agency in June, 1889.

Hon. J. B. Kelley, of Huron, was appointed assistant United States attorney of Dakota Territory early in June, 1889.

Governor Mellette appointed Johnson Nickeus, of Jamestown, attorney general of the territory, April 16th, to succeed General Templeton.

TABLE OF ALTITUDES IN DAKOTA

Station.	Elevation. Feet.	Station.	Elevation. Feet.
Aberdeen	1,300	Horace Depot	917
Abraham Lincoln, Fort.	2,211	Hurley	1,272
Alcester	1,355	Huron	1,305
Altamont	1,834	Iroquois	1,401
Apple Creek valley.	1,711	Jamestown	1,395
Aurora	1,630	Jefferson	1,130
Belfield	2,577	Kampeska, Lake	1,050
Bennett, Fort, signal station.	1,440	Kampeska, Lake, water.	1,714
Beresford	1,595	Kranzburg	1,982
Berthold, Fort	1,873	Lakota	1,519
Big Sioux River, water, second cross- ing	1,479	Langdon	1,615
Bismarck	1,668	Larimore	1,138
Bismarck, signal station.	1,677	Little Missouri	2,255
Bismarck, Missouri river, low water.	1,616	McCook	1,123
Blue Lake	1,665	McKenzie	1,666
Bottineau	1,045	Madison Lake	1,576
Brookings	1,636	Mandan	1,644
Buford, Fort	1,949	Mapleton	903
Buford, Fort, signal station.	1,876	Meckling	1,167
Burbank	1,153	Milbank Junction	1,149
Canistota	1,555	Minot	1,560
Canova	1,525	New Buffalo	1,206
Canton	1,291	New Madison	1,646
Carthage	1,440	Oriska	1,240
Casselton	930	Park River	1,003
Cavour	1,311	Parker	1,340
Centreville	1,233	Pembina, signal station.	791
Church's Ferry	1,400	Pierre	1,438
Clark	1,785	Preston, Lake	1,666
Clark, Fort	1,827	Randall, Fort	1,245
Davenport Depot	921	Ransom, Fort	1,438
Davis Junction	1,130	Richardton	2,464
Deadwood, signal station.	4,630	Rugby	1,505
De Smet	1,726	St. John	1,950
Devils Lake	1,469	Salem	1,517
Dickinson	2,403	Sauborn	1,460
Doland	1,355	Sentinel Butte	2,707
Eden	1,239	Sheyenne River	1,200
Egan	1,510	Sims	1,660
Elk Point	1,142	Sioux Falls	1,387
Ellendale	1,451	South Heart	2,470
Eskelon Lake, station.	1,447	Spiritwood	1,477
Esmond	1,430	Steele	1,857
Fairview	1,542	Stevenson, Fort, signal station.	1,734
Fairview	1,231	Sully, Fort	1,688
Fargo	903	Sully Springs	2,047
Fawn Lake, water.	1,320	Tappen	1,700
Flandreau	1,550	Totten, Fort	1,480
Frankfort	1,266	Union, Fort	1,970
Gary	1,484	Valley City	1,218
Gaysville	1,178	Valley Springs	1,392
Gladstone	2,346	Vermillion	1,161
Glen Ullin	2,070	Vilas	1,480
Goodwin	1,996	Virginia	1,221
Grafton	827	Volga	1,630
Grand Forks	830	Wadsworth, Fort	1,806
Hawarden	1,182	Wadsworth	1,650
Henry	1,810	Wahpeton	662
Herman	1,654	Watertown	1,720
Herman, Lake	1,646	Wheatland	985
		Yankton, signal station.	1,228

MAKING TWO STATES

CHAPTER CIV

EARLY EFFORTS TO ATTAIN STATEHOOD

1877 and Later

TERRITORY NEAR NEIGHBOR TO THE UNITED STATES—IMPORTANCE OF DIVIDING THE TERRITORY—REMARKABLE CONDITIONS ATTENDING THE GROWTH OF THE TERRITORY—THE FIRST STEP FOR STATEHOOD, 1877—SENATOR RAMSEY'S BILL FOR OJIBWAY TERRITORY—NORTHERN ARGUMENT FOR DIVISION—WOMAN SUFFRAGE FOR THE PEBBINA TERRITORY—DELEGATE KIDDER'S GREAT SPEECH—JUDGE BARNES ADVOCATES DIVISION—FIRST GUN FOR STATEHOOD—NORTH AND SOUTH DIVISION PROPOSED—GOVERNOR HOWARD FAVORED THREE STATES—A LEGISLATIVE MEMORIAL FOR DIVISION IN 1879—A NORTHERN WHEAT FARM.

ACHIEVING STATEHOOD

The territory is much nearer the United States Government than the state. The citizen of the state comes to the territory and he finds that he is in a new political atmosphere. Heretofore he has regarded the state he resided in as compassing the boundaries of his political horizon. In the territory he comes to regard the whole boundless continent as his political domain. The experience of Dakotans, at least, largely confirmed this view, for he found that his intimate political connections were the President, the Congress, the secretary of the interior, the secretary of war, the commissioner of Indian affairs, the commissioner of the general land office, prominent military officials, and others. The denizen of the territory involuntarily becomes a nationalist. Does some scheming Legislature fracture his dearly-prized exemption law, he flies to Congress and the fracture is made whole; does a railroad bond act need the breath of vitality breathed into it, Congress breathes it. Uncle Sam appoints the principal officers and pays them; Uncle Sam surveys the lands and sells them. The Federal Government is the ruling authority, and hence the citizen of the territory comes to regard himself as a citizen of the United States, and not as a citizen of any particular sub-division thereof. The citizen of the territory has a greater personal interest in the results of the presidential and congressional elections than the citizens of the states. The national policies of the leading parties are scrutinized more closely in the territories, for therein is declared what is in store for him when the new administration is installed. He has no vote in the national contest, but he is ever found carrying a torch and marching in the procession of his party, though disfranchised.

STATEHOOD DEBATE

The division of the Territory of Dakota into two equal parts practically, by an east and west boundary, was probably the most important question of our territorial era. Not alone as affecting the people of that present time, but as extending its influence for weal or woe into the future, and it is quite remarkable that there was not more substantial agreement and energetic effort among the political leaders of the territory in the furtherance of this project. While division was assured in case South Dakota should be admitted, it was morally certain that it could not be obtained in that way, in view of the partisan complexion of Congress; the democrats who would favor division, being almost to a man opposed to statehood at that time, for party reasons.

Statehood, under the circumstances, as Congress was divided, probably could not have been obtained earlier than it came to us, but division was within reach in 1882, and it was beyond doubt that with division accomplished and out of the way, statehood was sure to come just as soon as national party conditions favored it.

IMPORTANCE OF DIVISION

The agitation of the subject, and the accomplishment of statehood for Dakota, occupied ten years of time as a national question. It absorbed for a portion of the time almost the entire attention given to public matters, of the people of Dakota, and was a prominent and leading question before Congress for seven years, and in all probability decided the presidential election of 1888 in favor of the republican candidate, which, as a party, favored Dakota's claims.

There was a remarkable amount of immigration, beginning during the year 1878, and continuing with accelerative volume, until 1885-6, never equaled in any country in modern times. During the larger portion of this period Dakota was receiving an average of 1,000 new settlers each week in the year for four or five years, and in 1882-3 it was claimed that we increased 75,000 within a twelve-month. The truth of this matter, when related to the people east, as it was by some of Dakota's stump speakers during the presidential campaigns, sounded so improbable, being without precedent, that speakers were loath to claim all they were entitled to, apprehending that they would be suspected of misrepresentation, and a taint be cast upon their reliability. The annual volume of immigration diminished rapidly with the year 1886, and did not revive. It did not cease entirely, but ceased to be remarkable. The best of the public land had been largely taken up within a reasonably marketable distance of the railroad lines, and the magnet that had attracted the unprecedented immigration of the former years was the abundance and fertility of our public lands. The federal census of 1880, taken in May, gave the territory a population of 135,700. The decennial census of 1885, federal and territorial combined, gave a population of 415,610, an increase in five years of 280,910, or 56,000 a year. Very few of us then residing in the territory realized how rapidly its population was increasing, due in a great measure to the broad extent of the domain that was being peopled. The biennial elections, however, served to assure us that the tide was flowing hither.

Another unerring index of rapid growth in numbers was the increasing demand for the organization of new counties. In 1880 there were six counties organized; in 1881, seven; in 1882, four only (due unquestionably to the neglect of the governor in responding to many applications). In 1883 there were twenty-six counties organized (many of them having applied for organization the year before). In 1884 there was a falling off to six, but at this time there was no delay occasioned by the executive. But few counties remained on the territorial map in an unorganized condition, and these lacked the number of adult resident voters to entitle the county to organization, which had been increased by a new law in 1885, to 150.

In this history of the statehood movement we have given many of the principal incidents attending it during the long time it was pending, but we have not been able to give everything we wished—it would have taken too many pages. But we have endeavored to give all that appeared necessary to a complete understanding of the long contest, the vital questions involved going to the foundations of our liberties; and a large portion of it, we are gratified to say, relates many interesting incidents in the history of the country involving this fundamental question.

It may be said that one of the principal objects the white race have in view in occupying the domain of a territory is the making or forming of states, but naturally enough one hears very little of this purpose, except in Fourth of July orations, until the coming in of population in sufficient numbers gives warrant for claiming it, and in the case of Dakota this accretion of numbers during the first decade and a half, was so very moderate that it was sometimes questioned whether we were standing still or moving either way. As our growth, when it began in 1878, was a marvel of rapid increase, and surpassed any similar event in the history of our country, so may it be said of our tardy growth during these early years, that it had no precedent.

When the clamor for statehood grew loud enough to attract the attention of our neighboring states, it was not generally known that Dakotans desired that the territory be divided and preparations be made for two states, and this misapprehension caused some confusion and some revising of opinions as the situation was better understood. But when it became known that Dakota was four times the size of Ohio, the popular voice was united for division.

No censure is intended, nor would it be justified, of the party that was responsible for Dakota's delay in securing statehood. It was a play for power, nation wide, and while it was easy to discover "the mote in our brother's eye, we gave no attention to the beam in our own." All political parties at home in Dakota, may with truth be said to have been united for division, except intermittently during the Church administration, and in all parties were found a few who opposed it, some with good conscience believing it not to be for the best. "All is well that ends well," and in the light of such experience as statehood has afforded, the two state plan has justified the promise made in its behalf.

The first formal step in the direction of statehood on the part of the people of Dakota was taken at a public meeting at Yankton in April, 1877, but prior to this Dakota's Legislatures and delegates in Congress had been at work agitating the division proposition through memorials and bills, since 1870.

It should be borne in mind that the lower House of Congress had a democratic majority in 1880, and remained so until the expiration of Cleveland's administration in 1889, hence the insurmountable difficulty of procuring any legislation from the House that threatened to weaken that party's control. The Senate at the same time had a republican majority.

OJIBWAY TERRITORY

During the Territorial Legislative session of 1870-71, there appeared the first formidable sentiment in favor of dividing the Territory of Dakota on the parallel of the 46th degree of north latitude, the northern portion to be named "Lincoln," or "Chippewa." A memorial to Congress, urging division on this line, and the erection of a new territory north, was passed by an unanimous vote. The Pembina country was the only portion of the northern section that had representation in the Legislature because it was the only section that held a white settlement when the apportionment was made in 1868, and this it had held from the organization of the territory in 1861 with the exception of the years from 1863 to 1867, while the Chippewa Treaty was pending.

The building of the Northern Pacific Railway through the territory in 1872 gave to the northern half immediate commercial and political importance, and intensified the popular desire, throughout the territory, for division. The public men and leading business interests of Minnesota were also heartily in favor of divisions, foreseeing prodigious trade advantages from the settlement of that portion of the territory.

Accordingly, early in January, 1872, United States Senator Ramsey, of Minnesota, introduced a bill in the Senate providing for division on the aforementioned parallel, which divided the territory into two nearly equal sections, giving to each about seventy thousand square miles. Dakota's delegate to Congress at this time was the Hon. Moses K. Armstrong, a very capable man and one of the earliest advocates of division of the territory on the 46th parallel. The bill for division, introduced by Senator Ramsey, in the Senate, was a measure suggested and probably prepared by Mr. Armstrong, but he, being a democrat, felt that as a matter of policy it would be well to have the bill favorably acted upon by the Senate first which would materially promote its passage through the House. This expedient was a favorite one of Dakota's ablest delegates who possessed the good will of some influential senator, and Ramsey, at that time, stood high in the councils of the nation. Mr. Armstrong and his constituents favored the name of Pembina for the new territory north, but Mr. Ramsey was possessed with a sentiment that the name should be Ojibway. He was one of the pioneers of Minnesota, the first state governor, had been engaged as a representative of the United States in making numerous treaties with the Indians, and had learned that the Ojibways were among the first of the powerful and influential tribes to occupy portions of the domain of the Northwest which was to be included in the new territory, and while he was urged by Armstrong to consent to the name of Pembina as the one unanimously desired by Dakotians, he was willing to concede to Armstrong every article in the bill, but he insisted that the Ojibways were much more entitled to the title than the modern name of Pembina which no one was prepared to vouch for as having a legitimate parentage. 1872 was a presidential election year. President Grant would be a candidate for re-election and it was the general belief that he would be re-elected, and that Congress would remain republican. With these facts in mind, Armstrong being a democrat and also a candidate for re-election concluded to humor the senator, and possibly have the name changed when the bill reached the House.

Whatever Congress might have been willing to do, or to leave undone, it apparently had confidence in the proverb, "let well enough alone," when the quadrennial period approached for selecting a new president.

The southern boundary of Ojibway intersected the western boundary of Minnesota, about eighteen miles south of Breckinridge, Minnesota, on Red River, and crossed the Missouri River about thirty miles south of Fort Rice. The 49th parallel defined its northern limit, and Montana was its boundary line on the west. According to custom the bill was referred to the Committee on Territories, and was favorably reported by Senator Boreman, from the committee, in February following, with an amendment striking out the name "Ojibway," and inserting "Pembina," which indicated that Armstrong had called on Senator Boreman during the interval. It was claimed for the proposed territory that it had a population of 10,000, and it would embrace an area of 70,000 square miles; and further, that the settlers at Pembina were obliged to travel from one thousand to one thousand five hundred miles to reach the capital of Dakota at Yankton.

The bill passed the Senate; Senator Ramsey had satisfied himself that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet," and he knew that his Minnesota constituents were just as heartily in favor of the proposed division as the people of Dakota. But when the bill came up in the House it met a determined and uncompromising opposition. The arguments, or pretexts for opposing it were mainly that it would entail an unnecessary expense; that the population did not warrant it; and that it was a movement engineered by politicians to provide federal positions for their friends. The measure went to a committee in the House and there slumbered. Being a presidential year, the House members to a certain extent, felt that the passage of such a measure might be used to their detriment in the pending campaign.

The population of the entire territory at the time was about twenty-five thousand, very largely concentrated in the southeastern part of the territory, in Union, Clay, Yankton, Bon Homme, Charles Mix, Lincoln and Minnehaha counties, with a sprinkling of settlers in Hutchinson and Turner counties. There were 1,213 whites in the Pembina country in the North, as returned by the federal census of 1870; farming settlements having been made in the Valley of the Cheyenne about that time. There was no question that the population of that portion of the territory had rapidly and materially increased and was daily increasing at the time this bill for division was pending in Congress. The building of the railroad employed a large number of white people, a great proportion of whom became citizens of the territory, while a much larger number came in to secure advantageous locations in the agricultural sections and good business openings.

There was no opposition to division from any portion of the territory. On the contrary the proposition was heartily supported by the citizens of the south, who were the first to move in agitating the plan, for in fact there were few if any communities in the proposed new territory, save Pembina, when the efforts for division were first set on foot as early as 1868. The people in the southern portion foresaw, as a consequence of the railway construction in the north, a rapid influx of immigrants to that quarter, with a demand for representation in the Legislature which could not be denied; and also a demand for at least a fair share of the public institutions of the territory, courts, conventions, and a proportionate voice in all territorial affairs. There was a well grounded impression in the south that there never could be any real community of interest between the northern and southern portions—that the northern part would be commercially and socially allied with Minnesota. They foresaw a continual sectional strife and contention that in the nature of the situation would be inevitable and grow more and more acute the longer it was endured; and this forecast of the diversity of interests, spoken by the seers of the south, has proved substantially correct. There was never a protracted period of cordial fellowship and confidence enjoyed by either section for the other. Compromise followed compromise, public institutions were duplicated and established to placate sectional animosities which the natural situation had engendered. Had circumstances moulded the whole into a single state, the people of the southern portion believe it would have been a very unhappy union.

The settlers of the southern part of the territory, up to this time, 1872, had made their way to their new homes over hundreds of miles of prairie, housing in their canvas-covered emigrant wagons; while the pioneers of the northern portion, in large part, were transported to their pioneer domiciles in railway cars, and soon grew impatient at the comparative conservatism of their southern brothers whose ardor for "all the comforts of civilization," had been materially cooled by "circumstances beyond his control." In disunion, in this case, there would have been the greater strength, harmony and prosperity. Disunion finally came with statehood, and the subsequent career of both sections has fully justified the wisdom of separation.

The sentiment for a division of the Territory of Dakota was much more outspoken and decisive among the people of the northern half of the territory than in the southern portion. Not that there was any opposition to the proposed division in any section, but it was a topic seldom discussed among the people of the southern half in the early days of 1873, and for a few years thereafter, which was the period when the northern portion was receiving its pioneer inhabitants, and who appear to have come into the territory with a pre-conceived opinion that an independent political organization was absolutely essential to the progress and prosperity of the country north of the 46th parallel. A little study of the current of events of that day will be sufficient to convince one that the political and commercial interests of Minnesota aided by the influence of the Northern Pacific Railroad were the most powerful influences in awakening and keeping alive the agitation. Minnesota through its senators was able at any time to command the assent of the United States Senate to a division bill, but the House could never be won over.

In 1874, Delegate Armstrong's bill for the organization of the Territory of Pembina from the northern half of Dakota was defeated in the lower House of Congress in June, the majority of the members of the House holding that the northern division would never have sufficient population to entitle it to statehood, and in order to get into the Union in the future and have the advantages of state government, it would have to remain a part of the Territory of Dakota.

In the winter of 1873-74 a petition was generally circulated through the northern portion of the territory, memorializing Congress to divide the territory, while at the same time Senator Ramsey was championing the project in the Senate and Delegate Armstrong was engaged in an up-hill struggle for a similar law in the House. The petition stated that:

Since this proposition was before your honorable bodies at the last session, the Northern Pacific Railroad has been completed to the Missouri River, 200 miles within the limits of this proposed new territory, and the settlement is rapidly being made, not only along the line of the road, but in the valleys of the Red, Cheyenne, James, and Missouri rivers, and within the borders of this proposed new territory there is already a population of at least 7,000, which will be largely increased during the coming year.

The people have no direct communication with Southern Dakota, and but little interest in common with the people thereof.

The proposed new territory is left almost wholly without representation by the Dakota Legislature, and without provision for courts. The distance to the seat of government by the nearest traveled route, from any portion of this proposed new territory, is about seven hundred miles, and from Bismarck, a city of importance nearly equal to the present capital of Dakota, 900 miles.

The soil of the proposed new territory is well adapted to farming, less than twelve per cent of it being waste land, and is rich in mineral wealth.

It not only has 200 miles of completed railroad but has within its borders over two thousand miles of navigable rivers, embracing the Yellowstone, Missouri and Red rivers, with an abundance of timber along their borders.

It possesses, in short, all the elements necessary to build up a prosperous state, and in justice to the people already there, Congress should at once give them a territorial government.

The petition might have been taken as a reflection upon the fairness of the previous Legislature, which was the only one that had been held since the northern half had received the Northern Pacific Railroad and with it the population referred to in the petition. Prior to that time Pembina was the only considerable settlement and had been given all the representation its population would warrant. At the session of 1873-74, a member from Bismarck was admitted from Buffalo County, and from the most reliable data that could be had regarding the population of the four counties then organized north of the 46th parallel, an apportionment of the members of the Legislature was made on the same basis as that applied to the other counties and districts in the territory. As the matter of courts was also referred to in the petition, it is well to state, now that the fact can do no injury to the object prayed for in the petition, that the County of Pembina, in which Fargo was situated at the date of its birth, had had a United States District Court since 1860, and it had not been withdrawn, and in addition to this the following extraordinary proclamation of the governor had been made in 1873, providing two terms of court a year at Bismarck and one at Fargo, and a United States judge was assigned to the district. This explanation is due, in justice, to the elder Dakotians of the southern part of the state, lest the future generations might be led to pass an erroneous and unkind judgment upon their official conduct. The rush into the northern portion of Dakota Territory that accompanied the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad to Bismarck was similar in every respect to the crowds that surged along the line of the Union Pacific when it was being built through Nebraska and Wyoming, at which time, 1867, Wyoming was a part of Dakota Territory, and from an uninhabited country in 1867 grew to several thousand population during the succeeding year, and cast three or four thousand votes in the delegate election of 1868. Such anomalies in the rapid increase of population could not have been foreseen, and hence could not have been provided for.

A law was enacted by the Legislature of 1873 organizing the counties of Cass and Burleigh, but no provision was made for holding terms of court in either county, and the early rapid growth of both places in population and business brought with it considerable contention that demanded the interposition of courts of advanced jurisdiction. Chief Justice Peter C. Shannon had been assigned to the northern district immediately after his appointment, and held a term of court at Pembina, but appears to have been without authority to relieve the pressing situation in the principal towns along the line of the new Northern Pacific. In this emergency the governor of the territory, in view of the manifest necessity which existed for local courts, and by virtue of the authority in him vested by the fifteenth section of the organic act of the territory, proclaimed and directed that until otherwise ordered, courts shall be held as follows: "At Fargo on the third Monday of May and the second Tuesday of September, and shall continue as long as business shall require. The District Court for the County of Burleigh to be held at Bismarck on the second Wednesday of June, and shall continue as long as the business shall require." The proclamation was dated October 30, 1873.

THE PEMBINA BILL AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE

On May 20, 1874, in the United States Senate, Senator Boreman called up the Senate bill to establish the Territory of Pembina and provide a temporary government therefor.

Senator Sargent then offered an amendment insuring women the right to vote in the new territory on an equality with men, which led to a discussion with the subject of female suffrage as the theme. Mr. Sargent's amendment provided that the right to vote or hold office should not be restricted on account of race, color or sex. He said he believed that the amendment was not only justified, but was required by the organic law of the United States. Numerous petitions had been presented to Congress asking this right for females, and the only notice taken of them was to report adversely. In the other House the republican party is to a certain extent pledged to extend suffrage to females in the territories. To confer upon women the right of suffrage would be to open wide avenues for them, and the advancement of society. Give them an opportunity through the ballot-box and they will break up the nefarious practices now existing, and purify society. The spirit of the constitution would be carried out if women would be allowed to vote. Senator Stewart, of Nevada, favored the amendment also.

Senator Bayard, of Delaware, said it seemed hardly possible that the Senate of the United States proposed such a change in the very fundamental principles of the Government. That such a change as this should be blocked out as an experiment in utter disregard of the decree by which men and women were created could hardly be believed. The sexes were different physically and mentally; yet here was this poor, puny attempt in disregard of every experience of enlightenment as had been given by divine decree. Such legislation was irreverent and in defiance of the laws of God. It would give two heads to a family, and there would no longer be that unity, that subordination required by Christian marriage.

Senator Morton, of Indiana, said he was in favor of the amendment upon what he urged was a fundamental principle of our Government. The Declaration of Independence said that all men were created free and equal. The word men did not mean males, it meant the whole human family. The women of this country had never given their consent to this Government within the theory of the Declaration of Independence. The old common law argument was that the husband took care of the interests of the wife; the father those of daughter, and son those of the mother. But under common law the husband was a tyrant and a despot. This old doctrine had been overcome and women could hold property now. He believed that woman had the same natural right to a voice in this government that man had.

Senator Flanagan said that he was a new convert to the cause of woman suffrage, and was made a convert by the glorious efforts of the woman's crusade against intemperance. Woman, only, through Almighty God could save the country from the worst of all evils, intemperance. Women could control the country; man could not. They were more directly interested in all questions of morality than the men, and from this time henceforth he intended to be a "woman's man."

Senator Merriman said he did not yield in his admiration of woman to any man, and by no act or word of his would he detract from her dignity, but he claimed the right to be judged together with her as to what means were best calculated to promote her interests. He did not believe that woman herself thought that her happiness or dignity would be advanced by having all the political rights of man conferred upon her. And the strongest evidence of this fact was that neither in this country nor in England had women demanded such rights. The number that had demanded as compared with the number that had not, was but a drop in the ocean. He dissented, with all respect, from the revolutionary construction which the senator from Indiana had put upon the Declaration of Independence, and denied that it meant females as well as males. Senator Stewart said that ten years from now there would not be a man in the Senate opposed to female suffrage.

Senator Merriman asked why not try the experiment in the District of Columbia.

Senator Sargent replied, we will when we get a chance.

Senator Conklin, of New York, said an amendment was in order to this very bill to enforce woman suffrage in the District of Columbia. If his friend Stewart desired to try the experiment in the territory, why not try it as an experiment here? The senator from Nevada ought not to flinch; if he did Conklin could not follow him.

Senator Stewart said he would only ask the senator to follow him in this one little step to have woman suffrage in the new territory. If he broke down there he would never ask him to follow again.

Senator Carpenter, of Wisconsin, said that he would vote for the amendment to confer suffrage upon women in the new territory. He believed that in every condition in life the society of woman was beneficial. In every place where she was found everything was neat and orderly. If our wives, mothers and daughters go to election places there will be decency, order and peace there.

Senator Ferry, of Michigan, favored the amendment.

Senator Anthony, of Rhode Island, said he had no doubt woman suffrage would come in time. He did not believe that suffrage was a woman's right or a man's right. It was not a natural right but a political right regulated by the body politic.

Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, denied that the right to vote was essential to the protection of the natural rights of women. Under the law now in many states they had the right to do as they please with their property. The laws of this country generally discriminated in favor of women.

After further discussion, the Sargent amendment was rejected, yeas, 19; nays, 27, as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Anthony, Carpenter, Chandler, Conover, Ferry (Michigan), Flanagan, Gilbert, Harvey, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Pratt, Sargent, Stewart, Sprague, Tipton, West, Washburn, Windom—19.

Nays—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Clayton, Conklin, Cooper, Davis, Edmunds, Freelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton (Maryland), Hitchcock, Jones, Kelley, McCreery, Merriman, Morrill (Vermont), Norwood, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Scott, Sherman, Wadleigh, Wright—27.

The bill was then rejected, 19 to 29.

TERRITORY OF PEMBINA—KIDDER'S BILL

A bill was introduced by Delegate J. P. Kidder, in the House of Representatives, December 17, 1875, to establish the Territory of Pembina, and referred to the Committee on Territories. The text of the bill follows:

That all that part of the Territory of the United States described as follows: Commencing at a point on the Red River of the North where the forty-ninth degree of north latitude crosses the same; thence south along the western boundary line of the State of Minnesota to the seventh standard parallel; thence west along said parallel to the eastern boundary line of the Territory of Montana; thence north along said boundary line to the forty-ninth degree of north latitude; thence eastwardly along said parallel to the place of beginning; be, and the same is, hereby organized into a temporary government, by the name of the Territory of Pembina.

Sec. 2. That the said Territory of Pembina, and the several officers thereof, shall be invested with all the rights, powers and privileges, and shall be subject to all the regulations, restrictions and provisions, contained in Chapter One, of Title Twenty-three of the Revised Statutes of the United States, except as is herein otherwise provided.

Sec. 3. That the legislative power and authority of said territory shall be vested in the governor and Legislative Assembly. The Legislative Assembly shall be vested in a Council and House of Representatives. The Council shall consist of nine members, which may be increased to thirteen, and the House of Representatives shall consist of thirteen members, which may be increased to twenty-seven, provided, that the right of voting and holding office in said territory shall be exercised only by inhabitants thereof, who are citizens of the United States, or have declared their intention to become such.

Sec. 4. That a delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States, to serve during each Congress of the United States, may be elected by the voters of said territory, who shall be entitled to the same rights and privileges as are exercised and enjoyed by the delegates from the several other territories. Provided, that no person shall be a delegate who shall not have attained to the age of twenty-five years.

Sec. 5. That when the land in said territory shall be surveyed under the direction of the Government of the United States, preparatory to bringing the same into market, sections sixteen and thirty-six in each township in said territory shall be, and the same are hereby, reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in the state or states hereafter to be erected out of the same.

Sec. 6. That the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby authorized, to appoint a surveyor-general for the said territory, who shall locate his office at such place as the secretary of the interior shall, from time to time, direct; and whose duties, powers, obligations, responsibilities, compensation, and allowances for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and incidental expenses, shall be the same as those of the Territory of Dakota.

In support of this measure Delegate Kidder stated:

The people of the territory were unanimous in desiring such division; saying that the two sections were virtually separated anyway, and there could be no harmony of interests on account of the lack of communication and travel between the northern and southern parts. The principal objection urged against division in Congress is, that there are not enough inhabitants to make it advisable; but this objection can be refuted by showing the facts and figures. Dakota has now between forty thousand and fifty thousand inhabitants, of whom about fifteen thousand reside in the northern half, which it is proposed shall form the Pembina Territory. There are many instances where territories have been formed in sections more sparsely settled, so that I do not consider that a valid objection. There is, however, another objection that has been raised, which is the extra expense of running another territory, where one now suffices. But there are two sides to this question. Remarkable as the statement may seem, it actually costs more now to defray the expenses of the one territory than it would if it were divided into two parts for this reason: the distances between the two sections are very great, and the means of communication so limited that it renders the court and other expenses of the territory enormous, saying nothing of the expenses to citizens of the territory that are required to visit the capital or transact business in the southern half. When I was judge, I have traveled, myself, 1,500 miles to reach Pembina from my home in Vermillion in order to attend court. Then there is the mileage of witnesses and jurors, so that, considering everything, it would be much cheaper to run two territorial governments. We are compelled to go around from Yankton, by way of St.

Paul, and oftentimes the witnesses, jurors, and marshals are obliged to travel 700 and 800 miles. The expenses of running the present territorial government would seem to an outsider as if something was wrong, but those acquainted with the condition of affairs can readily see where the necessity exists for such great expenditures, and that the expense of having two territories would be less than at present. I have no doubt that division will eventually be secured, though it may not come at this session. It is claimed that the democratic congressmen will object because it will afford the President a chance to appoint a few more federal officers; and just at this time some of the politicians who fancy their party is just going in and the other just going out, may deem it unwise to allow the President the slightest increase of opportunities for making appointments. This may influence some, but I think the democrats will be honest enough and fair enough not to allow this to interfere if they deem the plan a meritorious one in other respects.

TO OPEN THE BLACK HILLS

In relation to the opening of the Black Hills to settlement by white people—that proposition is also of the first importance to the people of the territory for the reason that the greater part of the hills lie within the boundaries of the territory, and the people have been working for some time to get them opened up, but the principal obstacle seems to be the Indians and what to do with them, for they claim to own the country. Something, however, will have to be done that will open that section to the whites for they can no longer be held back from taking possession.

I think the best way is to take the hills and grant the Sioux Indians in return an annuity, and in that way purchase the country from them. The Indians do not use it even for hunting and the sentiment of the country is overwhelming in favor of the whites occupying it. I believe the treaty of 1868, under which the Indians claim ownership of the hills was not legally made. I am confident that there are certain technicalities which render it legally justifiable to take the Black Hills from them. I do not wish at this time to enter into all the particulars of these, but it is a plain legal proposition, and one that can be sustained, I believe; and yet I would not have the Indians taken advantage of on account of these mere technicalities. I want to see them fairly treated; but they will have to lose the Black Hills, and it only remains to decide how they can best be helped in their efforts to be self-supporting. But I expect that at this session of Congress the matter will be disposed of in some way, and the opening of the Black Hills will be agreed upon. It is a problem that interests the whole Northwest, and is too important to be longer delayed.

PEMBINA TERRITORY—DELEGATE KIDDER'S SPEECH

When the Pembina bill No. 357 was favorably reported from the committee, late in the session, July, 1876, Mr. Kidder supported it in an able speech remarkable for its historical value. The speech follows:

Mr. Speaker:—Never in the history of this Government has the attention of the people been so profoundly awakened to the interests of its frontiers. The terrible news from the Black Hills country, the slaughter of a major general, five colonels, twenty-two commissioned officers, and over three hundred gallant soldiers, has almost stopped pulsation in the American heart. Historians will pause in writing of this epoch in our history and tremble as they attempt to record the horrible story. Fiat justitia coelum ruat. It is at this eventful period of our national history that I now ask the earnest consideration of Congress to this bill. A bill for this purpose has been before Congress for five years, and it has been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Territories three times. The consideration of this bill at this moment presents an opportunity not to be neglected by one careful of the welfare of his country and mindful of the perpetuity of its institutions. Encroachments upon the outposts are always vigilantly repulsed by the skillful commander, and are no less the study of the thoughtful statesman. Had wise warnings from distinguished senators and representatives from our West been heeded, the disasters of this day, bringing shame burning to the cheek of each member of this republic, would not have occurred. Instead of prairies running to waste, great territories would be in existence, and in place of scalping savages, a brotherhood of Americans. It is said that some unknown hand many years ago carved on a rock at Plymouth near where the Pilgrims landed, these lines:

"The eastern Nations fade, their glory ends;
The empire rises where the Sun descends."

The sentiment was but a paraphrase of Bishop Berkeley's line, which has been quoted so often as to become hackneyed:

"Westward the course of empire takes its way."

The gift of prophecy is given to few among mortals, and it is doubtful if the good bishop or the unknown carver on the granite cliff realized the idea.

We at this later day, standing in the centennial year of this great republic, may feel its force but not realize the power that this nation shall possess when the vast area west of the Mississippi shall be thronged by the multitudes which its fertile soil and mighty stores of the precious metals have "awaited through the centuries." The founders of this republic dreamed not of the brilliant future that awaited their descendants. When Boston was first laid out commissioners were appointed, so says the record, to make a road to the West. In due time they reported that they had marked out a road westward for six miles, which was as far "as ever would be required."

Even in 1803, when the purchase of the great Territory of Louisiana was under discussion, the territory that then stretched from the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, the statesmen of the infant republic seem to have been in doubt whether the lands beyond the Mississippi would ever be of value to us. Those who read the debates in Congress on that point will find that it was asserted on this floor that our settlements would not be extended beyond the Mississippi River in perhaps five hundred years.

Our political history is most beautifully illustrated by the following facts:

Organization of territories.—The territory of the United States, outside of the portion occupied by the original thirteen states, consisted in 1787 of the "territory northwest of the River Ohio," which extended west to the Mississippi; in 1799, of the above and "territory south of the River Ohio"; in 1797 to 1812, besides the above, the "Mississippi territory"; in 1803, besides the above, the "Province of Louisiana," which extended from the Gulf of Mexico and the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean in the Northwest; in 1819, besides the above, the several "Spanish cessions," Florida; in 1848, besides the above, the several "Mexican cessions," extending west to the Pacific; and in 1853, in addition, the Gadsden Purchase, south of the last before named. These with Alaska, purchased of Russia in 1867, were never organized with governments, but from time to time territorial or state forms were given to portions of them.

Indiana, formed as a territory from the territory northwest of Ohio, act of May 7, 1800.

By act of March 26, 1804, the "Province of Louisiana" was divided into the "Territory of Orleans," and the "District of Louisiana." The government of the latter was committed to the officers of the Territory of Indiana. By act of March 3, 1805, the District of Louisiana was organized as the Territory of Louisiana; and by act of June 4, 1812, the same was reorganized as Territory of Missouri.

Michigan, by act of January 11, 1805, was formed as a territory from the Territory of Indiana.

Illinois, by act of February 3, 1809, was formed as a territory from the Territory of Indiana.

Alabama, by act of March 3, 1817, was formed as a territory from the Territory of Mississippi.

Arkansas, by act of March 2, 1819, formed as Arkansas Territory from the Territory of Missouri.

Florida, by act of March 30, 1822, formed as a territory from the territory ceded by Spain.

The Indian Territory or country is not an organized political division of the United States.

Wisconsin, by act of April 30, 1836, formed as territory out of lands acquired by treaty with Great Britain and the French cession.

Iowa, by act of June 12, 1838, formed as a territory from the Territory of Wisconsin.

Oregon, by act of August 14, 1848, formed as a territory out of the French cession.

Minnesota, by act of March 3, 1849, formed as a territory out of land east of the Mississippi ceded by Great Britain.

Utah, by act of September 9, 1850, formed as a territory ceded by Mexico.

New Mexico, by act of September 9, 1850, formed as a territory out of land ceded by Mexico.

Washington, by act of March 2, 1853, formed as a territory from the Territory of Oregon.

Kansas, by act of May 30, 1854, formed as a territory out of the original Louisiana purchase.

Nebraska, by act of May 30, 1854, formed from the territory of the original Louisiana purchase.

Colorado, by act of February 28, 1862, formed as a territory from the Territory of Kansas.

Nevada, by act of March 2, 1851, formed as a territory from parts of California and Utah.

Dakota, by act of March 2, 1861, formed as a territory from a part of the original Territory of Nebraska, and all the Territory of Minnesota remaining after the creation of the State of Minnesota.

Arizona, by act of February 24, 1863, formed from the western part of the Territory of New Mexico.

Idaho, by act of March 3, 1863, formed as a territory. It had been contained in the territories of Oregon, Washington, Nebraska, Dakota, Utah, and has had Montana taken from it.

Montana, by act of May 26, 1864, formed as a territory from the northwestern part of Idaho.

Wyoming, by act of July 25, 1868, formed as a territory from portions of Utah, Dakota and Idaho.

Alaska (not a political division) ceded by Russia in 1868.

Statement of Facts.—The Territory of Dakota contains 150,832 square miles. Pembina will contain 72,030 square miles. It will extend from the 7th standard parallel, which is about eleven miles south of the 40th degree, to the British possessions, and from the Red River of the North to the Yellowstone. It has within its borders 600 miles on the Missouri, and over three hundred miles on the Yellowstone, and in all over two thousand miles of navigable rivers. Two lines of steamers ply regularly on the Red River and fleets of flat-boats run in connection with the Manitoba traffic. Five lines of steamers are operating on the Missouri, with a tonnage of several million pounds. A line of steamers is also intended to be put on the Yellowstone this season if Congress will permit the opening of the Yellowstone region. Already 200 miles of railroad are in operation in the proposed territory, and arrangements for extension across the territory have been made. Other roads are also projected, particularly the Chicago and Northwestern, which is already completed to Lake Kampeska and will terminate probably at Bismarck. The population of the proposed territory is not less than 12,000, and I am confident that it will soon largely exceed that number. The vote of that region in 1874 was over fifteen hundred, but there were many localities where no polls were opened, and the country being sparsely settled many had no opportunity for voting. The population is largely made up of farmers and in all parts of the territory farming operations are being carried on successfully. No country in the world is superior to the Red River country for agricultural purposes. Enormous crops of wheat, oats and corn are there produced. The wheat crop of the Red River the present season will not be less than half a million bushels. One man there has 10,000 acres growing in one field at the present time; others have respectively a thousand and more; very many have the usual number, 100 acres, and so on down.

The Red River is well timbered, and many streams, also well timbered, empty into it, while heavy bodies of timber are found on the Cheyenne and its tributaries. The James (Dakota) River, having less timber, is well adapted to agriculture, and is already settling rapidly. Thousands will find valuable locations along its waters, affording timber, water and the best prairie land I have ever seen. Between the Dakota and Missouri River coteaus will be found, and they consist largely of gravelly knolls; and while even here much valuable land is found, there is a disposition to condemn the whole country because these are within its borders. They are but thirty miles in length and the breadth of the territory is 400. The country west of the Missouri River, in the main, is better than that east of it, excepting, perhaps, the Red River Valley, which cannot be excelled for beauty and richness anywhere. It is watered by the Heart, Little Heart, Sweetwater, Little Missouri, Cannon Ball, Dancing Bear, Big Knife and scores of tributaries of these streams, all more or less timbered, while heavy bodies of cottonwood, oak, ash and elm are found on the Missouri.

The Bad Lands, of which much has been said, are extremely limited, and are represented in the beds of old streams, the bottoms of lakes, or at points where alkaline deposits have accumulated. In the proposed territory, at the point where crossed by the Northern Pacific Railroad, they are but five miles in extent instead of covering half the territory, as some have represented. East of the Missouri there is not a foot of these bad lands. The entire territory is well adapted to grazing; nutritious grasses grow luxuriantly and good water is found in abundance. Immense beds of gypsum and coal are found on the Missouri, and west of the Missouri gold and silver, the former within a few miles of Bismarck.

The Black Hills country is situated south of Pembina, but the mineral region extends north and west, and already exceedingly rich diggings have been found on the line of the North Pacific.

This portion of Dakota is isolated from the southern portion of the territory, and has but little communication with it, and there is but little common sympathy between the two sections.

Northern Dakota seems to be identified in interest with Minnesota and Wisconsin, Duluth and Milwaukee being its lake ports; while Southern Dakota is identified with Nebraska and Iowa, Chicago being its market.

Persons desiring to reach Yankton, the capital of Dakota, from Northern Dakota, except during a few months in summer, are forced to go by way of St. Paul and Sioux City, Iowa, traveling a thousand miles or more, as there is no communication between the two except a military road leading up the Missouri. And in cases of deep snow, when the roads leading south through Minnesota are blockaded, the trip is frequently made via Chicago. The members of the Legislature from Northern Dakota in 1873 actually drew and were entitled to it mileage from Bismarck to Yankton via Chicago, a distance of about sixteen hundred miles. In summer time, even by the rivers, from the settlements in Pembina to the capital of Dakota the distance is from 850 to 1,250 miles. Justice has been defeated in many instances because parties were not able to pursue their adversary to the capital of the territory. The expenses of the United States officers and witnesses traveling to and from the capital are immense and in this item alone much can be saved to apply toward the extra expenses of the new territory.

We have many precedents of the organization of the territories before us with a less population than this has. Mississippi was organized with a population of 8,850; Indiana, 5,041; Michigan, 4,000; Wisconsin, 7,000; Minnesota, 6,077; Washington, 1,201; Dakota, 4,837; Nebraska, 6,857; Arizona, 5,000; and Wyoming two years after its organization (1870) had a population of only 9,518. The average annual expenses of a territorial government of the United States are $27,463.84. Each has biennial sessions. Every other year, then, the expense is only about half this sum. Land offices are located at Fargo and Bismarck; United States courts are holden at Pembina, Fargo and Bismarck; and four daily newspapers are published in the contemplated territory.

The development and growth of this territory under an organization will tend to add greatly to the wealth of the Government, and in a few years its emigration will be thereby so much increased, and the expenses thereof will be so effectually eclipsed by gain that this Government of ours, in a pecuniary point of view, will be the winner in the transaction. The careful attention of the people of our land is now directed to that portion of the West where property and life are so insecure by reason of the conduct of the Sioux Indians and their affiliated bands. It behooves this Congress especially to meet promptly and firmly the demands coming in every direction from west of the Mississippi. The days of appeal are past, the moment for action has arrived, and I claim in behalf of the people I represent in the very heart of the troubles and dangers, such action on this bill as will guarantee to the settlers future security. How can we ask emigrants to expose themselves to the manifold horrors and dangers of our frontier unless we present to them some guarantee of protection? Treaty guarantees have proven false and a deception and the only trusty anchor of hope is the establishment of territorial governments, and none is at present before you but this of Pembina. The territory established, this fertile section would soon be developed, the land occupied by sturdy sons of toil, its many miles of navigable waters would be covered by fast-sailing vessels and steamboats; villages, towns and cities would spring into existence, presenting obstacles to Indian forays more insuperable than cavalry or infantry; capital would be employed in finishing the railroads already established and commenced, linking the far West to the East "in links stronger than steel." Time forbids me more than to allude to the wonderful geographical barrier known as the Couteau des Prairies, which separates the proposed Pembina from Southern Dakota, a natural plateau starting at the Missouri River and extending to the extreme western boundary, presenting a southern face from 500 to 1,500 feet in height, and which can only be overcome by the intrepid voyageur or by long detours of travelers, costing, for members of the Legislature, judges, witnesses, and others who from official duties are compelled to visit Yankton, the capital, nearly as much annually as the expenses of the proposed territory. The fertility of the country is known to those who have visited it. The proposed territory is well wooded; and under the security of a territorial government the day is not distant when searchers for health and pleasure will seek the salubrious climate and health-giving springs of the territory of Pembina instead of foreign climes, and braving the dangers and miseries of a tempestuous ocean.

Congress has just added Colorado, a brilliant star, to the constellation of states. Again let her entwine the centennial wreath around the crest of a new territory, and Pembina, in a few short years, will be added to that gorgeous cluster as one of the brightest jewels which now so magnificently adorn the American Union.

JUDGE A. H. BARNES SPEAKS FOR DIVISION

During the height of the strenuous efforts which the leading people of Dakota were making for a division of the territory, Judge A. H. Barnes, then presiding judge of the Third Judicial District, residing at Fargo, attended the winter term of the Supreme Court which was held at Yankton in December, 1875, and while there was invited to give his views on the subject of division. He spoke substantially as follows:

The people of the Northern Dakota want a division of the territory because they are so far remote from Southern Dakota that they do not feel any identity of interest; they have more population than Southern Dakota had when the territory was organized, and more than Michigan or Wisconsin at the time of their organization. They have a good agricultural country, a railroad running from the Red River to the Missouri River, with two flourishing, prosperous towns. Bismarck at the west end of the railroad must be a large commercial center, surrounded by a fair agricultural country. Fargo at the head of navigation on the Red River is a very prosperous town and in one of the best agricultural countries in the world. No country can produce better wheat or more of it to the acre. The same is true for 250 miles up and down the valley of the Red River. This valley is from 40 to 70 miles in width. Most of the land bordering on the river and streams tributary has already been preempted by settlers. The farms are generally quite large and farmers are quite prosperous though not rich. They have raised good crops and comparatively speaking are out of debt.

Grand Forks, seventy-five miles north of Fargo on Red River, is a very flourishing town. Pembina, the oldest town in the territory, within the past year appears to have started anew. There has been more actual settlement in the town and vicinity this year than in ten years before.

There are other reasons why a division of the territory is desirable. As we are now circumstanced, while the actual airline distance is but 300 to 400 miles from Yankton, the capital of the territory, to Bismarek or Fargo, practically we are 1,000 miles apart. To illustrate the inconvenience that our people are put to, persons having business in the Supreme Court, where the amounts involved are $500 or $600, might better lose the amount in controversy than to incur the expense of visiting the capital. Aside from this, if a separate territorial government was established, emigrants would flock there in greater numbers and the country would be more rapidly occupied.

The Northern Pacific Railroad at no distant day must be built through to the Pacific; but whether immediately built or not, the business upon the line of that road will from this time forward make it a good paying enterprise, and its new western terminus at Bismarek will be the commercial point and the depot for Northwestern Dakota and Montana. The amount of business now transacted there is the wonder and surprise of strangers visiting that point.

The tonnage on the Red River of the North from Fargo to Fort Garry is enormous. A fleet of twelve steamers is employed in the Red River carrying trade, and more are now being built.

As the case now stands Northern Dakota feels that she is unknown, neglected, and that her wants are not appreciated. A little appropriation of from $50,000 to $80,000 expended on the Red River rapids would give us sufficient water for uninterrupted navigation from April to November. This becomes more important every day, and as the country is settled along the river the amount of river business will continue to increase. If eastern representatives in Congress could fully realize what a vast amount of good would be done to that country by a small appropriation, it seems to me they would not hesitate a moment to vote for it.

THE FIRST STATEHOOD GUN

The proposition to organize a state out of the southern half of the territory was among the novelties mooted in the early months of 1877. The recent entrance of the Black Hills with its 10,000 population which was rapidly augmenting, within the ceded area, awakened a strong interest in this question, which did not abate, but gradually grew more potential as time passed; and culminated over a decade later in the admission of two states at the same time, both carved from the territory which had held them together in one political organization for twenty-eight years; a connection which the people of the territory had been vainly endeavoring to dissolve for nearly twenty years, but were held together by the strong eastern sentiment which was apprehensive of the growing power of the West by the increase of its states and its increasing representation in the United States Senate. The industrial and financial conditions of the two sections—the East and West—had begun to clash, disagreements were discovered on economic questions—and because of this there was a desire east to encourage the admission of large states. Dakota, as a whole, could have been admitted much earlier, by nearly a decade, had it asked for admission; and it will be recalled that Ordway, who was sent from New Hampshire to be governor of the territory in 1881, was a strenuous advocate of one state for the whole territory.

The first public movement in behalf of statehood took place at Yankton, the capital, at a mass meeting which was held in 1877, in response to a call—which is copied, following:

The undersigned citizens of Yankton County request that all persons favorable to the formation of a state government and the early admission of Dakota into the Union shall meet at the school house in Yankton, Thursday evening, April 19, 1877, at 8 o'clock.

Signed by:

A. J. Faulk
L. Congleton
C. C. Moody
Geo. H. Hand
Oliver Shannon
J. A. Potter

C. J. B. Harris
W. H. H. Beadle
M. Grady
George Wagner
Jared Boughton
J. W. Bramble

Frank Bem
Ephraim Miner
Wm. Tripp
Phil K. Faulk
J. B. Wymmn
Wm. Blatt

Samuel Vance
 H. C. Ash
 W. A. Burleigh
 C. E. Brooks
 C. A. Baxter
 J. J. Duffack
 Wm. Box
 E. C. Dudley
 G. H. Bangs
 Wm. Leeper
 John Peterson
 H. Carney
 E. A. Edwards
 N. Edmunds
 Bartlett Tripp
 S. L. Spink
 William Pound
 N. J. Cramer
 Rev. J. A. Potter
 A. W. Howard
 Jacob Brauch
 C. W. Cox
 Joseph Bader
 John Treadway
 P. H. Risling

Joseph Peir
 Martin Christopher
 G. W. Kingsbury
 John Lawrence
 Charles Eiseman
 M. A. Baker
 E. V. Derickson
 A. W. Lavender
 C. Broderson
 A. M. English
 M. M. Parmer
 Geo. N. Jenkins
 Ed. Higbee
 G. W. Roberts
 E. H. VanAntwerp
 H. F. Jenks
 F. L. VanTassel
 D. T. Bramble
 M. P. Ohlman
 Rev. M. Hoyt
 J. H. Burdick
 Lott S. Bayliss
 W. S. Bowen
 P. A. Dufour

B. S. Williams
 Leon Bernard
 Benj. Hart
 Henry Heidenreich
 A. Adler
 A. Zimlicka
 C. P. Edmunds
 Alexander Hughes
 J. C. McVay
 H. B. Wynn
 H. Buerdorf
 Fred Schnauber
 Joseph S. Praye
 J. G. Bauman
 W. F. Eldridge
 H. A. Calhoun
 Arthur B. Ancher
 L. M. Purdy
 Geo. E. Hawley
 M. H. Jenkinson
 James Noonan
 T. N. Bray
 John J. Thompson
 F. J. Dewitt

The proceedings of the meeting held pursuant to the call are next in order:

NON-PARTISAN STATEHOOD MEETING—THE INITIATIVE

Pursuant to published call a number of citizens assembled at the courthouse, in Yankton, Dakota Territory, on Thursday evening, April 19, 1877, for the purpose of discussing the feasibility and desirability of a state government for Dakota.

The meeting was called to order by Andrew Burleigh, whereupon Oliver Shannon, Esq., nominated Capt. C. E. Brooks, as chairman of the meeting, who was duly elected, and thereupon took the chair. The chair returned thanks for the honor conferred, and after a concise statement of the object of the meeting, S. H. Gruber, Esq., nominated G. W. Kingsbury for secretary of the meeting, who was duly elected. Oliver Shannon, Esq., then moved the appointment of a committee on resolutions, which motion being adopted, the chair appointed Messrs. W. H. H. Beadle, Oliver Shannon, Esq., and T. A. Kingsbury, as such committee; and the committee then retired to prepare its report.

The chair then stated that remarks would be in order, and Phil K. Faulk, Esq., being called upon, made an earnest address in favor of the state government, which was well received.

The Committee on Resolutions, through General Beadle, then made the following report:

Mr. Chairman, your Committee on Resolutions beg leave to submit the following report and ask its adoption:

Resolved, That in this period of reviving enterprise and returning prosperity throughout the land, we have a guarantee of the continuance and increase of the great advance upon which Dakota has now fairly entered; and as this assurance of a bright future is based upon undoubted, vast and enduring resources of varied and valuable kinds, we deem this the opportune occasion and favorable conditions for Dakota to assume the responsibilities and dignity of a state, and be admitted into the Union; and we set forth and declare these facts to the people of the country and to the Congress of the United States:

First. The Territory of Dakota has now been organized sixteen years, and several other territories have since been carved out of its organized boundaries. But beginning with hardly more than an Indian trading post and a small area of ceded lands, and surrounded by vast bands of hostile savages and devastated by their raids in its earlier years, it has gone forward steadily and with an ever increasing ratio of progress until now a large part of the domain is open to settlement or already occupied and productively improved. A vigorous enterprise is developing all the newer parts and it has not less than seventy-five thousand inhabitants, which number is now being increased by many hundreds every day.

Second. There are now over one hundred and fifty thousand square miles of area, but every reason of justice, interest and good policy demands that the northern half should be erected into a new territory without delay, leaving nearly nine-tenths of the population in the southern half, which would contain all the older settlements; a vast, settled and organized country, filled with intelligent, active and law-abiding people, with established institutions and codes of laws not surpassed by many of the older states, where schools and churches and all the advantages of organized society are secure and of the best character.

Third. The State of Dakota thus formed would include every element of material prosperity and all the resources which render good government certain, and secure the peace, protection and general welfare of society. The eastern half is a vast region of unsurpassed fertility and offering great advantages for agriculture and stock raising, while the western half supplements this with its many resources, but especially its abundance of the precious metals, of which but a sample has been shown, but which gives undoubted evidence of almost unexampled development for an unlimited time to come. Through the center of the proposed state passes the great Missouri River, now the highway of a rich and increasing commerce.

Fourth. There is every reason, geographical, political, topographical, legal, commercial, and in the best permanent interests of all its people and the general welfare of the nation, why the southern half of Dakota should be admitted as a State. It would not increase the burdens of the people, but would give self-government in fact, in place of the present temporary and anomalous system which we have outgrown. All others in the same tier of subdivisions west of the Mississippi are already states; and the uniform history of the nation has justified the steadfast faith of all our people in the confidence that when the present conditions should arrive Southern Dakota should become a state. The western border of the proposed state is the same meridian as that of Nebraska, and Dakota would not be so long east and west as that state and not longer than Kansas, while all experience and analogy prove that, like those, our territory should be divided east and west upon the natural lines of commerce. All the present advantages would remain and the slight apparent disadvantages would quickly disappear. With this natural, just and reasonable division and action a new and prosperous state can be created at once, the wealth and resources of each part become a blessing to all, and a great and civilized commonwealth be built up in these boundaries; while any other and unnatural division, based upon temporary and fleeting ideas of expediency, would limit vastly the natural enterprise of all efforts and prevent either, for a long period, if not permanently, from enjoying the advantages of state organization.

Resolved, That we believe finally the best and enduring interests of every part of Southern Dakota are to be found in this movement, and hailing all who are engaged in exploring and building up our goodly land, we invite and urge them to join with us in pushing forward this common and vital interest to a speedy realization.

WM. H. H. BEADLE, Chairman,
OLIVER SHANNON,
T. A. KINGSBURY, Committee.

The resolutions were received with much enthusiasm, and on motion were unanimously adopted. The following letter was then presented by Andrew F. Burleigh, and read by the secretary:

Vermillion, Dakota, April 18, 1877.

Andrew F. Burleigh, Esq.

Dear Sir:—Yours of the 15th instant is received, and replying thereto I have this to say. I intend to attend the meeting at your city tomorrow evening, and shall unless I am prevented by business engagements. If I am not there, and inquiry is made of my judgment in the premises, say to the meeting that I am in favor of a new state government and the early admission of Dakota into the Union; and as her delegate in Congress will employ all honorable means at my command to obtain that result.

Respectfully,

J. P. KIDDER.

General Beadle then spoke on the subject of statehood, presenting the subject in a very clear and forcible manner, and exhibiting the varied and important advantages to be derived from the change.

Gen. William Tripp, one of the earliest settlers and first lawyers in the territory, spoke in favor of the project. Oliver Shannon spoke eloquently. P. A. Dufour spoke very sensibly. S. H. Gruber spoke earnestly. The question of the appointment of a committee was then discussed. George H. Hand was then called for and made a very earnest and sensible speech. The meeting then adjourned until the next Monday evening.

The following Monday evening, April 23d, pursuant to adjournment, the citizens of Yankton assembled in the courthouse at 8 o'clock P. M., whereupon Capt. C. E. Brooks, chairman of the meeting, called the citizens to order. S. A. Boyles was then elected secretary of the meeting. Mr. Andrew F. Burleigh then offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the chairman of this meeting appoint a committee of five to select and report the names of seven persons to act as an executive committee for advancing the purposes of this movement; and to prepare a memorial to Congress, to obtain signatures thereto, and forward the same to Washington, and to do all other things proper to secure the cooperation of all parts of the proposed state.

The chairman thereupon appointed the committee. The committee thus formed then retired for consultation; and after some time spent therein, reported the following through Governor Edmunds:

Mr. Chairman:—Your committee appointed to select an executive committee under the resolution of Mr. Burleigh beg leave to submit and recommend the following as such committee: Gen. W. H. H. Beadle, Geo. W. Kingsbury, Andrew F. Burleigh, Oliver Shannon, C. E. Brooks, Fred Schnauber and Geo. H. Hand.

The report was adopted.

Governor Pennington presented the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the citizens of the various organized counties of the Dakota Territory are cordially solicited to organize local societies for the purpose of promoting the cause of statehood by disseminating information respecting its advantages, and that said societies are respectfully invited to cooperate with the one now organized in Yankton County.

Interesting and instructive remarks were then made by Chief Justice Shannon, Governor Pennington, Bartlett Tripp, Esq., Governor Edmunds, Dr. J. M. Miller, Col. G. C. Moody, Judge Lott M. Bayless, and General Beadle.

On motion the meeting then adjourned subject to the call of the executive committee.

A LONGITUDINAL DIVISION PROPOSED

The Territory of Lincoln was the name given to a proposed new political division of the Territory of Dakota by United States Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, in 1877, who introduced a bill for the division of Dakota along the line of the 100th meridian of longitude west from Greenwich. The bill was stoutly urged by its Nebraska paternity, and no less vehemently championed by Senator Chaffee, of Colorado, the new state that had been admitted to the Union in 1876. The sentiment among the people of the northern portion of the Black Hills was favorable to the measure, influenced largely by the ambition of Deadwood to become a territorial capital. Chaffee's support of the bill was secured because of his personal friendship for a large number of old ex-Coloradans, business and professional men and miners from that state, who had emigrated to the Dakota gold fields to better their material condition. The important argument put forth in support of the measure at Washington claimed that under the existing order in Dakota, the agricultural interest largely dominated the territory, controlled the Legislature, and was not in sympathy with or disposed to enact measures that would best promote the material interests and domestic welfare of the mineral section—that there was some sort of an ineradicable barrier that stood in the way of the mineral section procuring such legislation as would best promote its interests.

The division line along the 100th meridian would divide Dakota into two badly proportioned territories, with no natural boundary between them. Each division would be about four hundred miles in length north and south, and 200 miles east and west. The Missouri River would flow through Lincoln Territory until it reached a point on the lower Brule Indian reserve, south of Pierre, where it would cross into Dakota. Pierre had no inhabitants at that time, and Hughes County was not organized. Bismarek, which was within the confines of the proposed Lincoln Territory, was occupied by an energetic people who, if correctly represented by its able delegation sent to Washington to promote the division, claimed that Bismarek would be the capital of the new territory. The Red River valley inhabitants, including Fargo, raised a powerful voice against such division, having been among the earnest supporters of the proposed division on the 46th parallel of north latitude.

For a time the Saunders project seemed to have some show of success, and excited not a little consternation among the peoples of Eastern Dakota, where the settlers had been unitedly working for many years to secure a division of the territory on east and west line along the 46th parallel. The success of the Saunders measure would upset all that had been done in that direction, and would probably stand in the way of a division when the time came for statehood. Public meetings were held at different points and the hostile sentiment of the settlers found expression in resolutions and remonstrances, which were forwarded to the territorial delegate, Judge Kidder, who was safely hostile to the measure and made a very able presentation to Congress of the reasons why the Saunders bill would operate injuriously not alone to Dakota, but to the entire Northwest. The great Sioux Reservation that had been given to Indians under the treaty by which they relinquished the Black Hills covered substantially all the plains country west of the Missouri between the Missouri and the two branches of the Cheyenne and extending from the southern boundary of the territory to the Cannon Ball River, and there was every reason to believe that the region so set apart for the 25,000 Sioux would remain their permanent home. The Saunders bill would have divided the reservation, leaving the southeastern portion with its agencies in Dakota—the larger portion going to Lincoln. This would have complicated the management of these people who were at the time taking their first steps toward a civilized and industrious life. There were other objections that operated upon the congressional mind, sufficient altogether to outweigh the plausible arguments of Senator Saunders and Senator Chaffee, and the complaints made by the ambitious people of Deadwood; and the Saunders bill finally went down to defeat.

GOVERNOR HOWARD FAVORED THREE STATES

In August, 1878, the governor of Dakota received a request from the secretary of the interior at Washington, requesting the governor to furnish the department with certain facts and information regarding Dakota. From the general tenor of the letter from the Interior Department, it was evident that a new and important interest had been awakened in the minds of leading Government officials regarding the territory, which was receiving notable accessions to her population at the time.

The governor's reply suggests, by inference, that the question of Dakota's statehood was being considered in official circles, and it was already being agitated in the Dakota newspapers—the Deadwood Times in the west espousing it, and Eastern Dakota journals favoring it. Dakota had gained not far from fifty thousand population in the last two years—rather over than under that number—as shown by the increase of the popular vote, which was about eight thousand in 1876, and in 1878 at the election held in November nearly twenty thousand, indicating a population of one hundred thousand. There was no lull in the number of immigrants coming in, but rather an increase, which induced the belief that by 1880, two years hence, by which time a constitution could be framed and adopted, the territory would have a population of 175,000, many more than was required at that time to entitle a state to a member of the House of Representatives.

The first bill proposing statehood for Dakota was introduced in the House in January, 1879, by Delegate Kidder. It proposed to admit the whole territory as one state. This was followed a few days later by Senator Sargent of California, who introduced a Senate bill to enable Dakota to become a state. The proceedings of Congress do not show that either of these measures were reported from the committees to which they were referred.

The governor's report, considered with reference to statehood, was not favorable to the admission of Dakota as one state, but would seem to favor three divisions, and his presentation of the conditions and diversity of interests existing in Dakota, may have deterred the secretary of the interior from making any recommendation for a change in the political status of the territory, in his annual report the following December.

Public opinion in the territory was decidedly in favor of two states by dividing the territory on the 46th parallel of latitude. However, the governor's report was timely and interesting as showing existing conditions, and is hereto appended:

Executive Office, Dakota Territory

Yankton, December 16, 1878.

Sir:—Referring to your letter of the 9th of August last, I beg leave respectfully to report upon the topics suggested, so far as I have been able to obtain the desired information.

The Territory of Dakota is very large, being nearly 400 miles square, or more than four times as large as the State of Ohio. The settlements are principally confined to three distinct localities as remote from each other as possible, and of very difficult and expensive communication with each other.

The settlements of Southeastern Dakota, in which is located the present capital, extend from Northeastern Nebraska mainly in a northern direction up the Big Sioux, the Vermillion, and the James rivers. These settlements are extending north along the border of Northwestern Iowa and Southwestern Minnesota, as far as Lake Kampeska, and as far west as the James River. Although the population is sparse at present, it is rapidly filling up. Southeastern Dakota has a population at the present time of not less than 50,000 and probably 60,000.

Northern Dakota is settled, or rather settling, along the west bank of the Red River of the North, from Richland County, opposite Breckinridge down to Pembina, on the line of the British possessions, crossing the Northern Pacific Railroad at Fargo, and extending west along the line of that road to Bismarck. Population of Northern Dakota, perhaps, 40,000.

The other settlement is in the Black Hills, occupied mainly by a mining population, and containing a population at the present time of 10,000 at least, and probably 12,000.

I suppose it is about 350 miles in a straight line from Yankton to Deadwood. But the only feasible way of getting there, involves travel of at least 900 miles, and an expense greater than a journey from Yankton to Washington, and requiring more time to perform it. The distance from Yankton to Pembina, as the "crow flies," is at least 400 miles, and requires more time and expense than a visit to the capital of the nation.

The three sections are not only remote from each other and of difficult access, but their interests are separate and not identical.

In a commercial point of view, St. Paul and Duluth are the objective points of Northern Dakota, while Chicago and Milwaukee will naturally drain Southeastern Dakota. Meanwhile the vast wealth of the Black Hills will swing to the right or left as it may best force itself out, or as railroad enterprise may open a more direct way over which it can move.

The great Indian reservation west of the Missouri River contains 56,000 square miles, about the size of all Michigan, including both peninsulas. Of course this will prevent settlement, and tend to turn the business of the Black Hills to the south or north of itself.

Dakota has no public buildings, no military organization, and no arms. There really seems about the same necessity for three territorial governments as there is for one. But as population increases they will soon mingle and blend, and the means of direct intercommunication will naturally follow.

Answering more directly your inquiries, I may say:

First. The resources of this territory are both agricultural and mineral, and of vast extent, only partially developed as yet, but enough has been done to demonstrate the fact that Dakota, considering her vast extent of territory, has agricultural resources scarcely second to those of any state in the Union. Dakota has on the east side of the Missouri River at least 60,000 square miles of land fit for the plow. It is believed that at least fifteen million bushels of wheat will be produced next year.

I have been unable to obtain reliable statistics of the mineral resources of the Black Hills. Enough is known to warrant the statement that the mineral resources are very great. Recent discoveries more than confirm the most sanguine expectations. The spirit of wild speculation that characterized the mad rush that resulted in so much disappointment, suffering, insanity and crime, has given place to well directed efforts, guided by experience and skill, and sustained by capital. I regret that I am not able, even at this late day, to furnish statistics. I think I should be more apt to find them in Washington or New York, or in California where many of the best mines are owned, than in Yankton.

Second. The soil is generally prairie. The rivers are bordered or skirted with timber. Building stone and coal are found in various places. The climate is a fair average for its latitude, although generally milder than the same latitudes farther east, drier, and more exposed to wind from the want of timber. Our population is generally estimated at 120,000. It is safe to say it is at least 100,000.

Third. The interest our people take in educational, benevolent and charitable institutions is at least equal to that of any country, as new as this, with whom I am acquainted. The people highly appreciate the magnificent appropriation made by Congress for the benefit of schools, and I believe there will be a disposition to preserve this intact, that posterity may share it to the latest generations.

We have no insane asylum. We have twenty-five lunatics, kept at the asylums of Minnesota and Nebraska at an annual expense of about $300 each, besides a large expense for transportation. Even this cannot be had longer than until February. We are now building a pavilion or temporary hospital so as to bring them home. All neighboring hospitals are full of patients of their own. We have no penitentiary. Our convicts are kept at Detroit at a very heavy expense for transportation and keeping. The management of the convicts is humane and satisfactory, but the expense for transportation and keeping is a very heavy burden and rapidly increasing. In this way the two items of expense for insane and convicts have absorbed nearly all our territorial revenue, and left a floating debt in the shape of territorial warrants, of about $20,000. The construction of a territorial prison and insane asylum seems to be the only means of avoiding future bankruptcy.

Fourth. The territorial Legislature consists at present of thirteen councilmen and twenty-six representatives. The apportionment is based on population as near as may be. In the absence of a census the population is estimated on the number of votes cast. The Legislature meets on the second Tuesday of January, at which session a new apportionment will be made to conform to the recent act of Congress.

Fifth. I have no data with which to answer the fifth inquiry; but would respectfully refer you to the Indian bureau for the desired information as to the tribes, number, condition, etc., but I judge, from what I have seen, the Indians are making some progress in industry and civilization. As I firmly believe, if that good time shall ever come when the Government shall cease to violate any Indian treaty in the letter or spirit, and shall be able to restrain all white men from encroaching upon the rights of the red man, we shall then have had our last Indian war.

Respectfully,

WM. A. HOWARD,
Governor Dakota Territory.

Hon. C. Schurz, Secretary of the Interior.

A LEGISLATIVE MEMORIAL FOR DIVISION

The Hon. J. Q. Burbank, of Richland County, who represented the Seventh District in the House of Representatives of the Territorial Legislature of 1879, was the author of, and introduced a memorial to Congress advocating the division of the territory, and opposing the "one state" proposition. The memorial received the unanimous approval of the legislative bodies, but it is evident that a copy of it had not reached Dakota's delegate in Congress, Hon. J. P. Kidder, for early in the same month he introduced his bill to provide for the admission of Dakota Territory into the Union as one state. The delegate, however, may have had a purpose in mind to test the sentiment of Congress on the question of admission. The session of Congress would expire by limitation within less than two months which would afford little opportunity for the passage of a bill of such importance, and Judge Kidder's term as delegate would expire at the same time. Representative Burbank's memorial is here given:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, from the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory:

Your Memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory, respectfully pray your honorable bodies for the early erection of a new territory of the northern half of Dakota, bounded as follows:

Commencing at the point on the eastern boundary where the north line of the Sisseton Indian Reservation intersects the same; thence along said line to the northwest corner of said reservation; thence southerly along the west line of said reservation to the point where the seventh standard parallel intersects the same; hence west along said standard parallel to the middle of the Missouri River; thence up and along the middle line of the main channel of said river to the 46th parallel of north latitude; thence west along said parallel to the western boundary of Dakota; thence north upon the 27th meridian west from Washington to the 49th parallel of north latitude; thence east along said 49th parallel of north latitude to the northwestern corner of the State of Minnesota; and thence south and along said boundary to the place of beginning.

The said division line as above described, conforms nearly to the 46th parallel of north latitude, but it is upon a line already surveyed, established and marked, and will not require the survey of another line. This line would leave all of said Indian reservation within one jurisdiction, the surveys within which do not conform to the public land surveys.

We further respectfully show that our present area is over one hundred and fifty thousand square miles, too vast for convenience, and already causing us great expense. The communities are widely separated and hold diverse relations. Intercommunication is slow and expensive. A trip from the capital to any point in Northern Dakota, requires the time and cost of a trip to Washington City. It is as far from the southeast corner of Dakota to the northeast corner as from Cairo, Illinois, to the Gulf of Mobile; from the south line of Tennessee to near Chicago, Illinois, or from Washington City to beyond the northern line of the State of New York. We have no hope for direct lines of intercommunication as all the projected routes are east and west lines, and we are compelled to journey through St. Paul, Minnesota.

These facts render official administration slow and difficult; put the government out of reach of many of its citizens for all but extraordinary occasions, render it difficult for any but the most wealthy litigants to reach our Supreme Court with appeals, practically making the lower courts those of last as well as first resort. It is difficult to manage our school system, and the care of prisoners and insane becomes a heavy burden because of the long distances for travel and transportation. In many ways these difficulties practically deny many large communities the favor and benefits of the government they should have.

It is found practically impossible also to adjust our code of uniform laws to the various wants of our citizens, and all these causes operate to irritate and vex the citizens of remote localities, and render impossible the growth of a general public spirit and regard for the welfare of the whole body of the people. No common interests are felt, and there is no commonwealth receiving the fealty of all.

We further respectfully show that this condition has long existed. It has grown in cost and difficulty as our settlements have expanded, and no scheme to avoid it can be suggested because it exists in the barriers of nature, and is made worse by all commercial and other relations. These are now rapidly developing, and promise soon to so exaggerate the burden as to compel, so far as is legally possible, the subdivision of our institutions between the two sections, or their duplication for each.

The same causes, steadily increasing, will render statehood for the whole, obnoxious to all, and we respectfully protest against any acts toward the admission of Dakota as a state with its present boundaries. We pray a division, that the full blessings of harmonious local government may be vouchsafed to all parts, as they have been to other parts and territories of the United States.

A DAKOTA PIONEER WHEAT FARM

Governor Howard visited the City of New York early in April, 1879. During his stay he gave the New York Tribune some instruction regarding the Dakota realm that reflected his views concerning the substantial resources of the territory and the general character of the people. The Tribune was a staunch friend of the territory and omitted no opportunity to speak an encouraging word in its behalf. From Governor Howard it gleaned the material for the following interesting and reliable story:

Governor Howard, of Dakota Territory, is in the city, stopping at the Windsor Hotel. Detroit was his old home, and he represented that district in Congress twenty years ago. He has been at the head of the Dakota government less than two years, but gained an acquaintance with the territory before as a director of the Northern Pacific Railroad. He speaks enthusiastically of the resources and recent growth of Northern and Southeastern Dakota. The western or Black Hills portion he has not seen, a journey thither being a great deal more formidable an undertaking than a trip from Yankton, the capital, to New York.

"The immigration to the region around Yankton and to the country along the Northern Pacific Road has been enormous during the past year," said the governor to a reporter for the Tribune. "I believe that our population has been increased fully 50,000. People in the East are beginning to find out that we have the finest wheat lands that the sun ever shone upon."

Replying to a question as to the present population of the territory, the governor said: "I should say, at a single guess, 150,000. You know we have three distinct sections widely separated from each other by a vast Indian reservation, larger than the State of New York. In the southeastern section I think there are 90,000 people. In Northern Dakota

40,000, and in the Black Hills 15,000. These sections are entirely distinct geographically, have no interests in common, and ought not to be united under one government. Thus the Legislature is a curious jumble of jealousies and conflicting interests."

His questioner suggested that if his estimate as to population was correct, Dakota had a sufficient number of people to entitle her to statehood, to which the governor replied: "Yes, but we do not want to be admitted. The matter was talked over recently and public opinion was estimated to be strongly against a state organization. What is needed is a division into three territories. Two of the three will grow up into states within the next five years. The area of Dakota is 150,000 square miles. About equal to New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. Nearly a third of it is included in the Big Sioux Indian Reservation."

Then the interviewer asked, "Where are the fine wheat lands you spoke of," to which the governor made this reply: "I might almost say everywhere in Eastern and Northern Dakota. They are of immense extent—beautiful rolling prairies and rich valleys. Our spring wheat makes the best flour in the world, worth $2 a barrel more than St. Louis flour. To show you the profit there is in raising wheat in Dakota, let me tell you the experience of General Cass, of the Northern Pacific Road. He had a lot of bonds of the road that were convertible into land, and he turned them into a tract of 10,000 acres. A year ago last summer he had 4,000 acres broken up at a cost of $3 an acre. He let it lie until the following March and then had it plowed and sown in wheat. You can plow in February in Dakota because the land freezes dry. Well, by the time he had bought horses, plows, reapers and threshing machines, and paid for his labor and seed, his investment, including the cost of his land, amounted to about $50,000. A tornado destroyed a portion of his crop, but he harvested an average of 25 bushels to the acre for all the land sown. He shipped the wheat to New York by way of Duluth, and got money enough to pay all expenses and return him the cost of the land. A single crop gave him his magnificent domain of 10,000 acres, with all the stock and improvements he had put upon it. We are just finding out where the true wheat region of the continent is. Before many years, one-half of all the wheat grown in America will be produced north of the 43d parallel."

The day will come when the great wheat domains of Dakota will be carved into smaller farms. The generation that abided when Cass and Dalrymple flourished, will have been succeeded by others whose information has been gleaned from grandsire's stories, and even these will be wanting in many interesting particulars when sifted through a very few generations. Therefore, it has been deemed allowable to quote a brief item from the Bismarck Tribune of the 5th of April, 1879, which will serve to perpetuate reliable information regarding the magnificent proportions of some of Dakota's great wheat estates in the pioneer era. The item states that—

C. A. Hays, for Joseph Clarke, a Pittsburgh millionaire, has commenced breaking for a big farm at 17th siding (Clarke). He will break four sections this season. The estate of Mr. Clarke comprises 65,000 acres. That is greater than a farm 100 miles long by one mile wide. If it were in that shape it would extend from Bismarck to Jamestown. Think of a furrow around a farm 200 miles in circumference.

CHAPTER CV

NUMEROUS DAKOTA LOBBY URGES CONGRESS FOR DIVISION

1879-82

DELEGATE KIDDER'S ONE-STATE BILL—NORTHERN GRAND JURY PRESENTS A BILL FOR DIVISION—DELEGATE BENNETT'S BILL FOR ONE STATE AND DIVISION—THE NORTHERN SENTIMENT FAVORS THE SEVENTH STANDARD DIVISION LINE—GOVERNOR ORDWAY'S IDEA—DELEGATE PETTIGREW'S POSITION, 1881—SIX SEPARATE BILLS IN CONGRESS FOR DIVIDING DAKOTA—PETTIGREW'S ADMISSION BILL—ORDWAY'S CONVENTION AT FARGO—PETTIGREW'S PEMBINA BILL—CITIZENS' CONVENTION AT CANTON—DIVISION AND STATEHOOD MEETINGS IN NORTH DAKOTA, BLACK HILLS AND SOUTHERN DAKOTA—LARGE DELEGATIONS SENT TO WASHINGTON TO LOBBY FOR THE TERRITORY.

DELEGATE KIDDER'S BILL FOR ONE STATE

In January, 1879, Dakota's delegate to Congress, Hon. Jefferson P. Kidder, introduced in the House of Representatives a bill to provide for the admission of the Territory of Dakota into the Union, as one state. Here follows the full text of the measure:

A bill to enable the people of Dakota to form a constitution and state government, and for the admission of the said state into the Union on an equal footing with the original states.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the inhabitants of the Territory of Dakota included in the boundaries hereinafter designated, be, and they are hereby, authorized to form for themselves out of said territory a state government, with the name of the State of Dakota, which state when formed shall be admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever, as hereinafter provided.

Section 2. That said State of Dakota shall consist of all the territory within the following boundaries, to-wit: Commencing at a point in the main channel of the Red River of the North, where the 49th degree of north latitude crosses the same; thence up the main channel of the river and along the boundary line of the State of Minnesota, to Big Stone Lake; thence south along the boundary line of the State of Minnesota to the Iowa line; thence along the boundary line of the State of Iowa to the point of intersection between the Big Sioux and Missouri rivers; thence up the Missouri River and along the line of the State of Nebraska to the mouth of the Niobrara or Running Water River; thence following up the same in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the mouth of the Kaha Paha or Turtle Hill River; thence up said river to the 43d parallel of north latitude; thence due west to the boundary of the Territory of Wyoming; thence north along the boundary line of the Territory of Wyoming and the boundary line of the Territory of Montana, to the 49th degree of north latitude; thence east along said degree to the place of beginning.

Sec. 3. That all persons residing in said proposed state, qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said territory, at the date of the passage of this act, shall be qualified to be elected, and they are hereby authorized to vote for and to choose representatives, to form a Convention, under such rules and regulations as the governor of said territory, the chief justice, and the United States attorney thereof may prescribe; and also to vote upon the acceptance or rejection of such constitution as may be formed by said Convention under such rules and regulations as such Convention may prescribe; and the aforesaid representatives to form such Convention shall be apportioned among the several counties in said territory in proportion to the vote polled in each of said counties at the last general election, as near as may be; and said apportionment shall be made for said territory by the governor, United States attorney and chief justice thereof, or any two of them; and the governor of said territory shall, by proclamation, order said election of the representatives aforesaid, to be held throughout the territory at such time as shall be fixed by the governor, chief justice and United States attorney or any two of them; which proclamation shall be issued within ninety days from the passage of this act, and at least thirty days prior to the time of said election; and such election shall be conducted in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said territory regulating elections therein for members of the House of Representatives, and the number of members to said Convention shall be the same as now constitutes both branches of the Legislature of the aforesaid territory.

Sec. 4. That the members of the Convention thus elected shall meet at the capital of said territory, on a day to be fixed by said governor, chief justice and United States attorney, not more than sixty days subsequent to the day of election, which time of meeting shall be contained in the aforesaid proclamation mentioned in the third section of this act, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said territory, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby authorized to form a constitution and state government for said territory; Provided, That the Constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence; And Provided further, That said convention shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said state; first, that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said state shall ever be molested, in person or property, on account of his or her mode of religious worship; secondly, that the people inhabiting said territory do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands and to all lands held or owned by any Indian or Indian tribes until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, lying within said territory, and that the same shall be at the sole and entire disposition of the United States, and that the lands belonging to the citizens of the United States residing without the said state shall never be taxed higher than the lands belonging to residents thereof, and that no taxes shall be imposed by the state on lands or property therein belonging to, or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States.

Sec. 5. That in case a constitution and state government shall be formed for the people of said Territory of Dakota, in compliance with the provision of this act, said convention forming the same shall provide, by ordinance, for submitting said constitution to the people of said state for their ratification or rejection, at an election, to be held at such time and at such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed by said convention, at which election the lawful voters of said new state shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution; and the returns of said election shall be made to the acting governor of the territory, who with the chief justice and United States attorney of said territory, or any two of them, shall canvass the same, and if a majority of said votes shall be cast for said constitution in said proposed state, the said acting governor shall certify the same to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said constitution and ordinances; whereupon it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation declaring the said state admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, without any further action whatever on the part of Congress.

Sec. 6. That until the next general census, said state shall be entitled to one representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which representative, together with the governor and other state officers provided for in said constitution, shall be elected on a day subsequent to the adoption of the constitution, and to be fixed by said Constitutional Convention; and until said state officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of the constitution, the territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices.

Sec. 7. That sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in every township, and where such sections have been sold or otherwise disposed of by any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not more than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be, are hereby granted to said state for the support of common schools.

Sec. 8. That, provided the State of Dakota shall be admitted into the Union in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this act, fifty entire sections of the unappropriated lands within a said state, to be selected and located by direction of the Legislature thereof, on or before the first day of January, 1882, shall be, and are hereby granted, in legal subdivisions, of not less than one-quarter section, to said state, for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said state for legislative and judicial purposes, in such manner as the Legislature shall prescribe.

Sec. 9. That fifty other entire sections of land as aforesaid, to be selected and located as aforesaid, in legal subdivisions as aforesaid, shall be, and they are hereby granted, to said state, for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for a penitentiary or state prison in the manner aforesaid.

Sec. 10. That seventy-two other sections of land shall be set apart and reserved for the use and support of a state university, to be selected in manner aforesaid, and to be appropriated and applied as the legislature of said state may prescribe, for the purpose named, and for no other purpose.

Sec. 11. That all salt springs within said state, not exceeding twelve in number, with six sections of land adjoining, or as contiguous as may be to each, shall be granted to said state for its use, the said land to be selected by the governor of said state within two years after the admission of the state, and when so selected to be used and disposed of on such terms, conditions and regulations as the Legislature shall direct; Provided, That no salt spring or lands the right whereof is now vested in any individual or individuals, or which hereafter shall be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall by this act be granted to said state.

Sec. 12. That 5 per centum of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said state, which have been or shall be sold by the United States prior or subsequent to the admission of said state into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said state for the purpose of making such internal improvements within said state as the Legislature thereof may direct.

Sec. 13. That the eighth section of the Act of Congress, entitled, "An Act to Approprate the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and to grant pre-emption rights," approved the fourth day of September, 1841, shall be and is hereby declared applicable to the State of Dakota, when admitted into the Union as herein provided.

Sec. 14. That any balance of the appropriations for Legislative expenses of said Territory of Dakota, remaining unexpended, shall be applied to and used for defraying the expenses of the said convention, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislature.

Sec. 15. That the two sections of land in each township hereby granted in each township for the support of common schools shall be disposed of only at public sale and at a price not less than two dollars and fifty cents per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which is to be expended in the support of common schools.

This bill was referred to its appropriate committee, but was not reported, and Judge Kidder's term as delegate expired in March following. There was very little sentiment in the territory in favor of the admission of Dakota as one state, which would have been manifested in the defeat of the foregoing enabling act had it passed Congress.

A NORTHERN GRAND JURY PRESENTS DIVISION

The Black Hills were opened and added about fifteen thousand to the population of the territory within two or three years following 1876. The north had also increased its population, and from that date there were encouraging indications that the territory would be divided. The sentiment in Dakota was unanimous for it. As an evidence that the sentiment in favor of a division of the territory was generally shared by the inhabitants of the northern portion and that it was furthermore looked upon as a matter of paramount importance, an unusual incident connected therewith took place at Fargo during a session of the United States District Court for the Third Judicial District, which included all of the present State of North Dakota. Whether the grand inquisition was moved by a lack of material for the more legitimate purposes it was assembled for, does not matter. That the members of the body, assembled from all parts of the wide district, were united in sentiment for a division of the territory on the 46th parallel, was at the time of considerable importance. Near the close of its session its members made a presentment to the court in the following form:

The United States of America, Territory of Dakota, Third Judicial District, December term, 1880.

We, the grand jury of said court, having been duly empannelled, sworn and charged, in session this 20th day of December, A. D., 1880, respectfully present to said court as follows:

1. That your grand jury, having been summoned from all portions of Northern Dakota, which comprises the Third Judicial District of said territory, may consequently be considered a representative body, and in that capacity would present that it is the almost unanimous opinion of the citizens of said district that the territory is too large for economical or satisfactory government, and their earnest wish is that it be separated from that portion of the territory lying south of the seventh standard parallel and erected into a separate government; that dividing line being suggested on account of its not interfering with or intersecting any counties or townships in the present system of surveys, and would give to said district a tract of fertile land larger than the State of New York, to wit: 75,000 square miles, capable of sustaining many millions of an agricultural and manufacturing community, with an invigorating and healthy climate, and a soil better adapted to raising wheat and other cereals than any other part of the great northwestern wheat zone; in fact, it has all the physical features to make it, in the near future, a wealthy, prosperous and populous state.

2. The climate and soil of Northern Dakota differ materially from those of the southern portion of the territory, the former being more eminently adapted to the growth of wheat and the smaller grains; the latter to grazing and other kindred pursuits. They are separated by a large tract of unsettled country, mostly Indian lands, crossed only by Indian trails and wagon or cart tracks. The people of the two sections have little or no interests in common. They have no social or mercantile relations, nor should they be forced together politically. The southern sections find markets in Chicago and St. Louis, their outlet being east and south. The northern finds an immediate market in St. Paul and Minneapolis, and has a shipping port at Duluth. As matters now stand it is easier and less expensive to reach the Capital of the United States than that of the territory.

3. The rapidly increasing growth of Northern Dakota makes it reasonable to suppose that it will soon ask for admission into the Union as a state, and it is considered expedient to take immediate steps for the establishment of prisons, asylums, educational and reformatory institutions, and save the enormous expense now incurred in sending our convicts, unfortunate, and children, for a higher education, to the states, as we are now forced to do. The time has come when the hardy, intelligent, thrifty citizens of Northern Dakota should be allowed to frame their own laws and to lay the foundations of these educational and charitable institutions which are the pride of the American people and the envy of the civilized world, and not be subservient or checked in these worthy aspirations to a more densely settled portion of the territory, with which they have no social, business or political sympathies.

4. We present the following statistics as an additional argument in favor of separate government, showing that Northern Dakota has all the facilities necessary for its own management, and to insure prosperity. It has 1,100 miles of navigable and navigated streams; 500 miles of railroad in operation, with others being rapidly constructed; about forty thousand inhabitants; 3,382,347 acres of Government land have been entered in the land offices at Fargo, Bismarck and Grand Forks, since their establishment: in addition to the large quantities which have been sold. Our Grand Trunk Line of railroad—the Northern Pacific—passes through the territory from east to west, north of the proposed dividing line. Other lines are reaching through and into the territory from the south and east, to share in the rapidly increasing traffic resulting from its immense production of wheat and other grains.

5. That the citizens of that portion lying north of the seventh standard parallel have no desire for the admission as a state at present, they being satisfied with the present form of territorial government and the efficiency and integrity of the federal appointments.

6. That any arbitrary legislation erecting the whole territory into a state, or dividing it on any other line than that indicated, or giving it any other name than that of North Dakota, would, beside being contrary to the spirit of republican legislation, which is and should be made by the people who are arbiters of their own destinies, cause great dissatisfaction. The name of North Dakota is suggested, as the name of Dakota is so well known throughout the world as a country wonderfully fertile and peculiarly adapted to the raising of immense crops of wheat and other grain, that any other name might lead to divert or check immigration, which is now pouring in from all parts of the world.

Finally, your grand jury would respectfully request that a certified copy of this presentment, under the seal of the court, be forwarded to the Hon. G. G. Bennett, territorial delegate to Congress, with a view to strengthen his hands in any legislation he may ask for in the premises.

Geo. H. Ellsbury, T. J. Wilder, B. G. Wood, J. S. Plants, Ed E. Ohmer, E. V. McKnight, W. E. Rolph, J. C. White, G. H. Sanborn, J. W. Morrow, Valentine Schreck, Willoughby Clark, Peter Wilson, Jacob Lowell, Sr., A. W. Edwards, Jas. R. Winslow, P. V. M. Raymond, Grand Jurors.
H. J. Campbell, U. S. Attorney.

BENNETT'S STATE BILL, THE 7TH STANDARD

One of the important and most numerously attended assemblings of the people of the territory, particularly the northern portion, was held at Bismarck in December, 1880, to consider the division question, on which occasion Delegate Bennett, and stathood, and the bill which had been introduced in Congress by Delegate Bennett, was endorsed without dissent.

Hon. Granville G. Bennett, the delegate to Congress from Dakota, from 1879 to 1881, introduced in the House, on the 13th of December, 1880, a bill to enable the people of Dakota to form a constitution and state government, and for the admission of the state into the Union on an equal footing with the original states.

This bill was a verbatim copy of the bill introduced by Delegate Kidder, who preceded Bennett, in 1879, except that the former bill provided that the state should include the entire Territory of Dakota, while Bennett's bill prescribed the following boundaries for the new state :

Commencing at a point on the west line of the State of Minnesota where the 46th degree of north latitude intersects the same; then south along the west boundary line of the State of Minnesota and to a point of intersection between the Big Sioux and Missouri rivers; thence up the Missouri River and along the north line of the State of Nebraska to the east boundary line of the Territory of Wyoming; thence north along the east boundaries of Wyoming and Montana to the 46th degree of north latitude; thence east along said 46th degree of north latitude to the place of beginning.

DIVISION BOUNDARY

The boundary line between South Dakota and its northern sister (which it was then proposed to call Pembina) was fixed in Delegate Bennett's bill as the 46th parallel of north latitude; but an objection was raised to this boundary at a public meeting of North Dakota people held on the 5th of December, 1880, at Fargo, which had not until then attracted attention. It developed that a division on the line of the 46th parallel would place five-sixths of the lower tier of townships in Emmons, Logan, LaMoure, Ransom and Richland counties in Southern Dakota, and the remainder of these counties in Northern Dakota. It would not only cause considerable redefining of county boundaries but in some cases would divide homestead claims and improved farms. The convention or assemblage at Fargo, in order to avoid the perplexity and confusion resulting from this division resolved in favor of the 7th standard parallel as the division boundary, which would conform to the county boundary and the Congressional township lines already surveyed. Although the change would cause a loss to South Dakota of a valuable strip of fertile territory, it was conceded that the 7th standard was far preferable because it was well defined and would not be questioned, while the 46th parallel was not so well defined that the land holders and farmers could trace their boundaries thereon. While Delegate Bennett's bill was doomed to be pigeon-holed, the boundary that marked the division line when the states were finally admitted, was fixed upon the 7th standard parallel.

GOVERNOR ORDWAY'S IDEA

In his first message to the Legislature of Dakota, submitted in January, 1881, Governor Ordway submitted the following comment and recommendation concerning the statehood question:

The area of Dakota Territory is 13,000 square miles larger than Minnesota and Iowa combined. By extending its western line a short distance into Wyoming and Montana, it still leaves 200,000 square miles in those territories, and three large states could be formed with natural boundaries. The whole sisterhood remaining bound together by a community of interests, and the pride of a common name, which would carry great weight in the national councils, when the names of Southern, Western, and Northern Dakota, should be added to the states of the Union. As to the names or number of states, the particular lines of division, or the exact time when the first state should be admitted, I have no recommendation to make, except that we place the territory in such a position that the people may be prepared for any of the proposed changes.

In order, however, to carry out any plan of division, it seems to me that Congressional action must first be secured, and unless the bill now before Congress should become a law (Bennett's bill), during the present session, in order to secure early action in the next session, we must go to Congress with a perfected code of equal and just laws, with a sound educational system, and with such a financial record that the new states can be safely entrusted with the control and disposition of the 5,000,000 acres of school lands already placed in trust for the people, and such other donations from the public domain as the new situation would demand.

The numerous pressing subjects requiring legislation, to which your attention has been especially called, together with local matters, will probably engross nearly all the time of the present session. If you find it impossible to consider measures necessary for laying the foundations of the state, I would suggest the propriety of your memorializing Congress for a special session of the Legislature, to meet the first of June or September, to determine all questions relating to admission, the adjustment of common interests, and to perfect all needed legislation that it may conform to the changes agreed upon. This work could all be accomplished within two months, and then members would have ample time during the adjournment to confer fully with their constituents and ascertain the views of the masses of the people upon all these important subjects.

If this or some similar course should be pursued, I apprehend that the united voice of the people thus expressed through their representatives, would carry such weight that early action could be secured in the forty-seventh Congress.

DELEGATE PETTIGREW'S POSITION

Early in the beginning of the long contest for the division of the territory and statehood, when it was entered upon in earnest in 1881, Delegate Pettigrew who had succeeded Judge Bennett, gave out a statement through the Fargo Republican, of his views on the subject. At that time the northern portion of the territory did not claim sufficient population to entitle her to statehood, but desired a territorial organization. The southern half having sufficient population, claimed the right of admission into the Union, and this was practically the unanimous desire of the people of the territory, as expressed through various public conventions representing all classes and all political parties. Mr. Pettigrew's views, as reported, follow:

Mr. Pettigrew deprecated the discussion of Dakota's division and South Dakota's admission from a mere party standpoint. He desires that Dakota shall stand before the nation, not as a creature of political expediency, but as a territory having strong claims to statehood which she asks only the nation to consider and pass upon entirely upon their merits. He affirms and sustains his affirmation with a convincing array of facts and figures, that no territory ever knocked for admission to the Union that was as splendidly prepared for statehood as South Dakota—to say nothing of the entire territory undivided. Here are some of the facts which the delegate presents:

In the first place no territory was ever yet admitted that had the population that South Dakota has. The census returns of 1880 give that part of the territory south of the 46th parallel a population of 98,000. Careful estimates show beyond question that since the census of 1880 was taken the population of that section has increased not less than 40,000, making a total of 138,000, which is some 48,000 more than any other territory could boast at the time of its admission. To illustrate the rapid growth of the territory in a single year, the vote of Moody County in 1880 was returned at 600; this year 1,250 votes were cast in that county.

Then again, no territory was ever yet admitted that had the number of miles of railroad which South Dakota alone now has. The number of miles now in operation is over one thousand; with fifty more already graded, and 100 more under contract.

And again, no territory was ever before admitted that had the certain prospect of rapid and substantial growth and development that South Dakota, and North Dakota too, are conceded to possess. The rich soil of the territory has only been broken here and there, and the immense crops which respond to the labor of the farmer are attracting the attention of homeseekers the world over. Railroad building has but just begun, and vast as are the expenditures for railroads already, the supply falls short of the growing demand, and the profits on the investment show the healthfulness of the demand.

In this connection another feature of South Dakota's productions and grand possibilities should not be omitted. The proposed state would embrace the famous Black Hills region, the development of which is in its infancy—and yet what a magnificent showing it has made. This region during the past year has produced over six million dollars in gold, $78,000 in silver, about two hundred tons of salt, several hundred barrels of petroleum, and large quantities of coal and other minerals. The extent of the so-called low-grade ores in this region must ultimately make the Black Hills the first mineral producing region in America, and all that is needed to insure the development of her mines is the extension of railroads and the consequent influx of capital.

And now to take a more general view. The great Northwest has interests of vast importance which must increase with every recurring year. These interests must be watched and protected, and fully represented in national legislation. With but two senators and one representative, Dakota's influence at the nation's capital and with other states, would be far less than her wealth and population entitle her to possess. To admit Dakota as a state entire would be to postpone indefinitely a division of our vast territory into two states which her two separate railroad systems and her two parallel tides of immigration most naturally suggest. Such postponement of division would rob the Northwest of half her influence and half her strength.

But one more point can be presented. So long as we remain under territorial government, so long is likely to continue the present system of governing or "running" the territory by men from the states who have little or nothing in common with the resident population, and are not in full sympathy with the people of the territory. So long as this appointive system obtains, so long will we be compelled to place our public interests, and in a measure, our private interests too, in the hands of "court favorites," and the hangers on of the powers that be. So long as our legislature and our courts are controlled and supervised by men who are not as one with us in our aims and projects for the development of the territory, so long will our legislation be disappointing and our courts of justice a misnomer. The supreme necessity of the hour is, then, the division of the territory and the admission of South Dakota as a state.

IN CONGRESS IN 1882

Early in the session of Congress of 1881-82, there were six separate measures before the body relating to the division of the Territory of Dakota, and the admission of the State of South Dakota. These were, one by Delegate Pettigrew for the admission of the State of Dakota (south of the 46th parallel); one also by the delegate for the formation of the Territory of Pembina north of the 46th parallel; one for the admission of the State of Dakota, by Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, and still another bill for the admission of the State of Dakota, by Senator Windom, of Minnesota; also a bill establishing the Territory of North Dakota, by Senator Windom, and a bill to establish the Territory of Pembina north of the 46th, by Senator Saunders. Two of the Senate bills were counterparts of Delegate Pettigrew's House measures, and had been introduced to facilitate legislation at the request of the delegate.

The delegate had concluded to introduce separate bills—one for a division of the territory on the 46th parallel, and the other for the admission of the southern half into the Union as a state—though in this he was opposed to some extent by the delegations from the southern section who had imbibed an opinion that by having the two measures in one bill, division would strengthen admission. The situation in Congress, however, gave no support to this view, but just the reverse, for it certainly indicated that the admission measure would weaken division. It was quite clearly manifested that admission of the state must have strength enough, based on its merits, to secure favorable action. The delegate appears to have been governed by a very intelligent view of the situation, which in brief was thus stated:

Congress was not ready to admit another state, and was not in a position to handle Dakota's admission proposition intelligently. The division bill alone being presented, the democrats would not look on it as a party measure. They would consider the arguments for division without prejudice. The division bill would receive considerable democratic support, provided there should be no democratic caucus held to consider it, which at the time was not looked for. If the democrats in the House wanted to defeat the division bill by filibustering they could do it, and they would do it if the question of admission was embodied in it. One hundred and forty-seven members constituted a quorum. The republicans had 146 and two readjusters who voted with them, making 148, but there were always a number who were sick or absent, which would reduce the republican vote below the required number, and the democrats, by refusing to vote, could prevent a quorum. They could sit in their seats and do this, thus defeating the bill. It was thus apparent that the success of any bill that was made a party measure would be doubtful. It was in deference to this situation that the Dakota bills were introduced as separate measures.

Mr. Pettigrew was quite confident of the success of the division bill at this session, but the situation of the admission project was less encouraging. There should, however, have been nothing greatly discouraging, but much to encourage, had the division bill succeeded, for in that case the southern half of the territory would have had its territorial organization, and with it 200,000 population which at the time was increasing at the rate of thousands each month and would have been in such a position at the next session that partisan considerations might have doubted the policy of denying it its just claims.

Division was in fact the most important at the time, for without division the "one state plan for the entire territory" which Governor Ordway and others favored, hung menacingly over the territory, despite this apparent unanimous desire for division. With division accomplished, admission for Southern Dakota was certain.

(Had the sentiment of the people of the territory favored it, it was claimed that the entire territory might have been admitted into the Union as one state, at this session).

Following is a copy of the bill introduced in December, 1881, by Delegate Pettigrew, and referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed:

A bill to enable the people of the Territory of Dakota to form a constitution and state government, and for the admission of the state into the Union on an equal footing with the original states.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the inhabitants of the Territory of Dakota included in the boundaries hereinafter designated be, and they are hereby authorized to form for themselves, out of said territory, a state government, with the name of the "State of Dakota," which state, when formed, shall be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. That the said State of Dakota shall consist of all the territory included within the following boundaries, to wit: Commencing at a point on the west boundary line of the State of Minnesota where the 46th degree of north latitude intersects the same; thence south along the west boundary lines of the states of Minnesota and Iowa to the point of intersection between the Big Sioux and Missouri rivers; thence up the center of the main channel of the Missouri River to the mouth of the Niobrara River; thence westerly and up the main channel of the said Niobrara River to the mouth of the Keha Paha River; thence up the center of the main channel of the said Keha Paha River to the 43d degree of north latitude; thence west along said 43d degree of north latitude to the 104th degree of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north along said degree of longitude to the 46th degree of north latitude; thence east along said 46th degree of north latitude to the place of beginning.

Sec. 3. That all persons qualified by law to vote for representatives to the General Assembly of said territory at the date of the passage of this act shall be qualified to be elected, and they are hereby authorized to vote for and choose representatives to form a convention, under such rules and regulations as the district attorneys of the first, second and fourth judicial districts of said territory or any two of them, which lie within the limits herein described, may prescribe; and all who are qualified voters of said territory, under the laws thereof, at such time as the constitution to be framed shall be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection, shall be entitled to vote upon the question of such ratification or rejection, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe; and the aforesaid representatives to form the aforesaid convention shall be apportioned among the several counties in said territory in proportion to population as shown by the census of 1880, as near as may be; and said apportionment shall be made for said territory by the district attorneys of the first, second and fourth judicial districts aforesaid, or any two of them; and the acting governor of said territory shall, by proclamation, order an election of the representatives aforesaid to be held throughout the territory, at such time as shall be fixed by the district attorneys aforesaid, or any two of them, which proclamation shall be issued within ninety days from the passage of this act, and at least thirty days prior to the time of said election; and such election shall be conducted in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said territory regulating elections therein for members of the Council and House of Representatives; and the number of members to said convention shall be 120.

Sec. 4. That the members of the convention thus elected shall meet at the capital of the territory, on a day to be fixed by said district attorneys, or any two of them, not more than sixty days subsequent to the day of election, which time of meeting shall be stated in the aforesaid proclamation mentioned in the third section of this act, and after organization shall declare, on behalf of the people of said territory, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby authorized to form a constitution and state government for said territory; Provided, That the constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil and political rights on account of race or color, except Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And provided further, That said convention shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said state; first, that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said state shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship; secondly, that the people inhabiting said territory do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands and to all lands owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribe, until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, lying within said territory, and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States, and that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said state shall never be taxed higher than the lands belonging to residents thereof, and that no taxes shall be imposed by the state on lands or property therein belonging to, or which may hereafter be purchased, by the United States.

Sec. 5. That in case a constitution and state government shall be formed by the people of the Territory of Dakota, in compliance with the provisions of this act, said convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said proposed state for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held at such time and at such places and under such regulations as may be prescribed by said convention, at which election the lawful voters of such new state shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution; and the returns of said election shall be made to the acting governor of the territory, who, with the governor, chief justice, and secretary, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of legal votes shall be cast for said constitution in said proposed state, the said acting governor shall certify the same to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said constitution and ordinances; whereupon it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation declaring the state admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, without any further action whatever on the part of Congress.

Sec. 6. That until the next general census the said state shall be entitled to one representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which representative, together with the governor, and state and other officers provided for in said constitution, shall be elected on a day subsequent to the adoption of the constitution, and to be fixed by said constitutional convention; and until said state officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of the constitution, the territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices.

Sec. 7. That sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township, and where such sections have been sold or otherwise disposed of by any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be, are hereby granted to said state for the support of common schools.

Sec. 8. That provided the State of Dakota shall be admitted to the Union in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this act, 100 entire sections of unappropriated public lands within said state, to be selected and located by direction of the Legislature thereof, on or before the 1st day of January, 1884, shall be and are hereby granted in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, to said state, for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said state for legislative and judicial purposes, in such manner as the Legislature shall prescribe.

Sec. 9. That seventy other sections of land as aforesaid, to be selected and located as aforesaid, in legal subdivisions as aforesaid, shall be, and they are hereby, granted to said state, for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for a penitentiary or state prison, in the manner aforesaid.

Sec. 10. That 100 other sections of land as aforesaid, to be selected and located as aforesaid, in legal subdivisions as aforesaid, shall be, and they are hereby, granted to said state for the use and support of normal schools in said state; and ninety additional sections, selected, located and subdivided as aforesaid, are hereby granted to said state for the use and support of an agricultural college in said state aforesaid.

Sec. 11. That all salt springs within said state, not exceeding twelve in number, with six sections of land adjoining, or as contiguous as may be to each, shall be granted to said state for its use, the said land to be selected by the governor of said state within two years after the admission of the state, and when so selected to be used and disposed of on such terms, conditions and regulations as the Legislature shall direct: Provided, That no salt springs or lands, the right whereof is vested in any individual or individuals, or which hereafter shall be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall by this act be granted to said state.

Sec. 12. That 5 per centum of the proceeds of the sale of public lands lying within said state, which have been or shall be sold by the United States prior or subsequent to the admission of said state into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said state for the purpose of making such internal improvements within said state as the legislature thereof may direct.

Sec. 13. That the eighth section of the act of Congress entitled "An act to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of public lands, and to grant preemption rights," approved the 4th day of September, 1841, shall be, and is hereby, declared applicable to the State of Dakota when admitted into the Union as herein provided.

Sec. 14. That any balance of the appropriation for the legislative expenses of said Territory of Dakota, remaining unexpended, shall be applied to and used for defraying the expenses of said convention, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislature; and if the balance of said legislative appropriation does not amount to the sum of $20,000, then there shall be, and there hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient with the unexpended appropriations, to make the sum of $20,000, which shall be used for the purpose aforesaid; Provided, That any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose shall be covered into the treasury of the United States.

Sec. 15. That two sections of land in each township herein granted for the use of common schools shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than $2.50 an acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which is to be expended for the support of common schools.

Sec. 16. That all mineral lands shall be exempted from the operation and grants of this act; Provided, That if sections 16 and 36 in any township shall be found to be mineral lands, the Legislature of said State of Dakota is hereby authorized and empowered to select any other unappropriated lands in said State of Dakota in lieu thereof, for the use and benefit of the common schools of said State of Dakota.

The general manager of the Chicago & Milwaukee Railroad, Mr. S. S. Merrill was strongly in favor of the passage of Delegate Pettigrew's admission bill in 1882 and thought it would go through. He stated that in this event his railroad company would offer a section of land at Forestburg, near the junction of the Southern Minnesota Railroad with the James River line, as a capital site for the state. The land office at Mitchell would also be transferred to Forestburg.

GOVERNOR ORDWAY HOLDS A CONVENTION

During the summer of 1881 the question of securing a division of the Territory of Dakota on the 46th parallel of north latitude, was beginning to interest the people quite generally, and some suggestions regarding a public meeting were thrown out by the moulders of public opinion, which term was applied to newspapers generally. Among the plans proposed for getting an authoritative expression from the people on this subject, which should have appeared simple enough by calling conventions of the different political parties, was one put forth by a newspaper at Fargo called the Argus, which was the reputed organ of Governor Ordway in Northern Dakota, and which attracted quite a little attention because of its novelty, and the opportunity it would afford of placing the governor in a position which he very much coveted, that of being a leader and director in the movement. There had not been, up to this time any conspicuous partiality shown for the governor as a custodian of the interests of the people in the affairs which may be assumed as under their control. And already the differences that marked the administration of Ordway with Mr. Pettigrew, the delegate, constituted an inharmonious element in territorial politics. As Mr. Pettigrew subsequently publicly stated, in explaining the causes of the differences between Governor Ordway and himself, the former had proposed, shortly after his arrival in the territory, a combination by which the twain could control the federal appointments and the politics of the territory. Mr. Pettigrew declined to enter into such a compact, and thus incurred the official antagonism of the governor.

The plan proposed in the Argus, was preceded by brief comment on the desirability of a convention to consider such an important subject as division, and as the agriculturists of Fargo and Cass County were to hold a fair in September, at Fargo, when a multitude of people would be assembled to attend the agricultural exhibit, it was thought a fit occasion for initiating something new and artistic in politics, and to have as its sponsors eight distinguished persons with the governor as the leader. Therefore, says the Argus:

The following has been suggested by letters from public men, north and south, and by a number of Argus exchanges, and it seems feasible and likely to meet the views of all parties concerned. This is the scheme:

Four United States officials and four persons who have been elected to important trusts by the people, eight in all to meet and name one first class man from each county in the territory, and one additional delegate for every thousand inhabitants in counties having more than one thousand inhabitants. The convention so composed to meet at some point central and easy of access from all parts of the territory, to be decided upon by the committee first named. Huron has been suggested.

The original committee of eight, it has been suggested, should be constituted in the following unpartisan manner: His excellency, Gov. N. G. Ordway; the Hon. R. F. Pettigrew, delegate to Congress; the Hon. George H. Hand, secretary of the Territory; the Hon. Hugh J. Campbell, United States attorney; Capt. John B. Raymond, United States marshal; Hon. Granville G. Bennett, ex-delegate; Hon. George H. Walsh, president of the late territorial council, and Hon. J. H. Harding, speaker of the late territorial assembly. This committee, it is thought, could meet at Fargo on September 16th, at the time of the great agricultural fair, and in person or by proxy, select by proxy, taking up each county separately, delegates from the several counties according to the above ratio, and invite the same to meet at some point to be agreed upon in committee, say on or about the 12th of October following; the committee above named to be ex-officio members of the convention at large. The convention to be called for the purpose of considering the necessary steps to be taken to secure early division, and to appoint suitable committees to carry the decisions of the convention into effect.

(Note.—Since the original list of eight was made up, the self-appointed leader of the movement has added the names of three prominent democrats, Hon. Bartlett Tripp, Daniel Marratta, and William VanEps.)

The foregoing plan was undoubtedly prepared by Governor Ordway and published in the Fargo newspaper with commendatory comment. It was followed by the active and officious exertions of the governor to secure the success of the Fargo meeting, though the only authority for that meeting was the suggestion given above. Delegate Pettigrew repudiated the movement. Whether any of the others named, subscribed to it, does not appear but they did not attend.

The governor, however, does not seem to have been discouraged, and the plan must have appeared to him as the only one that would afford him the coveted position of a leader in the movement, for on the day of opening the Fargo Fair the Argus, gave place to the following:

A large number of the leading newspapers and prominent citizens having endorsed the proposition that the governor, as the executive head of Dakota, should notify a preliminary conference, during the fair, for the purpose of securing the views of representative men from every section of the territory; the following notice was sent to six gentlemen who had received appointments to the general offices of the territory, and to seven prominent gentlemen who have been elected to prominent positions and who have been recognized as leading men in both political parties:

"In accordance with numerous suggestions from the press and people it is proposed to hold a preliminary conference in regard to the future of the territory, at the fair at Fargo, September 15th and 16th. As both political parties and all interests are to be represented, it is hoped you will attend if possible, otherwise send your views in writing as to future action.

N. G. ORDWAY."

As the notices were sent out at so late a date, many of the gentlemen to whom they were sent will be unable to attend, but those, as suggested in the notice, will generally send their views to the governor in writing, so that the sentiments of the different sections will undoubtedly be ascertained and thus accomplish substantially the object of a full meeting.

The report of a meeting held at Deadwood, endorsing division and admission, attested by F. H. Darrow, chairman, and C. F. Whetbeck, secretary, and also an acknowledgment from Bartlett Tripp, of the notice sent him and his earnest wish for the admission of Dakota into the Union, were included in the article given out by the Argus. The Argus article concluded with the statement that.

Governor Ordway, having seconded the strong expressions of the press that some action should be taken by requesting responses from certain gentlemen named, will have Room 24 at the Continental Hotel, open on the 15th and 16th, for the reception of all who favor a preliminary conference in regard to the present and future interests of the territory.

Quite a number of people came to the fair on the 16th, but very few to Room 24, aforesaid. Not one of the officials, whom the governor had honored by naming them a member of his conference, except Secretary Hand (who went up with Ordway, to the "conference," presumably as a matter of courtesy), attended, nor were represented by letter. Col. A. W. Edwards, editor of the Argus, was with the gubernatorial conference, making three, when a delegation of North Dakotians called to pay their respects and advise with the governor as per his invitation, in which he had already assumed a proprietary interest in the division and admission business. This delegation was made up, partly, of ex-Associate Justice Barnes, Hon. S. G. Roberts, of the territorial council, Cass County, Hon. John Miller, afterwards elected first governor of North Dakota, and Hon. Geo. H. Walsh, who was on the governor's original list, and was chairman of the republican central committee.

At this meeting the governor discovered that his advisors did not agree with his plan at all, which displeased him, and with Colonel Edwards and Secretary Hand, held a brief private conference in an adjoining room, returning to the audience Room 21 with a written proposition that "the chairman of the republican and democratic committees of the territory should meet with the governor at his office in Yankton, on a day named, to fix the apportionment and determine upon preliminaries for calling a convention." This proposition led to discussion. It was an assumption that in some way Governor Ordway had been clothed with authority to direct the steps to be taken in this important business, and it evidently gave mild offense to the representative yeomanry there present. Governor Miller broke the ominous silence that followed, by suggesting,

That instead of the three persons named he thought it would be better that the two central committees should be called together and in joint conference agree upon the time, place and such preliminaries as it should be necessary to determine, and if these committees when assembled, desired the advice of the governor, they should invite him to be present, as he (Miller) would do were he chairman of either of the committees.

Councilman Walsh, chairman of the republican committee, followed Mr. Miller, and declared that he favored the suggestion of Mr. Miller, and added, that as chairman of the republican committee he should not be inclined to take part in any such apportionment and action suggested by the governor, except by the advice and co-operation of his associates on the central committee.

Judge Barnes followed, and stated that he agreed with the suggestions of Messrs. Miller and Walsh, and gave as a reason that there was a natural jealousy on the part of the people with any dictation on the part of federal officials, in matters that should spring from and be controlled by the electors of the territory themselves without interference or any apparent attempt to control such matters by the federal officials.

Remarks of a similar import were made by Hon. S. G. Roberts, and the suggestions of these gentlemen appeared to meet the cordial approval of a majority of the gentlemen present.

Governor Ordway then arose from his seat and stated with asperity, that he "wanted it distinctly understood that while he had invited the gentlemen present to consult and advise with him, he had not called them together to outvote him."

This rather imprudent statement seemed to arouse some indignation among the visitors, who had presumed that the meeting was held for the purpose of discussing the best plan of calling a convention of the people to act upon the questions of admission and division, but seemed to be confronted by the governor with a statement or declaration that, "if you gentlemen have come here to disagree with the plan that I propose, I want it distinctly understood that you are not invited here for any such purpose."

The gentlemen who had taken part in the brief discussion, suggesting a more popular and just plan, with some others, feeling that his excellency had betrayed an offensive spirit and a lamentable lack of dignity and courtesy, then withdrew.

This conference was without result, except to draw attention to the governor's ambition, and his proneness for plotting. In order to give some justification for holding it, and to make it appear to the people as a remedy for ills with which they did not know were oppressing them, the "conference" recommended "holding primary elections for the purpose of electing delegates to a territorial convention, which was regarded as an abandonment of the original scheme and just what was most apt to be done, without any suggestions from his excellency.

On his return to Yankton, the governor halted in St. Paul long enough to give the Pioneer Press his version of the affair, which was much distorted. The truth was that his plan was not only exceedingly distasteful to the people generally, but even those whom the governor had taken the liberty of naming as his associates in the dictatorship, quietly ignored the affair; but had they all joined with him it would have made no difference in the result. There was an offensive obtrusion of the "one man power" about it that doomed it to the ignominious failure which had already overtaken it, although, as was characteristic of his excellency, he pretended great concern that such a meritorious plan should encounter an unreasonable and selfish opposition.

DELEGATE PETTIGREW'S PEMBINA BILL

The following is the full text of the bill introduced in the House in January, 1882, by Mr. Pettigrew, to provide for the organization of a new territory from the northern half of Dakota. A similar bill was also introduced about the same time by Senator Saunders, in the Senate:

A bill establishing the Territory of Pembina, and providing a temporary government therefor.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That all that part of the territory of the United States now constituting a part of the Territory of Dakota and described as follows, to-wit:

Commencing at a point on the Red River of the North where the 49th degree of north latitude crosses the same, thence south along the west boundary line of the State of Minnesota to the 46th degree of north latitude; thence west along said 46th degree of north latitude, to the eastern boundary line of the Territory of Montana; thence north along said boundary line to the 49th degree of north latitude; thence east along said degree to the place of beginning; be and the same is hereby organized into a temporary government by the name of the Territory of Pembina.

Section 2. That all the provisions of Chapter One of Title 23, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the amendments thereto, except as herein otherwise provided, shall apply to and be in full force and effect in the said Territory of Pembina.

Sec. 3. That the legislative council of said territory shall consist of fifteen members, and the House of Representatives thereof of thirty members.

Sec. 4. That there shall be appointed in the manner provided by law, a surveyor general for the said territory, who shall locate and keep his office at such place within said territory as the secretary of the interior shall from time to time direct, and whose duties, powers, obligations, responsibilities, compensation and allowance for clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and incidental expenses, shall be the same as those provided by the Act of 1861, for the surveyor general of the Territory of Dakota.

Sec. 5. That the judicial power in the Territory of Pembina shall be vested in a Supreme Court, district courts, probate courts and justices of the peace.

Sec. 6. That writs of error and appeals from the Supreme Court of said territory shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States in the same manner and under the same regulations as from the circuit courts of the United States, where the value of the property or the amount in controversy, to be ascertained by the oath of either party litigant, or other competent witnesses, exceeds one thousand dollars, except that a writ of error or appeal shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decision of the Supreme Court of said territory, or any judge thereof, or of the district courts thereof, or any judge thereof, upon writs of habeas corpus involving the question of personal freedom.

Sec. 7. That each of the district courts in said territory shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States, and the first six days of every term of the respective district courts, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be appropriated to the trial of causes arising under such Constitution and laws, but writs of error and appeals in all such cases may be had to the Supreme Court of said territory as in other cases made and provided.

Sec. 8. That the supreme and district courts of said territory, and the respective judges thereof, may grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases in which the same may now be granted by the judges of the United States in the District of Columbia.

Sec. 9. That the probate courts of said territory, in their respective counties, in addition to their probate jurisdiction, are authorized to hear and determine civil cases, wherein the damages or debt claimed does not exceed five hundred dollars, and such criminal cases arising under the laws of the territory as do not require the intervention of a grand jury; but they shall not have jurisdiction of any matter where the title or right to the peaceable possession of land may be in dispute or of chancery or divorce causes; and in all cases an appeal may be taken from an order, judgment or decree of the Probate Court to the District Court.

Sec. 10. That no justice of the peace in said territory shall have jurisdiction in any case where the debt or sum exceeds one hundred dollars.

Sec. 11. That the legislative assembly of said Territory of Pembina may organize, alter or modify the several judicial districts thereof, and may assign the judges appointed for said territory to the several judicial districts, and may fix or alter the times and places of holding the district courts therein in such manner as each succeeding legislative assembly shall deem proper and convenient.

Sec. 12. That all township, municipal, county, district and territorial officers, except such territorial officers as are appointed by the president, shall be appointed or elected in such manner as may be provided by the governor and legislative assembly of said Territory of Pembina, and all township, municipal, county, and district officers of the Territory of Dakota who shall be in office within the limits of the said Territory of Pembina when this act shall take effect shall be, and they are, hereby authorized and required to continue to exercise and perform the duties of their respective offices until their successors are duly appointed or elected and qualified, as provided by the governor and legislative assembly of said Territory of Pembina, or until such office shall be abolished.

Sec. 13. That all laws passed by the legislative assembly and governor of the Territory of Pembina shall be valid and binding without being submitted to Congress for its approval, though Congress shall have the power to annul said laws in its discretion.

Sec. 14. That the governor of said Territory of Pembina shall have power to call the legislative assembly together by proclamation, on an extraordinary occasion, at any time after presenting the reasons therefor to the President of the United States, and his approval thereof having been first obtained.

Sec. 15. That there shall be appropriated annually $1,000, to be expended by the governor, to defray the contingent expenses of said territory, including the salary of the clerk in the executive department.

Sec. 16. That there shall be appropriated for said Territory of Pembina annually a sufficient sum, to be expended by the secretary of said territory upon an estimate to be made by the secretary of the treasury, to defray the expenses of the legislative assembly and other incidental expenses, and the secretary of said territory shall annually account to the secretary of the treasury for the manner in which said sum has been expended.

Sec. 17. That the members of the legislative assembly of said territory shall each receive $3.00 for every twenty miles traveled in going to and returning from the sessions of their respective bodies, estimated according to the nearest traveled route.

Sec. 18. That sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six of the public lands in said Territory of Pembina, shall be reserved for the purpose of being applied to schools in said territory and in the state that may be hereafter formed in place of said territory.

Sec. 19. That the inhabitants of said territory shall be entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities heretofore granted and secured to the Territory of Dakota, and to its inhabitants; and the laws in force in the Territory of Dakota at the time of the passage of this act shall continue to be operative and valid in the Territory of Pembina so far as the same may not be incompatible with the provisions of this act, until the same shall be altered, modified or repealed by the governor and legislative assembly of the said Territory of Pembina; Provided, That it shall not be lawful for any county, city or town in said territory to bond itself for other than municipal indebtedness, and in such case only to the amount of five per centum of its valuation.

Sec. 20. That the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crime in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, shall be extended to all that portion of said territory not embraced in any organized county so long as the same shall remain unorganized, to the exclusion of the criminal statutes of said territory, and the courts of said territory exercising the jurisdiction of United States district and circuit courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish all persons committing offenses within said portion of said territory, and if any offense be committed therein which is not prohibited by the laws of the United States, the person or persons committing the same shall be liable to and shall receive the same punishment as the laws of said Territory of Dakota provide for the like offense.

Sec. 21. That all suits, process and proceedings, civil and criminal, and all indictments and criminal proceedings which shall be pending and undetermined in the courts of the Territory of Dakota within the limits of the said Territory of Pembina, when this act shall take effect, shall be transferred to be heard, tried, prosecuted and determined in the district courts hereby established which may include the counties or districts where any such proceedings may be pending. All bonds, recognizances, and obligations of any kind whatsoever, valid under existing laws within said territory shall be valid under this act, and all crimes and misdemeanors against the laws in force within said limits, may be prosecuted, tried and punished, and all penalties, forfeitures and actions, and causes of action may be recovered, the same as they would have been under the laws in force in the Territory of Dakota at the time this act shall go into operation.

Sec. 22. That all suits and actions which have been removed from any district court held within said limits, by appeal or otherwise, to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota, and shall be undetermined there at the time this act shall go into operation, shall be certified by the clerk of said Supreme Court and transferred to the Supreme Court created by this act, there to be proceeded with to final determination in the same manner that they might have been in the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota.

Sec. 23. That immediately upon the taking effect of this act the counties of Campbell, Walworth, Potter, Faulk, Edmunds, McPherson, Brown, Spink, Day, Clerk, Codington and Grant, and the Sisseton and Wahpeton Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Dakota, between the 46th parallel of north latitude and the seventh standard parallel lying east of the Missouri River, shall constitute the Third Judicial District of the Territory of Dakota, until changed or altered by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory of Dakota, and the District Court in the various counties and subdivisions in said district shall be and remain as is now or may hereafter be provided by law. And the counties of Union, Clay, Turner, Lincoln, McCook, Minnehaha, Moody, Lake, Kingsbury, Hamlin, Brookings and Deuel, shall constitute the Fourth Judicial District of the Territory of Dakota, and the District Court for said district shall have and exercise the same jurisdiction in all cases arising under the Constitution and Laws of the United States as is vested in the circuit and district courts of the United States, and the circuit and district courts of the United States for said district shall be held at Sioux Falls, at the times fixed by the laws of the said Territory of Dakota for the general terms of court, in said Minnehaha County; and the jurisdiction of the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, in all cases arising under the Constitution and Laws of the United States, shall extend over and include as a part thereof the counties of Clark, Codington, Grant and Day, and all that portion of the Sisseton and Wahpeton Reservation south of the 46th parallel of north latitude; and all that portion of said Territory of Dakota north of said reservation and said County of Day. And the jurisdiction of the District Court of the Second Judicial District of the Territory of Dakota, in all cases arising under the Constitution and Laws of the United States shall extend over and include as a part thereof, the counties of Brown, Spink, Faulk, Edmunds, McPherson, Campbell, Walworth and Ashmore, and that portion of said Territory of Dakota lying north of said counties of Campbell, McPherson and Brown, until altered or changed by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory of Dakota; and all suits, actions, proceedings and indictments now pending or commenced in the Second Judicial District of Dakota, as it is now constituted by the laws of the Territory of Dakota, shall not abate, but shall be heard, tried and determined in the District Court of said Second Judicial District.

Sec. 24. That the governor, chief justice and secretary of the territory, and the auditor and treasurer, or any two of them, are hereby authorized to meet at the capital of said Territory of Dakota within sixty days after the taking effect of this act, and to reapportion the members of the Council and House of said Territory of Dakota upon the basis of population, as near as may be, as shown by the census returns for the year 1880; and when the reapportionment is completed they shall forthwith file their report of the same with the secretary of the territory. And within ten days thereafter the governor of said territory shall issue his proclamation for an election of such members of the Legislature so appointed as aforesaid, specifying in said proclamation the apportionment so made to the different sections, and which election shall be held at the time and place as provided by law, and the returns thereof canvassed as provided by the laws of said Territory of Dakota.

CITIZENS' CONVENTION AT CANTON

Early in 1882 there was a general belief among the people of the territory that they were approaching statehood, and the intelligence of the citizens was manifested in the concern felt and expressed by all classes regarding the provisions of the fundamental law they would be called upon to adopt for the government of the new state.

A bill was then pending in Congress, introduced in the House by Delegate Pettigrew, and in the Senate by Senator Windom, of Minnesota, providing a Territorial Government for Pembina, which it was proposed to take from Dakota Territory north of the 46th parallel of north latitude, and the prospect of its passage through both Houses was so favorable that the statehood movement for the southern half was set on foot with sanguine expectations that it would be admitted into the Union with little delay.

CITIZENS' TERRITORIAL CONVENTION

Anticipating this, a Citizens' Constitutional Association was set on foot, and in February a call was issued from Yankton for a convention to be held at Canton on the 7th of June, which was subsequently changed to the 21st of June.

Mr. H. H. Smith, of Yankton, was the chairman of the committee that issued the call, which stated that the object of the convention was to consult and ascertain the wishes of the southern portion of the territory on the question of state organization and other vital questions connected with that subject. The call appears to have been intended for distribution to certain individuals who were solicited to interest themselves in procuring signers to it, this being the beginning of the movement, and proceeds as follows:

We have further to request that you, and such of your neighbors as feel an interest in these important subjects, shall, as soon as practicable, obtain the signatures of as many respectable citizens of your own and neighboring counties as you can, placing the name of the county opposite each signature, and return the call thus signed to H. H. Smith, chairman of the central committee, at Yankton.

Will you also transmit one of the "calls" to as many persons in the neighboring counties as you may think will take part in this movement, and request such persons to sign and transmit such papers in the same manner as above stated."

The central committee follows:

H. H. Smith, chairman; Rev. Joseph Ward, Yankton, Yankton County; W. R. Stone, Aurora, Brookings County; H. S. Lewis, Watertown, Codington County; E. H. Withee, Middleton, Turner County; E. C. Lyman, Huron, Beadle County; J. Q. Fitzgerald, Canton, Lincoln County; C. B. Valentine, Turner County; Wm. G. Bower, K. B. Finlay, Vermillion, Clay County; Ira Ellis, George Ford, Elk Point, Union County; C. C. Bridgman, Vermillion; P. Bjorgum, Elk Point; Daniel Sayers, Estelline, Hamlin County; A. J. Pynchen, Yankton; Wesley L. Beals, Watertown; D. S. Waldo, Lennox, Lincoln County; John M. Fogarty, E. P. Wilcox, W. H. H. Beadle, Jacob Max, Alexander Hughes, Yankton.

A circular accompanied the call setting forth in detail the objects of this association, worded as follows:

Preparations are being made in Congress for an enabling act, authorizing the people of this territory to hold a constitutional convention. Delegates to that convention will have in their hands your most vital interests; they will determine your boundaries, name your state, and prepare your fundamental laws for an indefinite number of years. As the people have not been consulted hitherto on any of these questions, and to avoid any danger that a small knot of politicians of Dakota shall take it upon themselves to decide these matters for her people without their knowledge or consent;

We, citizens of Dakota, without distinction of party, and living in different parts of the second judicial district, upon mutual consultation, have resolved, in the common interest, to cooperate in taking steps to have the people of Dakota consulted on these grave questions and their wishes ascertained.

With this view we have agreed to submit to the people of the various counties comprising the second judicial district the following questions for their consideration:

- 1st. Do you desire a state organization at this time?
- 2d. If so, do you desire to have the enabling act of Congress so framed that your constitutional convention shall be a small body elected on short notice, and with a ready-made constitution planned and drawn by a few men submitted to it; or do you desire a full and large convention, so that all persons of the territory may be represented, and such time given that the people may be fully informed of the nature of their new constitution, and have ample opportunity to examine and scrutinize all its provisions?
- 3d. Do you desire that the boundaries of Dakota shall be mutilated as provided by Senator Saunders' bill, and an important part of the territory given to Nebraska?
- 4th. Do you desire the boundaries of the new state to be extended over the Indian reservation and the Black Hills; or do you believe that the best interests of the people of both sections will be best promoted by having the new state a homogeneous agricultural state, with common interests and like laws, customs and modes throughout all its limits?
- 5th. Do you desire to perpetuate in this new state the township system of New England, from which our country has derived its free and democratic institutions, and its greatness and prosperity?
- 6th. Do you desire that the large school fund which the new state will inherit from the general Government will be guarded from plunderers and grabbers by every possible check and safeguard; or that by a loose, free-and-easy constitution, the munificent inheritance of your children and your children's children shall be at the mercy of rings, robbers and speculators?
- 7th. Do you desire to have checks incorporated into your constitution which shall confine county and municipal indebtedness within proper bounds, and protect your young communities from being mortgaged and sold into the hopeless slavery of debt, and this in many cases the result of fraud and deceit?

8th. Do you desire to have the people protected by proper provisions against undue control on the part of railroad and other monopolies?

9th. Do you desire to see special legislation prevented, with its train of lobbying, bribery, jockey and rings?

10th. Do you desire to send to your constitutional convention your best and most honest men, and to have time to select and instruct them in accordance with your wishes?

11th. Do you desire that your state legislatures as well as your county and city authorities shall be forever prohibited from loaning or pledging the public credit to corporations?

12th. Do you desire that your constitution shall have incorporated in it a clause forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage?

13th. Do you desire that a limit shall be fixed by your new constitution to the power of taxation, whether by state, county, city or town taxation, so that it shall never exceed certain reasonable bounds?

14th. Do you desire that your judiciary should be taken out of the unwholesome influence of partisan politics, and made at the same time independent and responsible?

15th. Do you desire that with your large school endowment a firm and sure foundation shall be laid in your constitution for a public school system, by which a good school shall be brought within the reach of every man's home, and under which every child of school age in Dakota shall have the opportunity of obtaining a fair education at home?

16th. Do you desire to this end to prevent your valuable school lands from being sold for a mere pittance now, which in a short time in the future will be worth from $10 to $50 per acre?

17th. Do you think it desirable, for the purpose of more fully considering these and other grave and serious questions connected with the proposed convention, and for the purpose of having opportunity for mature deliberation and consultation thereon, that you send delegates to meet at a fixed time and place in convention, to ascertain and give expression to the wishes of the people of Dakota on the matters suggested in these questions and kindred matters, and communicate them to Congress and the people before the calling of a constitutional convention?

18th. Do you desire to favor a permanent organization, to continue in operation from this time until a state constitution is adopted, which shall have for its object to watch and protect the public interest in respect to the "questions" above suggested, and to take such steps as may be necessary to disseminate information and promote public discussion of these subjects?

Should the questions seem to you of importance, we recommend to the qualified voters of the several counties herein named, being all of the counties in the second and fourth judicial districts, to hold elections in their several counties at their respective county seats, on the 17th day of May, 1882, at 2 o'clock P. M., at which all those who favor such a convention shall vote for such number of delegates as they may select to attend a convention to be held at the City of Sioux Falls on the 7th day of June, 1882, at 2 o'clock P. M. on that day. And that these elections be held in each county, under such regulations as the citizens of each county, friendly to this movement, may deem proper.

We further recommend that all qualified voters, without distinction of party, be invited to join in the selection of these delegates.

We further recommend, for the public good, that it be distinctly understood, as a fundamental condition of such convention, that all considerations of office or of political preferment be strictly excluded from the matters confided to this convention for its deliberation.

We further recommend that so soon as the foregoing "questions" shall be signed by one or more responsible and respectable citizen or citizens of each county in said second and fourth judicial districts, or of two-thirds of such counties, that then these "questions" be published in the territorial newspapers, and in the St. Paul Pioneer-Press, and in the Chicago Tribune, Inter-Ocean and Times.

We request that the signers of these "questions" in each county associate with themselves two or more citizens of such county, friendly to this movement, to act as a county committee, for the purpose of correspondence with the central committee, and of performing the preliminary work necessary to be done for holding and certifying in due form the elections above called.

We also request that as soon as this paper is signed it be returned to H. H. Smith, chairman of the central committee of the Citizens' Constitutional Association of the Second and Fourth Judicial Districts of Dakota, at Yankton, Dakota Territory, by whom the names of the signers will be incorporated in the general call, to be published as above stated.

It is not requested that signers to this call answer the above "questions" or any of them, either in the affirmative or negative, but merely that they indicate, by signing the same, that they desire that these questions be submitted to the people to ascertain their wishes thereon, and to promote discussion of the same.

This call is addressed to all the citizens of the Second Judicial District for United States Causes, which embraces all the second and fourth judicial districts, and all the counties of Dakota south of the 46th parallel of latitude, and east of the Missouri River, and also one tier of counties on the west side of the Missouri River.

The central committee has been unable, through want of the necessary time, to obtain the address of all the citizens to whom it is desired to send this call. They ask their friends, to whom it is sent, to supply this lack by seeing personally the gentlemen in their vicinity who are interested in these grave questions, and who are willing to assist in taking steps for properly bringing them before the people.

About one thousand five hundred names were secured to the call as originally sent out, and early in May a second call was issued changing the place of meeting to Canton, as follows:

Now, therefore, the people of the second and fourth judicial districts, which comprise that part of Dakota lying south of the 40th parallel of latitude and east of the western boundaries of the counties of Boreman, Rusk, Stanley, Pratt and Gregory, are hereby invited and earnestly recommended to meet during the month of May in their respective counties and select in such manner as may seem to them best such number of delegates as they deem proper to represent them in the convention to be held at Canton on the 7th day of June, 1882, there to consider and act on the questions above set forth.

Signed—John Stevenson, O. D. Hinckley, N. C. Nash, J. Gechon, I. N. Martin, T. W. Madole, R. Z. Bennett, A. R. Brown, R. A. Pierce, G. L. Conklin, W. B. Wait, T. J. Leavitt, A. J. Fleming, M. T. Hogoboom, William Stilwell, E. Jones, John Falde, J. S. Sand, and more than 500 others from Lincoln County.

A. L. McWhorter, Hand County.

H. C. Green, Wm. Letcher, W. A. Goodykoontz, and many others from Davison County.

O. E. Batchelder, and others from Lake County.

Sanford Suits, E. C. Lyman, and others of Beadle County.

Frank Hoskins, C. A. Fountain, and many others of Brown County.

W. B. White, C. J. Branch, and many others of Hutchinson County.

J. M. Fogarty, E. Miner, E. P. Wilcox, Rev. Joseph Ward, Rev. M. Whitfield, L. D. Parmier, H. H. Smith, Z. Richey, Hugh J. Campbell, W. H. Beadle, Alex Hughes, Dr. F. Etter, and 150 others of Yankton County.

F. W. Harrison, A. F. McAuley, and many others of Bon Homme County.

K. B. Finley, M. J. Lewis, C. C. Bridgeman, W. G. Bower, and some 200 others of Clay County.

Ira Nash, Geo. F. Ross, and many others of Miner County.

Rev. W. H. Thrall, A. Folsom, and many others of Day County.

Rev. J. P. Williamson, and many others of Charles Mix County.

Capt. I. G. Hurlburt, W. B. DeGray, and others of Kingsbury County.

W. R. Stone, W. L. Beals, and others of Codington County.

Joseph Allen, E. H. Withee, C. B. Valentine, and others of Turner County.

Ira Ellis, George Ford, Frank Wade, and others of Union County.

Daniel Sayers, and others of Hamlin County.

Chester Westcott, and others of Deuel County.

Possibly it was the suggestion among the "Questions" that prohibition would be discussed at the state convention called, that enlisted considerable interest in Yankton County, for on the day of the convention for the election of delegates a large number of citizens assembled for the purpose of taking part in the proceedings. This numerous attendance was a surprise to the parties who had been leading the movement for the state gathering, and it was evident that the new comers so recently converted, had assembled for the purpose of electing the delegation to the state convention and adopting a platform. The central committee chairman, Mr. Smith, however, was not inclined to surrender, and went ahead and organized the caucus with H. J. Campbell, as chairman, and H. H. Smith as secretary.

The new arrivals were denied the privilege of voting for the reason that they had not signed the call, which they answered by asking for the call, as they were prepared to sign it. The Campbell party, however, appeared to be suspicious of such sudden conversions, and went ahead with their proceedings, ignoring the new comers. Some loud talking ensued, and fireworks were dimly hinted at but the Campbellites refused to take them in, and the result was the organization of a separate caucus in the same room, and the proceedings of each faction went on simultaneously, and without further unseemly disorder.

The Campbell caucus appointed B. S. Williams, J. S. Fogarty and E. P.

Wilcox, to select a list of delegates to Canton, and the committee reported the following:

Dr. D. F. Etter, Rev. Joseph Ward, Gov. N. Edmunds, I. Piles, A. Hughes, W. H. H. Beadle, Hugh J. Campbell, H. H. Smith, Capt. W. S. Lyon, E. C. Dudley, S. W. Howe, Jacob Max, J. C. McVay, Geo. W. Kingsbury, Maris Taylor, J. R. Sanborn, G. W. Hawley, John M. Fogarty, L. D. Parmer, E. Miner, Rev. Wilmot Whitfield, E. P. Wilcox, A. J. Pyncheon, I. N. Esmay, M. Blodgett, A. L. VanOsdel. The report was adopted and the meeting adjourned.

The other caucus must have been headed by Judge C. F. Rossteuscher, because it was popularly known as the "Rossteuscher" caucus. Its adherents elected C. F. Rossteuscher, chairman, and A. C. Davis, secretary. On motion of George Bauman the chair appointed George Bauman, Jacob Brauch, and Otto Peemiller, to select a list of delegates to Canton.

Mr. Peemiller offered the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That the delegates elected at this meeting to attend the convention to be held at Canton for the purpose of drafting a Constitution for the future State of Dakota, be instructed to procure the insertion in that instrument of a prohibition against the enactment of any sumptuary law or laws abridging the personal liberties of the people;

And be it further Resolved, That said delegates be instructed to procure the insertion in the constitution of the future state of a provision requiring all property owned by individuals or private corporations, to be uniformly taxed according to its value, and forbidding the exemption of any such property from taxation.

The following named delegates to Canton were reported and the report adopted:

G. A. Wetter, James B. Wynn, Geo. H. Hand, J. R. Gamble, F. Schnauber, C. F. Rossteuscher, Robert Dickson, A. C. Davis, J. Satori, Joseph Peir, Peter Royem, C. J. B. Harris.

The meeting then adjourned.

The declaration against the incorporation of any sumptuary provisions in the constitution, touched upon an issue or a question which at the time was being agitated in all the states and territories surrounding Dakota, and constitutional prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants was very freely discussed among the people. It was not a party question in Dakota; the Citizens' Constitutional Association was made up of prominent men of both parties, and it was probably their purpose, but not their leading purpose, to secure constitutional prohibition if they found public sentiment in line for it, and not to let the opportunity afforded by the adoption of a state constitution, pass without testing the matter at the ballot box. As this was generally understood, there was no surprise at the action of that element of the people who were opposed to any constitutional meddling with the liquor question. Another weak place in the programme of the citizen movement was the question regarding the boundaries of the new state which proposed to leave the Black Hills section out in the cold.

After a struggle of fifteen years to procure the opening of the Black Hills to settlement and development, the people of the eastern portion of the state would not be willing to relinquish it, and Congress would have gathered an erroneous idea of the sentiment of a very large majority of the people if it had been influenced by the boundaries outlined in the "question" relative thereto, put forth by the committee; but this was cured by the voluntary action of the central committee in a subsequent call, which explains itself, as follows:

Headquarters of the Central Committee, Yankton, May 24, 1882. Since there is reason to expect that the State of Dakota will be admitted to the Union at the present session of Congress, and since the state is to include all south of the 46th parallel, all the counties in the coming state are invited to send delegates to the convention heretofore called to meet at Canton on the 7th of June, and the time of holding the same has been changed from June 7 to June 21, 1882. It is earnestly hoped that every county will be represented at that time.

B. S. WILLIAMS, Secretary,
H. H. SMITH, Chairman.

FIRST CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION GATHERING

The convention assembled at Canton in accordance with the call, and 193 delegates claimed seats. As no apportionment of delegates had been made, each county had depended upon volunteers as a rule, and the County of Lincoln being at home in Canton, its delegates could attend without incurring much expense or much of time, and its delegation was quite numerous.

The place of meeting was at Redford Hall. Dr. W. I. Taylor, of Canton, called the convention to order, and was elected chairman, with Judge W. C. Bower, of Sioux Falls, secretary. Rev. J. V. Himes, of Union County, then offered prayer, imploring the divine blessing upon the proceedings. There were twelve clergymen among the delegates, and a number of ladies, women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that association having held a convention in Canton the day before.

The temporary organization was made permanent, with the addition of N. C. Nash, of the Canton News, as one of the secretaries.

A recess was taken until 2 o'clock P. M. Upon reconvening, the mayor of the city, Hon. Wm. M. Cuppett, made a welcoming address.

On motion of Judge Campbell, of Yankton, all matters relating to politics and personal preferences, were declared to be out of order. Committees were then appointed on resolutions, rules, school lands, taxation, finance, name and boundary, prohibitory and anti-monopoly legislation, and other subjects which were expected would be considered. These committees reported during the afternoon session. Their reports were quite full and complete, and included the following subjects:

That the boundaries of the state should be all that portion of the territory south of the 46th parallel, and its name should be simply "State of Dakota;" no municipal indebtedness was to be contracted exceeding five per cent of the assessed valuation; counties were prohibited from using their credit to aid in the building of railroads; special legislation in behalf of corporations was forbidden; no legislation was to be permitted allowing the scaling down of the public indebtedness; the school lands were to be disposed of only at public auction and at a price not less than $10 an acre; the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor was prohibited. The more radical element among the prohibitionists would have added to that article a clause prohibiting the sale or use for medical, mechanical or sacramental purposes, but they were unable to muster a majority. Some slight opposition was manifested to the 46th parallel as the northern boundary.

Rev. Wilmot Whitfield, Rev. Joseph Ward, N. C. Nash, S. F. Andrews, F. B. Foster and Rev. J. V. Himes, were appointed an executive committee to have charge of the work of organizing a state league with the view of being prepared to carry out the reforms proposed by the convention when the actual work of framing the state constitution should be entered upon under the authority of Congress.

The executive committee was authorized to carry out the plans of the state league, which in a general way corresponded with the proceedings of the former central committee. The convention adopted resolutions of thanks to the citizens of Canton for the courteous manner in which they had provided for the convention and after a number of brief addresses predicting a triumph for the principles and purposes of the Citizens Constitutional Association, the convention adjourned.

Thus terminated the first state convention held in Dakota, and reviewing the constitution finally adopted seven years later it is discovered that this initial volunteer body outlined quite closely many of the provisions of the instrument finally adopted.

This was no small movement, nor was it directed by those possessing no influence in the political field. It sowed the seed in its early career, which grew from that time and became one of the most important issues in the state movement, and that was the introduction of the question of constitutional prohibition. Not many of the people, compared with the whole body, seemed prepared to take an open stand for prohibition by the drastic method proposed, though a strictly temperate if not a total abstinence principle was the rule with a majority. The recent and numerous additions to Dakota's population had come from the states where the prohibition question had been a live issue and had been quite thoroughly discussed, and the general opinions favored the belief that Dakota was largely in favor of placing prohibition in the fundamental law.

The declarations regarding the school lands, public indebtedness, monopolies, and other subjects, were timely, and such as the masses of the people subscribed to and would insist upon. In large part the promulgation of the tenets of the association had a wholesome influence, and to a great extent solidified the sentiment of the people, and added its moiety of respectability to the important political work in which Dakotans were then engaged.

Something of the earnestness of the people and their confidence that Congress would act during this session favorably upon the division question; and give the southern half of the territory an enabling act under which it could prepare for statehood, will be afforded the reader by these proceedings in Dakota and at Washington. This was a people's movement—not a sham affair engineered by professional politicians in their own interest, though many politicians were conspicuous in it, but were moving in line for what the people demanded.

The Citizens' Constitutional Convention was purely a people's movement; that is, it was in no way connected with any political organization; its only distinctive feature was that the influences that controlled were those promoted by the temperance element, but it was not regarded as a prohibition movement, and was endorsed and participated in by many who did not favor prohibition. It was one of a number of similar efforts, which altogether show the unanimity of the people of the territory on the two leading issues—division and admission.

The votes taken do not serve to show this so clearly. Prominent people in these principal movements became estranged—whatever their motive it was not one that led to opposition to the principal objects in view—but with some it was personal ambition—with others, apparently, jealousy of the prominence given to a rival; with others railroad influences in making the constitution; and with others prohibition or anti-prohibition.

DAKOTANS MOVE ON WASHINGTON

Dakota Territory was represented at Washington during the session of Congress of 1881-82, by three separate and distinct delegations of her citizens, who were sent by authority of conventions publicly assembled for the purpose of promoting the division of the territory. Northern Dakota's delegation was authorized by the Fargo conference, the Black Hills delegation by a mass convention of the several Black Hills counties at Deadwood and the Southern Dakota delegation from east of the Missouri River by a convention of delegates elected from all the counties in the district, held at Sioux Falls. These several delegations acted in harmony and yet independently, and all acted in concert with the territorial delegate, Mr. Pettigrew, who had introduced bills for a division of the territory and the organization of the northern half into a territory, the southern half to gain admission as a state or possibly remain as a separate territory, with the name of "Dakota." Had this program succeeded even to the extent of dividing the territory, what became North Dakota would have been named Pembina, for Congress would not have consented to a North Dakota Territory and a South Dakota Territory, and Pembina was the name given in Mr. Pettigrew's bill.

The sentiment of Congress was more favorable to division than to admission of a state at the time. The democrats would oppose the latter as a party measure, but a comparatively large number of that party favored division. (See Tillman of South Carolina.) To what extent this was true was not definitely ascertained except in the instance of a vote in the House, not on the division bill direct but on a vote for the suspension of the rules to permit the Dakota bill to be taken up. This vote disclosed nearly two-thirds the members favorable, and a large portion of these were democratic members. Could a vote on the main question have been secured at the time it would have carried by a substantial majority.

Governor Ordway was in Washington, but was not invited to participate in the deliberations of either of the delegations. He appeared to be acting for himself. He had been given an audience by the Senate and House committees on territories, and his views would indicate that he was not prepared to favor any change at the time, though he gave assent to the division and admission plans, if the latter were bulwarked by what he deemed proper safeguards to prevent the extravagance and recklessness of the people in running into debt. It was evident, however, that the governor was satisfied that Congress would do nothing definite at that session and with this program he felt quite complacent and could join in a modest way with the efforts being made by the several delegations.

THE NORTH DAKOTA DELEGATION

A convention of representatives from the various counties of Dakota Territory north of the 46th parallel was called to meet at Fargo, on the 4th of January, 1882, for the purpose of pronouncing, in a formal manner, the sentiment of that portion of Dakota in regard to a division of the territory, and statehood for the southern half. All the organized counties north of the 46th parallel, excepting Pembina and Ransom, were represented. General Wilson was chairman of the convention, which after due deliberation adopted the following resolutions:

The convention of delegates appointed from the various counties of Northern Dakota, and instructed to give expression to the views of the people whom they represent concerning the proposed division of the territory, do hereby declare, and

Resolve, That the territory ought to be divided on the 46th parallel of latitude without further delay, because the territory is too unwieldy as now constituted, and the transaction of public business is thereby rendered unnecessarily burdensome, because of the vast tides of immigration flowing into it, following the great lines of rivers and railroads, and all have tended to the formation of northern and southern communities alienated in sympathy and interest; because the population, already ample, is increasing with unexampled rapidity and gives assurance of the speedy unbuilding of two great and populous states within the present territorial boundary, and because the 46th parallel is a natural dividing line and will cut the territory into two nearly equal parts:

Resolved, That the claims of the territory lying south of the proposed dividing line to admission to the Union as a state, are referred to Congress with cordial wishes that the application may be successful, while for the territory lying north of that line, embracing the famous wheat belt of the new Northwest, we ask only separate territorial organization, and the opportunity to develop as a distinct community our vast and varied resources:

Third—That claiming an equal share with our brethren residing south of the 46th parallel in the name under which each part of the common territory has achieved so much of greatness, we protest against any attempt to appropriate it to the benefit of one section more than to the other; and we therefore respectfully ask Congress to confer the titles "North Dakota" and "South Dakota," upon the political structures to be carved out of the common inheritance:

Fourth—That we ask for division anyhow. Whatever else may or may not be done, we are unqualifiedly opposed to the admission of the present territory as a state;

Fifth—That the people of Northern Dakota, in view of the great injustice of further delay in remedying the evils under which they suffer, and the duty of the parent government to stimulate the growth of this vast and fertile portion of the territorial domain, are impelled to express the hope that political and personal motives and ambitions will not be permitted to check or defeat the changes demanded by the public good, and so essential to the welfare of the Northwest:

Sixth—That we are not indifferent to the services already rendered in their behalf by Hon. Alvin Sanders, of Nebraska, and Hon. Wm. Windom, of Minnesota, in the Senate; and Hon. R. F. Pettigrew, our territorial delegate, in the House of Representatives, and we respectfully solicit their cooperation with that of all others in and out of Congress who are disposed to do justice to Dakota, and to give effect to the expressed will of a people whose achievements have already shed lustre upon American enterprise and added immensely to the national wealth.

The following, selected as delegates to visit Washington and further the objects expressed in the resolutions, were appointed: Judge A. H. Barnes, Fargo, delegate at large, with Col. P. Donan, as alternate; A. A. Carpenter, C. A. Lounsberry, W. F. Steele, George H. Walsh, H. G. Stone, J. S. Eshelman, M. J. Edgerly, A. Klaus, Folsom Dow, H. B. Crandall, Louis Thompson, W. E. Clayton, Judson LaMoure, L. D. Austin, and E. A. Healey.

THE BLACK HILLS DELEGATION

The Black Hills people, in this movement, co-operated enthusiastically with the other sections of the territory. They were first in the field with a mass convention at Deadwood early in January, 1882, where they adopted resolutions favoring division and admission, setting forth very substantial reasons therefor. Their preamble recited that:

The people of the southern portion of the territory deem it prejudicial to their growing interests not to have the government of themselves in their own hands, especially as after a division of the territory they would still have the area and resources of a large and wealthy state, possessing a thrifty and intelligent population, double as numerous as that of any other territory which has been admitted into the Union, having vast agricultural resources and a mineral region unsurpassed in extent, variety and richness, by any other in the world.

The population of the Black Hills counties is not excelled by any state or territory in the Union in the points of intelligence, education, energy and enterprise. There are not one hundred and sixty acres of land lying all together but what will raise grain or other crops, or which is not equally valuable for mining. Even the alkali lands are turning out to be the most fruitful grain growing lands in the territory. West of the Missouri there are half a million head of cattle. The gold product of 1881, shipped by known routes, amounted to $4,500,000, to say nothing of those which found their way out by private conveyance. The silver shipments commencing in May, 1881, not of bullion, but of ores for smelting purposes, amount to a large sum. One mill alone shipped $28,000 as a product for a month. The hills are known to contain gold, silver, copper, galena, and iron; and mica and salt, petroleum and gypsum inexhaustible; and quarries of excellent marble; also coal and asbestos and fire clay. There are also scores of thousands of acres of pine lands which will be needed no doubt in mining operations and in building at home. The largest gold mine in the world and the largest quartz mills are located at Lead City.

The names of the Black Hills delegation to Washington to promote division and admission follow:

G. C. Moody, Samuel McMasters, Dighton Corson, Granville G. Bennett, Wm. Hayden, Seth Bullock, John C. Ryan, W. C. Kingsley, A. J. Knight, C. F. Tracey, Thos. James, C. V. Gardner, T. J. Webster, A. J. Plowman, John D. Hale, J. K. P. Miller, D. McPherson, Thos. Russell, John P. Belding, R. E. Grimshaw, A. C. Marshman, G. B. Schofield, A. W. Hastie, Dr. Dyer, J. D. Woolley, B. G. Caulfield, Wm. R. Steele, Wm. H. Claggett, John R. Wilson, E. G. Dudley, R. C. Lake, John D. Patton, W. H. Riley, A. S. Stewart, W. A. Roemer, Wm. H. Parker, Porter Warner, Dolph Edwards, J. A. Harding, S. McBratney, E. P. Champlin, A. R. Z. Dawson, Wm. Selbie, L. R. Graves, Harris Franklin, V. E. Prentice, Job Lawrenson, S. P. Romans, John A. Garton, John Hermann, A. W. Merrick, all of Lawrence County, and C. H. Clark, Custer County.

INDIGNATION IN HANSON COUNTY

The convention held in Hanson County to appoint delegates to the South-eastern Dakota convention to be held in Sioux Falls, January 25, 1882, to elect a delegation of citizens residing east of the Missouri River and south of the 46th parallel to visit Washington and aid in promoting the efforts being made for a division of the territory, and statehood for the southern half of the territory, was a mass convention composed of democrats and republicans, and was held at Alexandria on Saturday, the 22d. It was a popular assembly, regularly called, and was largely representative of the sentiment of the people of the territory. Its officers were Eli H. Downs, president, and Hon. James Baynes, secretary. A committee on resolutions was appointed composed of Col. J. L. Davenport, S. E. Stebbins, Wm. H. Lee, chairman county commissioners, M. P. Wheeler, Arthur J. Parshall, secretary of the Army and Navy colony, and Hon. F. B. Foster, a pioneer of the county. The committee submitted a set of resolutions, which were adopted without dissent, and as these resolutions were subsequently referred to as "bogus," by the governor, it is proper to give them a place here together with the occasion of their adoption. They were the beginning of a public expression of sentiment that embraced practically the territory before Ordway's term as governor expired. The resolutions follow:

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Hanson County, in mass meeting assembled, having full confidence in the integrity and ability of our delegate in Congress, hereby take this method of expressing our appreciation of his energetic efforts to procure the division and admission of Dakota, and pledge to him our hearty cooperation.

Resolved, That we deplore the efforts of our governor to falsify the honesty of our people and our delegate; that we denounce the assertion that our people are corrupt and incompetent of self-government and that our delegate is the head of a ring to fleece and defraud the people through state government, as false and without foundation except in the minds of a clique of carpet-baggers who have no interests in common with the people who have come here to make homes by honest toil, instead of subsisting upon the spoils of office; and because the mass of our people fail to place confidence in their pretended honest policy, stigmatize them as corrupt and incapable of self-government.

Resolved, That those of our citizens who attend the Sioux Falls Convention are instructed to have the delegates there chosen to go to Washington, to call upon his excellency, President Arthur, and apprise him of the honest feeling that exists among the people of this territory towards our nonresident and too much interviewed governor; to demand his removal and the appointment of a man whose ideas of honest government are not at variance with those of the people, to the end that there may be appointed a chief magistrate who will work in harmony with our delegate for the prosperity and general weal of the people.

Resolved, That we approve of the division of the territory on the 46th parallel, and the admission of the south half as a state of the Union. Without conceit or self-praise we believe our people are capable of conducting a state government; that there is no "wanton official corruption;" that Dakota has an abundance of competent men to fill all her state offices without necessitating any importations of material for that express purpose, reports and libels to the contrary notwithstanding.

The following committee was appointed to attend the Sioux Falls convention:

J. W. Knapp, James Baynes, Frank B. Foster, M. I. Cunon, Col. J. L. Davenport, Hon. Jerry D. Flick, Capt. I. Gray, W. M. Perry, Arthur J. Parshall, Joseph Starkweather, Lewis Mish, F. A. Durkee, Frank Johnson, M. P. Wheeler, T. D. Wrightson, Carl Eiless, C. H. Huntington, C. Helts, L. P. Chapman, Rev. E. C. Downs, Hiram Bowen, Calvin Potter, Hiram Baughman, Oliver Marsh, George Huntington, Col. E. B. Foster, A. H. Butts, George Hayner, J. H. Sherrill, C. I. Miltimore, John A. Jenks, Hon. Wm. H. Lee, M. E. Conlin, W. Bradley Jones, E. C. Burdick, A. C. Avery, Wm. Casey, E. F. Burdick, John A. Brown, F. L. Bond, A. B. Brown, J. M. Blain, M. A. Brown, S. G. Phelps, H. M. Chapman, Alex. Hinckley, C. H. Randall, S. M. Weiner, S. N. Norton, Alex. McQuarters, W. C. Smith, H. P. Benjamin, I. J. Smith.

The meeting then adjourned.

This was the first formal demand made at a public assembly of the people of the territory, for the removal of Ordway, though the subject had been agitated. These resolutions were intended for presentation to the Sioux Falls convention, and are those subsequently referred to in letters and statements of Ordway and others, but the cooler heads at the convention, apprehending that their adoption might injure the cause of division by giving to the convention the appearance of an indignation meeting, and thus injure its influence, induced the Hanson County delegates to withhold the resolutions, and they were not presented.

SOUTHERN DAKOTA CONVENTION AT SIOUX FALLS

The non-partisan convention of delegates from the various counties of Southern Dakota east of the Missouri River and south of the 46th parallel assembled at Sioux Falls, on the 25th of January, 1882. The delegates in many cases had been elected by county conventions; there was quite a full attendance of representatives from every, or nearly every, county. The convention was called to order by E. W. Caldwell, editor of the Sioux Falls Pantagraph, and ex-Governor Newton Edmunds, of Yankton, was elected president, and all the newspaper representatives present were made secretaries, while Rev. Mr. Williamson, of Moody County, was made the official secretary.

Mr. William Cuppett, of Canton, presented a resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee of one from each county represented for the purpose of reporting a list of citizens whom the convention will authorize to represent Dakota in Washington. The resolution was adopted, and the chair appointed the following committee: Aurora County, E. P. Holt; Beadle County, J. E. Elson; Brown County, N. T. Hauser; Brule County, A. G. Kellam; Bon Homme County, Frank Alexander; Clay County, L. H. Barron; Codington County, W. L. Beld; Davison County, S. N. Goodykoontz; Hanson County, F. B. Foster; Kingsbury County, A. E. Oviatt; Lake County, A. E. Clough; Lincoln County, W. M. Cuppett; Moody County, George Rice; McCook County, F. J. White; Minnehaha County, T. R. Kershaw; Turner County, V. P. Thielman; Union County, Anson Bovee; Spink County, John J. Hough; Yankton County, John R. Gamble; Brookings County, Wm. M. Nicholls; Grant County, John R. Eastman; Miner County, T. G. Brown; Hand County, James Bryson; Hughes County, S. M. Laird.

The chair then appointed a committee on resolutions, as follows: Aurora County, S. H. Clark; Beadle, J. H. Alexander; Brown, James Barnes; Brule, P. J. Griffin; Bon Homme, C. T. McCoy; Clay, F. N. Burdick; Codington, L. D. F. Poore; Davison, A. W. Hager; Kingsbury, John A. Owen; Lake, F. L. Soper; Lincoln, Frank R. Aikens; Moody, E. Huntington; McCook, J. T. Norton; Minnehaha, P. S. Free; Turner, J. A. Hand; Union, C. H. Walworth; Spink, John Hough; Yankton, Geo. H. Hand; Brookings, G. N. Breed; Grant, J. R. Eastman; Miner, W. C. Glasscutter; Hand, W. C. Lostutter; Hughes, S. M. Laird.

On motion of General Beadle all persons having resolutions for consideration were requested to hand them to a member of the committee.

Mr. J. R. Gamble, for the committee to select delegates to Washington, submitted a report, naming the following citizens from the various counties named:

Aurora County—C. J. Anderson, Geo. D. Eddy, P. E. Holp, B. H. Sullivan, R. W. Welch.
 Brule—S. D. Cook, A. G. Kellam, F. W. Evans
 Brown—J. H. Drake, N. T. Hauser, James Barnes, Jr.
 Brookings—P. P. Cady, B. J. Kelsey, Geo. W. Hopp, W. M. Nicholls.
 Beadle—J. W. Shannon, John Cain, J. H. Alexander, J. H. Nichol, C. C. Hills, W. B. Ingersoll, H. M. Jewett.

Bon Homme—F. M. Zeibach, C. T. McCoy, F. H. Morgan, J. L. Turner, J. L. Camp, Jr., Geo. W. Snow, M. H. Day, Frank Alexander.

Clay—J. P. Kidder, M. D. Thompson, W. F. Carr, F. N. Burdick, Charles Land or Lund, Al Newton, Gus Morgan, E. B. Dawson, L. H. Burrow, S. J. Lewis, John L. Jolley, A. E. Lee.
 Codington—L. D. F. Poore, L. M. Thomas, P. V. Eddy, Wm. H. Donaldson, W. G. Bone.
 Clark—S. J. Conklin.

Davison—Wm. H. Barber, M. H. Rowley, J. M. Washburn, S. C. Burr, A. W. Hagar, H. C. Greene, W. H. Knowles, S. F. Goodykoontz, S. W. Rathbun.

Grant—John R. Eastman, John W. Bell, A. H. Lewis, A. J. Bessor.

Hamlin—John M. Hoyt.

Hughes—S. M. K. Laird, Fred Pfothenauer, Geo. W. Smith.

Hutchinson—Andrew Schatz, Hiram Bowen, Wm. B. White, F. J. Eisenmann, G. W. Matthews, Sheriff Douglas.

Hanson—James Baynes, John L. Davenport, F. B. Foster, Jerry D. Flick, Arthur J. Parshall, Joseph Starkweather, T. D. Wrightson, Col. E. B. Foster, W. H. Lee, Alex Hinckley, H. P. Benjamin.

Hand—James Bryson, W. E. Miller.

Kingsbury—John A. Owen, T. F. Maguire, C. H. Starling, A. D. Oviatt, Edward Brinkley.

Lake—W. F. Smith, A. E. Clough.

Lincoln—O. S. Gifford, F. A. Gale, J. W. Carter, J. W. Taylor, A. R. Brown.

Minnehaha—Edwin Sharpe, A. Frizzell, Wm. VanEps, Herman Gilbert, E. W. Caldwell, C. H. Vincent, G. A. Uline, C. H. Winsor, Melvin Grigsby, D. S. Glidden, T. S. Emerson, B. F. Campbell, L. M. Esterbrook, A. M. Flagg, J. R. Jackson, A. T. Fleetwood.

Moody—Frank T. Whalen, E. Huntington, T. E. Carter, F. W. Pettigrew, J. A. Scammon, Thomas Hoskins, A. P. Allen, Levi Gray, Nathan Vance, T. M. McConnell.

McCook—John F. Norton, J. H. Shannard.

Spink—C. H. Meyers, Col. E. W. Foster, F. J. Foster, J. B. Kelley.

Turner—James A. Hand, Joseph Allen, P. H. Turner, Charles Hackett, Vale P. Thielmann.

Union—C. H. Walworth, C. W. Beggs, Geo. R. Freeman, M. W. Sheafe, Alexander Hughes, C. F. Mallahan.

Yankton—Newton Edmunds, Bartlett Tripp, Rev. Joseph Ward, W. H. H. Beadle, S. B. Coulson, Geo. H. Hand, J. R. Hanson, J. C. McVaty, J. R. Sanborn, W. S. Bowen, A. W. Lavender, R. J. Gamble, M. A. Baker, M. P. Ohlmann, J. B. Wynn, C. C. Valentine, S. A. Boyles, A. F. Hayward, Ole Sampson, E. G. Smith, W. S. Lyon, J. W. C. Morrison, S. H. Gruber, Maris Taylor, Chas. H. Bates, G. A. Wetter, Frank L. VanTassell, G. W. Kingsbury.

On motion of General Beadle, the delegates appointed were authorized to appoint proxies. The committee on resolutions, by their chairman, George H. Hand, then reported the following resolutions:

Whereas, Propositions are now pending before the Congress of the United States looking to the division of the Territory of Dakota on the 46th parallel of north latitude, and the admission of the southern portion thereof into the Union as a state on an equality with the original states; and

Whereas, The representatives of the people of Southeastern Dakota, irrespective of party, have assembled in convention at Sioux Falls this 25th day of January, 1882, for the purpose of considering these measures and expressing their views thereon; and

Whereas, It is the opinion of this convention that this division of the territory as proposed, and the admission of southern Dakota as a state, is demanded by every consideration of justice and regard for the general welfare of her people; therefore,

Resolved, That this convention most respectfully joins in the appeal to Congress made by the people of the northern and western portions of Dakota, which is now being earnestly urged by delegations from said sections.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that the questions of division and admission are in no wise partisan questions but are earnestly advocated and demanded by the people of the territory as a matter of right, irrespective of party, creed or sect; that our geographical position, our lines of inter-communication between the north and the south, and the natural outlets of commercial intercourse with the great centers of commercial traffic in the east are such as to justify and demand the division aforesaid.

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the bill now before Congress introduced by our delegate, for the admission of Dakota as a state, believing that 200,000 people, with 1,000 miles of railroad, with almost unlimited agricultural and mineral resources, with a country unsurpassed in fertility by any state in the Union; with telegraphs, manufactories, banks, newspapers, churches, colleges, schools, and all the outgrowths of civilization; with every probability of rapid progress in population, wealth and culture, should be allowed self-government through their constitutional right as American citizens.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this convention that the portion of the territory lying south of the 46th parallel, and which it is proposed to erect into a state, should be called "Dakota." It is the oldest and most thickly settled portion of the territory, and contains by far the greatest number of inhabitants. We, therefore, join in the request of our friends living north of the 46th parallel that the territory proposed to be organized there be called "North Dakota," but earnestly pray that the new state may be called "Dakota," as proposed in the act now pending before Congress.

Resolved, further, That a just consideration of the rights and wishes of 200,000 people now residing south of the 46th parallel, and the unanimous desire of the 60,000 residents north of that line, demands that this appeal to Congress for division and admission should not be unheeded; that as American citizens, imbued with a deep love of the cardinal principles of liberty and self-government, we are as one man in respectfully demanding that the division asked for be accorded, and that we be relieved from the burden of a local government that is in the main imposed upon us without our consent, and that is repulsive to our intelligence and obnoxious to those principles of self-government guaranteed by the fundamental law of the land.

Resolved, That the delegates of this convention, this day elected to represent the people of Southeastern Dakota before Congress on the questions of division and admission, be and they are hereby instructed to use all legitimate and proper means to accomplish that end, and render all the aid in their power to assist our delegate in Congress to secure the passage of the enabling act he has already introduced.

Following the adoption of the resolutions, the convention adjourned.

While the delegation chosen to visit Washington was a numerous one, it was expected that only a small portion of the members would go at the same time. The session of Congress would hold for several months, and it was desired to keep a citizens' delegation there as long as the Dakota bills were pending. Few could spare the time to remain more than a week or two, and by arranging the matter of attendance among themselves, a representative body of bona fide Dakota people could be at the capitol to oppose the governor's one-state schemes, and promote the measures desired by the people. It was also a feature of the plan to select delegates who had a personal acquaintance with some of the members, formed before coming to Dakota, in the state from which the delegate had removed. This was found to be very advantageous, and while the republicans were in the majority in the conventions, especial pains were taken to give the democrats all the delegates they desired, for it was the democratic members of the House that could render the most valuable aid. The outlook for success was so promising in 1882 that several members expressed their conviction that the Dakota bills could be passed if a vote could be reached.

CHAPTER CVI
THE PEOPLE CALL A CONVENTION

1883

DAKOTA DELEGATIONS BEFORE CONGRESS—SENATOR WINDOM REPORTS FAVORABLY AN ADMISSION BILL—DAKOTANS UNITED—DAKOTA AND THE TARIFF—THE NEW YORK HERALD AGAINST DAKOTA—THE TRIBUNE IN FAVOR—ORDWAY'S REMOVAL PETITIONED FOR—GENERAL BEADLE GIVES HIS VIEWS—BEADLE'S CENSUS OF 1882 AS SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT—PRO AND CON—NEWSPAPER TALK—DIVISION SAID TO BE CERTAIN IN 1882—ADMISSION DOUBTFUL IN 1883—DELEGATE RAYMOND'S VIEW—A BRIEF REVIEW, 1883—STATEHOOD WITHOUT CONGRESSIONAL ASSENT—PEOPLE'S MOVEMENT FOR STATEHOOD, 1883—DELEGATE CONVENTION AT HURON.

The several delegations from Dakota were given audiences by both the Senate and House committees on territories. The respective claims to division and statehood were very ably and satisfactorily presented, and it was notable that up to the time these hearings were had and concluded, the committees seemed inclined to favor division. The question of admission of the southern half as a state was viewed more from the partisan standpoint, and the democratic members of the committees were expected to oppose it at this time.

Governor Ordway accompanied the delegations in their audiences before the Senate committee. He also made a brief speech, during which he said he did not see why the north and south could not be joined by railroads and other lines of traffic, and have one great state. However, as the lines at present tended to division, and there was no present prospect of bettering matters in respect to joining the two sections, he thought division should be consummated, and both the division and admission bills perfected. He also urged the placing of safeguards in the measures to protect the people from reckless extravagance. The governor was the only spokesman from any section that did not place the matter of division as the one most important to be attained; and he appears to have conceded more in that direction on this occasion than on any other occasion before or afterward. He went before the House committee during January, 1882, and presented his opinion regarding the bills introduced, and others pending, by Mr. Pettigrew; one bill for the division of the territory, and a separate measure for the admission of the southern half of a state. Mr. Pettigrew had provided in his state bill that the three district attorneys within the new state boundaries should define the boundaries of the legislative districts. As these officers were elected by the people, it was the fairest selection that could have been made and very satisfactory to the people.

The governor urged that the bill be amended to compose this board of the governor, chief justice, secretary, auditor and treasurer, which as matters stood at the time would have given Ordway control of the board, and would not have been satisfactory. The board would have two of Ordway's appointees in addition to himself and the chief justice, who at the time was seeking reappointment, backed by the governor. This move was characteristic of the governor. He desired to be recognized, and to have it conceded that he was one of the leaders in Dakota. He was as vain as a peacock and as stupid as an ostrich in seeking to promote his own popularity. There was a general feeling that he could not be trusted; that he would readily sacrifice the people's interests to promote his selfish ends. He had come to be regarded in the light of a public enemy in the territory. Governor Ordway was admitted to the bar of Dakota during the closing days of Judge Shannon's term as chief justice.

The chairman of the Northern Dakota delegation, Judge Barnes, stated on his return to Fargo from Washington:

Mr. Pettigrew labored with us most faithfully and earnestly, and is doing all he can to secure both division and admission. As to the governor, there is very little doubt that he is opposed to both division and admission. We felt this in various ways, and the feeling was pretty general, I think, with all the delegations that it would be to the credit of the governor and the interest of Dakota, if he would attend more strictly to his duties as executive, and let the delegate look after the legislative interests of his constituency without interference from the governor.

NORTH DAKOTA'S STATEMENT TO CONGRESS

The accompanying statement regarding the conditions and resources of what was termed Northern Dakota in territorial days, being that part of the territory north of the 46th parallel, was made to the Committee on Territories of the United States Senate on the 21st of January, 1882, by the delegation of citizens of that section, Judge Barnes being chairman, who visited Washington for the purpose of promoting a division of the territory. The statement follows:

On the 4th of January, 1882, there assembled at the City of Fargo, in North Dakota, a convention composed of sixty-six delegates. Every organized county in that portion of the territory lying north of the 46th parallel was represented by delegates chosen in their respective counties. The purpose of the convention was to determine upon a line of action which would be most effective in calling the attention of Congress to the prosperity, and necessity, for a division of Dakota Territory. In that convention every voice was for division. Twenty-two delegates were chosen to lay this question before your committee, together with such facts as might bear upon the subject. These facts may be briefly stated:

The Territory of Dakota as now organized has an area of 158,000 square miles. That portion lying north of the 46th parallel for which we ask a separate territorial government, has 78,000 square miles, while New York has but 47,000; Pennsylvania, 46,000; Ohio, 39,000; and all New England, 68,346. The population of the territory proposed amounted to 134,680 by the census of 1880. From the most reliable source, the amount of public land taken, and our knowledge of the growth and development of the country, and the rapid extension of railway communication, we believe we are warranted in claiming a population of at least 60,000. There has been entered at the United States Land Offices in North Dakota for the year ended December 31, 1881, 2,364,000 acres of public land. On the 1st of January, 1882, there were 580 miles of railroad built and in operation; 194 miles of graded railway ready for the superstructure, and 316 miles under contract to be completed the current year. The acreage under cultivation in 1881, from the best estimates obtainable, was 600,000, and from statistics gathered from elevators and millers, the product of wheat alone is estimated at 8,000,000 bushels. During the season of 1882 the number of acres to be cropped will exceed 800,000. Dealers in agricultural implements report sales for 1881 amounting to $1,750,000, and dealers in lumber, $4,000,000. The population is largely agricultural, made up of immigrants from New England, New York, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and the North-western states. The foreign population is mainly from Canada, Norway, Sweden and Germany. The industries are mainly agricultural and pastoral. It is estimated that 98 per cent of the lands are adapted to agriculture. The soil is peculiarly adapted to cereals, while the grasses are the most nutritious in the world.

There are in North Dakota ten national banks, including two just organized, and sixteen private banking institutions. There are twenty-one flouring mills, forty-nine church structures, and a large number of church organizations which contemplate erecting places of worship another season. There are 130 schoolhouses, and five daily and twenty-four weekly newspapers. Bonds have been issued by counties for the purpose of erecting five court-houses. These bonds bear 7 per cent interest and have in every instance been sold at a premium. No bonds have been issued in Northern Dakota to aid in the construction of any railroads. Three counties only, namely: Burleigh, Pembina and Cass, have issued bonds for funding county indebtedness, but in no case over fifteen thousand. In every instance where bonds have been issued, no question has ever arisen as to the proceeds having been honestly applied to the purpose for which they were issued, and in every instance these bonds have been sold at a premium.

There are upwards of one thousand miles of navigable water in North Dakota. On the Red River of the North there are sixteen steamers having an average tonnage of 110 tons to the boat, and twenty-one barges averaging thirty tons. On the Missouri River there are twenty-two steamers having a capacity of 350 to 700 tons each.

North and South Dakota are two distinct sections, differing as widely in their products and aims as Minnesota and Missouri. There exists no bond of commerce between them, the trade of North Dakota finding its outlet through St. Paul, Minneapolis and Lake Superior; and that of Southern Dakota being tributary to Milwaukee, Chicago, and St. Louis. All railroads enter the territory from the east, and traverse it in west or northwesterly directions, affording no inter-communication whatever between the north and the south, and making it almost as great a task to reach Yankton from Bismarck or Pembina, as to make a trip from Bismarck or Pembina to Washington.

The geographical divisions of the Territory of Dakota are such that but one judge can be assigned to Northern Dakota. That judge is required to hold fifteen terms of the District Court, two terms for the transaction of United States business, and to attend two terms of the Supreme Court. The labors thus required of one judge are more than twice what should be required of him. It is proper here to state that from east to west this judicial district, where courts by law are required to be held, is now over two hundred miles; and from north to south, 210 miles; that to reach the capital of the Territory at Yankton, the judge from North Dakota must pass through Minnesota and Iowa, making the distance from where he resides to where he must attend the sitting of the Supreme Court, 600 miles, or 2,400 miles each year, and suitors attending the Supreme Court who live upon the Missouri River in northern counties, must travel 800 miles, or 3,200 miles in going and returning, to attend two terms of the Supreme Court in each year. These facts will apply with equal if not greater force to members of the Legislative Assembly. It is sometimes urged by those unacquainted with the territory, that the litigation of the territory is comparatively unimportant. This is a great mistake. We are upon the western border of the great agricultural producing region of the Northwest. Here are made enormous contracts for supplies of all kinds for the military posts and the Indian reservations. These contracts are often divided and subdivided, and out of these transactions there is much and important litigation. Then, too, from the mining districts of the Black Hills there is a great deal of litigation, and the amounts in controversy sometimes reach a million of dollars.

A delegation of Dakotans sojourned at Washington during the short session of Congress of 1882-83, for the purpose of promoting the division and admission bills, but late in February departed for their homes convinced that nothing could be done during the limited life of that Congress, which would expire March 4th, and with it the Dakota bills, without definite action. It would seem that the effort of the friends of admission to push that measure was an error, considered in the light of the fact that the democrats were earnestly opposing it on party grounds because of its influence in the forthcoming presidential election, and were strong enough to defeat it. But division might have been carried had its promoters been authorized to withdraw the measure for admission. It is somewhat surprising that such an arrangement was not readily agreed to and division accepted. The vote had in the House in 1882 over a suspension of the rules when the Pettigrew division bill was up, when nearly one-fourth of the members were absent, denoted that the popular branch was strongly in favor of the measure.

The next Congress, it was known, would be controlled by the democrats, and the fall elections of 1882 had shown surprising democratic vitality all through the United States, Grover Cleveland, comparatively a new leader in the democratic army, having been elected governor of the great State of New York by a majority of nearly a quarter of a million.

The Senate Committee on Territories reported the Dakota admission bill, introduced by Senator Windom, about March 14, 1882, accompanying it with a very favorable statement, but found one important item lacking, which was referred to in the committee's report, as follows:

The correctness of the numerous representations made by the numerous body of citizens of Dakota who have given information to the committee, has not been questioned. The only difficulty is in the matter of population. While there exists nothing in the form of law or usage to determine the qualifications of statehood in this respect, yet there appears to be a disposition to not admit any more territories as states unless they can show a population equal at least to the ratio of representation existing at this or any future time. The statements made appear to justify the belief that the portion of Dakota seeking admission as a state exceeds the number required. The increase of population has been so rapid that the figures of the census of 1880 have to be abandoned and the correct data obtained from other sources. The United States land offices show by filings and pre-emptions and other such entries since the census of 1880, that the increase in the agricultural portion of the country amounts to 59,320 people. At the time of the census in June, 1880, there were 100,000 persons, exclusive of Indians, residing within the proposed state. Add to this the reported increase, and we have a population of 150,000, and it is evident that the records of the land office do not show the total increase. But to reconcile all difficulties on this point, the bill has been amended, providing for a census of the proposed state, and making it show the requisite population.

The Senate Committee on Territories was instructed to report a bill to provide for taking a census of Dakota Territory; but General Beadle's prompt action in the matter in taking his school census, and the eminently satisfactory methods he pursued, made a federal census unnecessary. And it may with propriety be mentioned that the enterprising Dakota superintendent saved to the Government from $10,000 to $15,000, which it would have cost, had the Government performed the work with its customary expensive methods.

DAKOTANS WERE UNITED

The newspapers of the territory, both republican and democratic, stood together on these questions. Democratic leaders and republican leaders were as one party and favored both division and admission. Bartlett Tripp at the time was the acknowledged leader of the democratic party and so recognized within and without the territory. He was found to be one of the ablest promoters of statehood (and that was the ultimate object of all these movements), and he became in this contest a leader of both parties. In a letter to the chairman of the republican committee, who at the time was engaged in arranging a non-partisan convention to consider these subjects, Mr. Tripp wrote:

I am frank to say as to myself, I am in favor of the movement, and will do all I can to aid division, as you suggest, and admission as a state; and I believe the movement will meet with the general approval of both parties.

Dakota was the subject of much discussion in the leading metropolitan newspapers in 1881 and later. Whether fortunately or unfortunately, Dakota was politically a strong republican community, and its incoming thousands were largely of that political belief; this fact had aroused the antagonism of many of the prominent democrats in Congress and some prominent democratic newspapers, to its admission into the Union as a state, at least not until after the next presidential election, which would occur in 1884, and the auguries favored the success of the democrats, as viewed from their standpoint. If admitted before that event it would add to the strength of the republican side, and this was plainly and openly avowed by some of the leaders who were noted for their frankness on all occasions. This kind of opposition was nothing new. And while it was decried as an unworthy motive to govern the action of a great party in matters of such grave moment involving the constitutional rights of a free people, it will be observed that no statesman of any day ever sacrificed his standing or influence in his party by yielding fealty to the method. It had been the practice for scores of years whenever a new state applied for admission, and before the Civil war it was the custom to set up a democratic state and a whig state, as candidates for admission at the same time, and by admitting them both, keep the political character of the Senate unchanged.

DAKOTA AND THE TARIFF

Since the great Civil war the republicans had been in control of both the Senate and House practically all the time, and also of the presidency, and were able to do with such matters as they deemed best. And while the political complexion of the Senate and also of the House by a very narrow margin might favor Dakota at this time, there were other questions that seemed to require mature deliberation. First, whether it was best to divide the territory, thus providing for the admission of two more western, and probably republican, states, at an early day. This phase of the question provoked a sectional feeling, and eastern statesmen were not inclined to view it without unpleasant apprehensions. The West had been discovered to have a growing partiality for a modification of the tariff, a matter which the East considered of paramount importance as affecting the prosperity and development of the industries of the country, which belonged to the East in large part, and the republican party was pledged by its platform and also by its traditions and practices, to defend and preserve it. While these apprehensions might have been removed, and were later, they had their weight at this time when the political complexion of Congress favored Dakota, in restraining many republican leaders from taking any active part in promoting Dakota's division or admission. Senator Hale, of Maine, was opposed to doing anything for Dakota until Yankton County made provision for the payment of its railroad bond debt, the First National Bank of Brunswick, Maine, being the holder of $10,000 of the bonds, and he kept the Senate in painful turmoil all summer in his efforts to show that the Senate might on such occasions convert itself into a collecting agency. Thus the golden moments were consumed, without advancing Dakota one step nearer its desired goal.

An article appeared in the Chicago Tribune in November, 1881, that reflected the Dakota situation just about as it existed. The Tribune, however, was favorable to one state for the entire territory, but this cut no figure with the argument of this article, which would apply as well to two states as one. The Chicago Tribune's article follows:

It is already apparent that the question of the admission of Dakota into the Union will be one of the most important subjects before the Forty-seventh Congress (1881-2). If the democrats shall attempt to defeat or postpone the Dakota bill, as it is now said they are resolved to do, the contest over it may easily assume a significance which will make it the chief measure of the session. As the contests over the admission of Arkansas and Michigan, Florida and Iowa, California and Oregon, and the settlements for conditions of the territorial governments of Kansas and Nebraska made successive sessions memorable before the war, it is possible that the Dakota question may be the engrossing topic of debate the coming winter.

Southern jealousy of northern aggrandizement is again cropping out, and though there is no longer the old reason for resisting the admission of a northern state without a southern make-weight, there is still enough sectional feeling left to make southern opposition probable. In the case of Dakota, also, there is a new kind of opposition which none of the anti-slavery states had to encounter. We observe, for example, that the New York Herald objects to the organization of a new state in the West, and in so doing exhibits an amount of rancor which can only be the product of sectional prejudice. There seems to be a distinct effort to array the East against the West on this question, as if all the divisions of our common country did not have an identity of interests in the welfare of every part of it.

The attempt to excite the prejudices of the East, and by means of them secure the exclusion of Dakota for a brief period, will not succeed. Neither the East nor the South has anything to gain by denying justice to Dakota. The democratic party itself would better make a virtue of necessity instead of, by seeking to postpone the evil day, making the great empire soon destined to grow up in the territory a republican state or states for all time. Iowa and Michigan, with their splendid republican delegations in Congress, are monuments to this day of democratic perfidy in keeping them out of the Union when they had the moral right to come in.

The Herald, in the article to which we have referred, shows a curious unwillingness to tell the truth about Dakota. It compares this vast and fertile territory—having twice the area of Pennsylvania, and the capacity for supporting a population of several millions—with sterile Nevada, a barren, mountainous region, worthless except for its mines and for its pasture lands. But in the year 1879 Dakota produced 3,000,000 bushels of wheat, 2,000,000 bushels of corn, 2,300,000 bushels of oats, and other grains in proportion. In the two years which have since passed its resources have been rapidly developed, and it is probable the crops of next year will be double those of 1879. This is a record of which any young state might be proud. It is sufficient testimony to the ability of the state to support a large population.

With reference to population, Dakota has a better showing to make than most of the states could offer when they were admitted. It has a larger population now than eight of the thirteen states when the union was formed; two-thirds the population of New York at that time. It has thrice the population of Nevada, which has been a state since 1864. At the last election it cast 28,091 votes, while Delaware cast only 29,408, and Nevada only 21,660. Before it can be admitted with the hastiest action Congress can give it, Dakota will have 200,000 inhabitants, if it has not that number already. Compare this claim to statehood with these of the following states when they were admitted:

Arkansas, in 1836. Population in 1840, 97,574 by United States census.

Florida, in 1845. Population in 1850, 87,445 by United States census.

California, in 1850. Population in 1850, 92,597 by United States census.

Oregon, in 1859. Population in 1860, 52,465 by United States census.

Kansas, in 1861, 107,200 population in 1860.

Nevada in 1864, 52,491 population in 1870 by United States census.

Nebraska, in 1867, 122,993 population in 1870 by United States census.

Immigration is rushing into Dakota from all quarters. It is now as much sought by settlers as Kansas, Nebraska and Minnesota formerly were. The only large tracts of unoccupied fertile lands remaining in the country are found in Dakota, and its attractions are of such an unusual character that it may be reasonably expected to have by 1890 a population of 800,000 or 900,000. Its growth will almost certainly be the phenomenon of the decade, and the wonder of the next census will be the record of its development.

An attempt to keep such a territory out of the Union will be futile. It will react upon the heads of its authors. If by chicanery or ignorance the admission of Dakota should be delayed for one session, it would be impossible to keep it out longer. Its demand is already imperative. Congress would best accede to it at once. The Government and the people of the United States have no right to deny representation in Congress to 200,000 people. The Dakota question will have no pity for the repose of the nation until it is settled.

The New York Tribune was also an earnest advocate of statehood for Dakota, as the following editorial in its columns in November, 1881, will testify:

The democrats in Congress will make a partisan blunder if they oppose the admission of Dakota as a state. Dakota's claim to come into the Union is just as valid as was that of Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska or Minnesota, when those communities were invested with self-governing functions, and a great deal more valid than was that of Nevada. If it is resisted by the democrats the real motive of their opposition will be their belief that two senators from the new state will be republican. They may talk about "rotten boroughs" as much as they like, but everybody knows that they would be eager to admit any territory with half the population Dakota has today if they could be assured that it would send democrats to represent it in Congress.

There ought to be no question of party politics involved in the admission of a new state. To enlarge the sisterhood of states by the admission of a new member is too important a matter to be decided from the low point of view of party interests. If there is any domain of statesmanship that lies above the field of partisan contests and prejudice, it surely ought to embrace an affair of such great interest and lasting consequences as the endowment of a body of new settlers upon our western frontier with all the rights possessed by the oldest states of this Union. Yet the democratic senators, at the first intimation of an intention on the part of the inhabitants of Dakota to prefer their plea for admission next winter, are threatening to make the question a party issue, and create a deadlock to prevent a vote upon it. Such an action on their part would only strengthen the conviction of the country at large that the democratic party is incapable of treating a great public question with even a tolerable degree of fairness.

The claim of Dakota to admission is a peculiarly strong one. At her last election she cast 29,091 votes, while Delaware cast only 29,408, after nearly a hundred years of state existence, and Nevada, which has been a state for twenty years, cast only 21,660. Dakota is not a pocket state like Delaware, incapable from its diminutive size of attaining further growth, or a collection of precarious and shifting mining camps like Nevada. She can justly be compared with such great agricultural states as Iowa, Minnesota and Nebraska. There is nothing to check her further growth to a population of four millions. Her development during the last decade from a hunting ground for wandering tribes of savages to a stable and prosperous civilized community, with cities and towns, schools and newspapers, vast areas of well tilled farms, and over 2,000 miles of railroads has furnished an admirable example of the expansive forces of American society. A domain which the most powerful monarch in the Old World would be proud to acquire has been conquered from nature by a peaceful invasion of farmers and mechanics.

In June, 1880, the census takers found 134,504 people in Dakota. The immigration of the summer and fall of 1880 and the whole of 1881 has unquestionably brought the population up to 175,000. The territory is much too large, however, for a single state. The area is as large as the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio combined.

The proposition which will be brought before Congress next winter will be to take the southern half of the territory, or perhaps only the southeastern section, and erect it into a state, providing the remainder with a territorial government. If the smaller area suggested is decided upon, the new state will have an acreage greater than that of the State of Pennsylvania, and a population at the outset of over 100,000. Before she can exercise any power in national legislation her population will be equal in numbers to the average constituency of a member of the House of Representatives from the older states, and by the time she has an opportunity to throw the weight of her electoral vote into the scales of a presidential election it is safe to predict that her voters will outnumber those of either Colorado, Oregon or Delaware, as they already do those of Nevada. There can be no good reason urged for making a community so vigorous, intelligent, expansive and prosperous wait longer for the privilege of governing itself.

There was considerable feeling aroused in the minds of all the delegations from Dakota who had been sent to Washington in the interest of the division of the territory, by the officious and meddling course pursued by Governor Ordway, who was there and persisted in being heard on the questions of admission and division which were then under consideration by Congress. He was not in accord with any of the delegations and was suspected of being secretly opposed to any change whatever, but professed to be friendly, with an ulterior purpose of gaining a place in their councils that would entitle him to recognition as a representative of the territory, when the truth was he had been purposely ignored by all sections. He was not ready for any change whatever at the time. The governor's officiousness became so pronounced, especially in his efforts to supplant the delegate elected from the territory, that the southeastern delegation, at a meeting held a short time before leaving Washington, for the purpose of closing up their business, adopted a resolution requesting the removal of Ordway, which was presented to President Arthur. This resolution follows:

Whereas, it is the earnest desire of the people of the Territory of Dakota south of the 46th parallel that such part of said territory should be formed into a state and admitted into the Union; and

Whereas, N. G. Ordway, the present governor, has at sundry times and in divers ways, through self-sought press interviews, his annual report to the secretary of the interior, and his letter to the President of the United States, represented the people thereof as irresponsible, and the Legislature as mercenary, and that an alarming financial and political condition exists therein; and

Whereas, By such representations the said Ordway has grossly defamed the people of the said territory and has greatly damaged the material interests of the same; has left his post of duty at the capital of the territory to give his entire time and attention to opposing admission while pretending to favor it. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the delegates appointed by the convention of 500 members, representing all of the old counties comprising the proposed new State of Dakota, most respectfully and urgently recommend his immediate removal; and be it further

Resolved, That this delegation go as a body to the President of the United States and ask for the removal of the governor of the Territory of Dakota, as a measure of common justice to the people of said territory.

B. F. CAMPBELL, Chairman.
EUGENE HUNTINGTON, Secretary.

Washington, February 9, 1882.

The delegation, numbering about seventy persons, called upon the President, and after presenting the resolutions for his consideration, retired with the understanding that he would meet the committee at a later day.

Mr. Leighton Wynn, a member of the South Dakota delegation, speaking of this action after his return home, stated that the resolutions were passed as stated; that they were introduced at the meeting rather unexpectedly to many of the members, and were adopted by a vote of 51 to 13. He added that he thought that a majority of those present would rather the resolutions had not been introduced, but would not vote them down after they were in, because such action would be taken as an endorsement of the governor's course. A committee presented them to the President. No further action was taken.

GENERAL BEADLE PRESENTS HIS VIEW

Gen. W. H. H. Beadle, who was superintendent of public instruction in 1881 and later, contributed the following review of the division and statehood questions—the two subjects that were then absorbing the largest share of public attention and general discussion :

The movements toward territorial division and statehood here at home have been suddenly surpassed and left feeble in appearance by the larger movement at Washington. Such, at least, seems to be the general view of the two. The word from Washington is political in aspect. It is said to be partisan, and to spring from a desire for two more republican senators; such is the inspiration of the dispatches. It may be well to inquire whether this declared motive may not assure delay. It is not enough by itself to justify statehood. There should be abundant and convincing reasons in the nature of things, in our population, resources, condition and needs. It will doubtless be shown that in each and all of these views there are sufficient reasons for the early admission of Dakota into the Union. We move rapidly to that result.

We write to challenge attention to the real question presented. As presented from Washington the idea merely sees a state admitted, and makes the two senators of this state the chief feature of the event. That same view is followed quite too far in Dakota. Some have treated that political fact as the end and aim of statehood, and the reflex advantage is to come from the great power and influence these senators will have at Washington, the voting for President, the dignity, and "a' that." This is the view of the present interest largely. We lack a just influence while a territory. Dependent largely upon the general Government we get little attention from it, and feel that if we had two senators this would be improved. But the moment Dakota becomes a state this dependence upon Washington ceases. The state attains most of the powers that now come from the United States. The sovereign state assumes all the administration of its affairs, and holds the same relation to the United States that other states do. The real questions of interest in statehood are home issues, domestic matters, institutions of every kind and the permanent welfare of the people.

The Washington view sees two more senators; the counterpart at home is the creation of a state; the security by constitution of the liberties of the people against every future shock. A state must conciliate a boundless private freedom with public order and authority. It must guarantee progress and prosperity by means of wholesome restrictions upon power, corporate and political, by economic methods, and simplicity instead of extravagance and grandeur; and the state must, as its chief duty, secure all this and social, civil, moral and intellectual advancement by broad, permanent and certain provisions for education—the education of the children of the entire state. The organization of the state will affect us permanently; the two senators can be changed in a few years if a state is made. Manifestly our great interests are in the state constitution, its delegations and limitations of power. Toward that and the many separate questions that will arise in doing it our chief attention should be given. Every one of these leading issues should be twice acted upon by the people—first, in selecting and instructing their delegates to the convention; and, second, in voting upon the acceptance or rejection of important provisions.

We have an intelligent people. Let the state be formed by them intelligently, deliberately and wisely. Toward this end the question of first importance is the question of representation in the constitutional convention. That body has great power and consists of but one house. Therefore it should have a large membership, not less than 100, and probably 150. In no other way can all communities be represented. There is no safety in the small number proposed in some bills introduced in Congress. The people should now by petition demand a change in this respect. Much, perhaps all, in the character of the future state depends upon this. The probabilities, at least, are decidedly better with a large convention.

The chief material interest the convention will handle will be the school, university and other state lands. The welfare of the people, the honor of the state and its future character are involved in the handling of the school and university lands. Some states have written the darkest page in their history in the indifference or corruption which wasted the proceeds of the lands. They are reserved for the permanent common welfare. Their full value should be secured to this end. Another vital issue is, shall the constitution prohibit local and special legislation? From the people we believe there will be but one answer—that it shall. What limitation shall be placed upon corporate powers? How shall the judicial power be located and then judges chosen? Shall we have long terms and appointment; or short terms, with the candidates involved in every political election? These and many other issues are before the people, and we hope will be discussed.

W. H. H. BEADLE.

CENSUS TAKEN BY SUPERINTENDENT BEADLE

The subjoined table, giving an official school district census of the population of each organized county of Dakota Territory, and the number of voters, was made up by General Beadle, the territorial superintendent of public instruction, in connection with the school district census of 1882, and besides affording a basis for the representation in the different territorial and state conventions held during that year, was intended to supply Congress with this information, which that body had manifested such a desire to obtain, that a bill authorizing the taking of a census for that year had been reported by the Senate Committee on Territories, authorizing and providing "For a census of the population of Southern Dakota during the summer of 1882, and further, that if the population is sufficient to entitle that part of the territory to a representative in Congress, it shall be admitted as a state; the present territorial government to continue and the territory to be called North Dakota."

Amid the pressure of other business and considerable opposition from Senator Hale, of Maine, and Senator Vest, of Missouri, this measure failed of enactment. The table, however, may be regarded as reliable, tested by subsequent events. It was the work of the territorial superintendent, General Beadle, who had taken extraordinary pains and adopted the most judicious methods to secure a census of each school district, availing himself of land office statistics, the organization of new counties, and whatever source of reliable information he was able to reach. It was subsequently ascertained that his figures were near the correct mark. The unprecedented immigration resulting in the organization of seventeen new counties since the federal census of 1880 was taken, fully justified this enumeration, which enabled the friends of division and admission, the political conventions, and even the Legislature, a reliable basis from which to work satisfactorily and harmoniously. One of the hindrances alleged by many senators and representatives was their ignorance of the population of the territory, and particularly of each division—north of the 46th parallel and south of it, Congress having a bill for statehood at that time before it, and another bill asking a territorial government for the north half.

Name of County	Pop. July 1, 1882	No. Voters
Aurora	1,500	375
Barnes	4,000	800
Beadle	4,200	840
Bon Homme	5,669	1,134
Brookings	6,465	1,293
Brown	5,950	1,190
Brule	2,100	420
Burleigh	3,782	1,262
Cass	12,998	2,598
Charles Mix	578	116
Clark	1,192	298
Clay	5,201	1,040
Codington	5,693	1,138
Custer	1,595	574
Davison	2,512	638
Day	700	175
Deuel	3,521	704
Dickey	700	175
Douglas	1,000	250
Foster	700	175
Grand Forks	12,496	2,499
Grant	6,190	1,238
Griggs	1,500	375
Hamlin	1,193	298
Hand	1,400	350
Hanson	2,301	460
Hughes	1,800	450
Hutchinson	7,100	1,420
Kidder	500	125
Kingsbury	3,800	778
Lake	3,890	778
Lawrence	13,248	5,418
Lincoln	6,397	1,279
Mandan	1,200	450
McCook	3,224	645
Miner	2,685	671
Minnehaha	9,752	1,950
Moody	4,815	963

Name of County	Pop. July 1, 1882	No. Voters
Morton	2,000	500
Pembina	5,092	1,152
Pennington	2,440	650
Ramsey	510	125
Ransom	4,300	850
Richland	6,597	1,319
Spink	3,995	781
Stutsman	3,775	755
Traill	4,005	993
Turner	5,620	1,124
Union	7,115	1,423
Walsh	3,800	950
Yankton	8,740	1,760
	211,359	47,650

This table, it must be borne in mind, included only organized counties. The unorganized counties, many of which had applied for organization, must be considered in connection with population, in justice to the estimates that had been made, and were a prominent factor in the arguments presented by Dakota's numerous delegations in Washington, laboring for the division and for statehood. There were about twenty-five counties unorganized at this time, July 1, 1882, that were increasing in population rapidly—in fact, were receiving the larger portion of the increase which had been coming in great volume since the advent of spring. These counties were Emmons, Sanborn, Butte, Roberts, Billings, Jerauld, Sully, Campbell, Edmunds, Fall River, Potter, Foster, McLean, Sargent, Nelson, Benson, McPherson, Faulk, Mercer, Stark, Steele, Towner, Walworth, Buffalo (2d).

OUTSIDE NEWSPAPER SENTIMENT

Under the inspiration of the times, which had Dakota for its subject, nearly all the newspapers took occasion to make remarks about the great territory, which in 1882, from January to mid-summer, was represented in Washington by an average of 150 of its citizens, from north and south, east and west, all, or nearly so, favoring division and admission of the southern half. One of the ablest delegations was from the Black Hills. Everybody heard something that winter about Dakota. The New York Produce Broker, with a purpose single to the material interests and products of the country, said:

The state of the future for wheat is going to be Dakota. That territory will become a great state. The power of the Northwest to produce a highly energized people is probably not equalled on the globe. The elements that are filling it up are Irish, German and Scandinavian. They soon compound into a magnificent race, and the peculiarity of the climate is that it gives them active brains and bodies. The cold of the winter and the bracing air of the summers bring out all human power in a man. You see the race growing in size almost under your eyes.

The New York Herald was an incorrigible opponent of statehood for Dakota. In considering the subject it predicted an inglorious oblivion for any New York congressman who should give aid or comfort to the project. In February, 1882, while the division and admission bills were prominently before both the Senate and House, and considered the most important measures of the session, the Herald gave vent to the following:

It is planned now by the republican politicians to make another draft upon the generosity of the great state and to force the premature admission of Dakota. The plot is well matured, and the announcement comes from Washington that a majority in each branch of Congress has been secured for its execution. If any senator or representative from New York is counted with the majority, the people of this state will insist upon a strict reckoning with him. We have been deluded for the last time in respect to the underlying motives of organizing new states. Our generosity has been duped by political tricksters and adventurers.

We have beheld the surrender of political power which we have been gulled into making under a patriotic delusion that it was for the welfare of the Union, inure solely to their advantage, until at last we have grown suspicious. With the "rotten borough" of Nevada before his eyes as a monument of deceit, the New York senator or representative who votes to invest the 135,000 inhabitants of Dakota with equality with the 5,082,000 inhabitants of New York in the Federal Senate, basely defrauds and betrays his own constituents, unless he can find a better reason for his vote than the expectation that the two senators to be elected from the new state will be republican in their partisan politics, and so will give the republican party control of the upper branch of Congress.

DIVISION SURE—ADMISSION DOUBTFUL

Eighteen hundred and eighty-two was the year when the people of Dakota Territory made their first and greatest effort to secure a division of the territory, and the admission of the southern half into the Union as a state. Delegate Pettigrew had been efficient in pressing these measures, but had been unsuccessful. At the close of the congressional session, in August, 1882, he gave out a statement showing the situation of these measures, which is here reproduced:

The bill for the division of Dakota is on the calendar in the House of Representatives, and a similar bill is before the Senate as unfinished business. Whenever the bill is put to a vote in the Senate it will be carried. Senator Saunders reported the bill in the Senate, and changed the name North Dakota to Pembina, although in other respects the bill is substantially mine. I protested against the change of name, and when the bill gets back to the House I shall move to amend by inserting North Dakota, for that is the name the people prefer. Senator Saunders went so far however, as to say that he would not report the bill at all unless North Dakota was stricken out and Pembina inserted. There is no question whatever but what the territory would be divided at the next session.

Concerning the admission of Southern Dakota, Chairman Burrows of the House Committee on Territories, thinks the bill will pass, but there will be a hard fight on it, for parties who hold the Yankton County bonds are determined not to permit the territory to become a state until the bonds are paid, or secured to them satisfactorily. The Yankton County bonds in face value represent $200,000, and there is accrued interest to the amount of $150,000. It would require a tax of 10 per cent on the entire county to liquidate the indebtedness, for the assessed valuation is not more than $1,500,000. I think Yankton started out to make a settlement at 50 cents on the dollar—a pretty clear attempt at semi-repudiation. As things stand now the county would probably settle at the face of the bonds if they could be renewed on long time at a low rate of interest. But for these bonds the bill to admit Dakota as a state would certainly have passed. You see the holders of the bonds argue that so long as Dakota remains a territory, the Government is responsible for the value of the bonds issued by Yankton County, Congress having authorized the issue; but that the moment Dakota becomes a state the Government's obligation is ended and that then the bonds would be repudiated. Now the holders of those bonds have influence enough in the Senate to defeat the state bill there. So the matter stands this way: "Dakota will be divided at the next session of Congress, sure," and Southern Dakota will never be admitted as a state until those Yankton County bonds are settled in some way to the satisfaction of the holders of them, at least not while the Senate remains as close as it now is. The democrats, of course, do not want Dakota admitted, and they make a strict party fight on it; and there are enough republican senators who want to see the Yankton County bonds paid to defeat the project of admission.

YANKTON COUNTY'S BONDED DEBT

It was quite natural for the new communities of 1881-82, in Dakota to view the reports of Yankton County's bonded debt in a light prejudicial to Yankton, until the facts regarding the origin of the debt and succeeding incidents explained to them why it had not been paid; and it is probable that these facts would never have become so well known and understood by the people of the territory but for the efforts made by the bondholders, aided by Senators Hale and Vest, to obstruct Dakota's division and admission on that account. Thereafter it was not unusual to read a comment on the subject of the debt, emanating from outside sources, declaring the debt unjust and not binding upon the county, which was a more radical position than had been taken by the county.

PRO AND CON ABOUT DIVISION AND ADMISSION

The Dakotas did not succeed in their efforts for division or admission at this time, but it was some gratification to know that one long and essential step had been taken in that direction in supplying Congress and the people with abundant information regarding the resources, the general character, the educational facilities, and population of the territory, which everybody knew, however, was rapidly increasing. This work would not have to be done again, notwithstanding the changes that would naturally occur in the membership of Congress. It was already a part of the written and printed history of the Forty-seventh Congress.

The democratic sentiment in Congress, backed by the party judgment of its members, was quite pertinently expressed by Judge Flower, a democratic representative from New York, and subsequently governor of the state, who said:

I am in favor of the admission of Dakota. I have railroad interests there in that territory which would be greatly enhanced if it were admitted, but as a party we cannot afford to have it admitted. We do not want three more votes to contend with in Congress.

Congressman Springer, of Illinois, said:

We do not propose to admit it before the next Presidential election. We do not want to repeat our experience in regard to the admission of Colorado.

To which another democratic congressman assented by declaring:

We will filibuster all summer before we will admit that territory.

DELEGATE RAYMOND'S VIEWS

John B. Raymond, of Fargo, succeeded Hon. R. F. Pettigrew as the delegate to Congress from Dakota Territory, on March 4, 1883. As the questions of dividing the territory, a new territorial organization in the northern half, and erecting a state government for the southern half, were the projects of a political character that then engrossed the public mind, in April Mr. Raymond was induced to give out an interview with a reporter for a prominent northwestern paper, and though speaking at random, disclosed his position on political and territorial matters of moment, as follows:

The all-important question in Dakota is the location of the capital, and the people in the northern part of the territory are anxious to see it located in the southern central part of the territory, as that would hasten the division we are all so anxious for.

(Note—At this time the capital removal bill had just been enacted, but the capital commissioners had not settled upon any location for the new capital. Raymond, evidently, was not acquainted with the plans of those who controlled the capital commissioners.—Ed.)

Raymond continues:

The idea that a territory larger than all New England should have but two representatives in the Senate is preposterous. We are growing at an unprecedented rate, and the close of this year will find 150,000 more people in the territory than at the present time. Of course the democrats oppose division, and I fear that as long as they are in a majority in the national legislative body we cannot attain our end. Texas is empowered at any time by a popular vote to separate into four states. Why should we not have equal rights and privileges?

The tariff question? O, that's not settled yet. I think it will come up again during the next session with redoubled force. The great difficulty is that interests differ. I am a "tariff for revenue only" man, but can readily see where a protective tariff is needed by certain business interests. The iron men seem to be suffering most at this time and they are really in a bad way. The question is one of great importance, and cannot lightly be passed upon.

As to civil service, that's all a humbug. The idea is good however, but the trouble is, each new executive wants the movement to commence with his administration. It is impracticable.

Territorial politics? O, no, no, nothing new. Nothing that I want to talk about, but I can give you a pointer on the immigration business. The territory west of us has grown and opened up with marvelous rapidity, and the greater portion of the tide of immigration passes through Fargo. Accustomed as we are to booms, we never have seen anything equal to the present season. The Fargo Southwestern Road, which runs down to Lisbon, was opened two weeks ago, and the superintendent of the line, fearing that he wouldn't have business, refused to carry mails except every other day. Now they are running two trains per day each way all filled with immigrants, and cars cannot be produced in sufficient numbers to transport the movables.

The season has been a most auspicious one for farmers. Both winter and spring have been all that could be asked for, and seeding has been going on for some time in all parts of the territory. I have every reason to believe that the present will be the most auspicious year in every respect in the history of the territory.

A prior interview with Mr. Raymond, given out during the winter before he had taken his seat as the delegate, disclosed his position on the division and admission questions, in the following statement:

In frequent conversations with Mr. Pettigrew, who has expressed his confidence in being able to secure the passage of the division and admission bills, I assured him I would do all I could to assist him. My correspondence from various sections of the country, and from men in position to know, evidences the fact that the rapid development of Dakota has forced the attention of the people of the whole country to her, and I feel certain the question of admission and division is to be one of the prominent subjects of legislation this winter. We are entitled to division and the admission of South Dakota as a matter of right. I shall work incessantly to assist in accomplishing this object, not only because I believe in it, but paramount and above all, the people of Dakota, almost to a man, ask it in justice, and demand it as a right.

A BRIEF REVIEW

STATEHOOD IN SPIE OF CONGRESS

In 1880, according to the federal census taken in May, Dakota Territory possessed a population of 135,700, which was about the number required to entitle the territory to one member of Congress, provided Dakota had been a state in the Union. A division of the territory, through its center east and west, had been agitated for a number of years, and Congress had been appealed to by legislative memorials, to so divide the unwieldy territory, as it was called, but nothing had been done by Congress in that direction, and population had been increasing since the census was had at the rate of from 40,000 to 75,000 a year, so that by January, 1883, the territory had in the neighborhood of 300,000 population, divided according to careful estimate, among the Black Hills and the northern half and the southern half of the territory, in the ratio of 20,000 in the Hills, 100,000 in the north, and 175,000 in the south; and the stream of immigration had been at flood tide since the advent of 1883.

The agitation of the statehood question had been a collateral of the division of the territory, the state to be composed of that portion of the territory south of the 46th parallel. There was a minority opposition to division and also to statehood, the minority claiming that one large state could be governed as cheaply nearly as a smaller state, and it would have manifold greater weight in the councils of the Nation than two small states. There was also a strong sentiment opposed to division and two states in a zone bordering the proposed division line on the 46th parallel, where it was held that the interests of the people inhabiting that zone would be best subserved by continuing the existing boundaries and entering the Union as another Texas.

A majority of the lower house of Congress, being democratic at the time, was unwilling that any new states should be admitted until after the election of the next President, which would take place in 1884, and as the current of politics in the Nation had disclosed symptoms favoring the democrats, it was foretold by the political seers of the territory that there was no chance for the admission of any more states until after the presidential election.

The reader is now familiar with the action taken by the citizens' constitutional convention at Huron, where the first steps were formally taken by Rev. Joseph Ward and others for the formation of a state government. During this time and subsequently there was considerable discussion of the proposition that the people had a lawful right to form a state government, and set it in motion without the authority of Congress. Another purpose in view by the active promoters of this early action was to secure information regarding the sentiment of the masses of the people, whether they favored division and statehood, a question that had not then been authoritatively answered, but it was safely apparent from the tone of the 150 newspapers of the territory that the sentiment was largely for division, and favorable to statehood.

About this time there rose up a gentleman of acknowledged legal ability, Hon. Hugh J. Campbell, who had been United States attorney for the territory since 1877, and was then serving his second term. He was conceded to be well equipped to speak, having in addition to his study of the question the experience gained in Louisiana during the Hayes-Tilden contest of 1876-77. This gentleman, in a series of articles which he caused to be published, very conclusively proved that a state government could be formed and put into practical operation without the consent of Congress; and in one instance, as in the case of Michigan, in 1834, the Legislature of the state had assembled, enacted laws which were approved by the governor, that a corporation had been formed under one of said laws entitled the "Detroit Young Men's Society," which had purchased real estate, and out of this transaction a law suit issued—the question being whether the law enacted by the Legislature before the state was admitted into the Union possessed validity and authority. The court in its decision, given after an exhaustive examination of the subject based on the ordinance of Congress for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the River Ohio, passed July 13, 1787, concluding the court says:

The constitution and government formed by the people of Michigan was, then, authorized by the ordinance of 1787, and it was competent for the people to put such government in operation. A Legislature was duly organized in all its branches, and a governor elected, agreeably to the provisions of the constitution. The act to incorporate the Young Men's Society was passed by the Legislature and approved by the governor, according to the forms prescribed by the constitution. It was admissible in evidence on the trial and it conferred upon the defendants, among other corporate franchises, the right to purchase, hold, and convey the real estate in question, and to sue for its recovery.

From this decision Mr. Campbell concluded and asserted that by the decision of the Michigan court the following positions are settled and established, namely:

- 1st. That no enabling act of Congress was necessary to authorize the people of Michigan to frame their constitution and establish their state government.
- 2d. That that right was absolutely and unqualifiedly secured to them by the compact in the ordinance of 1787.
- 3d. That the power to frame a constitution includes the power to frame a state government and put it into operation.
- 4th. That this constitution and government were in lawful existence and the laws of its Legislature had full force and effect before the admission of the state into the Union.

Mr. Campbell then cites the opinion of Chief Justice Taney, in the famous Dred Scott case, a case arising under the fugitive slave law, which has to do with the power and jurisdiction of Congress over the territories, from which the justice concludes:

- 1st. That the Federal Government has no power to maintain colonies to be ruled and governed at its own pleasure.
- 2d. It has no power to hold and rule a territory permanently.
- 3d. A territory must be admitted as soon as its population and situation entitle it to admission.
- 4th. A territory is acquired to become a state, and Congress has no power to hold it as a colony and govern it absolutely.

Mr. Campbell cites also other cases, including Vermont, Tennessee, California, but the attitude of Dakota appears to have been sufficiently defined in the case of Michigan. Dakota had the population, and the question was, Should her people go ahead and frame a state constitution and state government without an enabling act from Congress? There was a strong public sentiment supporting Mr. Campbell's position, and there did not appear any open opposition. His published articles aroused no controversy. There was no argument advanced against his position, but there were many who felt that it might be the best policy to await the action of Congress before resorting to drastic measures.

Mr. Campbell was heartily in sympathy with the movement for a citizens' constitutional convention, and took a leading part in the preliminary steps of calling a meeting of the people of the proposed new state, and continued active in this preliminary work up to the holding of the convention to frame the constitution, which was held in Sioux Falls in September, 1883, of which he was a member. But here his activity and influence ceased, except as he could assist in the work of framing the constitution, for he had no new theories of government or reforms that he desired to incorporate in the fundamental law. The unanimously expressed desire of the delegates to the convention was to make the best constitution they were capable of making with the example of all the states then composing the Union before them to select from and to improve upon. How well they succeeded in their work may be very properly inferred from the successful administration of the State of South Dakota since it set up for itself in 1889, for the state constitution framed and adopted in 1883 became the basis of the constitution, in all its principal features, that was again adopted in 1885, which was the constitution ratified by the people in 1889 under the enabling act, again re-enacted by the constitutional convention of that year, and again sanctioned by the vote of the people, and finally became the fundamental law of the State of South Dakota.

Here follows the proceedings of the first convention at Huron, called by the people in 1883, to take the necessary steps for holding a convention to frame a constitution:

A PEOPLE'S MOVEMENT FOR STATEHOOD

The failure of Congress, at its session in 1882-3, to enact a law providing for the division of the territory and the admission of the southern portion as a state, and the organization of a territorial government in the north, was a serious disappointment to a large majority of the people of both sections, who had felt justified in believing that at least the division bill would be enacted.

The Territorial Legislature of 1883, or rather the controlling spirits of that body, were largely occupied with the capital removal scheme; they were, however, powerless to do anything that would forward division except memorialize Congress, which had already been done; but the sentiment for taking steps to promote the admission of the State of South Dakota, and at the same time force the division of the territory, found expression in a bill calling a constitutional convention to meet at the capital of the territory on the 4th day of July, 1883, for the purpose of framing a state constitution, it being the intention to go before the Congress which would assemble in December, 1883, with a constitution and state government already prepared, and demand the admission of the state into the Union. This bill was introduced by Hon. Frank J. Washabaugh, of Lawrence County, member of the council, rather late in the session. It passed both houses, however, by nearly a unanimous vote, and reached the governor for his action on the last day of the session. The governor, under the provisions of the organic act, was allowed three days in which to consider a bill; he could defeat this bill without a veto, by simply pocketing it, and this he did. He was opposed to the bill, according to the only statement he made, because it did not include in the convention the northern part of the territory. The governor was a one state for the entire territory man, and he had felt that the removal of the capital, then pending, to North Dakota would change the sentiment of that section on the question of division, and within a day after the Capital Commission declared in favor of Bismarck for the capital, word went forth from that point that "division was dead." But this was not the sentiment of North Dakota, and did not become the sentiment, though urgent efforts were made to make it so appear; and in the southern portion of the territory nothing but division had been thought of for years, except within a narrow zone along the proposed division line of the 46th parallel.

The capital removal was discovered to have inflamed public sentiment and had aroused such widespread popular indignation that it was deemed best, in order to give suitable expression to the public sentiment for division and admission, and to give popular endorsement of the constitutional convention measure which Governor Ordway had refused to approve, to call a Citizens' Constitutional Convention composed of delegates from the various counties south of the 46th parallel, in order, first, to be prepared to take advantage of any favorable condition in Congress at its coming session; and, second, to give the most emphatic endorsement possible to the efforts that had been made at Washington in behalf of the northern territory and southern state. This would be a voluntary assembling of the people in behalf of these measures. Nothing else would so clearly manifest the earnestness and unanimity of the people interested, now numbering in the proposed new state about two hundred and fifty thousand and in the proposed new territory about one hundred and twenty-five thousand.

The call for this convention was issued by the committee appointed by the Citizens' Constitutional Convention of 1882, and is here given, as it clearly explains the prevailing political conditions under which it was issued:

The undersigned, who were appointed a committee by the convention of the people of Dakota held at Canton June 4, 1882, for the purpose and with authority to call a convention of the people at the City of Huron, at such time as they should designate, to consult upon such steps as may be right and needful to the public welfare to take in reference to an organization as a state, believing that the time has come for the people to move in this matter, do hereby set forth to the people of Dakota their reasons for this action, and for the following call for said convention. We ask the serious attention of the people to the following facts:

1st. That Congress, though earnestly thereto by our people requested, and although it is admitted that the people of Dakota south of the 46th parallel of north latitude do possess the requisite population and resources for statehood, has failed to provide for a constitutional convention for Dakota, or for the division of the same upon the said parallel, as the wishes and interests of the people unanimously have demanded.

2d. That the last Territorial Legislature, by a majority of both houses, responsive to the reasonable demand of the people, did pass an act, as they had full authority to do, calling a constitutional convention to be held in December, 1883, and providing the money and machinery therefor, but that said act has failed to become a law by the withholding of the assent of the governor.

3d. The enormous appropriations made by the last Legislature, aggregating as much as four hundred thousand dollars, demonstrate the fact that in self-defense of their property and interests, the people must seek a more responsible form of government, and that right speedily.

4th. That the people of Dakota have an undoubted right and authority to act for themselves in the premises, independently of Congress, or the Legislature.

Ten states of the Union have thus acted, and formed their constitutions without a prior act of Congress, and have been admitted into the Union under said constitutions so formed. These states are: Vermont, 1791; Kentucky, 1792; Tennessee, 1796; Maine, 1820; Arkansas, 1835; Michigan, 1837; Florida, 1845; Iowa, 1846; Kansas, 1861. California, 1849.

It rests with the people of Dakota themselves to say when and with what boundaries and constitution it shall become a state. Congress never has and never will refuse to admit a sovereign state into the Union when it has the population and resources requisite therefor, and presents a state constitution, republican in form, for its approval.

The people of Dakota are not dependent upon Congress, nor the Legislature, nor the governor, to decide where and how they shall present their petition for admission. The means, the money, and the requisite machinery are all at your disposal. The only question is: 'Do the people of Dakota so will?'

We are in receipt of communications from all parts of the territory urging us to issue this call, and saying that if we do not the people will move in this matter under other organizations. Therefore, to give expression to the will of the people, and if such be their pleasure, to provide for taking steps toward the organization of a state government, and for presenting the State of Dakota fully organized with a state government at the next Congress, we do hereby, by virtue of the authority vested in us, call upon the people of Dakota south of the 46th parallel of latitude, in their several counties, to elect delegates to meet in state convention at the City of Huron, on Tuesday, the 10th of June next, there to consider the question: 'Do the people desire that immediate steps be taken towards forming a state constitution, and to take such action thereon as to them may seem fit?'

We recommend that such elections be held by all the qualified electors of each county without distinction of party. We further recommend that all other issues be ignored by this convention, and that no question be considered except the one above stated.

And to this end we recommend that all the special issues acted upon by the Canton convention, as to temperance, and other matters, be reserved for future and separate action, by the friends of such measures, and that the action of this convention be strictly confined to the single issue—should Dakota take immediate steps to become a state?

Believing with our friends all over the territory that the people cannot too soon take the direction of affairs into their own hands and that if we fail to do so during the coming summer the best interests of the territory are exposed to serious and imminent danger, we urge upon all good citizens in every county south of the 46th parallel to take immediate steps to secure a general representation of all classes and parties from their respective counties in this convention. The committee have deemed it desirable to make the following apportionment of delegates to the several counties comprehended in the call. This apportionment is based on the vote for delegate to Congress at the last election as contained in the official returns in the office of the secretary of the territory, and as the same was computed in the act that passed the last Legislature calling a constitutional convention, excepting that the committee has fixed the total number of delegates at 411 instead of 100, as was done by that act. According to this computation the committee recommends that the convention consist of 411 delegates, who shall be apportioned among the several counties as follows:

Aurora, 8; Beadle, 10; Bon Homme, 10; Brookings, 10; Brown, 6; Brule, 8; Clark, 4; Charles Mix, 4; Clay, 12; Codrington, 12; Custer, 4; Davison, 12; Day, 4; Douglas, 4; Deuel, 10; Edgerton, 4; Grant, 16; Hand, 8; Hamlin, 4; Hansen, 4; Hutchinson, 8; Hughes, 8; Inman, 4; Kingsbury, 12; Lake, 8; Lawrence, 30; Lincoln, 16; Miner, 16; Minnehaha, 28; Moody, 12; McCook, 12; McCauley, 4; Pennington, 13; Spink, 14; Turner, 16; Union, 16; Yankton, 16; Hyde, 1; Sully, 1; Faulk, 1; Potter, 1; Edmunds, 1; Walworth, 1; McPherson, 1; Buffalo, 1; Campbell, 1; Jerauld, 1; Mandan, 1. Total, 411.

The committee recommends that in each of the several counties elections shall be held for delegates by all the qualified electors, without distinction of party, on Saturday, the 9th day of June next. The committee requests the chairmen and secretaries of the various county conventions as soon as they have chosen delegates to send a list of their names to this committee.

Signed, Wilmot Whitfield, Faulk County; Joseph Ward, Yankton County; S. George Andrews, Turner County; W. C. Bower, Minnehaha County; J. V. Hines, Union County; Executive Committee.

THE PRELIMINARY CONVENTION

The Southern Dakota convention convened to consider the calling of a convention for the purpose of framing a constitution for the State of Dakota, assembled at Huron pursuant to call on Tuesday, June 19, 1883, at 12 o'clock M., and was called to order by Rev. Wilmot Whitfield, of Faulk County, chairman of the executive committee of the Citizens' Constitutional Association, appointed in 1882. Mr. Whitfield read the call under which the convention was summoned, and followed the reading with a brief announcement, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Convention: In order to effect a temporary organization, I beg leave to nominate Mr. B. G. Caulfield, of Lawrence County, well known to you all, as the temporary chairman.

The nomination was received with enthusiasm, and Mr. Caulfield was unanimously elected, and being escorted to the platform and to the chair, briefly addressed the convention as follows: (Mr. Caulfield was one of the prominent democrats of the territory.)

Gentlemen of the Convention: I return to you my sincere thanks for the honor you have conferred upon the people who have called upon me to represent them in this convention, by selecting the humble individual who stands before you as your temporary chairman. I most heartily congratulate the people of Southern Dakota upon the manifestations we have before us, which can only result in the attainment of liberty and independence. (Applause.) I congratulate the people of Southern Dakota therefore, that they are passing by the innovations that have been made by old customs, by setting forth to bring into the Union a new and prosperous state. I congratulate them upon returning to the old moorings of the Constitution where our fathers left it, and which present custom has taken away. (Applause.) The old usage was that the states of the Union, whether called upon or not, would admit within their fold without the necessity of an enabling act, those people who by their acts, their numbers and characteristics, manifested to the country and the world, the authority, right and power, within themselves of self-government. The idea of an enabling act to enable the people who are the government themselves, to do that which they have a right to do, is an innovation upon our form of government. (Long continued applause.) The people of the government require no act of Congress to enable them to perform their rights and to adopt rules and regulations that they may determine for themselves. The Constitution of the United States was made for the states of the Union. The preamble reads that we, the people of the United States, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America, and no colony, no territorial forms of government, were contemplated at that time, and if not contemplated then, any power which undertakes to control the people while they are the people of the states, which they should be under the Constitution, is an invasion upon their rights. (Applause.) We, therefore, today have assembled here as one people at our own call, to manifest to the people of America and the Congress of the United States our wish to enter into the sisterhood of states, a right which belongs to us by the Constitution of our country. We, the citizens of Dakota, are the citizens of the United States, and as such are entitled to all rights, privileges, immunities, of every other citizen of the United States, and that power which undertakes to deprive us of it commits a wrong. We have assembled here to say to Congress—and we have a right to say it—that we, the people of Southern Dakota, are a state, that we simply need the forms of Congress to admit us into the Union as such. The Constitution says that Congress shall have power to admit new states into the Union, no territories were contemplated in the Constitution. When this country was purchased from France, it was contemplated that whenever 60,000 people gathered together in the old Territory of Louisiana, they should organize themselves into a state. I understand that to be the position we occupy here today. With that understanding let us proceed with the deliberations of this convention and to the end that the proceedings of the convention may meet with the approval of man and God, I request that the Reverend Doctor Hoyt, the pioneer clergyman of Dakota, invoke the Divine blessing.

The Rev. Melancthon Hoyt, dean of the Episcopal Diocese of Dakota, offered prayer as follows:

O God, thou who of old did counsel with thy children, we pray thee to be present with the members of this convention, now gathered together to consult for the best interests of the people of Dakota. Guide and direct them in all their doings with thy most gracious favor, and favor them with the countenance of thy most gracious help * * * that in all their work begun, continued and ended in thee, they may glorify thy holy name, and perpetuate the best interests of the people of this territory. We ask it for the Redeemer's sake. Amen.

The convention then elected Philip Lawrence, of Kingsbury County, temporary secretary, and W. B. McChesny, of Brown County, assistant secretary, following which a brief recess was taken to enable the president of the convention to make up the lists of committees and afford the committees time to make up their reports.

The president then appointed the following Committee on Credentials: Aurora County, F. H. McIntosh; Beadle, Karl Gerner; Bon Homme, John Todd; Brookings, H. H. Natwick; Brown, J. H. Drake; Brule, S. W. Duncan; Clark, S. H. Elrod; Clay, J. Kimball; Codington, L. D. F. Poore; Davison, George S. Bidwell; Day, M. Moulton; Grant, A. H. Lewis; Hand, B. F. Payne; Hanson, W. S. Arnold; Hutchinson, S. M. Daboll; Hughes, H. E. Dewey; Kingsbury, Amos Whiting; Lawrence, S. P. Romans; Lincoln, James W. Taylor; Moody, C. D. Pratt; Minnehaha, E. W. Caldwell; McCook, J. E. Rutan; Spink, C. T. Howard; Union, C. F. Mallahan; Yankton, J. R. Gamble; Sully, J. A. Meloon.

Delegate Pickler offered a resolution, which was adopted, giving the credentials committee authority to allow unorganized counties representation such as their population would entitle them to if organized. (There were twenty-five of these unorganized counties.)

At the afternoon session the Committee on Credentials submitted the following report, which was adopted:

Mr. Chairman: Your Committee on Credentials submit the following report, and recommend its adoption:

Aurora, eight votes, divided now into Aurora and Jerauld counties, as follows: Aurora County, five votes, to wit: S. L. Baker, L. S. Cull, F. W. Robey, J. C. Ryan, E. H. McIntosh. Jerauld County, three votes, B. F. Chapman, A. B. Smart, T. F. Toffemire.

Brown County, eight votes, N. T. Hauser, N. J. Gordon, S. H. Jumper, J. H. Drake, W. B. McChesney, E. A. Bowers, A. O. Titus, W. Winter. The committee recommend additional delegates to Brown, to wit: J. H. Hauser, C. S. Mainger, L. A. Burke, A. A. Rowley.

Beadle County, ten votes, Karl Gerner, S. A. Armstrong, J. W. Shannon, John Blair, Fred Grant, John Cain, A. B. Melville, L. S. Hazen, S. C. Nash, E. A. Morse.

Bon Homme County, sixteen votes, John L. Turner, Joseph Zitka, Robert Dollard, F. A. Morgan, T. O. Bogert, Peter Byrne, C. T. Campbell, C. T. McCoy, F. M. Ziebach, John Todd, J. R. Stephens, C. S. Rowe, Robert Kirk, O. Richmond, Frank Trumbo, John C. Memmer, J. C. Klemme, alternate; M. H. Day, alternate.

Brookings County, sixteen votes, H. H. Natwick, C. A. Kelsey, G. A. Matthews, C. H. Stearns, L. P. McClarren, Page Downing, S. G. Mayland, H. P. Finnegan, D. J. Darrow, S. W. Lockwood, Charles Davis, E. E. Gaylord, C. W. Williams, Frank Adams, J. O. B. Scobey, Ole Knudtson.

Brule County, eight votes, A. G. Kellam, F. M. Goodykoontz, D. Warner, L. W. Lewis, J. H. King, Charles Cotton, S. W. Duncan, F. J. Wells.

Clark County, four votes, S. H. Elriod, E. F. Conklin, S. J. Conklin, Don R. Frazier.

Clay County, twelve votes, E. B. Dawson, C. G. Shaw, J. Kimball, A. L. Newton, J. E. White, H. Newton, John R. Whiteside, C. E. Prentis, Ben Collar, Jared Bunyan, A. H. Lathrop, G. S. Agersborg.

Codington County, twelve votes, H. R. Pease, D. C. Thomas, E. M. Dennis, E. D. Wheelock, T. A. Kingsbury, A. D. Chase, Oscar Kemp, A. E. Dewey, Wm. M. Pierce, Geo. A. Edes, C. C. Wiley, L. D. F. Poore. Alternates, L. D. Lyon, W. O. Frazier, W. H. Donaldson.

Davison County, twelve votes, H. C. Greene, S. D. Cook, S. F. Goodykoontz, J. D. Fegan, S. W. Rathburn, B. F. Alterton, John Pease, E. S. Johnson, George S. Bidwell, John Foster, Douglas Leffingwell, W. H. Blackman.

Day County, four votes, M. Moulton, E. R. Ruggles, O. A. James, B. F. Stringham.

Douglas County, four votes, W. E. Tipton, George H. Woolman, J. J. Devy, F. E. Lawrence.

Grant County, sixteen votes, J. W. Bell, A. J. Blesser, A. Lewis, P. E. Skaken, A. Wardall, Wm. M. Evans, S. S. Loekhart, A. B. Smedley, O. J. Scheier, J. B. Whitcomb, John Buzzell, A. H. Nash, J. R. Eastman, J. C. Drake, A. C. Dodge, J. C. Knapp.

Hand County, eight votes, B. F. Payne, R. T. Smith, E. S. Voorheis, C. E. Cort, W. H. Kephart, G. O. Hutson, G. W. Livingston, C. A. Wheelock.

Hanson County, four votes, W. S. Arnold, L. P. Chapman, F. B. Foster, A. J. Parshall.

Hutchinson County, eight votes, A. Sheridan Jones, chairman; L. L. Fisenmann, Henry Heil, David Bellon, Karl Winter, S. M. Daboll, John Schamber, Henry Heil. Those present to cast the full vote.

Hughes County, eight votes, C. D. Mead, W. S. Wells, H. R. Horner, V. E. Prentice, C. W. Richardson, Wm. Stough, H. E. Dewey, H. J. Campbell.

Kingsbury County, twelve votes, J. C. Southwick, P. Lawrence, Thos. Reed, J. E. Risdorff, I. A. Keith, M. A. Brown, A. Whiting, J. A. Owen, D. C. Kline, L. F. Dow, J. C. Gipson, J. J. Sweet.

Lawrence County, thirty votes, G. C. Moody, B. G. Canfield, S. P. Romans, Porter Warner, W. L. Hamilton, S. B. Smith, A. J. Knight, G. G. Bennett, W. H. Parker, W. R. Steele, D. Corson, A. J. Harding, John R. Wilson, C. F. Tracey, W. H. Riley, H. M. Gregg, T. F. Harvey, H. O. Anderson, D. K. Dickenson, W. J. Laramet, Dolph Edwards, J. O. Gunsollus, Geo. F. Robinson, J. W. Galand, John H. Davey, Thomas Hartland, John C. Ryan, Joseph Ramsdell.

Lincoln County, sixteen votes, L. Hensley, A. B. Boynton, J. W. Taylor, E. B. Peterson, B. C. Jacobs, A. B. Wheelock, W. K. State, Larse Hilme, Robert Pierce, Elling Opsal, Thomas Wright, O. D. Hinckley, Wm. Bradshaw, A. P. Dixon, George Conkling, Wm. M. Cuppett. Delegates present to cast full vote.

Miner County divided into Miner and Sanborn counties, sixteen votes, one-half to each county. Miner, eight, H. Bronson, Mark Harris, G. A. Martin, J. P. Ryan, M. A. Moore, H. Weedy, F. Britain, W. G. James.

Sanborn County, eight votes, N. B. Reed, H. E. Mayhew, Wm. McFarland, W. F. Kenfield, George Lawrence, F. W. Thaxter, C. H. Van Tassel, C. H. Jones.

Minnehaha County, twenty-eight votes, R. F. Pettigrew, C. W. Hubbard, J. Schaetzl, Jr., Melvin Grigsby, J. R. Jackson, John Langness, W. W. Brookings, E. W. Caldwell, C. H. Winsor, T. H. Brown, D. R. Bailey, B. F. Campbell, G. A. Uline, S. Wilkinson, D. S. Glidden, C. E. McKinney, A. C. Phillips, T. S. Free, W. A. Wilkes. Delegates present to cast full vote.

Moody County, twelve votes, H. M. Williamson, A. G. Bernard, Wm. R. Ramsdell, T. E. Carter, R. Brennan, L. W. Sherman, F. F. Whalen, N. Vance, C. D. Pratt, John Hobart, A. P. Allen, Phil Clark.

McCook County, twelve votes, J. T. McKee, J. M. Bayard, E. Thomas, E. H. Wilson, John F. Norton, J. E. Rutan, D. S. Pond, H. G. Miller.

Sully County, three votes, B. P. Hoover, J. A. Meloon, J. M. Moore.

Spink County, fourteen votes, F. C. Warriner, C. H. Seeley, C. N. Keith, M. Moriarty, F. W. Rogers, J. H. Allen, J. J. Cushing, C. H. Reedan, R. B. Hassel, E. W. Foster, C. D. Friberg, J. M. Miles, C. T. Howard, E. B. Korus.

Turner County, sixteen votes, Rev. L. F. Newell, Rev. J. B. Currans, J. A. Hand, Rev. J. P. Coffman, A. T. Cathcart, G. W. Perry, Reverend Harmalling, Reverend Warnaus, Jackson Davis, G. L. Douglas, Joel Fry, Rev. N. Tychsen, J. B. Bebee, Rev. T. H. Judson, S. F. Andrews, Mr. Parr.

Yankton County, sixteen votes, Rev. Joseph Ward, Bartlett Tripp, George Brown, C. J. B. Harris, G. W. Kingsbury, J. R. Gamble, Wilmot Whitfield, Newton Edmunds, J. R. Hanson, Fred Schnauber, Maris Taylor, F. Minee, Geo. H. Hand, I. E. West, S. A. Boyles, S. H. Gruber.

Union County, sixteen votes, C. H. Walworth, Geo. B. Freeman, J. D. Cittel, George Ellis, Jesse Akin, N. A. Kirk, Henry Kiplinger, Joseph Yerter, M. W. Sheafe, Adam Scott, Harry Mosier, J. G. Merrill, Thomas Roman, C. F. Mallahan, Halvore Knudson, Rev. Joseph V. Himes.

Potter County, one vote, O. L. Mann.

Faulk County, three votes, J. A. Pickler, L. Van Horn, J. H. DeVoe.

Campbell County, one vote, S. S. Bassett.

Buffalo County, one vote, E. A. Herman.

Hyde County, three votes, M. G. Simon, E. O. Parker, L. E. Whitcher.

The committee recommends that in all cases the delegates present be entitled to cast the full vote of the county of which they may be residents.

J. R. GAMBLE, Chairman.

The report was adopted by a unanimous vote.

Upon being called to order, the Committee on Permanent Organization submitted the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

President—Hon. B. G. Caulfield, Lawrence County.

Vice Presidents—Rev. Joseph Ward, Yankton County; Hon. F. M. Goodykoontz, Brule County; C. D. Pratt, Moody County; R. F. Alerton, Davison County; D. R. S. Smith, Hand County; A. H. Lewis, Grant County; D. C. Thomas, Codington County; William M. Cuppett, Lincoln County; T. T. Devy, Douglas County; John Todd, Bon Homme County; Colonel Kimball, Clay County; J. S. Foster, Hanson County; E. W. Foster, Spink County; C. A. Kelsey, Brookings County.

Secretaries—Phillip Lawrence, Kingsbury County; W. B. McChesney, Brown County; C. F. Mallahan, Union County; John Cain, Beadle County; V. E. Prentice, Hughes County.

The Committee on Rules and Order of Business submitted its report, which was of a routine character, relating to the detail in the transaction of the convention's business. It was adopted without dissent. One of its most significant recommendations was a rule as follows:

That no questions shall be in order before this convention save those contained in the call for the convention, to wit: The division of the territory upon the 46th parallel and the calling of a constitutional convention for the purpose of framing a state constitution for that part of Dakota south of the 46th parallel, and questions relating to the ordinary routine of business of the convention, and no debate on any other questions shall be in order.

The president then named the following Committee on Resolutions: H. J. Campbell, of Hughes County; G. C. Moody, of Lawrence County; W. A. Wilkes, of Minnehaha County; E. D. Wheelock, of Codington County; Rev. Joseph Ward, of Yankton County; A. B. Melville, of Beadle County; H. E. Mayhew, of Sanborn County; O. L. Mann, of Potter County; C. H. Walworth, of Union County.

The president also appointed the following Committee on Apportionment: A. G. Kellam, Brule County, chairman; E. W. Robey, Aurora County; J. W. Shannon, Beadle County; Robert Dollard, Bon Homme County; C. J. Darrow, Brookings County; John H. Drake, Brown County; John B. Frazer, Clark County; E. B. Dawson, Clay County; T. A. Kingsbury, Codington County; H. C. Green, Davison County; M. M. Moulton, Day County; George H. Woolmar, Douglas County; A. H. Lewis, Grant County; B. F. Payne, Hand County; L. P. Chapman, Hanson County; A. S. Jones, Hutchinson County; H. R. Horner, Hughes County; T. H. Ruth, Kingsbury County; Porter Warner, Lawrence County; A. B. Dixon, Lincoln County; J. P. Payne, Miner County; M. B. Reed, Sanborn County; R. F. Pettigrew, Minnehaha County; C. D. Pratt, Moody County; T. E. Rutan, McCook County; F. W. Rogers, Spink County; T. D. Curran, Turner County; Rev. J. V. Himes, Union County; S. A. Boyles, Yankton County; L. E. Witcher, Hyde County; T. A. Maloon, Sully County; John A. Pickler, Faulk County; Gen. O. L. Mann, Potter County; E. R. Hermann, Buffalo County; S. S. Bassett, Campbell County; B. F. Chapman, Jerauld County.

The president also appointed the following committee to prepare an address to the people: E. W. Caldwell, Minnehaha County; John H. King, Brule County; G. W. Kingsbury, Yankton County; John Cain, Beadle County; John Owens, Kingsbury County; S. J. Conklin, Clark County; R. B. Hassell, Spink County; E. S. Voorhies, Hand County; H. E. Dewey, Hughes County; S. D. Lawrence, Lawrence County.

The convention then took a recess until 8 o'clock in the evening.

At the evening session the Committee on Resolutions and Ordinance submitted a report in the words following, which, being read to the convention, was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Experience has abundantly demonstrated that the welfare of the people is promoted and secured only by a permanent government, sovereign in character, and republican in form, and responsible to the people, and as all good and just government should be of the people, and by the people, and for the people; and

Whereas, The compact contained in the ordinance of 1787, which has been extended over Dakota by five successive acts of Congress, guarantees "absolutely and inviolably to them the right to form a permanent constitution and state government whenever said territory shall contain 60,000 free inhabitants;" and

Whereas, The treaty by which the Louisiana Purchase was acquired, which is "the supreme law of the land," guarantees to the people of Dakota Territory, as absolutely and inviolably as the ordinance of 1787, that they shall be incorporated in the Union of the States, and admitted as soon as possible, according to the principles of the Federal Constitution, to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages and immunities of citizens of the United States,

Whereas, Under the Constitution of the United States, as authoritatively declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, the territory was acquired and could only be acquired for the purpose, and upon the condition, that it should be admitted into the Union as a state as soon as its population and situation entitled it to admission; and

Whereas, According to this same authority, Congress has no power to hold and govern this territory permanently, in the character of a territory; and

Whereas, Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; and all power is inherent in the people, and all governments in this Republic are founded on their authority and instituted for their safety, peace and happiness; and for the advancement of these ends they have, at all times, an unalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government, in such manner as they may think proper; and these fundamental principles proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence, and reiterated in the Bills of Rights of Twenty States, are now everywhere acknowledged as the settled and irrevocable law of the land; and

Whereas, The Territory of Dakota lying south of the 46th parallel of north latitude, has a present population of more than two hundred and fifty thousand people, which, at its present rate of increase, will, in another twelve months, number over three hundred thousand people, which is more than double the population of any state heretofore admitted into the Union out of the territories, and more than that of seven of the original states at the time of their admission; and

Whereas, Said part of said territory covers an area of over seventy thousand square miles, which is larger than that contained in any state of the Union except seven; and

Whereas, It has been solemnly and authoritatively determined by the courts, by the precedents of thirteen states, by the sanction and affirmation of Congress, and by the approval of the presidents, from Washington down, that the people of a territory, when qualified for state government, have the right in their primary and sovereign capacity, without authorization of Congress, or of any other power than their own, to proceed to form their state constitution and state government, and apply for admission into the Union; and

Whereas, With the proposed boundaries Dakota will be the eighth state in the Union in area, and will cover an area equal to that of New England, and New Jersey and Delaware; and

Whereas, The people of Dakota, by virtue of their population, their territory, their constitutional rights, and the inviolable and solemn guaranties of treaties, and the compacts of the ordinance of 1787, and the will of the people, are a state, and ought without further delay, to form a state constitution, and state government, and ask admission into the Union; and

Whereas, The experience of the past has demonstrated that the most important need of the people of Dakota now is a responsible government; a government responsible to the people, elected by the people and acting for the people; and

Whereas, Unless such government is obtained speedily we have good reason to apprehend lasting and remediless injury to the institutions and the future welfare of the commonwealth, and this question will and should become the sole and vital issue, before all other issues, with the people of Dakota, until it is determined; and

Whereas, The last Legislature of this territory, wisely acceding to and representing the general and earnest wish of the people thereof, did enact a law convening a constitutional convention at the capital of the territory in October next, for the purpose of framing a constitution and state government for that part of Dakota south of the 46th parallel and of performing all other things essential to the admission of such part of Dakota into the union of the states; and

Whereas, Said act of the Legislature was prevented from becoming a law by the territorial executive declining to approve the same or return it to the Legislature with his objections, thus depriving that body from taking any further action relating thereto; and

Whereas, The people having been thus deprived of the ordinary means of declaring and executing their lawful will, have full and unquestioned right and authority to fall back upon and exercise the reserved rights and extraordinary powers vested in them, and have therefore for that purpose called and organized this convention; and

Whereas, It appears still to be the unaltered will of the people that such constitutional convention shall be held; therefore,

Be it Resolved and Ordained by the people of Dakota, through their delegates in convention assembled:

Section 1. That for the purpose of enabling the people of that part of Dakota south of the 46th parallel, to organize and form a state government, and make application for admission into the union of states, a delegate convention is hereby called to meet at Sioux Falls, D. T., on September 4, A. D. 1883, at 12 o'clock meridian, for the purpose of framing a state constitution, republican in form, and doing and performing all other things essential to the preparation of the territory for making application to the general government for the admission of such part of Dakota into the union of the states.

Sec. 2. The said convention shall be composed of 150 members who shall be apportioned among the several counties of that part of Dakota south of the 46th parallel, to-wit:

Provided, That all organized counties in the territory south of the 46th parallel at the time of the election hereinafter provided for is held, to choose members to said convention, and which counties are not above named, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall be given a seat and have a vote in said convention as other members thereof, and said delegate shall be in addition to the number heretofore provided for.

Sec. 3. An election for the purpose of choosing said delegates is hereby appointed to be held on the first day of August, A. D. 1883, at which time the delegates to said constitutional convention shall be chosen. Said election shall be conducted in all respects as elections under the general laws of the territory, and the state executive committee, to be appointed as hereinafter prescribed, are hereby authorized, empowered and required, and the several county clerks of the several counties of the territory are hereby requested, and the several county boards hereby provided for, are hereby authorized and required to issue notice of such election at least thirty days prior thereto, by publication in the newspapers of each county, stating the object of such election, and the number of delegates to be chosen in each, and shall otherwise substantially conform as near as may be to the notice of election provided by law for general elections, which notice may be posted by the sheriff or the county boards hereinafter provided for, or by both, in the manner provided by law for posting notices of election. The election precincts and polling places may be the same as now provided under the law in reference thereto. But the county boards to be appointed as hereinafter provided, may, if they deem it expedient, at least twenty days prior to such election, establish new precincts for the whole or any part of their respective counties, and fix the polling places therein, and said county boards are hereby authorized and empowered at the same time or thereafter, to appoint judges of election, and such judges of election shall have authority and perform all things that are now required of judges of election, by law, in the case of general elections; and the canvass and return of the votes shall be in the form now required by law in the case of county elections. It shall be the further duty of the several county boards to issue certificates of election to all persons who shall be declared elected, provided that the persons receiving the highest number of votes at such election shall be elected as such delegates. It shall be the further duty of the several county boards, within ten days after such election, to certify to the president of the state executive committee, the names of all persons chosen as such delegates from their respective counties and to transmit the same to said president of said state executive committee by mail.

Sec. 4. The president of the state executive committee shall receive all certificates so transmitted to him by the several county boards and shall preserve the same, and it is hereby made the duty of said state executive committee to enter the names of all persons so certified to them as such delegates, in a book which they shall provide for that purpose. And it is made the duty of said state executive committee within twenty days after said election, to canvass and compile all certificates and returns of said elections, and to ascertain the names of the several delegates who shall have been duly elected in their several counties, and to make proclamation thereof in the newspapers of the several counties, and to issue certificates of election to the several delegates-elect.

Sec. 5. The delegates so elected at such election shall meet at the time and place appointed by this ordinance, and in such room as the state executive committee or the convention may provide, and at the hour heretofore named the president of the said state executive committee or some member-elect of said convention shall call the convention to order, and shall call the roll of its members from the book heretofore provided, if such book can be obtained, and if not, from the official returns of said election, and the certificates of election of each member, in such manner as the convention shall prescribe, and the several delegates, as their names are called, shall take their seats in said convention. When the calling of the roll of members shall be completed, the several delegates shall be required to take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to faithfully and impartially discharge their duties as delegates to said convention. Said oath may be administered by said president of said state executive committee or the chief justice of the territory, or by any judicial officer of the territory. The convention shall then proceed to organize by the election of a president, who shall be chosen from among the delegates, together with the other officers herein provided for. Said convention shall adopt such rules and regulations as are provided in the case of legislative bodies. It may adjourn from time to time and shall be the sole judge of the election and qualifications of its members. The president, and all officers of said convention, shall take and subscribe an oath to faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their respective offices.

Sec. 6. Said convention, after its organization, shall proceed to draft a constitution for the State of Dakota, republican in form, in which shall be defined the boundaries of the proposed State of Dakota. It shall be the further duty of said convention to provide for an election of the people of the proposed state, to be held on the day of the general election in 1883, or such other day as said convention shall designate, at which election the said constitution shall be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection, and the said convention shall have the power to provide the necessary means for holding said election, and for carrying into effect all the purposes of the said constitution. The convention shall have power to provide for all the expenses of said election held under the provisions of this ordinance and of any ordinance of said convention.

Sec. 7. The delegates to the said constitutional convention shall each receive a per diem of $2.00 for each day's attendance upon said convention, and 5 cents per mile for each mile necessarily traveled in going to and returning from said convention, said per diem and mileage to be paid by the provisional state treasurer, upon the warrant of the provisional state auditor, who are hereinafter provided for.

Sec. 8. The provisional state auditor is hereby authorized to audit and allow the accounts of the several delegates to said convention, upon certificates of the presiding officer of said convention, countersigned by the secretary thereof.

Sec. 9. The said convention shall hold a session for a period not exceeding forty days, but shall have power to adjourn from time to time, or to meet at the call of the president of the convention.

Sec. 10. The said convention shall provide the manner of presenting the said constitution to the Congress of the United States, and do and ordain all things necessary to be done for the purpose of carrying into effect the government of the state when it shall be admitted into the union of the states.

Sec. 11. That said convention shall have power to appoint a state treasurer and a state auditor, and to define and prescribe their duties and pay, which officers shall serve provisionally until the state government shall go into operation.

Sec. 12. In case of the refusal, neglect or inability of any member of a county board to act, the remaining members of said county board shall have power to appoint a member or members to take the place of any one so refusing, neglecting, or being unable to act. And in the case of the refusal, neglect or inability of any county board to act, the president of the state executive committee shall have power to appoint a county board. In all other cases, where for any reason there is no county board to act and there may not be time for the state executive committee to act, the citizens may appoint a county board pro tem.

In case of the refusal, neglect or inability of any judge or judges of an election to act, the remaining judge or judges shall appoint others to act in their place. And in case of the refusal, neglect or inability to act of all the judges of election, the county board may appoint new judges of election, or if for any reason this is impracticable, the qualified electors present at the polls may appoint judges of election. No mere technicality or informality in the form of the election shall be deemed to vitiate or avoid the same, it being the sole intent and object of this ordinance to ascertain and give effect to the true will of the people of Dakota, as expressed by the ballot at the polls.

Sec. 13. There shall be appointed by the president of this convention, before this convention shall adjourn, a state executive committee consisting of * * * members, who shall serve until the meeting and organization of the constitutional convention. Said committee shall have full power to do and perform all things necessary to the carrying into effect the provisions of this ordinance; they shall appoint a county board in each county in the proposed state; make and issue instructions and regulations with regard to the details of all elections held in pursuance of this ordinance; fill all vacancies in their own number.

or in the county boards; call all adjourned meetings of this convention, or order new elections for another convention; order new or special elections in case of necessity for the constitutional convention; and perform and exercise such other duties and powers as may be imposed or conferred upon them by this ordinance or convention. They shall fix their own times and places of meeting; and three members shall constitute a quorum with power to transact business. More than one unexcused absence from any regular meeting by any member thereof shall be deemed to work a vacancy in his office, which may be filled at the discretion of the committee; but any member may by writing delegate his power to act on the committee to any member thereof. The state executive committee shall meet and organize on the day of their appointment, and before this convention adjourns, by the election of a president and secretary, and shall keep a record of their proceedings. They may employ all necessary clerical assistance.

Sec. 14. It shall be the further duty of the several county boards, within ten days after such election, to certify to the secretary of the territory the names of all persons voted for as such delegates from their respective counties, with the number of votes cast for each, and to transmit the same to said secretary; and the several county clerks are hereby requested to sign said certificates, but said certificates shall be sufficient and valid if made and signed by the county boards alone. In case it shall for any reason be found impracticable for the secretary of the territory to receive and preserve said returns, the president of the said executive committee may direct such certificates to be sent to the clerk of the Supreme Court of the territory.

Sec. 15. The secretary of the territory or clerk of the Supreme Court are requested to receive all certificates so transmitted to him and to enter the names of all persons so certified to him as such delegates in a book which he will provide for that purpose. And he is further requested to act with the state executive committee in the canvass and compilation of the returns of the election, and to sign all certificates and proclamations of the result of the election with said executive committee. He is further requested to make to the constitutional convention a separate list and certificate of the result of the election, signed and certified by him.

Sec. 16. In all matters not herein provided for especially, the state executive committee shall have power to make all necessary rules and regulations to carry into effect this ordinance.

During the proceedings of the second day the State Executive Committee was appointed, as follows: Chairman, ex-Gov. Newton Edmunds, Yankton County; Aurora County, E. H. McIntosh; Beadle County, John Cain; Bon Homme County, Robert Dollard; Brookings County, C. A. Kelsey; Brown County, M. J. Gordon; Brule County, F. M. Goodykoontz; Clark County, S. J. Conklin; Clay County, John R. Whiteside; Codington County, William M. Pierce; Douglas County, W. E. Tipton; Day County, E. R. Ruggles; Deuel County, W. G. Eakins; Grant County, A. H. Lewis; Hand County, G. W. Livingston; Hanson County, F. B. Foster; Hughes County, H. J. Campbell; Hutchinson County, S. M. Daboll; Lawrence County, Edward Van Cise; Kingsbury County, Mark A. Brown; Miner County, Mark Harris; Lincoln County, J. W. Taylor; Minnehaha County, Jacob Schaezel; McCook County, John F. Norton; Moody County, A. G. Barnard; Turner County, J. H. Newby; Spink County, C. H. Seeley; Yankton County, S. H. Gruber; Union County, C. F. Mallahan; Sully County, B. P. Hoover; Hamlin County, William R. Marshall; Custer County, N. S. Burke; Pennington County, John Newlin; Walworth County, F. J. Bowman; Charles Mix County, M. T. Post; Hyde County, Eli Johnson; Lake County, N. F. Smith.

Also a committee on address to the President and Congress of the United States, composed of Bartlett Trip, of Yankton County, chairman; Aurora, S. L. Baker; Beadle, A. B. Melville; Bon Homme, John Todd; Brookings, William M. Brooke; Brown, Wylie Winters; Brule, John H. King; Clark, S. H. Elrod; Charles Mix, A. B. Lucas; Clay, Henry Newton; Codington, H. R. Pease; Custer, Dr. A. S. Stewart; Davison, S. G. Cook; Day, A. C. Tuttle; Douglas, George H. Woolman; Deuel, H. B. Monahan; Grant, John W. Bell; Hand, G. O. Hutchinson; Hamlin, C. F. Lake; Hanson, Arthur Parshall; Hutchinson, James C. Boyles; Hughes, C. D. Meard; Kingsbury, John A. Owens; Lake, C. B. Kennedy; Lawrence, W. B. Kingsley; Lincoln, Elling Opsal; Miner, S. H. Bronson; Sanborn, W. F. Thaxter; Minnehaha, Melvin Grigsby; Moody, William Ransdell; McCook, J. E. Rutan; Spink, F. C. Mariner; Turner, T. J. Judson; Union, E. C. Erickson; Yankton, George H. Hand; Pennington, David H. Clark; Hyde, Eli Johnson; Sully, J. M. Moore; Faulk, J. A. Pickler; Potter, O. S. Oliver; Buffalo, Ezra Cleveland; Jerauld, William T. Hill; Roberts, T. W. Lane.

By a vote of 212 for Sioux Falls to 92 for Deadwood, the constitutional convention was called at the former place, to meet September 4, 1883.

The apportionment of representation in the constitutional convention from the various counties was fixed in accordance with the appended table:

Aurora	3	Brookings	5	Brule	3
Buffalo	1	Beadle	3	Butte	1
Brown	7	Bon Homme	4	Clay	4
Charles Mix	2	Clark	2	Codington	5
Douglas	2	Davison	4	Deuel	3
Edmunds	1	Faulk	1	Grant	4
Hutchinson	4	Hanson	3	Hand	4
Hyde	1	Hughes	4	Hamlin	2
Jerauld	1	Kingsbury	4	Lake	3
Lawrence	9	Lincoln	7	Minnehaha	8
McCook	3	Miner	3	Moody	4
Pennington	2	Roberts	1	Sanborn	2
Spink	5	Turner	4	Union	5
Walworth	1	Custer and Fall River... 1	Yankton	7
Sully and Potter.....	2

McPherson and Campbell, and that portion of Dickey, McIntosh and Inman south of 46th parallel 1
 Day and that part of Sargent south of the 46th parallel..... 3
 Total, 150.

The convention then adjourned.

Dakota was well supported by able and influential papers in its purpose to form a constitution and state government, without the initiative or sanction of either Congress or the Territorial Legislature. The New York Times of July 2, 1882, said of the movement:

The people of the southern half of Dakota have undertaken to form a constitution and to prepare for the establishment of state government without the permission of the ruler, Governor Ordway. The Territorial Legislature at its last session passed a bill providing that a constitutional convention should be held in October next for the purpose of framing a constitution and forming a state government for that part of the territory lying south of the 46th parallel of north latitude, but the governor, who was offended by this action of his mis-guided subjects, would neither veto nor approve it. He seems to have pocketed it, as the saying is, for the purpose of preventing the enactment of the law over his veto. But the people were not discouraged. They have held a large and harmonious convention, and they propose to do by common consent what they had intended to do under the sanction of a territorial law.

An attempt was made last winter to secure the admission of Southern Dakota as a state. The repudiated Yankton bonds were a stumbling block, but the old indebtedness has since been refunded to the satisfaction of the bondholders. The applicants will come before the Forty-Eighth Congress with a much stronger case than was presented last winter; their opponents will not be able to make objection with reference to population, and it seems clear that the people represented will be practically unanimous in support of the demand. The convention recently held at Huron was the result of a spontaneous movement. More than four hundred delegates were present, and elaborate provisions were made for a constitutional convention of 150 delegates, to be held at Sioux Falls, on September 4th. The delegates are to be elected on August 1st, and the machinery of election is to be controlled by an executive committee. From beginning to end the action will be voluntary and without legal sanction, but its effect may be as powerful as the effect of a convention held under territorial authority would be, for the movement seems to be warmly supported by the people, and nothing but the peculiar course taken by Governor Ordway has withheld that authority which the Territorial Legislature attempted to grant. The governor, who was spoken of in the convention as a "foreign power," and an "unhallowed yoke which must be shaken off forever," is probably unwilling that his province should be shorn of its fair proportions.

It is generally assumed that the application for admission, which will probably be made next winter, will be coldly received. A democratic House of Representatives, it is said, will not listen to the petition, because a majority of the inhabitants of South Dakota will send, in the course of time, two republicans to the Senate. If the applicants come, however, supported by a strong, unanimous public sentiment, and prove that the population of Southern Dakota is not only sufficiently large, but is very rapidly increasing, it will be unwise for democrats to exclude them on partisan grounds. It is tolerably clear that the admission of the new state cannot be long delayed.

CHAPTER CVII
CONSTITUTION FRAMED AND ADOPTED

1883

FIRST CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION AT SIOUX FALLS—BARTLETT TRIPP, PRESIDENT
—NAMES OF MEMBERS—LIST OF COMMITTEES—PROHIBITION AN ISSUE—DECLARATION OF RIGHTS—THE DEBATES AND PROCEEDINGS—CONVENTION ADJOURNS
—CONSTITUTIONAL ELECTION HELD AND CONSTITUTION ADOPTED BY A VOTE OF 12,336 FOR, TO 6,814 AGAINST, THE MEASURE.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF 1883

In pursuance of the call authorized by the preliminary convention held in Huron in June, the delegates elected to the constitutional convention appointed to be held at Sioux Falls, beginning Tuesday, September 4, 1883, assembled at Germania Hall, in said city, on the date named, at 12 o'clock, noon, and was called to order by Hon. John R. Gamble, acting for ex-Gov. Newton Edmunds, chairman of the executive committee. Mr. Gamble then read the call under which the convention was held, which is published in the proceedings of the preliminary convention held at Huron, and following the call, the temporary presiding officer called the roll of delegates elected, which had been furnished by the executive committee, as follows:

Aurora County, T. C. Kennelly, Frank P. Baum, S. L. Baker; Beadle County, A. B. Melville, C. J. Sheffler, George F. Lane, Charles Reed; Bon Homme County, Robert Dollard, J. L. Turner, C. T. McCoy, F. M. Ziebach; Brookings County, B. J. Kelsey, G. S. Clevenger, T. K. Dudley, A. S. Mitchell; Brown County, M. J. Gordon, W. C. Houghton, A. Grant, L. G. Johnson, E. D. Adams, C. C. Holland, A. O. Titus; Brule County, A. J. Kellam, S. W. Duncan, G. E. Schwindt; Buffalo County, E. A. Hermann, W. H. Crandall, E. W. Cleveland; Charles Mix County, A. B. Lucas; Clark County, S. H. Elrod, C. G. Sherwood; Clay County, Jefferson P. Kidder, F. B. Dawson, J. Kimball, J. R. Whiteside; Codington County, A. C. Mellette, E. D. Wheelock, William Pierce, R. B. Spicer; Davison County, A. W. Hager, A. J. Waterhouse, John M. Pease, John C. Tatman; Day County, M. M. Moulton, D. R. Ruggles; Deuel County, P. A. Gatchell, H. B. Monaghan, E. J. Burrigge; Douglas County, J. F. Callahan, S. Simpson; Edmunds County, H. A. Day; Faulk County, P. E. Knox, D. B. Stevens; Grant County, N. I. Lothian, J. C. Elliott, W. T. Burman, B. P. Murphy; Hamlin County, John Hayes, J. P. Cheever; Hand County, B. R. Howell, Charles E. Cort, W. N. Brayton, Henry Miller; Hanson County, Frank B. Foster, L. B. Chapman, H. W. Peck, F. B. Tabor; Hutchinson County, S. M. Daboll, A. Sheridan Jones, Karl Winter, Matthias Schlingen; Hughes County, W. A. Lichtenwallner; Hyde County, Eli Johnson; Jerauld County, C. W. McDonald; Kingsbury County, John B. Smith, Charles B. McDonald, Philip Lawrence, Knute Lewis; Lake County, Mat. W. Daley, R. A. Murray, R. Wentworth; Lawrence County, Gideon C. Moody, Barney Caulfield, Porter Warner, Dolph Edwards, A. J. Knight, J. C. Ryan, W. Wheelock; Lincoln County, Oscar S. Gilford, J. W. Taylor, A. B. Wilcox, M. E. Rudolph, Abe Boynton, A. Sherman, J. V. Conklin; Minnehaha County, R. F. Pettigrew, Melvin Grigsby, W. W. Brookings, Benjamin F. Campbell, John Bippus, Albion Thorne, W. C. Lovering, G. D. Bannister; Miner

County, G. B. Farmer, S. H. Bronson, M. W. White; McCook County, J. E. Rutan, W. S. Brooks; Moody County, C. S. Wellman, H. M. Williamson, A. P. Allen, C. S. Wellman; Pennington County, C. L. Wood, R. C. Lake; Spink County, D. M. Hunt, E. W. Foster, Thomas Sterling, C. N. Keith, A. R. Truax; Sanborn County, Alonzo Converse; Sully and Potter counties, Edmund W. Eakin, J. H. Westover, Frank Byrne; Turner County, Joseph Allen, Christian Epple, Orange Still, A. Bertelson; Union County, C. F. Mallahan, Jesse Aikin, Ole Gunderson; Yankton County, John R. Gamble, Joseph Ward, Bartlett Tripp, Hugh J. Campbell, George H. Hand, C. J. B. Harris, C. E. Brooks; Walworth County, P. C. Knot.

Rev. J. N. McLoney, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Sioux Falls, then invoked the blessing of God upon the convention, in the following prayer:

O thou Almighty and Everlasting God, our Creator, preserver and benefactor, King of kings and Lord of lords, the work of whose hands is perfect and whose laws are holy, just and good, we desire to thank thee for all thy blessings upon us as a nation and as a commonwealth. We rejoice that thy spirit is abroad in this land, and that thou art recognized as the ruler and judge of mankind. As we gather here in an association which teems with such vast interests, full of what may redound to the glory of the commonwealth, we ask that thy perfect wisdom may direct the deliberations of this body. Let the spirit of God develop in the hearts of these men. Direct them toward the upbuilding of humanity. We thank thee for so much of honor to thee and love for humankind as has been manifested, above all personal interests. We thank thee for so much which promises well for this commonwealth which in so many things is full of hope and promises for the future. Assist them in laying the foundations broad and deep. Give them the blessings of thy holy spirit, the direction of thy wisdom—guidance which no human mind can give. Amen.

Judge Jefferson P. Kidder, judge of the Fourth Judicial District, administered to the delegates the oath of office, as follows:

You and each of you do solemnly swear that you will support the Constitution of the United States, and that you will faithfully and impartially discharge your duties as delegates in this constitutional convention.

Judge Kidder, being a delegate to the constitutional convention from Clay County, then took a like oath as delegate which was administered by Mr. Gamble.

A. S. Jones, of Hutchinson, then moved that the convention proceed to the election of a temporary chairman and secretary.

Judge Brookings, of Minnehaha, considered a temporary organization unnecessary, as there are no contests from any county, and all the delegates are sworn in, so that a permanent organization may as well be undertaken at once.

Mr. Jones said the credentials should be inspected.

G. C. Moody, of Lawrence, said:

A temporary organization will be necessary. We have no succession of any other body, and must make provision to establish our records. This convention is a spontaneous outgrowth from the people, and has no record as yet. There must be a secretary, clerks, stenographers, rules, and order of business, committees, etc.

The motion for temporary organization was adopted.

Nominations for temporary chairman being in order, R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha, nominated A. C. Mellette, of Codington, who was unanimously chosen, and upon taking the chair Mr. Mellette spoke as follows:

Gentlemen: I thank you for this unexpected honor, for I hold it to be an honor to be called to preside over such a gathering as this—a duty which would be an honor to any citizen of the United States. We have gathered for the discharge of an important trust, one affecting the dearest privileges of American citizenship—the highest type of civil responsibility. It will require our best judgment and calmest reason, and it will demand that so far as it is possible for human nature to do so, we shall lay aside all prejudices of feeling, and struggle constantly toward securing those results which shall be for the greatest good. Again thanking you, I ask, what work shall we next take up—for this gathering is for work, not merely for words.

J. R. Gamble, of Yankton, nominated C. H. Winsor, of Minnehaha, as temporary secretary, and Mr. Winsor, was unanimously elected.

Delegate Moody then offered the following resolution:

That a committee of nine persons be appointed by the chair, on rules and order of business, and that such committee be requested to make to this convention a partial report immediately after the permanent organization, to the extent of reporting the number and designation of committees, and the number of persons on each committee.

After some discussion, the resolution was unanimously adopted, and the following named delegates were appointed as such committee: G. C. Moody, of Lawrence; C. J. B. Harris, of Yankton; E. W. Foster, of Spink; Oscar Gifford, of Lincoln; R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha; A. G. Kellam, of Brule; A. B. Melville, of Beadle; William Peirce, of Codington and F. M. Zeibach, of Bon Homme.

Delegate Harris, of Yankton, moved that the rules of the Illinois Constitutional Convention of 1869, be adopted by this body for use until replaced by rules of its own.

Delegate Moody said, not a quarter of these members know the provisions of those rules, and we should not adopt anything of which we know nothing. Parliamentary law is recognized as part of the common law, and will be sufficient guidance for us until we can adopt something more especial, the provisions of which we know.

The motion of Mr. Harris was lost.

Delegate Hand, of Yankton, moved the appointment of a committee of five to suggest such minor offices as it will be necessary for the convention to provide. The motion carried, and the chair appointed George H. Hand, F. B. Dawson, of Clay; W. C. Houghton, of Brown; R. C. Lake, of Pennington, and A. S. Jones, of Hutchinson, as such committee.

C. F. Mallahan, of Union, moved that a committee of five be appointed to engage a stenographer, and provide such current printing as may be required for use of the convention. Motion adopted, and the committee was appointed composed of Delegates Mallahan, Porter Warner, of Lawrence; J. L. Turner, of Bon Homme; M. Grigsby, of Minnehaha, and J. C. Elliott, of Grant.

Delegate Daboll, of Hutchinson, moved that the certificates of the delegates be deposited with the secretary as a part of the records of the convention.

Delegate S. L. Baker, of Aurora, opposed the motion, saying: "Members will desire to keep their certificates as mementoes, and I therefore oppose this motion." The motion was lost upon a vote.

The chair announced that the oath had been prepared for the signatures of the members, as required by the ordinance providing for the convention, and that when all had signed it the jurat of Associate Justice Kidder would be attached.

The secretary then presented the report of the committee appointed to suggest such officers as would be necessary for the business of the convention, the same to consist of a president, secretary, first and second assistant secretaries, sergeant-at-arms and doorkeeper, and the appointment of four pages by the permanent chairman of the convention. The report was unanimously adopted.

Delegate Hand, of Yankton, presented a resolution requesting the secretary to invite the clergymen of the different churches of the city for each in turn to be present at the opening of the morning sessions of the convention, and to open the same with prayer.

On motion of Delegate Rev. Joseph Ward, of Yankton, the convention then adjourned until 9 o'clock A. M., tomorrow.

SECOND DAY

The second day's session was opened with prayer by Rev. J. M. McBride, rector of Calvary Episcopal Church, Sioux Falls.

The committee on officers reported the engagement of T. G. Brown as official reporter of the proceedings and debates. The convention then proceeded to a permanent organization.

Delegate B. F. Campbell, of Clay County, nominated Hon. Jefferson P. Kidder, of Clay, as permanent president.

Judge Kidder withdrew his name, expressing his thanks for the nomination, and assuring the convention of his appreciation of the honor offered him—an honor of which any man might feel proud. But his official duties were such that he could not in justice to the public interests remain during the convention. He saw that the convention was well equipped with brains, and able for the duties before it, and desired to express his fullest sympathy with the movement and all that it implies, and wished that he might be able to remain until its labors were concluded.

Delegate Brookings nominated Bartlett Tripp, of Yankton, referring to him as a man of the people, and one against whom the criticism of the convention's enemies would certainly have no point, as he was no politician, having never held any office in his life except that of member of the Yankton School Board.

Delegate Caulfield, of Lawrence, moved that the call of the roll be dispensed with, and the secretary be directed to cast the unanimous vote of the convention for Bartlett Tripp. The motion was adopted by a unanimous vote, amid much applause, and Delegate Tripp elected permanent president. Delegates Brookings and Caulfield were appointed a committee to escort the president-elect to the chair.

Mr. Caulfield then presented to the president-elect the gavel used by himself as chairman of the Huron convention.

Mr. Mellette, retiring temporary chairman, then introduced President Tripp, who spoke as follows:

Gentlemen of the Convention: I thank you sincerely for the honor you have conferred upon me and the delegation of which I am a member. I do not feel that I am equal to the responsibility placed upon me, but I do feel that the compliment is one of which any man might well be proud, and that no man had ever been called to preside over a body of men more intelligent, more patriotic, and more truly loyal to that Government of which it is our desire to be a part. I am well aware that the convention is subjected to many criticisms throughout the country; that the ship of state about to be launched upon the troubled sea of criticism, if it reach the great national port at all, depends upon the strength of her build and the character of the freight with which the convention may load her. I have no doubt that wisdom will characterize each movement throughout the proceedings. It has been said that the men assembled here are rebels, but I think they are the most peculiar class of rebels I have ever known or learned about. That instead of being secessionists and asking permission to go out of the Union, if they are fighting at all they are fighting to get into that very Union. This convention is assembled from every portion of the southern half of the territory for the purpose of the organization of a new state—gathered here with all these responsibilities, coming together with united purposes. Some have come long distances to legislate for the purpose of becoming a part of our great National Government. The delegates are gathered with patriotic purposes, and I do hope there will be no cause for any unjust criticism upon any of the methods of any of the members.

The President then took from his desk the gavel used in the Huron convention, and holding it with a firm grip, said with unusual earnestness:

It is hoped that the gavel used in that convention, where it was ably wielded, and which has brought us here today, should continue to be used until our purposes are completed, and the star of Dakota is emblazoned upon the national flag. Once more, thanking you for the kindness of the compliment paid me, permit me to take upon myself the duties of presiding officer of this convention.

The convention then proceeded and elected C. H. Winsor, of Sioux Falls, permanent secretary; H. M. Avery, Sioux Falls, first assistant secretary; T. A. Kingsbury, of Watertown, second assistant secretary, and Joseph M. Dixon, of Sioux Falls, sergeant at arms.

The committee of rules and order of business, by G. C. Moody, reported in favor of the appointment of thirty standing committees, as follows:

On judiciary, 15 members; on executive department, 9 members; on legislative department, 9 members; on bill of rights, 9 members; on elections and right of suffrage, 9 members; on name, boundaries, and seat of government of state, 9 members; on federal relations, 9 members; on education and school lands, 9; on municipal incorporations, 9; on county and township organization, 9 members; on incorporations other than banking and municipal, 9 members; on state, county and municipal indebtedness, 9 members; on revenue and finance, 9 members; on public accounts and expenditures, 9 members; on state institutions and public buildings, including penitentiaries and other reformatory institutions, 9; on manufactures and agriculture; on mines, mining and water rights; on congressional and legislative apportionment; on roads, bridges, and other internal improvements; on exemptions, real and personal; on rights of married women; on military affairs; on banking and currency; on seal of the state, coat of arms, and design of the same; on amendments and revision of the constitution; on printing; on schedule; on miscellaneous subjects; on compensation of public officers; on arrangement and phraseology of the constitution.

Hugh J. Campbell, of Yankton, then introduced the following resolutions:

That a committee of thirteen be appointed to prepare for consideration of the convention, a memorial to the President and Congress of the United States asking for a donation of thirty sections of public land in the State of Dakota, for the purpose of capitol buildings and grounds.

That a committee of five be appointed to draft a memorial to the President and Congress of the United States, requesting the immediate action of Congress in opening for settlement the Great Sioux reservation, in accordance with the pending agreement, so that the barriers now existing between the two great sections of the new state may be removed as speedily as possible.

That a committee of five be appointed, to whom shall be referred the subject of the organization of new counties in that part of Dakota Territory south of the 46th parallel, with instructions to examine and take evidence concerning the alleged grievances of the people of those new counties.

That a committee of one member from each county be appointed to draft an ordinance for taking the census of the inhabitants of Dakota south of the 46th parallel.

That a committee of five be appointed to frame an ordinance to provide funds to defray the public expense connected with the formation of a constitution and state government for the State of Dakota.

In regard to the resolution concerning the opening of the Great Sioux reservation, Judge Campbell said that its immediate and unanimous adoption would do more than anything else to secure a full vote in the Black Hills in favor of the constitution, and he therefore requested that action thereon be taken at once, and that action on the other resolutions be deferred.

C. C. Moody, of Lawrence County, hoped that prompt work would be had in the matter, as it was of vital importance to both the Black Hills and Southeastern Dakota that the great barrier between them should be removed by the adoption of the pending treaty.

A. C. Mellette, of Codington, opposed the action, as being outside the legitimate province of the convention.

R. B. Spicer, of Codington, held the same views and further argued that it is not the proper thing for this convention to take action foreign to its purpose for the purpose of bidding for votes for the constitution which may be framed as has been intimated by the gentlemen from Lawrence.

A. S. Jones, of Hutchinson, made remarks of the same tenor.

Judge Moody replied that it was not a delegate from Lawrence who made the observation alluded to, and stated that his purpose in urging the unanimous adoption of the resolution was that the memorial ought to be at once placed in the hands of the Committee of the United States Senate now investigating the subject of the opening of the Sioux reservation, in order that these senators might thus have a unanimous expression upon the matter coming from the most eminent and best informed body of citizens of the region directly interested. Mellette and Jones, upon this statement of the case, modified their remarks and withdrew their opposition and the resolution was unanimously adopted.

The chair appointed H. J. Campbell, of Yankton; G. C. Moody, of Lawrence; R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha; A. G. Kellam, of Brule; and A. W. Hager, of Davison, to prepare such memorial.

The convention then adjourned until 9 o'clock the following day.

THIRD DAY

At 9 o'clock the convention was opened with prayer, by Rev. W. J. Skillman, of the First Presbyterian Church, Sioux Falls. The preceding day's journal was then read.

On motion of Delegate Mellette the journal of the previous day was corrected in the paragraph which made as a special order this day the resolutions offered by Delegate Campbell, at the session of Wednesday. By the correction the resolutions were indefinitely postponed.

Delegate Moody reported from the Committee on Rules, a draft of rules and order of business.

The rules, after some discussion, were adopted as reported from the committee. The chair announced that he had been unable to complete the lists of permanent committees, but would announce them at the afternoon session.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, reported from the committee having in charge the Sioux Indian reservation question, as follows:

Your committee appointed to prepare a memorial regarding the opening of the Sioux Indian reservation, respectfully submit the following:

Resolved, That the constitutional convention of Dakota now assembled at Sioux Falls, do unanimously and most urgently represent to the Congress of the United States, that all the great industrial interests of both the eastern and western sections of Dakota, do imperatively demand the immediate action of Congress this coming winter, to open the Sioux reservation to settlement, making all just and reasonable compensations to the Indians. That the necessity of congressional action in this respect is every day becoming more urgent, and that delay therein will subject the people of this territory to great injustice and most serious injury. That a committee of seven members be appointed by the chairman to convey to the committee of the United States Senate, now in the West, the sense of the people of this territory on this question. The committee also ask for further time to report upon the memorial referred to therein.

The report was adopted, whereupon Delegate Campbell stated that a United States Senate Committee were now or soon would be at Omaha, and that a committee should be authorized by the convention to meet the Senate Committee at Omaha and lay before them the wishes of the people of Dakota in this matter.

The chairman then announced the committee authorized by the report, as follows: G. C. Moody, of Lawrence; R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha; B. G. Caulfield and Porter Warner, of Lawrence; A. G. Kellam, of Brule, and A. W. Hager, of Davison.

On motion of Delegate Harris, of Yankton, 500 copies of the rules and standing committees were ordered printed.

On motion of Delegate Campbell the number of members of the Committee on Schedule was changed from 9 to 22.

The chairman then announced the following standing committees:

Judiciary: Moody of Lawrence; Kidder of Clay; Dollard of Bon Homme; Gifford of Lincoln; Grigsby of Minnehaha; Sterling of Beadle; Westover of Sully and Potter; Harris of Yankton; Wood of Pennington; Mellette of Codington; Lichtenwallner of Hughes; Murray of Lake; Cheever of Hamlin; Farmer of Miner; Dawson of Clay.

Executive: Kellam of Brule; Reed of Beadle; Turner of Bon Homme; Kelsey of Brookings; Duncan of Brule; Whiteside of Clay; Murphy of Grant; McDonald of Kingsbury; Harvey of Lawrence.

Legislative: Kidder of Clay; Gamble of Yankton; Taylor of Lincoln; Elrod of Clark; Pettigrew of Minnehaha; Gatchell of Deuel; McCoy of Bon Homme; Keith of Spink; Day of Edmunds.

Bill of Rights: Melville of Beadle; Brooks of Yankton; Clevenger of Brookings; Gordon of Brown; Sherwood of Clark; Pease of Davison; Howell of Hand; Harvey of Lawrence; Hayes of Hamlin.

Elections and Right of Suffrage: Jones of Hutchinson; Kennelly of Aurora; Wheelock of Codington; Gunderson of Union; Bannister of Minnehaha; Lothian of Grant; Holland of Brown; Hunt of Spink; Ryan of Lawrence.

Name, Boundaries and Seat of Government of State: Allen of Turner; Brooks of Yankton; Whiteside of Clay; Houghton of Brown; McCoy of Bon Homme; Knight of Lawrence; Winter of Hutchinson; Bannister of Minnehaha; Phelps of Codington.

Federal Relations: Brookings of Minnehaha; Baum of Aurora; Daboll of Hutchinson; Bippus of Minnehaha; Bronson of Miner; Knox of Faulk; Aken of Union; Warner of Lawrence; Burman of Grant.

Educational and School Lands: Moulton of Day; Ward of Yankton; Daboll of Hutchinson; Eakin of Sully and Potter; Thorne of Minnehaha; Conklin of Lincoln; Whiting of Sanborn; Hunt of Spink; McDonald of Kingsbury.

Municipal Corporations: Murray of Lake; Baker of Aurora; McVey of Brookings; Adams of Brown; Monaghan of Deuel; Still of Turner; Van Nelson of Hughes; Allen of Moody; Wheelock of Lincoln.

Corporations Other Than Banking or Municipal: Mellette of Codington; Hand of Yankton; Wood of Pennington; Caulfield of Lawrence; Boynton of Lincoln; Kellam of Brule; Melville of Beadle; Brookings of Minnehaha; Waterhouse of Davison.

County and Township Organization: Keith of Spink; Campbell of Minnehaha; Lane of Beadle; Epple of Turner; Court of Hand; Gunsolly of Lawrence; Schwindt of Brule; Chapman of Hanson; White of Miner.

State, County and Municipal Indebtedness: Pettigrew of Minnehaha; Rudolph of Lincoln; Ruggles of Day; Edwards of Lawrence; Winter of Hutchinson; Murphy of Grant; Compton of Union; Lucas of Charles Mix; Fakin of Sully and Potter.

Revenue and Finance: Pierce of Codington; Bippus of Minnehaha; Foster of Spink; Tatman of Davison; Conklin of Lincoln; Turner of Bon Homme; Wentworth of Lake; Miller of Hand; Brooks of Yankton.

Public Accounts and Expenditures: Boynton of Lincoln; Thorne of Minnehaha; Simpson of Douglas; Daly of Lake; Pease of Davison; Wheelock of Codington; Kelsey of Brookings; Whalen of Moody; McDonald of Jerauld.

State Institutions and Public Buildings Including Penitentiaries and Other Reformatory Institutions: Ziebach of Bon Homme; Spicer of Codington; Truax of Spink; Chapman of Hanson; Miller of Hand; Aken of Union; Converse of Sanborn; Simpson of Douglas; Thorne of Minnehaha.

Manufactures and Agriculture: Mitchell of Brookings; Wheelock of Lincoln; Lovering of Minnehaha; Peck of Hanson; Bertelson of Turner; Schlingen of Hutchinson; Kimball of Clay; Smith of Kingsbury; Brooks of McCook.

Congressional and Legislative Apportionment: Gifford of Lincoln; Pettigrew of Minnehaha; Gamble of Yankton; McCoy of Bon Homme; Pierce of Codington; Lake of Pennington; Sterling of Spink; Ward of Hughes; Foster of Hanson.

Mines, Mining and Water Rights: Caulfield of Lawrence; Wood of Pennington; Knight of Lawrence; Burrige of Deuel; Johnson of Brown; Ryan of Lawrence; Sherman of Lincoln; Campbell of Yankton.

Roads, Bridges and Other Internal Improvements: Elliott of Grant; Boynton of Lincoln; Phillips of Codington; Wellman of Moody; Callahan of Douglas; Adams of Day; Daly of Lake; Whiteside of Clay; Schoffler of Beadle.

Exemptions Real and Personal: Williamson of Moody; Rudolph of Lincoln; Baum of Aurora; Peck of Hanson; Grant of Brown; Getchell of Deuel; Court of Hand; Allen of Turner; Herman of Buffalo.

Rights of Married Women: Monaghan of Deuel; Parker of Lawrence; Rutan of McCook; Knox of Faulk; Daboll of Hutchinson; VanVelsor of Hughes; Lewis of Kingsbury; Conklin of Lincoln; Herman of Buffalo.

Military Affairs: Brayton of Hand; Campbell of Minnehaha; Kimball of Clay; Dollard of Bon Homme; Moody of Lawrence; Campbell of Yankton; Foster of Spink; Duncan of Brule; Terrell of McCook.

Seal of State, Coat of Arms and Design of Same: Foster of Hanson; Ward of Yankton; Jones of Hutchinson; Moulton of Day; Court of Hand; Lawrence of Kingsbury; Caulfield of Lawrence; Williamson of Moody; Dollard of Bon Homme.

Banking and Currency: Lake of Pennington; Turner of Bon Homme; Taylor of Lincoln; Warner of Lawrence; Grigsby of Minnehaha; Turner of Miner; Qualey of Brookings; Elrod of Clark; Lewis of Kingsbury.

Amendments and Revision of the Constitution: Lawrence of Kingsbury; Ruggles of Day; Spicer of Codington; Dawson of Clay; Mallahan of Union; Lucas of Charles Mix; Waterhouse of Davison; Clevenger of Brookings; Baker of Aurora.

Printing: Mallahan of Union; Turner of Lawrence; McDonald of Jerauld; Wells of Hughes; Truax of Spink; Rutan of McCook; Ziebach of Bon Homme; Lane of Beadle; Howell of Hand.

Schedule: Campbell of Yankton; Hager of Davison; Wood of Pennington; Kellam of Brule; Howell of Hand; Dollard of Bon Homme; Lawrence of Kingsbury; Melville of Beadle; Mitchell of Brookings; Edwards of Lawrence; Pierce of Codington; Williamson of Moody; Baker of Aurora; Dawson of Clay; Day of Edmunds; Foster of Hanson; Ward of Hughes; Wheelock of Lincoln; Mallahan of Union; Foster of Spink; Moulton of Day; Allen of Turner.

Miscellaneous Subjects: Houghton of Brown; Harvey of Lawrence; Smith of Kingsbury; Johnson of Hyde; Winter of Hutchinson; Brayton of Hand; Callahan of Douglas; Still of Turner; Elrod of Clark.

Compensation of Public Officers: Ward of Hughes; Grigsby of Minnehaha; Mitchell of Brookings; Harris of Yankton; Kellam of Brule; Hager of Davison; Lothian of Grant; White of Miner; Whalen of Moody.

Arrangement of Phraseology of the Constitution: Hager of Davison; Hand of Yankton; Moody of Lawrence; Gamble of Yankton; Taylor of Lincoln; Mellette of Codington; Ziebach of Bon Homme; Bronson of Miner; Westover of Sully and Potter.

FOURTH DAY

On the fourth day the convention was opened with prayer by Rev. E. B. Meredith, of the First Baptist Church, Sioux Falls.

A petition from Brookings County for a prohibition clause in the constitution, was referred to the Committee on Legislation.

A memorial from the National Woman's Convention was read, asking for a woman's suffrage clause in the constitution, which was referred to the Committee on Elections.

The report of the state executive committee appointed by the Huron convention was read. It was the duty of this committee to procure the necessary printing for conducting the election of delegates to the constitutional convention. That an apportionment of the expense it incurred was made to the several counties south of the 46th parallel, and it was found to be $7.50 for the membership in each county. The committee found it could not rely upon the slow process of making collections in the manner at first proposed, so it called by telegraph upon a number of the oldest counties for specific pledge of certain amounts. All of them responded and readily paid their quotas except one county. The committee had printed 8,500 copies of the proceedings of the Huron convention, 500 of which were in pamphlet form. Also 2,000 poll books and 200 abstracts together with circulars, postals, etc. Had all the counties responded to the assessment in accordance with the original request of the committee, it would have received $1,125. The committee actually received $590.50, of which they paid $413.50, leaving a balance of $117.00, which was turned over to this convention to be used for similar purpose.

The president appointed the following pages: Sioux Grigsby, Willie McCormack, George Dickson, Lynn Pamley.

Hugh J. Campbell, of Yankton, called up his resolution presenting the previous day, providing for a committee to frame an ordinance for taking the census of the territory south of the 46th parallel. He offered as a substitute a resolution creating a committee of thirteen with the president of the convention as the chairman, to devise plans for having the census taken. In support of the substitute Mr. Campbell stated that a census should accompany the memorial to Congress and that the constitutional convention was the proper and only body to have such a census taken. The census should be begun by the latter part of next week. He wanted the committee called for by his resolutions because all other organized committees had all they could attend to already. Not more than thirty days, he thought, should be occupied in taking the census.

A resolution was adopted instructing the president to appoint the following additional committees: On preamble to constitution, 5 members; on administration, 9 members; on impeachment, 9 members, and tenure of office, 5 members.

A resolution was presented and referred to the legislative department, requiring that committee to consider the question of minority representation in the Legislature, with a view to incorporating a provision for such representation in the constitution.

The question of prohibition was prominently before the convention, and it had not been definitely settled whether to incorporate prohibition in the constitution or have it submitted to the people as a separate article at the same election. The convention had the votes to pass the proposition and make it a part of the constitution, but the sentiment of some of the strongest prohibitionists was opposed to this, knowing that it would drive a large vote to oppose the constitution when it came before the people for adoption. Rev. Joseph Ward was recognized as one of the leaders of the prohibition sentiment and he was a member of the convention. Very early in the session he gave out the following statement showing their position of the prohibition element.

He stated that he regarded it of the highest consequence to the future of the prohibition movement itself that statehood should first be secured, and to that end everything should be done to facilitate the work of the convention and its ratification by the people. A prohibition clause would prove to be an issue of reform at the wrong time and might defeat the constitution itself, and array the whisky ring of the whole country against the admission of South Dakota. Aside from this, he favored the gradual agitation of prohibition among the people before they are asked to vote for or against it. He was here at the convention not as a prohibitionist but as a delegate of the people, sent here for a distinct purpose, and intrusted with a duty he meant to perform impartially. He did not think a prohibition convention would have any encouragement from the temperance people in the constitutional convention, should it endeavor to force a consideration of a prohibitory clause.

Rudolph, of Lincoln, offered a resolution, that the constitution ought to provide for county courts in the several counties, and in addition to the probate jurisdiction conferred upon them by territorial laws, should be vested with jurisdiction in all cases of misdemeanor and with jurisdiction in all civil suits where the debt or damages claimed does not exceed $1,000. Referred to the judiciary committee.

The convention then adjourned to 10 o'clock the next morning.

FIFTH DAY

The convention opened with prayer by Rev. E. P. Livingston, of the Reformed Church.

Petitions of considerable length from the prohibitionists of Kingsbury and Brookings counties were referred to Committee on Elections.

Delegate Brayton, of Hand County, from the Committee on Military, submitted a complete report, containing sections, the first of which stated that the military of the State of Dakota shall consist of all able-bodied males between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, except such persons as now are or hereafter may be exempted by the United States or the state.

The seventh section says that no person having conscientious scruples against bearing arms shall be compelled to do military duty in time of peace, but may be required to pay an equivalent for such service. The other five sections were of a nature usually found in state constitutions bearing upon military.

A report, which was pronounced as probably a complete one, was made by the Committee on Elections and Rights of Suffrage. It was composed of eight sections and contained the usual safeguards commonly found in state constitutions, excepting the eighth section, which provided that notwithstanding anything in the article, any woman, being a citizen of the United States, of twenty-one years of age, and having the qualifications of an elector as to residence, may vote at any election held for the purpose of choosing any officers of schools, and shall be eligible to hold any office pertaining to the management of schools.

A long discussion followed upon a question raised by Delegate Mellette, who desired to save time by requiring all reports of standing committees to be first considered in committee of the whole. The discussion finally led to a motion that the rule of the convention requiring the president to vacate the chair while the convention was in committee of the whole be modified so that the president might retain the chair while the convention is in committee of the whole.

The president here said: "The motion is out of order. A committee of the whole means a committee of the whole, and such a rule could not possibly be amended."

Delegate Brookings thought the United States Senate considered questions in committee of the whole without requiring a senator to take the president's chair.

The resolution was finally tabled by a close vote.

The president announced the following additional standing committees called for by resolutions of the day before:

Administrative: Day of Edmunds; Campbell of Minnehaha; Bertelson of Turner; Ward of Yankton; Hayes of Hamlin.

Transportation: Schwindt of Brule; Gifford of Lincoln; Moulton of Day.

Preamble of Constitution: Johnson of Hyde; Burrige of Deuel; McDonald of Jerauld; VanVelsor of Hughes; Wentworth of Lake; Ruggles of Day; Getchell of Deuel; Harris of Yankton; Gunderson of Union; Hermann of Buffalo; Schlingen of Hutchinson; Clevenger of Brookings; Schoffler of Beadle; Bronson of Miner; Edwards of Lawrence.

The convention then adjourned to 10 o'clock Monday morning.

SEVENTH DAY

At 10 o'clock, Monday morning, September 10th, Rev. J. N. McLoney, of the First Congregational Church, Sioux Falls, opened the convention with prayer.

From Beadle, Lincoln, Hamlin, Kingsbury and Davison counties were received petitions on the subject of prohibition, asking that it be incorporated in the constitution. A separate petition from numerous citizens in different parts of the state asked that the question be submitted to a vote when the constitution is submitted to the people for ratification.

The Committee on Education and School Lands reported, in substance, as follows:

The laws referring to the establishment and governing of schools are left to the Legislature to enact. In relation to school lands, which is an important feature, it is provided that all proceeds from the sale of public school lands and property for educational purposes granted by Congress, and all donations to school interests, shall remain a perpetual fund for the maintenance of schools. This fund can be increased but not diminished. The usual methods of increasing and maintaining the fund are incorporated. No land can be sold for less than ten dollars per acre which has been appropriated for school purposes, and that sold within ten years shall not exceed one-third of all lands set apart for the use of public schools. No school officer shall be allowed to be interested in the sale or rental or other disposition of public school lands. The usual means are incorporated relating to normal schools and the funds for them.

The report was ordered printed.

The Committee on Preamble to the Constitution reported as follows:

We, the people of the Territory of Dakota, having the right to admission into the Union as one of the United States of America by virtue of the Ordinance of 1787 and the treaty of cession of the Province of Louisiana and by virtue of the guaranties of the Constitution of the United States, all the necessary conditions of said compacts and treaties of cession having been fulfilled on the part of the people of the Territory of Dakota, and we of right being entitled to a change from our territorial condition to the enjoyment of all the rights of state government as a free and independent state in the Union, do now, in convention assembled, in order to establish justice, promote the welfare and insure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity, ordain and establish the following constitution, and form ourselves into a free and independent state by the name of the State of Dakota.

Delegate Alonzo Converse, of Sanborn County, offered a petition from citizens of the proposed state, asking that at the same time the constitution is submitted to vote of the people, a clause prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating beverages in the state be also submitted to a vote. The object in offering the petition, he said, was to bring the subject of prohibition before the convention for discussion.

There are many people in Dakota who favor prohibition and its incorporation in the constitution. Prohibition is not to be considered as an expediency but as a right. I was sent here with the understanding that whatever is adopted must go before the people at the polls, and I would not do my duty if I failed at least to attempt to bring this subject before the people, knowing that a large majority of my constituents favor it. This I would do as a matter of justice to those who sent me here, no matter what my own ideas may be on the subject. It is a matter of good policy to place it before the people to satisfy the element promoting it. The matter should be settled at the very outset. If I favored prohibition I would favor submitting it to a vote of the people, to the end that all agitators be quieted. If I disapproved it I would favor settling the question now and at the polls. I believe it is the only democratic way of settling such issues. It would also be advantageous to the supporters of the constitution. It would call out a full vote on the constitution. I do not see why a solitary vote should be lost or cast against the constitution if the subject of prohibition is submitted with the constitution, to the people for ratification. Other questions might also be submitted that would help out the vote on the constitution.

The president, at the close of Mr. Converse's remarks, stated that until the convention otherwise ordered, he would permit remarks upon the presentation of petitions. The Converse petitions were referred to the Legislative Committee.

A resolution was offered and referred to the Committee on Corporations other than Banking, directing that committee to take into consideration the expediency of providing that the Legislature shall from time to time pass laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight on the different railroads in the state, and for the election of three railroad commissioners by the qualified electors of the different districts, to be made as nearly equal in population as practicable, whose duties it shall be to see that the railroad laws are faithfully complied with; the commissioners to be qualified electors of the state and district from which they are elected, and who shall not be interested in any railroad corporation or other transportation company as stockholder, creditor, agent, attorney or employee.

Delegate J. H. Westover, of Sully and Potter counties, offered the following, which was referred to the Committee on Township and County Organizations:

Whereas, A number of unorganized counties, lying within the boundaries of the proposed State of Dakota, contain more than the requisite number of resident voters to entitle them to county organization under territorial laws, and some of them a greater population than counties which have been organized by favor of the territorial executive; and

Whereas, The qualified voters of such unorganized counties have petitioned in vain for such organization, and are by reason of such want of organization practically disfranchised, and the inhabitants thereof are unjustly deprived of the many advantages derived from such organization; and

Whereas, All of such counties are justly and equitably entitled to organization and to recognition as such in the proposed State of Dakota; therefore be it

Resolved, That at the first election of state or county officers the counties of Hyde, Buffalo, Jerauld, Potter, Faulk and Campbell, with the territory lying between the north line thereof and the 46th parallel, and the County of McPherson and the territory lying between the north line thereof and the 46th parallel, be authorized to participate in the election of state officers, in every respect as such election may be held in any other county in said state, and that such counties may be considered organized as fully and completely as though previously organized by favor of the territorial executive, and that the proper committee be requested to consider the means of accomplishing the object of this resolution.

The report of the Committee on Elections and Right of Suffrage was then taken up, and was voted upon by single sections.

J. R. Gamble, of Yankton, moved to amend by making the required citizenship in the United States, one instead of three years. He said it was a matter of policy. The large number of foreign-born citizens here would be pleased if one year was substituted, and we should make no mistake.

Delegate Robert Dollard, of Bon Homme, thought the section should be amended to include "all electors at the time the constitution goes into effect."

Delegate Gamble showed that in many of the states the time required to make one a citizen was only six months, and in some one year.

Delegate A. C. Mellette, of Codington, favored the amendment. While it is a fact, said he, that a great number of foreigners come here who are not competent to vote under three years, it was a fact that many of them were not competent to vote after they had been here twenty years, and yet many come here who are possessed already of the competency. A residence of one year was enough. He thought the motion of the gentleman from Bon Homme (Mr. Dollard) not apropos to the original motion to amend. He offered a sub-section, reading: "And all persons who shall be qualified electors under the laws of this territory at the time of the ratification of this constitution at the polls." The motion as amended was adopted.

Delegate F. P. Baum, of Aurora, moved to amend line one by striking out the word "male." He said that inasmuch as so much consideration was given the vote of foreign-born people, the ladies should be allowed to vote. The amendment received but three votes and was lost.

Delegate George H. Hand, of Yankton, moved that the Committee on Elections and Right of Suffrage be instructed to report another section in lieu of and covering the same points as section 8, but couched in less objectionable phraseology, capable of only one construction.

The first section as finally amended gave the voting privilege to every male person over the age of twenty-one years who had resided in the United States one year, in the state six months, in the county thirty days and in the precinct ten days. The section giving the ballot to women at school elections was stricken out.

Delegate Mellette offered a substitute to section 8 of the election report covering suffrage. He said that it gave the Legislature power to enlarge but not restrict the right of suffrage. He claimed that the right of suffrage as established by states throughout the country was agitating the people, and that it would be wise in this new state to provide that the rights of suffrage may be extended without changing fundamental laws. He would have the right of suffrage left in the hands of the people.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, thought the convention on the brink of a dangerous precipice. When once granted to any class of citizens under this clause proposed, suffrage can never be revoked.

Delegate Brookings, of Minnehaha, said the Legislature had had the privilege for twenty years of enlarging the right of suffrage and had never abused it. It was before the Legislature once, and can safely be entrusted there again. He supported Mr. Mellette's proposition. There is no other subject, he said, that could be left to the Legislature as safely. He was opposed to woman suffrage generally. He did not want to impose suffrage upon them. He would be willing to confer the right of holding any office, however, because woman is competent to hold office, but she should not vote. It would not benefit her to vote, but it would to hold office.

Delegate M. Grigsby, of Minnehaha, opposed the proposition, because it gave too much latitude to the Legislature, irrespective of constitutional provisions. It permitted an enlargement of the rights so as to confer it during the heat of some uprising, and prohibited a restriction of it again when cooler judgment should prevail.

The matter then went to the Committee on Phraseology without a vote.

A motion was made that the report of the Committee on Preamble be taken up and acted upon without printing. Delegate Robert Dollard, of Bon Homme, most strenuously and emphatically objected. He declared that it was the business of this convention to discover whether or not the statements contained in that preamble are really true. He could undertake to demonstrate to anybody that the ordinance of 1787 did not apply to Dakota, and there are other assumptions therein which he wanted to have spread before the convention before he argued them, in order that the members might see exactly what they are. He felt that the adoption of such sentiments as these would leave this movement liable to condemnation as treasonable, and was of the opinion that it was totally unnecessary to burden the constitution with so much preamble of such quality. Therefore he wanted it printed, so that the members could comprehend its enormity before being asked to take action on it as a body.

At 12.45 the convention adjourned until 10 o'clock Tuesday morning.

EIGHTH DAY

At the opening of the convention, Rev. Dr. Joseph Ward, of Yankton, offered prayer, Tuesday morning, eighth day.

Petitions for the submission of prohibition to a vote of the people at the same time the constitution was voted upon were submitted, offered by Delegate Schefler, of Beadle; Pettigrew, of Minnehaha, and Porter Warner, of Lawrence, and referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

A protest was received from Sully and Potter counties, against excluding from the constitution a section giving to women the right of suffrage.

Delegate Pettigrew, Minnehaha, from the Committee on State, County and Municipal Indebtedness, submitted a report, substantially as follows:

The state shall not loan its credit or make donations except in case of public calamity, in aid of any individual or corporation, nor subscribe to or become the owner of the capital stock of any association or corporation, nor engage in any work of internal improvement. The state shall not incur over five hundred thousand dollars indebtedness except for the purpose of repelling invasion or defending the state or United States in war. No town or city or county or municipality or other subdivision shall ever make donation to or loan its credit in aid of, or subscribe to the capital stock of any association or corporation, or engage in any work of internal improvement or become responsible for the debts of any individual, association or corporation. No debt of any county, city or school district shall ever exceed five per centum of the assessed value of its taxable property.

Delegate A. Boynton, of Lincoln County, from the Committee on Public Accounts and Expenditures, submitted a report containing but little new matter. It forbade the Legislature from granting any extra compensation to any public officer, agent or contractor, after service had been rendered or a contract made, nor authorizing the payment of any such claim.

Delegate A. B. Melville, of Beadle, from the Committee on Bill of Rights, reported. The report gave free thought on all religious matters, free speech, and freedom in sentiment in newspaper publications. Granted the usual rights of trial by jury, and habeas corpus proceedings. No distinction shall be made by law between resident aliens and citizens in reference to the enjoyment of descent of property. No law shall ever be enacted granting to any citizen or class of citizens privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens.

The report from the Committee on Impeachment and Removal from Office possessed the usual features common to such articles in state constitutions.

Delegate C. N. Keith, of Spink, reported from the Committee on County and Township Organizations, the preamble and resolution regarding the organization of new counties, which was referred to the Committee on Schedule.

Majority and minority reports were made by the Committee on Rights of Married Women. The majority declared that the real and personal estate of every female, acquired before marriage, and all the property to which she may become entitled by gift, grant, inheritance or devise, shall be and remain the estate and property of such female, and shall not be liable for the debts and obligations of her husband.

The minority report was signed by Solon M. Daboll, of Hutchinson County, and holds that all real and personal property and all earnings of either husband or wife shall be his or hers after marriage, and subject to full control and personal responsibility, the same as before marriage, and not liable to the individual liability of the one in whom the title is not vested. But the homestead of any family, not exceeding 160 acres, not included in any city or village, nor exceeding $2,000 in value, and owned by either husband or wife, shall not be sold by one without the consent of the other, and in the case of the death of one, the other shall become the owner of the homestead.

From the Committee on Elections and Suffrage, to take place of the eighth section, which had been rejected, the following was submitted:

Any woman having the qualifications enumerated in section 1 of this article, as to residence and citizenship, may vote at any election held solely for school purposes, and may hold any office relating to schools in this state.

Delegate G. C. Moody, of Lawrence County, submitted a resolution, which was referred, directing that the Committee on Executive be instructed to take into consideration and report a proposition for incorporating into the constitution a section providing for the limitation of the pardoning power of the governor, by providing a board of pardons, upon whose recommendation only, after investigation, shall a pardon be granted.

Delegate Converse, of Sanborn County, offered a resolution asking that at the same time the constitution is submitted to the people for adoption or rejection, a proposition be also submitted to amend the same, by striking out the word "male" from the article on the right of suffrage, to be submitted separately to the electors for adoption or rejection, in the following manner: A separate ballot may be given to those entitled to vote, and the proposition may read, Shall the word "male" be stricken out of the article on the right of suffrage? "Yes," and the same proposition will be made with the answer, "No."

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Schedule.

Delegate McDonald, of Kingsbury County, submitted a resolution directing the president to appoint a special committee of seven to draft a plan for submitting the question of prohibition to a popular vote at the same time the constitution is offered to a vote.

The resolution was adopted.

A resolution was offered by Delegate A. Boynton, of Lincoln, and referred to the Judiciary Committee, instructing the committee to consider the expediency of providing for the election of a governor and members of a Legislature.

Delegate Rudolph, of Lincoln, moved that as there are many Scandinavians in South Dakota who cannot read the English language, the Committee on Printing be instructed to confer with printers relative to printing the constitution, when adopted, in the Scandinavian language. The motion prevailed.

The report of the Committee on Preamble was taken up for consideration. Delegate Dollard thought the convention was not ready to consider the preamble, and that there were fatal objections to it, and that it should be deferred, and that the constitution in all its bearings might be first considered.

Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson, offered a substitute for the preamble, being a brief declaration that the people of the territory desiring statehood had adopted the constitution and asked admission to the union of states.

Then followed a lengthy debate upon recommitting the preamble. The members of the Committee on Preamble claimed that great care had been taken in framing the report, with a view to bringing out all the claims that could be made for statehood.

Delegate Brookings said:

This seems to be a matter of a great deal of importance. I doubt if we can claim anything under the cessions and treaties mentioned in the preamble. We should claim statehood under later and newer rights. There are legal questions involved and the matter should go to the judiciary.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton (reading from the preamble presented by the Territory of Michigan):

Michigan came into the Union under the Ordinance of 1787. Arkansas cited the Treaty of Louisiana also. So did Florida, whose treaty was with Spain. I, however, have no objection to referring this preamble to the Committee on Judiciary.

The report was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The report of the Committee on Education and School Lands was taken up for adoption, and the first and second sections were adopted after some discussion, without amendment.

Delegate Brookings moved to strike out the words in section 2, "together with the net proceeds of all fines for violations of state laws," in connection with the income of the school fund. He did not object to certain proceeds from fines accruing to the school fund, but he did to all.

Delegate Mellette argued in favor of the adoption of the section as reported. It had been carefully considered in all its bearings before being reported to the convention. There is a fitness in considering the reports carefully by the committees, and such work should be duly regarded by the convention. The proceeds of the school fund would not become too large under the provisions of the section; if so, the clause could thereafter be amended or repealed. The common school fund should be a general fund. A wealthy county, with a large city, should not be allowed all its proceeds from fines, while no part of it went to the sparsely settled county. The fund should be distributed pro rata.

Delegate Joseph Ward, of Yankton, said:

There is no intention to increase the principal. It is intended to make it easier for new counties to maintain their school fund.

The motion to amend was lost.

A long debate grew out of an effort to amend the minimum price upon school land. Several delegates believed $10 an acre too high, and that $5, or $7, was enough; that $10 an acre would keep the land off the market.

Delegate Melville, of Beadle, said that one-third of the school land was already worth more than ten dollars an acre, and the section provided that one-third may be sold within ten years.

The proposition to amend failed.

Delegate Mellette offered an amendment requiring advertising in newspapers of school lands offered for sale, which was adopted.

The debate on education and school lands continued into the afternoon session, giving way briefly to a motion by Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson, that all speeches be limited to five minutes' time, and no delegate to be allowed to speak more than twice on the same subject.

Delegate Rudolph, of Lincoln, offered an additional section to the article on education, providing that all school books and stationery shall be furnished free to orphans and destitute children, the supplies to remain the property of the state. He thought that inasmuch as the books could be returned and used by several children in succession, it would be a matter of economy.

Delegate Ward, of Yankton, stated that he had had charge of such an arrangement at Yankton, and in five years only one child had asked for books, and they were subsequently paid for. The rental of books was the better way.

Delegate Daboll, of Hutchinson:

Hadn't we better leave something for the Legislature to do?

Delegate Mellette moved an amendment instructing the Legislature to provide for uniformity of text books, they not to be changed any oftener than once in five years.

Several delegates favored the proposition of Mr. Mellette, for the reason that they did not want to buy a new set of school books every winter.

Delegate Moody offered an amendment directing the Legislature to provide for compulsory education. Adopted.

The entire report was then adopted, and the article referred to Committee on Phraseology.

The report of the Legislative Committee was next considered. Delegate Canfield, of Lawrence County, moved that section 2 of the report be recommitted to the committee with instructions to consider the minority representation question.

The twenty-second section provoked discussion, and Delegate Moody, of Lawrence, objected to the further consideration of the report. Section 22 read as follows:

No bill, except general appropriation bills, shall be passed containing more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.

But if any subject shall be embraced in any act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, favored the section in a very strong speech, in which he arraigned the territorial executive and the acts of the Legislature. He said such proceedings were a burning shame to Dakota, and he hoped the section would be adopted, that such disgraceful conduct as that ascribed to the executive be not repeated.

Delegate Pettigrew supported the section in a convincing argument. He believed it one of the most important sections to be incorporated in the constitution. It was sure to do good, and could not possibly do harm.

Before a vote was taken, the convention adjourned to 10 o'clock Wednesday.

NINTH DAY

The convention was opened with prayer by Rev. W. J. Skillman, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Sioux Falls.

Consideration of the report of the Legislative Committee was at once resumed, beginning with section 22, forbidding the passage of bills containing more subjects than were expressed in the title.

Delegate Hand, of Yankton, moved to strike out the whole section, because it was pure legislation.

Delegate Daboll, of Hutchinson, said:

All we do here is legislation. This is a matter, however, that should go to the people.

Delegate Gamble, of Yankton:

I admit this is legislation, but any one can see the wisdom of it. We can't have anything too strong or too clear on this subject, as instance the acts of the last Legislature. We want the Legislature to remember this. It can do no harm and may do good.

The motion was lost and the section was adopted as reported by the committee.

Section 33 was adopted without question and received a flutter of applause. It read:

Any governor of this state who asks, receives or agrees to receive any bribe upon any understanding that his official opinion, judgment, or action shall be influenced thereby or who gives, offers, or promises his official action in consideration that any member of the Legislature shall give his official vote or influence on any particular side of any question or matter upon which he may be required to act in his official capacity, or who menaces any member by the threatened use of his veto power, or who offers or promises any member that he, the said governor, will appoint any particular person or persons to any office, then established or thereafter to be established, in consideration that any member shall give his official vote or influence on any matter pending or thereafter to be introduced into either house of said Legislature, or threatens any member that he, the said governor, will remove any person or persons from any office or position, with intent to in any manner influence the official action of said member, shall be punished in the manner now or that may hereafter be provided by law, and on conviction therefor shall forfeit all right to hold or exercise any office of trust or honor in this state.

There were smiles and congratulations when the section was adopted. The scenes at the last Legislature, in which Governor Ordway figured so conspicuously, were fresh in the minds of the delegates.

The report was then referred to the Committee on Phrasology.

An additional section was introduced giving the minority representation in the Legislature.

J. R. Gamble, of Yankton:

An act of omission is less reprehensible than an act of commission. This is an objectionable matter and should be left out.

Delegate Grigsby moved that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

H. J. Campbell, of Yankton:

I find that a number of the states have the same provision in their constitution (naming them).

Delegate Moody:

The provision should go to the legislative committee. I move that it be so referred. The section is very proper.

It was referred to the Legislative Committee.

Delegate Gamble, in reporting petitions back from the Legislative Committee on the subject of prohibition, said the committee had taken into consideration the subject of prohibition, and would report it all back without recommendation.

Delegate G. C. Moody:

So far as I am concerned, I have been unable to reconcile myself to the new theory of minority representation. I cannot see how minority representation can be made to work in this new state. It may be successfully operated in old states, but I fear not here. It will work the grossest injustice. It appeals to passion, and not to cool judgment. If we were settled as to immigration, or political parties, it might be made to work practically. The smaller counties would be deprived of representation. For instance, Day would have to be attached to Brown County, and as Brown County out-votes Day, Day would not be represented. I favor the adoption of my substitute of yesterday in place of section 2 as reported. It gives a minimum of forty representatives, a maximum of eighty, and a minimum of twenty senators.

Delegate Charles Sterling, of Spink:

I move the adoption of the report of the minority as a substitute for section 2. We can do nothing better than to give the minority a representation. The majority may rule—it should—but that should not preclude the minority from having representation. The plan has been tried elsewhere and found unsatisfactory only by disappointed politicians. It compels precincts to put up good men for the Legislature. Anything but minority representation is not a republican form of government.

Delegate C. L. Wood, of Pennington:

Minority representation at this time in Dakota would lead to disastrous results. The democrats I represent are in the minority, and they don't want anything of this kind. The majority must be held responsible for legislation, and should be, but by minority representation it must share the odium of mistakes of the majority. The convention should sit down upon it.

Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson:

I oppose the proposition from principle. The majority should rule alone. We fight in political campaigns for principles, not men. We should hold to the old plan. It has been said that minority representation works well. Has not the old plan been found to work well? Minority representation is an experiment.

Delegate Robert Dollard, of Bon Homme:

I favor minority representation because the minority have rights. The minority in Illinois send the ablest and best men to the Legislature. It may be said that that is because those men are sent from the democracy. That may be. (Laughter.) Minority representation has worked well wherever tried.

Delegate J. R. Gamble:

I have talked with Illinoisians, and they say minority representation is a humbug and would not carry by a popular vote. An attempt to engraft this into our constitution will make trouble. It is now a new operation in only one state.

Mr. Day, of Edmunds, moved to lay the minority amendment on the table, which prevailed, and the subject was settled for the time at least.

Continuing with the legislative report, it was moved to increase the number of senators to forty.

Delegate Moody said:

It is a humbug to suppose that a large body of legislators were less corruptible or could legislate to better advantage, than a smaller body. The reported number (fifty representatives and twenty-five senators) were enough for the State of New York, he thought.

Eli Johnson, of Hyde:

The gentleman of Lawrence (Mr. Moody) speaks the sentiments only of the people of a large town. It is not the sentiments of those in counties not thickly populated. The representatives get only three dollars a day, and we should have a large representation.

W. W. Brookings, of Minnehaha:

The upper branch of the Legislature should be kept small, even if the lower branch is large.

The amendment failed, and the section as reported was adopted.

Delegate A. B. Lucas, of Charles Mix County, offered an amendment that the assent of two-thirds of the members of both branches of the Legislature shall be secured on all appropriation bills.

Delegate Pettigrew, of Minnehaha:

That section would work great injury and is dangerous.

The amendment was tabled, and the report, as finally adopted, was referred to the Committee on Phraseology.

The majority of the Committee on Exemptions, Real and Personal, reported, referring to the laws relating to homesteads and exemptions, and prohibiting a change in laws relating to the kind and amount of personal or real property exempt from seizure and sale for the payment of debts contracted prior to the passage and publication of the act making such change.

The Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings submitted its report. It creates a state board of prison directors, to consist of five persons, to be appointed by the governor, to be confirmed by the Senate, to hold office for five years, and to have charge of state institutions and employees. Legislation is referred to the Legislature.

Delegate H. J. Campbell, of Yankton, reported from the Special Committee on Census:

That there be appointed by this convention one chief enumerator for each county in the state, who shall have the general supervision of taking the census of the state. The county enumerator shall appoint one enumerator for each township, district, ward or precinct in his county, taking care to appoint a sufficient number to ensure a speedy enumeration of all the inhabitants of his county. The returns of the enumerators are to be made in writing, giving name, age and sex, to the county enumerator, who shall collate all returns and return them to the chief enumerator. He in turn shall collate all returns from counties and place them in possession of the chairman of the committee. The enumerators are to complete their work and make returns before the 1st of November, 1883, and the chief enumerator must submit his report to the chairman of the committee before December 1, 1883. The pay of the enumerator is 3 cents for each inhabitant enumerated by him, and the county enumerator shall receive 1 cent for every five persons enumerated in their county, and the chief enumerator 1 cent for every ten persons. The chairman of the committee shall issue a certificate of the amount due each person, and the first Legislature after the adoption of the constitution shall make provisions for their payment.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Porter Warner, of Lawrence County, reported that T. G. Brown and Tom Hooker had been employed as stenographers for the convention and had already entered upon their official duties.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, offered a resolution changing the hours of meeting of the convention to 9 A. M. and 7.30 P. M. Consideration deferred.

The majority report of the Committee on County and Township Organization was called up for adoption. Discussion followed, without much progress, participated in by Delegates Gamble of Yankton, Mellette of Watertown, B. F. Campbell of Minnehaha, and Moody of Lawrence, terminating with a motion to refer the report to the Committee on Legislation.

Delegate Pettigrew:

If this report is referred to the committee we will know no more about what the convention wants than is known now. The question does not involve legislation, but merely places a limit on legislation.

The report was not referred. Delegate Pettigrew submitted an amendment prohibiting the consolidation of counties.

Delegate Moody submitted an amendment that no organized county can be divided or consolidated without the consent of the majority of voters of such county or counties.

This proposition led to discussion over the question as to how organized counties should be divided or consolidated. It seemed an insoluble problem. The section as reported by the committee provided that division and annexation and the formaton of two counties from one should be effected by the Legislature after a majority of the people interested should direct by a majority vote.

The noon recess was taken at this point, and upon reassembling, Delegate Brookings submitted a substitute for the entire report of the committee, claiming that the rock upon which the convention split was section 4, relating to the removal of county seats by a three-fifths vote, which was objectionable to many.

A delegate moved to refer the Brookings substitute to the Committee on Printing.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, stated that he was advised that a large number of delegates would leave the city on Friday, hence the work should be hurried, else the work of the convention would not be completed.

The substitute of Mr. Brookings was adopted, when Delegate Moody moved a reconsideration of the fourth section. He said that under the section as adopted it was possible to cut off a tier of townships too small to make a county, and hence would be left out of any county. He offered an amendment which provided that the Legislature might add territory to a county without the consent of the county, provided that provision be made for the debts of the territory annexed.

The section as amended was adopted.

Delegate Mellette from the Committee on Corporations other than municipal and banking, reported:

The report refers to the Legislature the origin of general laws providing for corporations. The property of corporations, except for charitable, religious and educational purposes, now existing and hereafter produced, shall be subjected to a uniform rate of taxation with other property. The state cannot become a stockholder in any corporation or assume any liabilities of any corporation, nor grant subsidies, unless such debt or liability shall be incurred or such subsidy granted in time of war for the benefit of the state. No street or passenger railway or telegraph or telephone line shall be constructed within the limits of any town without the consent of its citizens.

The Committee on Seal of the State, Coat of Arms and Design of Same submitted a report.

The coat of arms shall be a shield draped with the American Flag, depending from the beak of an eagle. In the background of the shield a range of hills and the chimney of a smelting furnace. In the center of the shield a river bearing a steamboat. On the hither bank of the river a train of cars. In the middle foreground a field of wheat and a field of corn. In the immediate foreground a white man at his plow. In the left foreground an Indian and tepees. Both white man and Indian are looking at a rift in the clouds where appears the legend, "Fear God and take your own part"—this legend to be the motto of the State of Dakota.

The report of the Committee on Public Accounts and Expenditures was taken up for adoption, and the first three sections adopted.

The report of the Committee on Name, Boundaries and Seat of Government was called up. After reading the report, the boundary lines were discussed by Delegates Gamble, of Yankton, and Moody, of Lawrence. The changing river beds and channels were discussed in all their bearings, and all the suspected weak points of the report considered. Delegate Joseph Ward, of Yankton:

Have we not jurisdiction over all that portion of Dakota that Nebraska has been trying to steal from us and which she has not succeeded in stealing?

The president.

The gentleman from Yankton propounds a question difficult to answer.

On motion of F. P. Baum, of Aurora County, the first line, to-wit: "Resolved, That the name of the proposed State of Dakota," was stricken out. The report was then adopted with slight amendments. An additional section was offered by Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, providing that no law permanently locating the seat of government shall be valid until submitted to and ratified by the people at the polls. The amendment was referred to the Committee on Seat of Government.

A substitute for section 8 of the report of the Committee on Elections and Right of Suffrage, was put upon its passage. It provided that any woman, having the qualifications of a male elector as to residence, age and citizenship, may vote at any election held solely for school purposes, and may hold any office relating to schools.

Delegate Brookings moved to amend by making it read: "And may hold any office in this state." Mr. Brookings said he could see no impropriety in making woman eligible to hold any office, although he was opposed to Woman Suffrage.

Delegate Mellette.

I think the report of the committee is all right. There is a fitness in allowing a mother to vote upon matters pertaining to the education of her children. She can do it intelligently. She has no superior in such a qualification. It should not be laughed down.

Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson.

In reporting this substitute the committee considered it but just to continue this right to woman. I am against giving women the right to vote at all elections until she shows an inclination to accept this privilege of suffrage.

Delegate Moody.

I favor woman suffrage. I am not like the gentleman from Codington (Mr Mellette), who is willing to trust his children to woman, but not himself. Give woman the ballot, let her hold office, and you raise her at once in intelligence. I know of no reason why my wife and daughter are not as able to hold office as I am, though they may not be as willing. (Laughter, and cries of "that's so.")

The substitute was then adopted.

The reports of the majority and minority of the Committee on the Rights of Married Women were called up for passage.

Delegate Brookings said the reports were both improper, inasmuch as they were wholly legislative. He moved to indefinitely postpone them. Delegate Gamble, of Yankton, supported the motion. The whole subject, he thought, should be left to the Legislature.

The motion to indefinitely postpone prevailed, and the convention then adjourned until 10 o'clock the following day.

TENTH DAY

Rev. F. P. Livingston of the Reformed Church, Sioux Falls, opened the convention with prayer.

The resolution changing the hours of daily meeting to 9 o'clock A. M., and 2 and 7:30 P. M., was adopted.

A number of prohibition petitions were presented, asking that the question be submitted to the people at the same time the constitution was voted upon. Referred.

Delegate G. C. Moody, of Lawrence, presented a report from the Committee on Judiciary, which enlisted the closest attention and the subjects it considered of the first importance in a republican government. The report contained the usual provision controlling courts.

Terms of judges of the Supreme Court were fixed as follows:

Five years for those elected at first election in the state, and at all subsequent elections, four years. The judicial districts were thus defined: First—All that portion of the state west of the Missouri River. Second—That portion lying east of the Missouri River and west of the Dakota River. Third—All that portion of the state east of the Dakota River.

The judicial circuits were arranged as follows:

First Circuit—Union, Clay, Lincoln, Turner, Hanson, Lake, Minnehaha, McCook, Miner.

Second—Yankton, Bonhomme, Charles Mix, Douglas, Hutchinson, Davison, Aurora, Brule, Buffalo and Jerauld.

Third—Brookings, Moody, Kingsbury, Clark, Hamlin, Deuel, Grant, Codington, Day, Roberts, the Wahpeton and Sisseton reservations, and all that strip of territory now included between the north line of the County of Day and the 46th parallel.

Fourth—Beadle, Hand, Hyde, Hughes, Spink, Brown, Sully, Sanborn, Potter, Edmunds, Faulk, Walworth, Campbell, McPherson, and including all that portion of the state lying north of those counties and south of the 46th parallel of north latitude, and including all such portion of such state lying between those counties and not forming a part of either.

Fifth—All that portion of the state lying west of the Missouri River; provided, that all parts of the state not included in the foregoing boundary and description of circuits, shall be attached to and form a part of the Second Circuit.

The report further provided that there shall be elected in each organized county a county judge, to be judge of the County Court, his term to be two years unless otherwise provided by law. The compensation of the judge to be fixed by law. County Courts to be courts of record that shall have jurisdiction in all matters of probate. No one shall be eligible to the office of county judge unless learned in law, and at least twenty-five years of age, and having the qualifications of an elector, and no county judge can at the same time act as an attorney at law.

The establishing of police courts and police justices, and the time of holding all courts, and the other details, are left for the Legislature to fix.

On motion of Delegate Grigsby, of Minnehaha, the reading of all reports at the time they were presented to the convention for reference to the printing committee was dispensed with.

A Committee on Enrollment composed of George H. Hand, A. B. Melville and C. W. McDonald was appointed by the president.

The report of the Committee on Impeachment was called up by Mr. Sterling, of Spink. The report was not dissimilar from that found commonly in state constitutions. The report was adopted and referred to the Committee on Phraseology.

Delegate Baum, of Aurora, called upon the report of the Committee on State, County and Municipal Indebtedness. Delegate Gamble moved to strike out the words, "except in case of public calamity," in connection with the section forbidding the state to make donations in favor of any individual, association or corporation.

Delegate Pettigrew explained that the committee intended the clause to cover such calamities as had occurred in the states by storms, etc., and thought the Legislature could be trusted in such matters.

Delegate Rudolph, of Lincoln, said he had suggested the clause to the committee and that the history of many states showed that there are times when the Legislature should be allowed to aid sufferers in calamities.

Mr. Gamble's motion prevailed and the words were stricken out.

Delegate C. J. B. Harris, of Yankton, offered an addition to section 3, prohibiting city, town, county, or other subdivisions of the state, assuming the liabilities of any individual, association or corporation. The amendment provided that the assumption of such indebtedness may be made by a vote of a majority of the electors of the municipality affected.

Delegate Moody thought that would open the doors to all sorts of robbery of the people. That the people generally were constantly being attracted by some ignis fatuus that never realized.

Mr. Harris explained that the vote must be a two-thirds vote, and the debt to be incurred could not be over five per centum of the taxable property.

Delegate Pettigrew opposed the amendment.

Delegate Brookings thought it better to go half way. That the mean ground between antagonists was always better than the extremes. He thought it mere moonshine the idea that Dakota had been kept from statehood because of county indebtedness, and that a municipality should be allowed to vote money for its own benefit if it so desired.

Delegate C. L. Wood, of Pennington, favored the amendment. He favored independent liberty to municipalities in the matter of indebtedness, and said it was an indication that the American people were suspected of bribery and bribe taking to deprive them of their liberty to control their own debts and funds. He thought it better, however, to strike out the section altogether.

Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson, said the committee had fully considered the matter in dispute and had reported a good section.

Delegate Melville, of Beadle.

I do not think my people would support the section without the amendment. I am not in favor of too much liberty, but I favor striking the whole section from the report. The people of Beadle County want the right of voting aid to any institution they desire to help.

Delegate Grigsby, of Minnehaha.

We are apt to run against opposition in the territory and in Congress both, if we do not adopt the amendment. So Sioux Falls has now an opportunity to help a railroad company to run a line in here and break up the monopoly of the lines that we already have. We must not have our hands tied in matters of this kind. We must have liberty to act. Strike out the whole section and leave it wholly to the people. They will take care of it.

Delegate H. A. Day, of Edmunds.

The people will not sustain an article which gives the minority the right to load down their property with debts. I move to lay the amendment upon the table.

The amendment was tabled.

Wood, of Pennington, moved to strike out section 3.

In a strong argument at length, J. R. Gamble, of Yankton, supported the proposition to leave the matter of voting aid to corporations in the hands of the people.

Wood, of Pennington.

Unless the amendment, which has been defeated, is incorporated, the constitution will be defeated in my county.

Pettigrew.

Colorado has a provision very like the one reported by this committee.

Moody, of Lawrence.

The difficulty is with the points made by those who are against the section reported, that it is not the business of a town or county to engage in aiding corporations. It is the business of individuals. I wouldn't go to the people of this territory without the provision there is in the section as reported.

Pettigrew, of Minnehaha.

There is no law in this territory to allow people to vote aid to railroads, yet Dakota is built over and over with railroads. Had she had a provision allowing her to do so, she would have given 5 per cent for all the railroads she has got without cost. If Sioux Falls wants a railroad and the railroad is needed, it will come without voting a debt to bring it here. If we are allowed to vote aid no railroad will come without it. The committee in Congress refused to even consider the bills, or allow their reference to subcommittees, giving people of certain counties in Dakota the privilege this amendment proposes. We must protect the people against debt.

The discussion here took great latitude and many of the delegates took part. The majority of the expression was finally in favor of the report of the committee. There was a great deal of opposition to aiding in the construction of railroads by counties and towns voting aid.

Delegate Brookings, of Minnehaha, localized upon the issue. He cited the desire of the people of Minnehaha County to vote aid to the construction of a railroad, but they could not do so because there is no law authorizing it. He thought Dakota would be stunted if she could not vote aid to railroads.

The motion to strike out section 3 was lost.

The clause, "or engage in any work of internal improvement," was stricken out.

Delegate Grigsby thought the section should be left out entirely as should all radical issues, like woman suffrage, prohibition, etc., that no one would vote against the constitution because something is left out, but they will if something objectionable is inserted.

Delegate Hand, of Yankton, asked that the section be recommitted to the committee for amendment.

Delegate Pettigrew.

It is useless to recommit, as the committee will report it back just as it is. As the section now is, this county will give it a majority of 1,000.

Delegate Day, of Edmunds.

If we incorporate this amendment desired by some, we shall be kept out of Congress. There is no reason in recommitting this section, and it should be adopted at once, and as reported.

Delegate Caulfield, of Lawrence.

It has been said that if a clause of the kind section 3 in the report provides is adopted, that it will be an impediment when offered to Congress. Instead of being an impediment it will be a recommendation. The constitution of Colorado was not presented to Congress. I am in favor, however, of the section as reported. It is well for towns and cities to guard well against indebtedness. A railroad that will not come to you without aid is not worth having. They will always want aid if you give them aid at first.

Delegate Alonzo Converse, of Sanborn, moved to recommit the section with instructions to revise, and in support of the motion consumed his limit of time. He counseled careful consideration and warned the convention against hasty action.

The motion was not voted upon, the previous question being called which cut off amendments. A parliamentary deadlock on the ruling of the president ensued, the president ruling that the motion to recommit was not an amendment, and hence was cut out by the calling for the previous question. An appeal was taken, but the president was sustained in his ruling, and the section as reported was adopted.

After the noon recess, consideration of the report of the Committee on County and Town Indebtedness was resumed, taking up the fourth section. The report was adopted and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, submitted a report from the Committee on Schedule. It was quite lengthy and was referred to the Committee on Printing without reading. The committee reported back the woman suffrage question without recommendation. The committee took occasion to say, however, that it was inadvisable to present other issues with the constitution, believing that the struggle for self-government should not be hampered with other matters than those properly involved.

Delegate H. M. Williamson, of Moody County, submitted a minority report from the Committee on Schedule, embodying a general protest against the majority report.

The committees on banking and currency, and on revenue and finance, made reports, which went at once to the printing committee.

Delegate B. F. Campbell, of Minnehaha, as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, asked for instructions on the work of the committee. There were no suggestions offered.

Delegate Brookings moved that the Committee on Finance assess the counties interested for the expenses of the convention, and held the delegates present responsible for the payment of the assessment, to be in proportion to the representation.

Delegate McDonald, chairman of the committee, asked that each delegate present pay $2 for the printing.

Delegate Moody suggested that the money be raised to pay the expenses of the convention, by a subscription paper.

Delegate Mellette, of Codington, seconded the suggestion of Delegate Moody and Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, thought that each delegate should be asked to pay $2 each for printing.

Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson, asked what the amount was that was needed.

Delegate Warner, of Lawrence, answered that all expenses were estimated at $500—$200.00 for printing and $250.00 for stenographers, the balance for incidentals.

The administrative committee made a report.

On motion of Delegate Mellette the report of the Committee on Declaration of Rights was taken up for adoption.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, offered an amendment, giving the people the right to abolish their form of government in such manner as they may think proper.

Delegate Robert Dollard and Delegate Mellette both opposed the amendment as being impolitic and unwise, the latter saying he proposed going into statehood in good faith, and if we got into it he never wanted to get out of it. He thought there should be no doubt about the object desired, and if it was to be inserted, the word "secede" is better than "abolish," as it is more clear.

Mr. Campbell said that it was not intended to "secede," nor was it intended to ever go back to territorial government.

"Then what is the necessity of the insertion of the word 'abolish,'" inquired Jones of Hutchinson.

Mr. Campbell answered that it was used by other states.

Delegate Melville, chairman of the committee reporting the section, thought the word unnecessary.

Delegate Caulfield, of Lawrence, said that a state's right democrat though he was, he did not like the word "abolish," that it was liable to misconstruction and should not be inserted. He thought there was no necessity in contemplating the use of the word "abolish" in connection with the constitution. His remarks were listened to with rapt attention.

Mr. Campbell withdrew his amendment.

The consideration of the report was resumed.

It was moved to recommit sections 6 and 7, that the questions arising as to trial by jury in all cases be settled.

Delegate Moody, of Lawrence.

It is a relic of barbarism, trial by juries, and it is a source of great injustice and corruption. I would like to abolish the whole system of grand and petit juries. It is the shield behind which rascals hide. A man who honestly believes he has a good and honest case, is always ready to waive the jury. It is a farce, the expense of maintaining grand juries. If we were now making a constitution for a state already in existence, I should favor its total abolition, but we must defer somewhat to the popular prejudice in this matter now. But let us at all events at least limit the application of the system in every way practicable.

Delegate Gamble, of Yankton.

I fully endorse the gentleman's remarks. There are many minor cases that should not have recourse to trial by jury. In a case of murder it is right to have a jury.

Delegate George H. Hand, of Yankton.

Nothing should be stricken from this that would thereby prevent a man from having a trial by jury. Both of the gentlemen who have just spoken have practiced before a court, whereby, had they themselves been on trial before the judge they would have been sent to the penitentiary. (Laughter.) It is something that belongs to the humblest citizen. It may be a shield for rascals, but it is a shield also for honest men.

Delegate A. B. Melville, of Beadle.

It may be well to recommit the sections, because they are of great importance, and it may be well to amend so that the jury may be waived, but trial by jury should be kept inviolate.

Delegate Moody.

I do not want to be understood as advocating the abolishment of the entire jury system at this time, but the grand jury system should be abolished now.

Delegate Brookings, of Minnehaha, seconded those who had spoken against the grand jury system. He would go so far as to abolish the entire jury system. The jury was first intended to stand between the people and the judge appointed by the crown, but we select our own judges. The jury system is now a relic of barbarism.

Sections 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10, relating to the jury system, were recommitted.

A discussion arose over the 14th section, which provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation therefor. The debate grew out of an amendment by J. W. Taylor, of Lincoln, adding the words, "first paid or secured," after the word "therefor." The debate was directed especially to the power of railroad companies to take property without first securing payment for it. The amendment was defeated.

Delegate Mellette, of Codington, moved that the committee to whom sections 6 and 7 had been committed be instructed to report a section allowing parties the privilege of waiving trial by jury in all criminal cases, by consent of both parties. The motion prevailed.

Delegate Moody moved to instruct the committee to report a section that the jury system be secured to all and kept inviolate, but that the Legislature may pass a law that three-fourths of a jury may return a final verdict. The motion was lost.

Delegate S. H. Elrod, of Clark, called up for adoption the report of the Committee on Exemptions, real and personal, and it was adopted with a slight amendment.

The convention then adjourned until 8 o'clock, A. M., the following day.

ELEVENTH DAY

The convention was opened with prayer by Rev. G. S. Clevenger, delegate from Brookings County, at 8 o'clock, A. M.

Delegate Hand, of Yankton, called up for adoption, the report of the Committee on Coat of Arms, State Seal and Motto.

Delegate Joseph Ward, of Yankton, a member of the committee, exhibited an oil painting of the design described in the report, and it passed through the convention and was exhibited to the delegates.

Delegate Eli Johnson, of Hyde.

I would like to have this changed so that the Indian, instead of looking at the rift in the clouds, is looking at the steamboat coming up the river with rations. (Laughter.)

Delegate Brookings suggested that the term "Trust God," better than "Fear God."

Mr. Ward said the phrase was not a theological expression, especially. That the word "fear," as used did not mean fear in the common definition of the word.

The report was adopted as it came to the convention.

The report of the Committee on Schedule was called up by H. J. Campbell, of Yankton, and placed upon its adoption.

The first four sections were adopted without question, but discussion arose over section 5, which held in statu quo, all offices of the territory until superseded under the constitution. This language was held to be ambiguous by some delegates, yet it was adopted as reported.

Section 6, relating to the time of meeting of the Legislature, was passed over for future consideration.

Delegate H. W. Williamson, of Moody County, took serious objection to the second paragraph of section 8, providing for the election of state officers on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1883. He said his county was opposed to it, and he thought the election of state officers now would make a clash between the officers elected and those of the territorial organization.

Delegate John M. Pease, of Davison, endorsed Mr. Williamson, and in behalf of the people of Davison County said the officers for the state should not be elected until Congress had ratified the constitution.

Delegate Joseph Ward, of Yankton.

No one wishes to even cast a shadow on state government until we are admitted, but it will make a good feeling and bring out a full sentiment, if we elect state officers now.

Delegate Converse, of Sanborn.

I came here fully in favor of electing state officers at the time the constitution is voted upon, but I now think it disastrous, and am firmly against it.

Delegate Brookings, of Minnehaha.

It is useless to ask Congress to admit us without officers to take charge of the state when we are admitted. If we come here with patriotism, there is no danger of trouble over the election of state officers. The officers are to be elected only for one year, and there will be no quarrel over the offices. We should have biennial elections for all state officers, and biennial sessions of the Legislature. City and town elections should be held at the same time state elections are held.

H. J. Campbell, of Yankton, replied that unless the officers could be elected by a hearty majority, he did not want an election. He then read an editorial article from the Pioneer Press, St. Paul, which commented upon the proceedings of the convention, complimented the convention upon the sense of the proposition to elect state officers, and pronounced it a business way of proceeding. He thought the people of South Dakota should not fear to assert their manhood, rights and wishes, even to the election of state officers at this time. He would oppose the proposition, however, if he believed the officers would not be elected by a good majority and perfect harmony would be maintained. If there was nothing more in this constitution than a mere petition to Congress, the Huron convention might as well have adopted the constitution, and this convention should not have been.

Delegate C. L. Wood, of Pennington.

If we were coming into statehood by an enabling act it would not be required that we elect state officers, but we are not proceeding that way, and the wise course is to elect our state officers. It is necessary that we have a state organization, and the constitution should go to Congress by the very state officers elected. There is no danger of soreheads because some one is not nominated.

Eli Johnson, of Hyde.

It is merely a question of whether or not we are here on dress parade or here under the Constitution of the United States at work.

Delegate Pettigrew.

The majority rules, and it is a question of expediency—of success. I hope that the convention will not act upon this question now. I move that the question be made the special order for 7:30 o'clock this evening.

Delegate Mellette, of Codington.

This is a matter of great importance and should be postponed. It is our implied wish to be admitted to statehood, yet we cannot be without the consent of Congress, and this question will have much to do with our success in Congress.

Delegate Moody moved an amendment that the officers be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday after Congress admits Dakota into the Union. The amendment was ruled out of order. (Possibly an error in reporting the motion, as no month or year is stated.)

Delegate F. M. Ziebach, of Bon Homme.

Nothing succeeds like success, and we cannot succeed unless we present all the provisions of the convention which authorized this assembly. This must be nonpartisan. I favor the election of state officers, two members of Congress, the Legislature, two United States Senators, and all other officers, and present them to Congress with the constitution.

Delegate Taylor, of Lincoln.

Let us dispose of this without fear. We should elect officers.

Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson.

I came here under the belief that we would have no conflict, and if we had a conflict to oppose it. I cannot see that the officers elected will conflict with territorial officers, as has been suggested. Provisions are incorporated that will prevent conflict, and I am heartily in favor of electing officers, although I am not a candidate and do not propose to be.

Delegate John M. Pease, of Davison.

Compromises surround us on every side. It is only a matter of politics, of expediency. We have the right but dare not assert it.

Delegate Brookings.

If it is a matter of expediency, it is expedient that we elect the officers, and elect them now.

Delegate Alonzo Converse, of Sanborn.

There has been a great deal said about what Congress will do about admitting us. For my part I came here to adopt a constitution for the ratification of the people of Dakota. We should frame a document for Dakota, not for Congress.

Delegate J. R. Gamble, of Yankton.

All this can be summed down to this question,—“Can we be admitted better without state officers?” It is a matter of expediency only.

It was said by a delegate that many of the delegates wanted to leave the city Saturday evening for their homes, not to return, upon which announcement Mr. Moody said that the delegates were in duty bound to remain until the work was completed, as they were to come here in the first place, and not a man who could possibly remain would leave who came actuated by patriotism.

“Did we come here to have a good time, to attend the circus, or did we come here to perform a high duty?” pleadingly inquired B. G. Caulfield, of Lawrence. “I hope,” he continued, “that no one will run away until we are done with the work before us.” He said “he doubted the propriety of the election of state officers now, and hoped the delegates would remain until that and all other questions were fully settled.”

The motion of Mr. Pettigrew to postpone the consideration of section 8 to 7.30 this evening, prevailed, and the convention agreed to take up the special order of the hour, prohibition. The gallery of the hall was filled with ladies and gentlemen, citizens of Sioux Falls and other points.

The special order was waived for the reception of the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Preamble, which was presented by G. C. Moody. The committee also presented some remarks with the preamble, containing the arguments that will be laid before Congress. The report is as follows:

It is clear that the United States Government in the treaty of cession by France of the Province of Louisiana of which this territory then formed a part, agreed as a consideration of such cession that it would admit and incorporate into the Union of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution, the inhabitants of the territory and permit them to enjoy all the rights, advantages and immunities of the citizens of the United States. Under the conditions of this cession, and in accordance with the views of some of the ablest public men of this country, several states have already been admitted to the Union after sharp discussion of the effect of the treaty.

By the compact contained in the Ordinance of Congress of July 13, 1787, and the act and deed of cession of Virginia, it was expressly agreed as among the rights and privileges thereby secured to the inhabitants of the territory northwest of the River Ohio, that said territory should be divided into states of reasonable areas, and that whenever any of said states should have 60,000 free inhabitants therein, such state should be admitted by its delegate into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever, and should be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and state government, upon condition that such constitution and government be republican, and conform to the principles of such Ordinance.

By four successive acts of Congress, to-wit, June 28, 1834, April 30, 1835, June 12, 1838, and March 3, 1840—all and singular, the rights, privileges and advantages granted and secured to the people of the territory northwest of the River Ohio, by the articles of the compact contained in the Ordinance of July 13, 1787, were extended and secured to the inhabitants of Dakota in the territory east of the Missouri and west of the White Elk River, and neither of said acts has ever been repealed either in express terms or by implication.

These guaranties have been carried into partial effect by the admission of five states east of the Missouri River, and two states west of that river, with areas reasonable in extent. The Territory of Dakota south of the 40th parallel of north latitude, with an area of eighty thousand square miles and larger in extent than either of these states, save one, now has a population of at least three hundred thousand inhabitants according to the information of the best informed among them, and beyond all doubt has in numbers an excess of the requirement for two members of Congress under the present ratio, as they were apportioned by the last Congress.

The Constitution of the United States cannot and does not contemplate that the inhabitants of the territory shall be kept out of the Union and in a state of dependency and vassalage for an indefinite time. On the contrary, it is conceded by all thoughtful men that under it, without further guaranty, whenever the inhabitants of a territory, having a sufficient number of inhabitants to insure a stable government, and have clothed themselves with the paraphernalia of independent power, with a constitution republican in form, they are of right entitled to admission into the union of states, and such right can be denied only upon the ground that no power exists to enforce it.

Your committee cannot but hope to outline the impregnable arguments upon which the people can place their right to recognition. They have prepared and herewith submit a preamble truly setting forth the claim of this people to enjoy the blessings of self-government, and we recommend it to be substituted for the preamble reported by the committee on preamble to the constitution,—

We, the people of Dakota, through our representatives in convention assembled, invoking the guaranties of the Federal Constitution and relying upon the pledged faith of Congress in extending to the inhabitants of this portion of the territory of the United States, the rights, privileges, and immunities secured to the people of the territory northwest of the River Ohio by the Ordinance of 1787, including the right to form for ourselves a state constitution and government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, such right being for them secured by the condition of the cession from France of the Province of Louisiana—having complied with all the conditions necessary to admission; manifesting profound reverence for the Supreme Ruler of the Universe; in order to form a more perfect and independent government, establish justice, insure tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and preserve to ourselves and to our posterity, the blessings of liberty, do ordain and establish this constitution for the State of Dakota.

When the report of the committee having in charge the question of prohibition was read (it made no recommendation), Delegate J. M. Pease, of Davison, moved a substitute, offering a plan of submitting separately the question of prohibition, at the same time the constitution is submitted for ratification, by means of a separate ballot and ballot-box.

It was moved the substitute be laid upon the table, upon which motion the ayes and noes were demanded. The motion to table was lost.

Delegate Monzo Converse, of Sanborn.

It will aid the vote on the constitution, and it is right that we let the people vote upon the matter.

Delegate George H. Hand, of Yankton.

I shall vote against this question, because it will never become a part of the constitution if it carries.

John Hayes, delegate from Hamlin.

I am in favor of prohibition just so far as the report of the committee has reported, and no farther.

The substitute was defeated, and the report of the committee was taken up and considered by sections.

Delegate W. A. Lichtenwallner, of Hughes, opposed the proposition to submit prohibition to a vote, because, first, he opposed prohibition and secondly, because it had no place in the constitution, but belonged to the statutes of the state.

"Prohibition does not prohibit," said he. "Why," he continued, "I've never had any trouble getting liquor in a prohibition state when I wanted it." (Laughter.)

Delegate G. S. Clevenger, of Brookings.

There is a great indifference in some localities in regard to the constitution, and I think it will help the main issue before us if we submit the proposition to a vote with the constitution. It will bring out a large vote, and it is not only a wise thing to do but the right thing to do. There is no one here wise enough to forecast the result if the question is submitted to a vote. The people of Dakota are largely awakened on the subject.

Delegate Joseph Ward, of Yankton.

I do not think this is the time to submit this to the people with or apart from the constitution. As much as I am in favor of prohibition, I must say I think it will endanger our chances of statehood. For the sake of temperance and statehood prohibition itself, I think this is not the time to bring up the issue. To press it now is to take away our hopes of success and weaken the cause of temperance. I think a large proportion of the votes will go against the constitution and the issue of temperance. When we battle for temperance we must stand on even ground. It is only a matter of good, hard sense.

Delegate H. J. Campbell, of Yankton.

I desire to meet the issue fairly. As I understand it, if we adopt the report and it carries at the polls, it becomes a part of the constitution and I oppose it. The caption "to be separately submitted," amounts to nothing. I am opposed to either submitting the issue to a vote or incorporating prohibition in the constitution. It was decided by a body of representative prohibitionists at Yankton, before the Huron convention was held, in consultation with eminent advocates of statehood, that it was inadvisable to confuse the temperance issue and statehood; that these prohibition representatives would support the constitution without the prohibition issue being submitted.

Mr. Campbell offered an amendment to be incorporated into the constitution giving a majority of the people power to petition the Legislature for, and making it incumbent upon the Legislature to pass prohibition or other laws, upon the request of such majority.

Delegate Eli Johnson, of Hyde, opposed placing prohibition before the people now, in humorous language and expression, warning the advocates of the issue against inviting the defeat of the constitution by the money of the brewers.

Delegate John M. Pease, of Davison, urged the sense of the proposition to vote upon prohibition as a matter of right and politics. The ladies in the gallery gave him a round of applause when he said the temperance people of the territory must be in the ascendancy if one judged from the way the opponents were fighting shy of the issue, and a bouquet was sent down to him.

Delegate John Knox, of Faulk, warned the temperance people against dallying and urged the submission of the issue. He hoped the desire of those who had petitioned the convention would be heeded.

A. S. Jones, of Hutchinson.

Gentlemen have said they could see no reason why the question should not be submitted with the constitution. They lose sight of honor. We are in honor bound not to have anything to do with any other issue than those belonging to a complete constitution. The people of Hutchinson County would defeat both the constitution and prohibition if they were submitted together. It has been repeated that the people desire prohibition submitted. I deny it, for they all understand; in the call for the convention it was understood that the issue of temperance would not be raised. It has been raised by those who want to defeat the constitution. I desire that this movement for statehood should be successful, but if we submit it this issue it will not be successful.

Delegate Brooks, of Yankton.

Since it has been understood that the work of this convention be nonpartisan, and that prohibition is partisan, would it not absolve the compacts which bring this convention together, to take up the issue.

Mr. Knox, of Faulk.

The gentlemen from Yankton came here instructed, and hence their expressions were of no more weight than those of individuals. I do not propose to bow down before individual sentiment.

Mr. Knox received a bouquet from the gallery.

Alonzo Converse, of Sanborn, said he did not come with instructions one way or the other, but he thought the people of his county sufficiently intelligent to vote for or against prohibition. He would leave the issue with them, and favored submission. (There was vigorous applause from the gallery as he proceeded), saying he did not recognize the power of the brewers, but thought we should go right ahead in the discharge of duty in the light of right. He could not see anything in the preliminary work of any convention, of which the present was an outgrowth, precluding the submission of the subject with the constitution. It would not be a partisan issue, since the prohibition party was made up of both political parties. He compared the issue to a cyclone, and thought the only way to get past it was by meeting it at the polls.

After the noon recess the discussion of prohibition was resumed.

Delegate Brookings, of Minnehaha, said he favored temperance, but he did not favor prohibition. The business men were largely against prohibition, and would defeat the constitution, he thought, if the proposition was made a part of it in any way. The temperance people who have been so energetic of late on prohibition, never took the trouble to close saloons on holidays. His native state, Maine, had prohibition, yet the liquor traffic was running wild. A good regulating liquor law was better than prohibition. While he thought it would be voted down two to one, he favored submitting it to the people to get out a full vote. He thought the ladies should keep their bouquets to decorate the grave of their cause after the election in November.

Delegate F. B. Foster, of Hanson.

I am a prohibitionist from the ground up, but I am against submitting the matter to the people now. I move to strike out the word "sacramental," in connection with the manufacture.

Delegate C. L. Wood, of Pennington, said he came to the convention with the understanding that nothing would be done except to adopt a constitution upon which to be admitted to statehood, and to keep out everything that would divide the parties or the people. The call for the convention was devoid of anything that would lead to anything of the kind that had arisen. The question will break the compact of the convention, and has no place in the constitution. As a democrat, representing a republican constituency, he would not have come here had he supposed prohibition or any outside measure would have been brought up in this manner. He warned the convention against being carried off its feet. "I am neither a drunkard, nor a rum seller," he said.

"But you're a democrat," remarked a delegate.

"You're right, and I always expect to be," retorted Mr. Wood.

Delegate A. B. Melville, of Beadle.

I would rather do the right amid the frowns of the world, than do the wrong and receive all your bouquets and smiles. When I came here I thought I might vote for submitting the issue, but since I see it will split us, and that it will be breaking faith with the democrats to do so, I would not submit it. We are here to adopt a state constitution without any new issues or doctrines, and when that is accomplished to present it to the people. I am sorry that the temperance people should force this issue now. They say it is fair. It is not. We were not sent here to consider the temperance question, and it is not fair to break faith with our constituency, and do so. I hope no one, for the mere sake of pandering to public clamor to present the issue, will support this measure. We should avoid every issue upon which we are liable to split.

Delegate Monzo Converse, of Sanborn.

I defy anyone to say I have sprung party politics, or to say whether I am a democrat or republican. I have not implied, as I have been charged with, that the republican was a party of prohibition. There can be no line drawn between political parties on the prohibition question. I favor the submission of the question because it will bring out a full vote.

Delegate A. S. Jones, of Hutchinson, said he had been accused of misrepresenting his constituency, as being ignorant. He represented an intelligent community, but they did not want to vote upon prohibition with the constitution. It was an entirely separate measure, and he was against any measure that made the constitution secondary. When the proper time comes he would favor submitting the issue, but it was not now.

Delegate R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha.

I have heard a great deal said about a compact. I know of no compact, and went into this convention free to act, and if there is a compact I repudiate it. I don't care what has been bargained away at Huron, Yankton, or elsewhere, we are free to act here. The prohibitionists here ask as little as they could ask, and I favor submitting the issue, although I oppose it, because it means free whisky. Let the people have a voice, however, to express their opinion. It is not a question of whether or not this constitution will be ratified. It can be submitted entirely separate and alone. We dare not deny the people a right to speak upon this subject and express themselves fully.

Delegate Grigsby, of Minnehaha.

This is not a question of the merits of prohibition. It is a question of policy of submitting the issue as collateral to the constitution. If I was a liquor man I would organize a fight against the issue that would not stop at the polls, but would go to Congress. The anti-prohibitionists are united, and they will fight it in Congress, and how could we meet such a fight? How would a republican people with prohibition, fare with a democratic Congress? We would be defeated. Money and whisky are both used freely in Congress. We want a constitution that will not only be ratified by the people of Dakota, but recognized by Congress also, and if I was a prohibitionist I would not favor submitting the issue with the constitution. The prohibition issue is a fight between the liquor men and the temperance people, and has no place in the issue for statehood. It is a scheme to defeat admission to statehood. (Bouquets.)

Delegate Ely Johnson, of Hyde.

If there was a compact that conflicts with submitting this question, it was wrong, and it is right to break a wrong compact.

Delegate Robert Dollard, of Bon Homme.

I am in favor of giving the people a constitutional clause on prohibition, and am willing to let them vote upon the question of prohibition, but not with the constitution as it is now. There was a solemn compact entered into by the Huron convention against having to do with temperance now. Why didn't these people raise the issue before this time? It looks to me as though we had been holding out false lights to attract the people, if we act on this matter now. The prohibitory people have nothing to lose. Those wanting statehood have everything at stake.

Delegate G. C. Moody, of Lawrence.

I have kept silence for the purpose of being instructed. I usually come to a conclusion without difficulty, but this is the most difficult question I've had to deal with so far, in the convention. The people are expected to have opinions and to act upon them, but this is a new question. The liquor traffic is a peculiar one, and it is held by many that it is proper to absolutely prohibit it. I have thought the question should go before the people before being dealt with in organic law. If I was here preparing a constitution for a state already admitted to the Union, I would not hesitate to cast my vote to submit prohibition to the people. But we are acting outside of law. No act of law has authorized these proceedings, and we must so act that our work does not end as idle winds. I ask my temperance friends what there is to prevent ballot-box stuffing by the liquor element? Nothing. The question will be defeated, and your temperance cause will receive a blow you will not recover from for years. I care not for the liquor power. It is not my friend. But wait, I ask, until we are a state before you push your issue. That is the only way by which you can reap any benefit from this convention. It will be the merest expression of opinion to submit the cause of prohibition now. Do not engender strife. To submit the question now is to invite defeat.

(Bouquets from the gallery, which Mr. Moody presented to Mr. Caulfield, saying: "I got up to earn bouquets for my friend here, who is a ladies' man." The ladies' man was applauded.)

Delegate J. R. Gamble, of Yankton.

The proposition that there is nothing to prevent the defeat of the question if presented now is unanswerable, for the reasons the gentleman (Mr. Moody) has given. We want the constitution pure and simple. We ought not to get a question over which there is a struggle into our constitution. If the question is to be submitted in any way we might as well incorporate it in our constitution first as last. These issues will not be parallel. It will be a question of prohibition and anti-prohibition, and the struggle will enter into the election of all officers. Let us have a straight constitution. I expect the Jumbo sitting up in the north part of the territory today, is glad that we have up an issue that is liable to divide us.

Delegate A. C. Mellette, of Codington.

I have so far preferred to listen and not talk. I must say that the evil of intemperance is one of the greatest questions now before our law-making powers. I will not dodge the issue. I never dodge. I want to act consistently, and that I shall do to the best of my judgment. I thought I was in favor of submitting the question upon a separate ballot, believing I could so express myself upon self-government, and also upon the liquor traffic at the same poll. The matter has, however, come down to incorporating it in the constitution. It comes up as a codicil which is about the same thing as placing it in the constitution, except that it will be in an abstract form and in the nature of another constitution or a supplement to the original. It is an issue that resolves into this question, Which is the paramount issue, prohibition or statehood? What is to be gained if you put it in the constitution? The very first Legislature can practically annul it. It, after all, goes back to the Legislature, and it may as well go there at first. If we are to meet the issue here, let us put it right into the constitution and meet it fairly. Unless we can agree now, we had as well adjourn at this very moment. I cannot agree to override these democrats who object to this mode of proceeding. They command and deserve our respect.

Delegate Hand, of Yankton.

The paramount issue before these people is self-government. All else sinks into utter insignificance. This territory is in the hands of as an unscrupulous a set of scoundrels as ever disgraced a people, and I came here to help rid you of the incubus. If you had seen what I saw at Yankton last winter, you would be willing to throw all else behind you for self-government. Prohibition, female suffrage, and other issues should be laid aside for statehood. I cannot consent to travel with any such issue as this. If it would save a human life or even dry a tear it would do to incorporate prohibition in our constitution, but if you vote upon it as suggested, it is but a straw. We should not jeopardize our constitution by incorporating this matter into it.

Delegate J. E. Whiting, of Sanborn, said he wanted to put himself on record as being willing to put before the people anything the people demand. He favored submission, and thought no good argument had been urged against it. He said we denounced Congress because we were refused statehood on the ground of expediency, and yet the convention proposed to refuse prohibitionists their rights upon the ground of expediency. (A shower of bouquets rained down from the gallery.)

Delegate J. W. Taylor, of Lincoln.

The people of the county I have the honor to represent are willing to wait for prohibition until we have a state.

Delegate Brookings said that it was not fairly in the interest of temperance to submit the question now. That it would be defeated, although he would vote for submitting.

Delegate James A. Ward, of Hughes, said he was opposed to submitting the question to a vote with the constitution, as he was sent here to frame a constitution that would be ratified, and that would secure statehood, and not one that would be defeated. He thought it highly improper to have anything to do with the issue in connection with the constitution.

Delegate Mellette said he had no doubt the convention would like to hear from the president on the subject at issue.

There were cries for Mr. Tripp, who finally called Mr. Mellette to the chair, and addressed the convention with a very strong argument against submitting the question with the constitution. He remarked among several expressions:

I regret that this question has come before the convention—regret it because the first harsh word yet spoken was uttered here today in this discussion. I regret it sincerely and deeply. This is but the excitement of the moment, however, and I believe that the same candor which has characterized this convention will prevail hereafter. I am a temperance man, and never drank a drop of liquor in my life. You cannot dodge this issue. I am glad that I have an opportunity of showing that I will not dodge it. I deprecate the wrongs of the liquor traffic, but I am not in favor of incorporating prohibition in the constitution. You all came here to adopt a constitution, one that would please your constituency, and one that would not be relegated by the people. There is no expediency or policy in this matter. You are for or against prohibition. I am opposed to this proposition going into the constitution. Throw away the cowardly word "expediency," and assert your manhood. Vote for or against prohibition. But keep the issue out of the constitution. Let the question go to the Legislature for legislation. I would rather be right, as has been said, than president of the United States. (Prolonged applause.)

The previous question was called at 4.40 P. M., and the ayes and noes were demanded upon the vote. The vote resulted, ayes 37, noes 62, as follows:

Ayes—Allen of Moody County, Akin, Baum, Bronson, Brookings, Clevenger, Callahan, Cort, Converse, Cheever, Elred, Eakin, Foster of Spink, Gunderson, Hayes, Knox, Lane, Lucas, Lothian, Lawrence, Lewis, Mitchell, McDonald of Jerauld, Macdonald of Kingsbury, Mallahan, Pease, Peek, Qualey, Scheffler, Sherwood, Smith, Sherman, Sterling, Williamson, Wellman, Whalen, Whiting—37.

Noes—Allen of Turner, Baker, Brayton, Boynton, Bippus, Brooks of McCook, Brooks of Yankton, Bertelson, Chapman, Caulfield, Conklin, Campbell of Minnehaha, Campbell of Yankton, Dollard, Duncan, Dawson, Day, Daboll, Edwards, Foster of Hanson, Gatchell, Gifford, Gamble, Howell, Herman, Hunt, Hand, Harris, Johnson of Hyde, Jones, Kellam, Knight, Keith, Lichtenwallner, Lovering, Lake, Melville, McCoy, Mellette, Moulton, Monaghan, Miller, Moody, Pierce, Rudolph, Rutan, Schwindt, Schlingen, Sill, Taylor, Thorne, Tripp, VanVelsor, Whitesides, Winter, Ward of Hughes, Ward of Yankton, Warner, Wheelock of Lincoln, Wood, Westover, Zielbach—62.

Delegates Grigsby and Pettigrew were paired.

On motion of Delegate Brookings, all further reports of the Committee on Prohibition were indefinitely postponed, and the convention adjourned to 7.30 P. M., but as the hall had been promised for social purposes, no evening session was held, and the president announced that the convention would meet at 8 o'clock the next morning.

TWELFTH DAY

The convention was called to order by the president and prayer was offered by Rev. Joseph Ward, of Yankton, following which the journal was read.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, called up for further consideration the report of the Committee on Schedule, beginning with section eight, and which went over as a special order from the previous day. Section eight involved the question of electing state and other officers, over which so much interest was evinced during the previous morning hour.

It resolved itself into the question whether Congress would look with greater favor upon the constitution if a full complement of state officers were presented with the constitution.

Delegate W. M. Pierce, of Codington.

If it is a nonpartisan move we can do nothing else than elect officers at the same time that the constitution is submitted, if it is right that we should.

Delegate B. G. Caulfield, of Lawrence.

We of the Black Hills are and have been anxious for statehood, for the reason that we believe it will advance the interests of not only our community, but the whole state. We are cut off from our brethren in other parts of the territory because we have no railroad facilities. I believe statehood will advance those interests. We have one of the finest mining and agricultural countries in the world, and we want it developed, yet we are not selfish. I am for the admission of the territory to statehood, if a democrat never holds an office. I would rather get in now with no democrats in office, than wait and hold all the offices. But I am compelled to differ with some of my friends here. I give you all credit for being honest in your zeal and patriotism in this work, but I fear you will make a mistake if you adopt this clause and elect officers. Members of Congress are jealous of the manner in which they are elected, and they want every one to go there elected in the same way. I have seen men elected in a more regular way than we could hope to elect, hanging around Congress with a certificate of election in their pockets, and they were not admitted to seats. When we send members to Congress we want them to have clean and clear certificates. Alaska, two years ago, elected by a convention like this, a delegate to Congress, and they laughed and scoffed at him, until he was driven finally from the floor as not being entitled to it. Mr. Pettigrew had to go and beg of the speaker, to let him have all the courtesies of the floor. We don't want to send a member there who will have to sit in the gallery and peep through the glass door at the seat his heart longs for. (Laughter.) Let us go down to Washington with only one constitution, and say it is republican in form, and that we have complied with all requirements, and they are bound under oath to admit us to statehood. Men have hung around Congress for years and years with certificates like those we would issue, and they were not admitted nor given their salary. If I could be made to think it advisable, I would grab at and grasp at the proposition to elect officers, but I cannot. I believe we have the right to do so, but I don't believe we can make others believe it, not even the republicans. The republicans of New England are not in favor of our admission anyway, because they fear our power. They see their power waning, financially, and they want to keep us down.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton.

I have been greatly edified and much instructed by the gentleman's (Mr. Caulfield's) description of the demoralizing effect in electing members to Congress. I want to ask him if he has any doubt about our right to proceed by electing officers.

Mr. Caulfield. "I have no doubt we have the right."

Mr. Campbell. "Then what window will our Congressional Committee peep through into Congress?"

Mr. Caulfield. "The same window our members of Congress will peep through."

Mr. Campbell. "Then, as the Scotch proverb puts it, 'Deliver us from our friends.' If we go to Congress fearing we have no rights, and go humbly and say, 'Please admit us for we believe we have a right to admission. That is, we think we have a right—we are not sure but we think so—and we would, that is we think so, like to be admitted.' We must demand it as a right we are positive of, and produce our proof."

Delegate Grigsby, of Minnehaha.

I cannot see how we would be in any worse plight if we back up our constitution with state officers and congressmen and senators, than we would otherwise be, even if the representatives and senators are not admitted. Our constitution would go there more largely backed by the people if we elect officers. Then, if we present only the constitution at the polls, the vote will be weaker than if we elect officers.

Delegate C. L. Wood, of Pennington.

My democratic friend from Lawrence County (Mr. Caulfield), reasons from false premises. He assumes that our congressional officers will go to Congress and demand their seats at once. He is mistaken. A section of the report provides that the officers shall act only after we have been admitted. A man who opposes a plan ought to suggest a better one. We don't propose to send a man down to Washington to demand a seat. We should not be afraid of being laughed at. We must elect these officers to complete the organization of a full state government.

Delegate Pettigrew, of Minnehaha.

If we elect our state officers it seems to me we come in conflict with the territorial officers at once. It is suggested that we elect senators. Who will sign their certificates of election? The governor, of course, and then we come into conflict at once with the territorial officers. The great papers will not endorse us if we do this. They will say it is revolutionary, as they have already said, and our whole movement will be laughed to scorn. If we propose to elect our officers as has been suggested, we must abandon our claims of right. I had some experience as a member of the Congressional Committee on Territories on matters of this kind. Alaska presented a delegate elected in this unauthorized way and he was laughed at. I was the only member of the committee who supported his admission. I am in favor of inserting in this section, that this election shall occur in the first year after we have been admitted by Congress. A committee can assert our rights and not be impugned by the assertion that they have selfish interests. The officers elected could not. My friend from Lawrence, Mr. Caulfield, being an ex-member of Congress, would be admitted to the floor as a member of the committee to help through our effort to statehood. But if he went as an elected officer he would be excluded, as having a personal interest in the issue, the rules of the House excluding any ex-member who is working for an issue pending, in which he has an interest personally. Now, I think he should be sent there as one of the committee.

Mr. Caulfield.

No, that is not the arrangement. You proposed that we both go as a committee, and go together. (There was a roar of laughter.)

Delegate Moody, of Lawrence, moved to amend the section, so that the officers shall be elected on the first Monday after the first Tuesday following admission into the Union. In presenting the amendment he ridiculed the idea of electing officers before Dakota is made a state. He recalled the rascality that has gone rampant over the territory, and deprecated the fact that the people of the territory were placed in the unfortunate situation they were in. He thought a body of men who had shown so much good sense as had been shown by the delegates assembled should not make the mistake of taking the step proposed.

On motion of H. A. Day, of Edmunds, Mr. C. H. Winsor, secretary of the convention, was called upon to express his views. Mr. Winsor said it would, in his opinion, be mere child's play to present the constitution to Congress without the full machinery of statehood being placed in motion. He favored the election of a full complement of officers. It would excite the ridicule of the press as well as Congress to go to Congress without state officers elected. Yet he did not fear ridicule as much as the evasion of right and duty. If the committee to Congress will not meet with ridicule, the officers to be elected and the members and legislators to Congress will escape ridicule as well. The charge of selfishness will come up as readily and strongly without as with officers. It will be a just criticism that will be passed upon a failure to elect officers. To fail to choose officers is to acknowledge weakness. If we have no right to elect officers, and it is not consistent and right, it is not right to meet here. (Applause.)

Ely Johnson, of Hyde, asked that the president be called upon to speak his views upon the subject. President Tripp was then called for, and, asking Mr. Johnson to occupy the chair, he addressed the convention, saying that he had no doubt that every delegate present desired to adopt the best methods. The only question he discussed was the propriety of electing officers. He would go on with the work whether officers were elected or not, but he feared no sneer at Washington if officers were elected and sent. There could be no charge made and sustained of a desire to secede because officers are elected before statehood is secured. The senators and representatives elected could knock at the door of Congress for admission with the committee sent there. He feared no criticism because the full machinery of statehood was placed in motion by the selecting of officers. He gave the lie to all these aspersions which had been cast by men outside the convention and by the press, upon the patriotism and good intentions of the gentleman from Yankton, Mr. Campbell, in advocating so zealously the election of officers.

The president was enthusiastically applauded.

Delegate Mellette.

It has been said we have no law for sitting here and proceeding as is proposed to proceed. I fail to see any distinction under the law between the proceedings of this convention as they have been and as they will be if we declare to elect officers. We have a legal right to assemble here in convention, and we have a legal right to elect officers as is proposed. Objection has been offered to sending officers to Congress until certified ones can be sent. What if we had no corn upon which to feed them? Why, we must send them ratted upon bran. It should be provided in the section that the officers cannot assume official power or have pay, until we are admitted into the union of states, and their election has been ratified. It is not proposed that this convention shall select officers. The convention is to place the selection of officers before the people, the source of all power. We should act under those rights that have been so eloquently stated by the committee reporting the preamble to our constitution, and which asserts that we have a right to form a constitution and adopt a form of state government. If we have the right to construct an engine and place the fuel in a box, have we not a right to construct the engineer and place him in charge of the engine, ready, when Congress shall have applied the torch, to start the machinery? If we hope to escape criticism we are moving on false premises. We have the right to do so, and we should assert it by electing officers, ready when we are given statehood, to take immediate charge of the state. There is no politics in the move. I would rather be represented by democrats throughout than not be represented at all.

Delegate Robert Dollard, of Bon Homme.

It has been said by a delegates that if we elect officers the ballot box will be stuffed. Now, as a delegate who was elected at just such an election as will be held to select officers, he is estopped from such a charge. Oregon gave us a precedent for proceeding as it is proposed and electing state officers. If we have authority, the question is, shall we proceed? I came here with no pet views as to how we should come into the possession of a state government. I came determined to abide by the wisdom of the convention. The committee have reported in favor of state officers being elected now, and I am in favor of adopting the report of the committee. We are much in the position of the children of Israel who paused on the banks of the river in sight of the promised land. We have constructed the bridge; now shall we cross upon it?

Delegate C. W. McDonald, of Jerauld.

It is useless to elect officers now. No taxes can be collected and no act performed by them, and the consequence will be we will have to have two elections.

Delegate Thomas Sterling, of Spink.

There are two grounds we can stand upon—doubtful and safe. If we elect officers we stand upon doubtful ground. We cannot afford to adopt doubtful measures. There should be unanimity. We have considered what Congress would think of the election of officers, but we have not considered what the people of South Dakota would think of it. We should consider that. We have ignored prohibition petitions, and yet we propose to admit the election of officers when the prohibitionists are against it. I beg of the convention to think before incorporating a feature obnoxious to the masses.

At the afternoon session the discussion over the question of electing officers was resumed.

Delegate Gamble, of Yankton, said the issue was not a party issue, and in electing state officers there should be a division of the offices between the democrats and republicans, and announced that he would offer an amendment later to that effect. He moved to postpone the question until Monday morning.

Delegate Brookings said that since hearing of the overthrow of one of the most corrupt monopolies that ever existed, he could afford to remain out of statehood a year longer than he felt he could before, but he hoped it would be decided to elect officers, as it surely would do good, and could possibly do no harm.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, cited a number of states that had proceeded to statehood by first electing state officers, as proposed in the section under discussion, and moved to lay on the table the motion of Mr. Gamble to postpone.

The motion of Mr. Gamble was tabled.

Delegate Melville, of Beadle.

No man is more anxious than I to proceed with discretion in this matter. I am in favor of adopting a constitution and then carrying out its provisions by electing officers. We are here to assert the right of self-government, and if we are qualified to adopt a state constitution we are competent to elect officers and carry out the constitution. It is our duty, and the man who shirks that duty is not an honorable man. Drop party matters, selfish ideas, and then your work will amount to something. Let us elect officers—officers, not party men, but true Dakotans.

Delegate Moody, of Lawrence, opposed the question and spoke against the citation of the precedents of other states as quoted by Mr. Campbell. He pronounced elections of the kind mere shams. He avowed his fidelity to all the proceedings of the convention, but admonished the delegates to remember that they were only a small proportion of the people of Dakota.

A recess of ten minutes was taken on motion of Delegate Joseph Ward, of Yankton.

After the recess, Delegate Abe Boynton, of Lincoln, spoke of the election of officers question from a democratic standpoint. He said he was the oldest member of the Democratic Territorial Central Committee. He had been accused by members of the committee as being made a republican tool by working to get a republican territory into the Union. As for himself he did not want any office. He had had enough glory in it already, at his own expense, but he favored the election of officers now. It was right and would help out the vote on the constitution to elect officers now. The campaign which it would inaugurate would do good.

Delegate Caulfield acknowledged that the issue had perplexed him a great deal. There were two strong sides to it, but he could not see that it would do any good to elect officers.

Delegate Chauncey L. Wood, of Pennington.

I will never vote to put off the election of officers. I would rather favor leaving it to Congress altogether. The idea is all wrong that we should put it off. We can't afford to. If we are not to elect officers at the time we ratify the constitution, let us put it off, and let Congress settle it. We have no Congress so mean as to override the will of the people. Before we put off this matter, think of it. I am prepared to vote on the matter as reported by the committee. I would rather vote to not submit the question at all if we do not accept the proposition as submitted by the committee.

Delegate P. E. Knox, of Faulk.

If we want this constitution adopted we had better be a little careful and go a little slow. It has been said that there is no respectable loyalty that would not lead a man to support this. There is no loyalty about the matter. It is not a loyal question. What do these thousands of immigrants coming here every day know of the people here and those who are here in this convention? To whom do they owe loyalty? We should present an article that will be free from everything of this kind. This convention voted down a question on yesterday which arose above all others before this convention. It was voted down as a doubtful question. This is a question of more doubt. It is very doubtful, exceedingly so. I am afraid it will bury the whole constitution and bury it deep.

Delegate Elrod, of Clark.

I think an election on the 7th of November will be a little too previous for state offices. I think we can agree upon a later day, and that it will be better to do so. I think it will be wise, also, to divide the offices, politically. It may bring out a large vote and be better than to elect state officers in November.

Delegate H. J. Campbell, of Yankton, moved to lay Mr. Moody's motion on the table, upon which the ayes and noes were demanded. The vote resulted, ayes 42, noes 40. So the motion to lay on the table prevailed.

Delegate S. M. Daboll, of Hutchinson, arose to explain why he did not vote. He said: "This matter has been magnified until it surpasses my comprehension."

Delegate Mellette, of Codrington, offered an amendment to section 8, providing the officers elected should not assume control of their offices, nor receive or be entitled to pay, until after Congress shall have ratified their election and the constitution adopted.

The amendment was finally withdrawn, that Delegate J. R. Gamble, of Yankton, might offer an amendment requiring the election of officers on December 20, 1883.

Delegate Moody moved to amend by inserting June instead of December.

A general discussion followed, during which Mr. Mellette moved to commit the section to a special committee of three, consisting of Campbell of Yankton, Moody of Lawrence, and Pettigrew of Minnehaha.

Delegate C. C. Sherwood, of Clark, counseled the convention to be less passionate, to refrain from words and actions liable to stir up ill-feeling, and to vote at once upon the question, for at this juncture the debate grew oppressively warm.

Two or three delegates, against electing officers, displayed more than ordinary zeal and used extraordinary language, reflecting in one or two instances upon the motives of those who favored the proposition. The president's rulings were once or twice questioned with questionable propriety, and conditions were growing very intense when the president called upon the convention to proceed more dispassionately.

Delegate Caulfield, of Lawrence, moved to strike out the latter clause of the eighth section, which struck out the whole question. The motion was defeated by 49 noes to 31 ayes.

It was then moved that the section be recommitted, which Delegate F. M. Ziebach opposed, saying he intended going home tonight, not to return, and he wanted to vote for the election of officers. If the officers were not elected, he, as a democrat, would be accused, as had been intimated, with being used as a cats-paw, to rake the chestnuts out of the fire for the republican monkey.

Delegate Mellette spoke in behalf of good feeling in the convention. He asked for candor, and in good humor put the convention in better feeling.

Delegate Moody of Lawrence, arose and said, that he hoped the convention would not favor the election of officers.

"Why," said he, "I have been working along here with my colleague, Mr. Caulfield, who is a democrat so deeply dyed in the wool that the dye is proof of the sheep, and I have never heard him speak of wanting an office, and I think he has never heard me say anything about it."

"No," interjected Mr. Caulfield, sardonically, "but we have been keeping up a thinking about it."

There was laughter everywhere, and at 5:30 an adjournment was taken to 7:30. At the evening session, the convention resumed consideration of the question of electing officers, and on motion of Delegate Ziebach the consideration of the entire report was postponed until Monday, at 2 P. M., the vote being 30 for to 31 against.

The convention then adjourned until Monday at 9 A. M.

At the evening session, Delegate C. J. B. Harris of Yankton moved to reconsider the vote by which section 3 of the report of the committee on state, county and municipal indebtedness was carried. He explained that the section as adopted would prevent cities from voting aid to railroads, and that he desired to reconsider in order to be able to move an amendment at the proper time.

Delegate Moody said the question should not be considered tonight as many members were absent. He was opposed to granting aid to corporations, and denounced such aid as the robbery of private citizens.

Delegate Harris explained that his motive was not to bring the amendment before the convention at this time.

Delegate Pettigrew moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and it carried.

Delegate Elred, of Clark, moved to reconsider the vote by which section 2 of the report of the Committee on Exemptions was adopted. He explained his object to be for the purpose of striking out the clause referred to, because of its being useless and objectionable.

Daboll, Mallahan and Brookings opposed the motion of Elred, and it was finally laid on the table on motion of Monaghan of Deuel.

The convention then adjourned until Monday at 9 A. M.

THIRTEENTH DAY

The convention met at 9 o'clock, A. M., and was opened by prayer by Rev. J. N. McLoney, pastor of the local Congregational Church.

Delegate Mitchell, of Brookings County, offered a resolution limiting remarks of delegates to one minute, and forbidding any delegate to speak more than one time on any subject. The resolution was adopted.

The citizens of Kingsbury County were permitted to withdraw a petition for prohibition.

Delegate Melville, of Beadle, offered a resolution that the constitution provide that whenever 5,000 legal voters of the state shall petition the Legislature for the submission of any amendment to the constitution, to the votes of the people, the question shall be so submitted at the next general election thereafter, and if a majority of the legal votes shall be received in favor of the amendment, it shall then become a part of the state constitution. Referred to the committee on legislation.

The report of the executive committee was taken up for consideration. Delegate Sterling, of Spink, moved to strike out the last clause of section 2 to-wit:—"nor shall either be eligible as his own immediate successor," which clause forbids a man from being elected to more than one term of a state office without intervening time between terms.

The motion was supported by Delegate Hand, of Yankton, S. W. Duncan, of Beadle, and others, and was opposed by A. C. Mellette, of Codington, and Delegates Grigsby and Pettigrew, of Minnehaha.

The amendment was lost and the section was adopted as reported.

Sections 4 and 5 were adopted as reported, but amendment was offered to section 6, which elicited much discussion. It was moved to strike out "chief justice," and insert "state auditor," in the Board of Pardons.

Delegates Kellam and Mellette opposed the change, and the report was finally adopted without change.

The report of the judiciary was then taken up.

Delegate Hand, of Yankton, offered an amendment requiring the Supreme Court to render opinions when requested by the governor, Legislature, or state officers. The amendment was defeated.

Delegate Brookings, of Minnehaha, moved to strike out section 11 retiring judges of the Supreme Court when they shall have arrived at the age of seventy years, and have been in the discharge of their duties sixteen years immediately preceding such retirement. He said he did not favor pensioning a judge of the Supreme Court on the money of the poor laboring people.

The amendment was opposed by Delegate Moody upon the ground of right and the advancement of honesty.

Delegate Joseph Ward, of Yankton, thought that when a judge was found good enough to have three terms of office, we should provide for him in old age.

Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson, urged that the section be stricken out, on the ground that all officers were entitled to the same treatment.

Delegate Melville, of Beadle.

It is only a fair recognition of the ability of a man who is worthy of being a judge for three terms. A man selected to a life position on the bench should be put beyond the necessity of speculating in other business for a livelihood.

The amendment failed, and the section was adopted.

Delegate C. J. B. Harris, of Yankton, moved to add to the latter clause of section 12, which provided that for the purposes of re-election, no supreme judge shall be deemed to have lost his residence in the district by reason of his removal to the seat of government in the discharge of his official duties, the following:

Provided, That at the first election under this constitution a residence of one year shall be sufficient to render any person eligible who has the other qualifications prescribed by this section.

It was charged by a delegate that the amendment was intended for Judge Edgerton alone.

A delegate replied that if that was so the amendment was not needed, for the point was covered in another article. The amendment was withdrawn.

Delegate Mellette moved to recommit section 17, providing for five judicial circuits, with instructions to report but three circuits.

A great deal of discussion followed, and much opposition was manifested to the five circuit proposition.

Delegate Moody supported the report of the committee, and said that in his county alone there were on the calendar of the court over two hundred civil suits, and some of these had been at issue over two years. He said that four circuits were the very least number that could consider the business.

Delegate C. L. Wood, of Pennington.

I am decidedly opposed to reducing the number of circuits. Enough will be lost at each term of court in a single county, if the number is reduced, to pay the salary of a judge for a whole year.

Delegate Converse of Sanborn.

It is false economy to limit the number of districts to so small a number as proposed, so that business cannot be transacted with reasonable rapidity.

The amendment was lost and the section adopted as reported.

Section 26, prohibiting judges of Supreme, Circuit or County courts, receiving any pay or emoluments on account of their office, other than their salary, was the source of considerable contention. It was held that judges being compelled to take final proofs in land cases should be allowed to receive pay therefor.

The section was, however, adopted as reported, but was reconsidered, on motion of Delegate Moody who offered an amendment allowing county judges to take fees in taking final proof in land cases, which was adopted, and the convention adjourned until 2 o'clock, P. M.

On reconvening, Delegate F. M. Ziebach, of Bon Homme, called up the question involving the election of state officers, and at the same time moved the previous question. The previous question brought up the question—that of recommitting the section subdivision of section 8. The vote was taken by ayes and noes, and resulted, ayes 18, noes 59, so the motion to recommit was lost, and the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Moody, to hold the election June 20, 1883, instead of October 20, 1883, came up. This amendment was defeated by 50 to 30. Then followed the amendment of Mr. Gamble, of Yankton, fixing the date on December 20, was put and defeated. This brought the situation down to a vote on the second subdivision of section 8 as reported from the committee, to elect state officers at the same time the vote is had on the constitution. The section reported was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Delegates Baum, Brayton, Boynton, Brookings, Bertelson, Brooks of Yankton, Callahan, Chapman, Conklin, Campbell of Yankton, Dollard, Duncan, Day, Daboll, Elrod, Elliott, Foster of Hanson, Foster of Spink, Gatchell, Grigsby, Gamble, Hager, Howell, Herman, Hunt, Hand, Harris, Johnson of Hyde, Jones, Kellam, Knox, Keith, Lane, Lothian, Lichtenwallner, Melville, McCoy, Mitchell, McDonald of Jerauld, Mellette, Monaghan, McDonald, Macdonald of Kingsbury, Pierce, Peck, Rudolph, Sherwood, Tripp, VanVelsor, Whiteside, Wood, Ward of Yankton, Ziebach—52.

Noes—Bronson, Bippus, Cort, Caulfield, Campbell of Minnehaha, Converse, Dawson, Edwards, Eakin, Knight, Lewis, Lucas, Levering, Lake, McVey, Moody, Mallahan, Pease, Pettigrew, Reed, Rutan, Shefler, Smith, Warner, Williamson, Wellman, Whiting, Westover—28.

When Delegate Pettigrew was called to vote, he voted no, and asked to have time until tomorrow to submit his protest in writing to the proceeding.

Section 20 was amended fixing the membership of the Legislature as follows: Senators, 32; representatives, 78.

Section 5 was reconsidered, a number of amendments proposed, and the proceedings grew so complicated, to use the language of the official reporter, that few delegates understood the propositions which had reference to the time when the state officers should assume their official functions. The section was finally sent back to the committee for a more satisfactory report.

Section 6 was completed by inserting the word "Yankton," so that it reads: "The first meeting of the Legislature shall be at the City of Yankton on the first Monday of December next, with power to adjourn to any other place."

Delegate R. F. Pettigrew moved to reconsider and amend section 8 by inserting after the word "held," in connection with the provision that an election shall be held to elect state officers, the words, "Not less than fifty days after the adoption of this constitution by the people, and upon a day fixed by the executive committee hereinafter provided for."

On motion of H. J. Campbell the motion to reconsider was laid on the table, and the amendment was shut out from a vote. The motion by which the section was reconsidered was laid on the table, and the report being adopted was referred to the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Delegate C. N. Keith, of Spink County, called up for adoption the report from the Committee on Legislative Apportionment.

That part of the report fixing two congressional districts was recommitted, there being a disposition shown to have the two congressmen elected from the state at large.

Considerable difference of opinion was disclosed over the apportionment of senatorial districts. A. S. Jones of Hutchinson, opposed the coupling of Hutchinson with Douglas and receiving but one senator when Bon Homme and Clay, having a less population, he said, than Hutchinson, were given a senator each, by itself. This was compromised by taking one representative from Bon Homme and giving it to Hutchinson.

The portions of the report referring to Sauborn, Davison, Faulk, Edmunds, and McPherson counties was recommitted. The committee immediately reported back the portion recommitted, making two representatives to Congress from the state at large, and the report was adopted.

The report from the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal and Banking was taken up, and Delegate Jones, of Hutchinson, offered an additional section, requiring the Legislature to pass laws from time to time, regulating tariffs charged by railroads, canal and other transportation companies, and against unjust discrimination.

Delegate H. W. Peck, of Hanson, moved, as a substitute for Mr. Jones' section, an additional section providing for dividing the state into three districts and electing a railroad commissioner in each, the three to form a board to control railroad transportation under a law regulating common carriage and fixing uniform tariffs, and see that the railroad laws are recognized. Mr. Peck said it was useless to pass railroad laws without a Board of Railroad Commissioners,—that it was a part of the business of railroad companies to corrupt Legislatures.

Delegate Mellette, chairman of the Committee on Corporations other than Banking, said the committee had had the questions involved in the section proposed by Mr. Peck, but had concluded not to go into the management of railroads. The principle he thought probably all right, but said it belonged with the Legislature.

Delegate J. C. Elliott, of Grant County, said that there should be a barrier placed between the people and the railroad, and the tariff charged by the railroads controlled by the people.

Delegate Boynton of Lincoln.

It would not be dignified to put a measure of this kind in the constitution. The matter should go to the Legislature. We are going to have a large Legislature. Anyway, I don't think it wise to proceed on the ground that our Legislature will be corrupt, to be brought up like sheep.

Delegate J. C. Elliott, of Grant.

The whole northern portion of this territory is in the hands of most powerful corporations. The southern portion of the territory is being made a network of railroads and we are falling also into the grasp of powerful corporations. I only ask for a barrier to stand between corporations and the people.

Mr. Peck's additional section was lost on a vote, and on the section offered by Mr. Jones the ayes and noes were demanded, and Delegate Pittigrew urged its passage as being a just measure to the people.

Delegate Brookings thought it unwise to incorporate such glaring opposition to railroads. That the people could not afford now to antagonize the railroads, nor could the railroads afford to antagonize the people. He asked, as a matter of discretion, to leave the matter out of the constitution.

Delegate Mellette said that since examining the section proposed he could see nothing to oppose in it.

The aye and no vote resulted, ayes 53, noes, 48, so the section was adopted.

Delegate Lake, of Pennington, offered an additional section, directing that holders of stock in any corporation, may, in an election for directors thereof, cumulate their votes upon any one director, or may distribute them among the various directors, as they see fit, the whole number of which each stockholder may be entitled being determined by multiplying the number of his shares by the number of directors.

The section was adopted, and the report was referred as a whole to the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

The report of the Committee on Mines, Mining and Water Rights was taken up for adoption, and being considered, the following proviso was added to section 1, under water rights: "Provided, however, that nothing in this article contained shall change the rule of riparian rights and ownership in that portion of the state east of the Missouri River."

The report of the Committee on Roads, Bridges, and Other Internal Improvements, was adopted as reported by the committee.

Delegate Lothian, of Grant, was allowed to introduce a resolution directing the Committee on Phraseology to provide for biennial elections.

The report of the Committee on Finance was taken up on motion of Delegate Harris of Yankton, and adopted, after the adoption of an amendment offered by Delegate Moody, which "Provided that laws may be passed by the Legislature providing that railroads be taxed on gross earnings."

The report of the Committee on Amendment and Revision of the Constitution was taken up. Delegate F. W. Fakin, of Sully County, said the report did not meet the expectation of the convention; that it was desired that it be made easy to secure amendments to the constitution now being adopted, particularly in the matter of prohibition, and that it could not be amended, as it was, under five years.

A. B. Melville moved to recommit the report of the Committee on Amendments, with instructions to report at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, incorporating his resolution allowing 5,000 legal voters to bring any proposed amendment before the voters by petitioning the Legislature, and if the proposition receives a majority of the vote cast, it shall become a part of the constitution.

The matter was then committed to the Committee on Bill of Rights adding to that committee Messrs. Eakin and Converse.

Delegate G. C. Moody moved to reconsider the vote by which the vote was taken on the question of prohibition, and announced that he would take until tomorrow afternoon to consider whether or not he would call up the motion to reconsider.

There was considerable warm discussion upon the subject, on the ground that the issue had been settled by indefinite postponement and should not be taken up again.

A. S. Jones, of Hutchinson, said it was unfair to take up the question, as many of those who had taken an active part in the issue had gone home.

Those of the prohibitionists present said that they were perfectly willing to abide by the disposition of the question made, and did not wish to take it up again. They did not want to re-open the question, they stated, even if they knew they could carry it.

The motion by Mr. Moody to re-consider the vote by which the issue was indefinitely postponed, was defeated, and a motion was made and carried to lay the motion to re-consider on the table.

Mr. Moody raised the point of no quorum, but the president ruled that there was a quorum at all times unless a roll call of the convention was taken and no quorum was disclosed.

At 11:30 P. M. the convention adjourned until 9 o'clock, A. M., tomorrow.

FOURTEENTH DAY

At 8 o'clock, Rev. A. P. Lyon, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Sioux Falls, opened the convention with prayer.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton reported back from the Committee on Schedule, section 5, incorporating the provision that no officer elected at the election in November next shall assume the duties of his office, or be entitled to salary or emoluments until the constitution is ratified by Congress.

Delegate Melville from the Bill of Rights Committee reported the section requiring the Legislature to submit to the people at an election any amendment to the state constitution petitioned for by 5,000 voters.

Both the above reports were adopted.

Delegate Rudolph, of Lincoln, offered a resolution directing the printing of 20,000 copies of the constitution in the English language, 1,000 in the Norwegian language and 1,000 in the German language. The resolution was adopted.

Delegate Brookings submitted an additional section to the constitution, directing that the first Legislature shall provide for biennial elections of all state and county officers, such elections to be held on the first Monday in November of each year.

The report on the ordinance for the taking of a census of the State of Dakota was considered, amended and adopted. The president of the convention was authorized to appoint the chief enumerator, and the pay of enumerators was to be fixed by the executive committee.

On motion of Delegate Gamble, of Yankton, the report on revenue and finance was reconsidered, and an amendment offered by Thomas Sterling, of Spink, directing that the Legislature shall provide such revenue as may be needed by uniform taxation was adopted.

The report of the Committee on Compensation of Public Officers was taken up. Delegate Converse said the matter had no place in the constitution of the state. That the matter of salaries of state officers should be left to the Legislature. He was supported by Delegate Dollard, who moved to strike out the whole report. The motion was lost. Delegate Jones moved a substitute leaving the salaries to future Legislatures. Delegate Hand said that while he believed economy should be observed, it was poor policy to tie the matter up too closely. That it was difficult to have salaries changed after they were fixed in the constitution.

After amending the report so that the salaries of supreme judges shall be left to the Legislature, and striking out the provision forbidding any state officer to receive any fees or perquisites, the report was adopted.

The report of the judiciary committee on preamble was taken into consideration, and the reading of the preamble called for and the reading was ordered, as follows:

We, the people of Dakota, south of the 46th parallel of north latitude, through our representatives in convention assembled, invoking the guaranties of the Federal Constitution, and relying upon the pledged faith of Congress in extending to the inhabitants of this portion of the territory of the United States the rights, privileges and immunities secured to the people of the territory northwest of the River Ohio by the Ordinance of 1787, including the right to form for ourselves a state constitution and government, and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, such right being further secured by the conditions of the cession from France of the Province of Louisiana, having complied with all the conditions necessary to admission, manifesting profound reverence for the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, in order to form a more perfect and independent government, establish justice, insure tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and preserve to ourselves and to our posterity the blessing of liberty, do ordain and establish this constitution for the State of Dakota.

The report was adopted.

The report of the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings was then taken up, and nearly all the provisions reported were stricken out. As adopted the report contained but one section which required the Legislature to pass laws regarding state institutions and the care of the insane, deaf, dumb and blind, etc.

The report on banking and currency was considered. The second section brought up the question of private banks of issue and elicited some discussion, but it was adopted as reported. The fifth section making shares of stockholders in banks individually responsible for debts of such banks to the extent of the amount of their stock at the par value in addition to the amount invested in such shares of stock. Some delegates thought it not just to hold shareholders responsible for more than the mere share itself. There was great latitude in the discussion but the section was finally adopted as reported.

The noon recess was taken and upon reassembling, Delegate Dollard moved to reconsider the first section of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than municipal and banking, his purpose being to offer an amendment providing that the Legislature may from time to time enact laws for the purpose of authorizing the formation of corporations. The motion was lost.

The report of the Committee on Eminent Domain and Public Property was then taken up and adopted.

Delegate Dollard, of Bon Homme, asked that the section of the article on apportionment, where Bon Homme County was relieved of one representative by an amendment, be reconsidered, and the member be restored to Bon Homme. The report was reconsidered and these portions affecting Bon Homme and Davison counties were recommitted and subsequently reported to the convention; a modification by which the counties were granted their demands and the report was adopted.

The report of the Committee on Address to the People was presented and adopted. This completed the presentation and adoption of all reports in the constitution. It was announced, however, that there were a few proposed amendments in the hands of committees, also that there were sections that had been recommitted not yet reported, but it was determined that these could come up in the consideration in the report of the whole constitution from the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Delegate C. L. Wood, of Pennington, offered an additional section to the schedule, authorizing the executive committee to postpone the election of state officers and members of the Legislature and members of Congress until such time as they may deem most conducive to the public interest.

Delegate Mellette supported the section. He voted for the adoption of the measure as reported from the committee and as it was adopted, he said, but he thought the proposed section would make better feeling. "Wise men sometimes change, but fools never," was an old adage that should be considered, he said, and if the majority had made a mistake it had better rectify it and do it now. He wanted harmony and enthusiasm and believed in meeting on half-way grounds in the issue.

Mellette's words were like oil poured on the troubled waters and seemed to put the convention in good and friendly feeling.

H. J. Campbell, of Yankton, concurred in the proposed section of Delegate Wood, feeling that it was in the interest of harmony.

Delegate J. R. Gamble, of Yankton, moved that a committee of seven be appointed to report upon the matter at 8 o'clock this evening.

Delegate Pettigrew spoke against leaving the matter in the hands of any committee. He thought the majority all the wiser. Since it had been settled that officers should be elected, he thought it should so remain, and that, although he voted against it, he would work for the ratification of the constitution.

Delegate Pease, of Davison, said he only opposed the proposition because it presumed there was a discordant element in the convention. That while he voted against the proposition to elect officers he was satisfied with the result, and knew of no one that was not satisfied.

Delegate Hagar, of Davison, said that while he was in favor of electing officers he was glad to see the efforts at the proposed compromise, and thought it might do good.

Delegate W. M. Pierce, of Codington, spoke in favor of the proposed compromise but contended for the election of officers and said he came here with that understanding.

Delegate Dollard spoke in favor of the compromise, which was seconded by quite a number of delegates.

The president named the following committee to take the matter into consideration. Wood, of Pennington; Boynton, of Lincoln; Mellette, of Codington; Moody, of Lawrence; Pettigrew, of Minnehaha; McCoy, of Bon Homme, to which committee President Tripp was added.

Delegate Hugh J. Campbell, of Yankton, offered a resolution that the constitution as now prepared be sent to the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology, that after its revision by such committee it be engrossed and delivered to the president of the convention. That he sign it and affix the signatures of the members of the convention.

Delegate G. C. Moody, of Lawrence, objected to anybody attaching his signature to any document without express authority from him.

The motion of Delegate Campbell was adopted with the understanding that the affixing of the signatures of members be only by special permission.

Delegate C. L. Wood, from the special committee, offered a resolution which was adopted, for an additional section to the schedule report, granting to the state executive committee discretionary power and authority to postpone the election of state officers, members of the Legislature and members of Congress, until such time as they might deem most conducive to the public interest.

Delegate A. J. Knight, of Lawrence, offered a resolution of thanks to Hon. Bartlett Tripp, president of the convention, for the efficient and courteous exercise of his duties, which was unanimously adopted.

Delegate C. N. Keith, of Spink, offered a resolution of thanks to T. G. Brown and Tom Hooper, stenographers of the convention for their painstaking and accurate work. Unanimously adopted.

On motion of Delegate J. P. Gamble, the names of Messrs. Wood, of Pennington and Campbell, of Yankton, and Sterling, of Spink, were added to the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

Delegate Wood, of Pennington, offered a resolution that the Legislature should provide for the election of four presidential electors in 1884. Postponed until next session.

Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, offered a resolution adopting the constitution and schedule as a whole. Postponed until next session.

Delegate Moody asked that some other delegate be substituted in his stead on the committee to whom was referred the proposition of electing state and other officers. He asked it only as a matter of wisdom and not because he had any objection to serving. He hoped to have no further connection with the subject. Mr. Gamble, of Yankton, was appointed in place of Mr. Moody.

At 4:55 the convention adjourned until 8 P. M.

Upon the reassembling of the convention for the evening session, Delegate Campbell, of Yankton, introduced a resolution embodying thanks to C. H. Winsor, secretary of the convention and H. M. Avery, assistant secretary for their efficient and unremitting labors, also thanks to the citizens of Sioux Falls, to the press and to the clergy, also the ladies of Sioux Falls. The resolutions were adopted.

Delegate Eakin, of Sully, introduced a resolution providing for biennial elections, which failed to pass.

The special Committee on State Elections reported authorizing the state executive committee to postpone the election of officers provided for to take place in November, if they deemed it conducive to the best interests of the state, and to fix the time for a new election if deemed expedient. Adopted.

Delegate Gamble moved to reconsider the section which had been adopted, relative to compulsory education. The motion prevailed, and on motion of H. A. Day, of Edmunds, the section was stricken out.

At 10:45 o'clock P. M. the convention adjourned until 9 o'clock A. M. the next day, Wednesday, September 19th.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19TH, CLOSING DAY

The convention met in the morning and was opened by prayer from Rev. W. J. Skillman. The following members were added to the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology: A. S. Jones, of Hutchinson; C. N. Keith and Thomas Sterling, of Spink; A. G. Kellam, of Brule; J. M. Pease, of Davison; A. B. Lucas, of Charles Mix, and L. W. Chapman, of Hanson.

The convention then adjourned until 9 P. M. to give the Committee on Enrollment time to transcribe the constitution. The committee were at work the entire day.

At 10:30 the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology completed their work and President Tripp called the delegates to order for the transaction of any business that might remain to be finished.

Delegate Moody, of Lawrence, said that while he did not wish to move an instruction to the committee to wait upon Congress in the interest of statehood, to have the word "south" prefixed to Dakota, if found desirable, as announced at a previous session he would do, still he would state that he thought the matter of name should not stand in the way of statehood.

A motion by R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha, was adopted, requesting the cooperation of Hon. John B. Raymond, delegate to Congress, in the work of statehood, and asking that he introduce the bill in Congress, and urge its speedy passage for the ratification of the constitution adopted by this convention, and the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union.

Delegate C. N. Keith, of Spink County, was appointed by the president, chief enumerator.

On motion of Delegate Moody, of Lawrence, the Committee on Ways and Means were instructed to make their report to the state executive committee and to the members of the committee.

The number of the committee to wait upon Congress and present the constitution was increased from fourteen to twenty-five, and the committee appointed, as follows:

Names of committee to bear the first state constitution to Congress: Bartlett Tripp, Yankton County; A. G. Kellam, Brule County; J. R. Whiteside, Clay County; M. H. Day, Bon Homme County; J. M. Pease, Davison County; W. H. Brayton, Hyde County; O. H. Bronson, Miner County; J. A. Ward, Hughes County; John Cain, Beadle County; A. W. Flagar, Davison County; O. S. Gifford, Lincoln County; George Freeman, Union County; James Baynes, Hanson County; F. M. Goodykoontz, Brule County; Robert Dollard, Bon Homme County; C. H. Winsor, Minnehaha County; W. W. Brookings, Minnehaha County; Newton Edmunds, Yankton County; A. C. Mellette, Codington County; G. C. Moody, Lawrence County; H. J. Campbell, Yankton County; B. G. Caulfield, Lawrence County; E. W. Foster, Spink County; Thomas Sterling, Spink County; A. Boynton, Lincoln County; R. W. Welch, Aurora County; C. L. Wood and R. C. Lake, Pennington County.

The Committee on Printing was authorized to contract for the constitution in pamphlet form. The state executive committee were authorized to have the journal of the convention printed.

The work of the enrolling committee was announced completed, and the delegates present signed the constitution.

At 11 o'clock P. M. Wednesday, September 19, 1883, the first constitutional convention of Dakota adjourned, sine die, subject to the call of the president of the executive committee.

Of the forty members and officers of the convention, the following data regarding the state or country of their nativity was secured. There does not appear to have been any native Dakotans at that rate, and only one from Minnesota, Dakota's immediate ancestor.

New York, 27; Illinois, 8; Maine, 6; New Hampshire, 4; Michigan, 3; Iowa, 2; Ireland, 2; Russia, 1; Ohio, 15; Wisconsin, 8; England, 6; Indiana, 4; Norway, 3; Missouri, 2; Minnesota, 1; Vermont, 8; Pennsylvania, 8; Canada, 6; Germany, 4; Virginia, 2; Massachusetts, 2; Sweden, 1. Total, native Americans, 106. Total, foreign born, 17.

The occupation of 127 of the members was found to be as follows:

Lawyers, 42; editors, 13; clergymen, 5; hotel keepers, 2; farmers, 31; real estate dealers, 11; physicians, 2; liverymen, 1; merchants, 15; bankers, 3.

The average age of the delegates was placed at thirty-five years, though the average age of those upon whom the greatest portion of the work devolved was about forty years. The occupation of the delegates indicated the popular character of the convention.

OFFICIAL VOTE ON CONSTITUTION OF 1883

At the election held October 20th, the vote on the question of adopting or rejecting the constitution, as canvassed by the executive board, resulted in favor of adoption by the vote as stated below, said vote being given by all the counties that participated in the election. The total for the constitution was 12,336. Against, 6,814.

Counties	For	Against	Counties	For	Against
Aurora	333	66	Brookings	58	368
Brown	232	169	Clark	253	309
Beadle	533	51	Clay	210	367
Bon Homme	425	416	Charles Mix	239	46
Brule	388	62	Codington	257	135

Counties	For	Against	Counties	For	Against
Custer	37	81	Lake	129	30
Day	325	18	Lawrence	1,177	236
Davison	138	32	Lincoln	106	668
Deuel	112	101	Miner	318	22
Douglas	258	142	Munchie	384	863
Edmunds	89	24	McCook	117	85
Faulk	176	7	Moody	311	48
Grant	641	46	Pennington	129	178
Hamlin	94	84	Potter	51	...
Hand	510	60	Roberts	0	...
Hanson	103	18	Sanborn	90	1
Hyde	07	...	Sioux	954	34
Hutchinson	397	331	Sully	118	8
Hughes	611	100	Turner	453	156
Jerauld	128	9	Union	31	990
Kingsbury	324	76	Yankton	844	398
Total	12,336	6,814

The counties of Buffalo, Butte, Campbell, Fall River and Walworth made no returns, and the counties of Davison, Hyde and Roberts returned the vote of but one precinct each.

The canvassing board consisted of Bartlett Tripp, president of the state executive committee, and Chief Justice Edgerton, W. S. Bowen, J. H. Teller, and H. J. Campbell.

This constitutional convention of 1883 was by authority of the people. It had no legislative sanction other than the bill which had passed the Legislative Assembly at its last session, and had been "pocketed" by the governor. And while there were two constitutional conventions subsequently held before the state was finally admitted, the ground work and the principal features of the first people's convention were retained and became the fundamental law of the state carved from the original territory. The first convention was composed of excellent, able and patriotic men, and acting under the responsibility of the people alone; actuated by the knowledge that their deliberations and its results would be closely scanned and subjected to much criticism; and that one of the leading political parties in Congress would probably find a pretext for opposing the wish of the people, in the magna charta itself, if it afforded the slightest opportunity. Therefore the builders of the constitution exercised unusual thought and study, with exhaustive debates, in considering every feature. Economy was pressed to the lowest notch, so much so that it became one of the weaker instead of the stronger features of the fundamental law, in the judgment of many, though not to the extent of alienating any portions of the popular vote.

That the aggregate vote polled for and against the constitution was not larger, did not signify an element of weakness in the constitution presented, nor indifference toward the main question. The Ordway influence, whatever it amounted to, was against it, and some of the able speakers that traversed the territory in opposition, were known to be acting in his interest. Though the governor's influence in the territory was of little moment except where exercised indirectly as it was in this campaign in inducing certain ones who were candidates for federal positions to act for him, he was considered valuable in securing the favor of the appointing power at Washington. In this he was possibly overrated unless the applicant came from New Hampshire or Vermont. But as "drowning men catch at straws," the office-seeker, though a Dakotan, was prone to seize upon anything that promised to assist him. Ordway was sustained by all of this element, but the federal favors were controlled for the natives of the Green Mountain country. The Hon. Alexander Hughes, president of the capital commission, whose home had been in Union County, exerted himself, with substantial support, to carry the vote of Lincoln and Union counties and succeeded.

The speakers enlisted to champion the cause of the constitution performed their part without fee or reward, and the people generally, in the several counties or precincts, paid the necessary expenses of their campaign. The motive which governed them, it will not be denied, was a praiseworthy and a patriotic one.

The constitution was assailed by such learned speakers as ex-Judge Shannon, who denounced it as favoring railroad corporations and against the interests of the people. Being a lawyer of ability he was able to arouse quite an opposition sentiment on that charge, and he was well aware that the public mind was extremely sensitive on the railroad question. The constitution did not discriminate in favor of railroad interests and railroad people did not so understand it, but the charge was apparently justified by the exigencies of the campaign against it, and would accomplish all that was hoped for it if it could be kept in the swim until the election. "The end would justify the means." There was also considerable disaffection in northern counties bordering the 46th parallel, where the vote was light in some instances, and the "one state for the entire territory" had a numerous following. They believed their interests would be better subserved if they were in the center of a large state rather than on the border of a smaller one. There were many thousands, as will be seen, that did not vote at all, and were governed by various motives, the one most probable, and frequently heard during the campaign, that there was nothing to inspire confidence in the success of the movement, lacking, as it did, legislative or congressional authority. However, the vote cast was far from discouraging to the friends of the movement who had labored for its success, and who found substantial consolation in a comparison of the result with the votes cast, for and against the constitution, in a number of other aspiring territories that were admitted on a much smaller showing of the popular vote. As examples:

In Iowa, admitted in 1846, the vote on the constitution was 9,492 for, and 9,036 against, a majority of only 456. In Nebraska, in 1866, for the constitution 3,938, against 3,838, only 100 majority. In Kansas, in 1859, for 10,421, against 5,230. In Oregon, 1857, for 7,195, against 3,195. In Connecticut, 1810, for 13,919, against 12,361. In South Dakota, 1883, for 12,336, against 6,814, majority 5,522, showing a larger popular vote than any state except Connecticut, and a larger majority than any in favor of the constitution.

MAYORS' CONVENTION, FARGO

There was a convention or public gathering held at Fargo August 27, 1883, called by the mayors of Fargo, Jamestown, Bismarck, Grand Forks, and the chairman of the trustees of Tower City, to consult as to the practicability of holding a convention in North Dakota, in view of the fact that the people of South Dakota were about to hold a constitutional convention at Sioux Falls and appropriate the name of Dakota to themselves. This conference of the mayors called a convention of the people of North Dakota to meet at Fargo, September 12th, to consider this matter and the subjects of division and admission. The Fargo convention met at the time named and appointed a committee to visit and consult with the Southern Dakota constitutional convention then about to convene or already in session at Sioux Falls, regarding the important matter of a name for the new state it was proposed to establish for the south half of the territory. Nothing further was done.

CHAPTER CVIII

THE CONSTITUTION BEFORE CONGRESS

1884-1885

DELEGATION BEARS CONSTITUTION TO CONGRESS—CHAIRMAN TRIPP HEADS THE EMBASSY—SENATOR HARRISON INTRODUCES BILL TO RATIFY THE CONVENTION AND ACCEPT THE CONSTITUTION—TEXT OF THE BILL FOR ADMISSION, DIVISION AND THE TERRITORY OF LINCOLN—DAKOTA'S POPULATION IN 1884—NAME OF THE STATE, DAKOTA—CLEVELAND INAUGURATED PRESIDENT—A PEOPLE'S MEMORIAL—CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, 1885—JUDGE A. J. EDGERTON, PRESIDENT—THE PROCEEDINGS, DEBATES AND ADJOURNMENT.

There was no election of state officers called for by the executive committee appointed by the constitutional convention of 1883. The next step taken was the visit to Washington, after the holiday recess of Congress, by the committee appointed by the convention, led by Chairman Tripp, who presented a copy of the proceedings of the convention and the constitution to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress together with a formal petition asking the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union. Delegate Raymond had been supplied with certified copies of the documents earlier.

About the 20th of February, 1884, Senator Harrison, of Indiana, by order of the Senate Committee on Territories, was prepared to introduce a bill providing for the admission of Dakota into the Union under the Sioux Falls constitution, and a similar bill was to be introduced in the House by Delegate Raymond at the same time.

It provided for the ratification of the constitution and the state government which the people of Dakota had formed in 1883, and also provided for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union on an equal footing with the other states.

The governor, secretary, chief justice, United States attorney, and the president of the constitutional convention, or a majority of them were authorized to issue a proclamation calling for an election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution, and for the election of state officers and members of the Legislature, and two members of the National House of Representatives of the United States, to be held on some day between the 15th day of November, 1884, and the 1st day of February, 1885. The bill granted to the state sections 16 and 36 in every township for school purposes. Also fifty sections to be located by the Legislature, with the approval of the president, for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital. The same amount of lands for a penitentiary and agricultural college. All the salt springs not exceeding twelve in number, and 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of public lands for school purposes. The lands granted for educational purposes were to be disposed of for not less than $5 per acre.

Section 2 provided:

That that portion of the territory not admitted as a state, shall, until otherwise provided by act of Congress, continue as a territory, and all the provisions of the acts of Congress and of the Legislature of said territory, not locally inapplicable, shall continue therein in full force and effect, the same as though no portion of the territory had been admitted into the Union.

The governor thereof may divide the territory into judicial districts and assign the judges thereto, and shall divide said territory into twenty council and representative districts, and apportion the representation therein to which each district shall be entitled in the Legislative Assembly.

When the State of Dakota shall be admitted into the Union under the provisions of this act, the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable, shall have the same force and effect within the state as elsewhere within the United States, and said state shall constitute one judicial district, to be called the District of Dakota, and for said district a district judge and a marshal and a district attorney of the United States shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The bill further provided for the judicial organization of the new state.

The bill provided for the submission of the constitution to a vote of the people of Dakota at an election to be held on the 15th of the next December (1884), so as to place the date of admission beyond the presidential election, and thus quiet the apprehensions of the democrats who feared that the scheme was to get Southern Dakota into the Union in time to vote at the presidential election held in November, 1884, and possibly turn the result against the democrats.

The bill appropriated $20,000 for the expenses of the elections.

The Senate committee reconsidered its favorable action on the above bill after authorizing its introduction and having given the subject further consideration, agreed upon a substitute. It was not a partisan disagreement that induced the reconsideration but seems to have sprung from a feeling of distrust regarding the legitimacy of the Sioux Falls constitution, which had been formed by a convention that had no lawful warrant and therefore the elections held under it were not protected by any law, and though frauds might have been committed, there was no way of reaching them or punishing them. It was regarded as a loose precedent to establish such an important movement upon, and it was therefore determined to ignore the Sioux Falls constitution altogether, and enact a new bill to be called the committee bill in all respects similar to the Harrison bill except that it authorized certain officials to district the southern portion of the territory into legislative districts for the purpose of selecting delegates to a constitutional convention to be held in Yankton in December, 1884. This convention to frame a constitution.

The provisions regarding the Territory of North Dakota remained the same as in the Harrison bill. An appropriation was made to defray expenses.

During the debates in the convention that framed the Sioux Falls constitution of 1883, Col. G. C. Moody, delegate from Lawrence County, had referred to the helplessness of the convention from a lawful standpoint, and advised a course that would be the least liable to provoke serious antagonism.

HARRISON'S STATE AND TERRITORIAL BILL.

Below is given the full text of the bill prepared by the Committee on Territories of the United States Senate, and introduced by Senator Harrison as a substitute for the bill presented earlier but withdrawn. The substitution of this new bill does not necessarily indicate that the Senate had concluded that the state constitution of 1883 was without authority, but rather that an act of Congress in the form of an enabling act, entirely ignoring the independent action of the Dakotans, and incorporating in the enabling act provisions for the establishment of a new territorial government in the northern half, would have a better chance of success in view of the party situation in Congress, than a measure that recognized what many congressmen regarded as a "revolutionary proceeding." The substitute bill was called the committee bill and provided as follows:

In the Senate of the United States, February 20, 1884. Mr. Harrison, from the Committee on Territories, reported the following bill, which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent and recommitted to the Committee on Territories:

A bill to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the 46th parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and state government, and for the admission of the state into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

That the inhabitants of that portion of the Territory of Dakota included in the boundaries hereinafter designated are hereby authorized to form for themselves, out of said territory, a state government with the name of the State of Dakota, which state, when formed, shall be admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. That the said State of Dakota shall consist of all the territory included within the following boundaries, to wit:

Commencing at a point on the west line of the State of Minnesota where the 40th degree of north latitude intersects the same; thence south along the west boundary line of the states of Minnesota and Iowa, to the point of intersection with the north boundary line of the State of Nebraska; thence westerly and northerly along the northern boundary line of the State of Nebraska to the 27th meridian of longitude west from Washington; thence north along the said 27th meridian of longitude to the 46th degree of north latitude; thence east along the 46th degree of north latitude to the place of beginning.

Sec. 3. That all persons residing within the limits of said proposed state, qualified by the laws of said Territory of Dakota to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assembly thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention, and the qualifications for delegates to such convention shall be such as by the laws of said territory persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assembly thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said convention shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the proposed state, in single districts, in proportion to the population in each of said counties and districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making such apportionment, by the persons hereinafter authorized to make the same, from the best information obtainable. That said apportionment shall be made by the governor, the chief justice, the associate justice for the first judicial district, the associate justice for the fourth judicial district, and the surveyor general of the Territory of Dakota, or any two of them. And the governor shall, by proclamation, order an election of delegates aforesaid to be held on the 4th day of November, 1884, which proclamation shall be issued at least sixty days prior to the time of such election. And such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to such persons so elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said territory regulating elections therein for delegate to Congress. The number of delegates to said convention shall be 120, and all persons resident in said proposed state who are qualified voters of said territory under the laws thereof, at such time as the constitution to be framed shall be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection, shall be authorized to vote upon the question of such ratification or rejection, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe.

Sec. 4. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the City of Yankton on the second Tuesday of December, 1884, and, after organization, shall declare on behalf of the people of said proposed state that they adopt the Constitution of the United States. Whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and state government for said proposed state. Provided, That the constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil and political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And provided further, That said convention shall provide, by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said state: First, That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said state shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship. Secondly, That the people inhabiting said proposed state do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes, until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, and that the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States. That the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said state shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof. That no taxes shall be imposed by the state on lands or property thereto belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. Provided, however, that nothing herein, or in the ordinance herein provided for, shall preclude the said State of Dakota from taxing as other lands are taxed any land owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a proviso exempting the lands thus granted from taxation. But said ordinance shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said state so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe. Thirdly, That the bonded debt of the said Territory of Dakota incurred for the erection of public buildings of the territory situated in said proposed state shall be assumed and paid by the said State of Dakota.

Sec. 5. That in case a constitution and state government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, said convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said state for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held at such time and place and under such regulations as may be prescribed by said convention, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed state shall vote directly for or against said proposed constitution. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the territory, who, with the governor and chief justice, or any two of them, shall canvass the same, and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for said constitution, the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said declaration, constitution and ordinances. Whereupon it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, if said declaration, constitution and ordinances shall conform to the requirements of this act, to issue his proclamation declaring the state admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, without any further action whatever on the part of Congress.

Sec. 6. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said state shall be entitled to one representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which representative, together with the governor and other officers provided for in said constitution, shall be elected on a day subsequent to the adoption of the constitution to be fixed by said constitutional convention, and until said state officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of the constitution, the territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of the respective offices over the territory within the said proposed state.

Sec. 7. That sections numbered 16 and 36 in every township, and where such sections or any subdivision thereof have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress other land equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not more than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said state for the support of common schools.

Sec. 8. That when the State of Dakota shall be admitted into the Union in accordance with the provisions of this act, fifty entire sections of the unappropriated public lands within said state, to be selected and located by the direction of the Legislature thereof, and with the approval of the President, on or before the 1st day of January, 1886, shall be, and are hereby granted, in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, to said state, for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said state for legislative, executive and judicial purposes, in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe.

Sec. 9. That so much of the lands belonging to the United States as have been acquired and set apart for the purpose mentioned in "An act appropriating money for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota," approved March 2, 1881, together with the buildings thereon, be, and the same is, hereby granted, together with any unexpended balances of the moneys appropriated therefor by said act, to said state, for the purposes therein designated.

Sec. 10. That ninety sections of land, to be selected and located as provided in section 8 of this act, are hereby granted to said state for the use and support of an agricultural college in said state. And none of the lands granted by this act, or the proceeds thereof, shall be used for any other purpose than that for which the grant is specifically made whatever.

Sec. 11. That all salt springs within said state, not exceeding twelve in number, with six sections of land adjoining, or as contiguous as may be to each, shall be granted to said state for its use, the said land to be selected by the governor of said state within two years after the admission of said state, and when so selected to be used and disposed of on such terms, conditions and regulations as the Legislature shall direct. And the proceeds thereof shall be used exclusively for the support of the common schools of the state; Provided, That no salt spring or lands, the right whereof is now vested in any individuals, or which hereafter shall be confirmed or adjudged to any individual or individuals, shall by this act be granted to said state.

Sec. 12. That 5 per centum of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said state which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said state into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said state, to be used as a permanent fund for the support of the common schools within said state.

Sec. 13. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed only at public sale, and at a price of not less than $7 per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only is to be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the Legislature shall prescribe, be leased, for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company.

Sec. 14. That the lands granted to the Territory of Dakota by the act of February 18, 1881, entitled "An act to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming, for university purposes," so far as the same have been selected and located in that part of said territory embraced in the proposed State of Dakota, shall, under the provisions and limitations of said act, be vested in said state; Provided, That none of said lands shall be sold for less than $7 per acre. And such portions of such lands as have been selected and located within the bounds of the Territory of North Dakota, as in this act prescribed, shall be vested in said territory, subject also to the limitations of said act of February 18, 1881. And there is hereby granted to said State of Dakota, and to the Territory of Lincoln, so much of the public lands in said state and territory, respectively, selected under said act of February 18, 1881, as will give to each the full amount of seventy-two entire sections, all of which shall be held and used in accordance with the provisions of the act aforesaid. Said lands shall be selected by the state as provided in section 8 of this act, and for the territory as provided in the said act of February 18, 1881. The sections of land granted by the act of June 16, 1880, to the Territory of Dakota for an asylum for the insane shall, upon the admission of the said State of Dakota into the Union, become the property of said state.

Sec. 15. That all mineral lands shall be exempted from the operation and grants of this act; Provided, That if sections 16 and 36, or any subdivision thereof, in any township, shall be found to be mineral lands, or to have been reserved, sold, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, the Legislature of said state is hereby authorized and empowered to select, with the approval of the President, any other unappropriated public lands in said State of Dakota in lieu thereof, for the use and benefit of the common schools of said state.

Sec. 16. That that portion of the Territory of Dakota not embraced within said proposed state, upon the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union shall, until otherwise provided by act of Congress, continue a territory by the name of Lincoln, and all the provisions of the acts of Congress and of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota not locally inapplicable shall continue therein in full force and effect. The governor, secretary, chief justice and associate justices, United States marshal and district attorney of the present Territory of Dakota shall exercise their respective offices for said Territory of Lincoln temporarily and until otherwise provided by the Legislative Assembly of said Territory of Lincoln. The governor, secretary and chief justice thereof may divide said territory into judicial districts, and assign the judges thereto, and into twenty council and fifty single representative districts, and apportion the representation therein to which each district shall be entitled in the Legislative Assembly. The bonded debt of the Territory of Dakota, not herein required to be assumed by the State of Dakota, shall be and remain a valid debt against the Territory of Lincoln.

Sec. 17. That temporarily, and until otherwise provided by act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Lincoln, the City of Bismarck shall be the place of holding the sessions of the Legislative Assembly therein, which place shall constitute the capital of said territory until changed by the Legislative Assembly, and the governor shall have power to designate temporarily, and until otherwise provided by law, the places in the judicial districts where the District Court shall exercise the jurisdiction of district and circuit courts of the United States.

Sec. 18. That when the State of Dakota shall be admitted into the Union the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the said state as elsewhere within the United States. And said state shall constitute one judicial district to be called the District of Dakota, and for said district, a district judge, a marshal, and a district attorney of the United States, shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the same rights, powers, and duties as provided by law for similar officers in other states, except as herein otherwise provided. Said District of Dakota shall be attached to and constitute a part of the Eighth Judicial Circuit, and a term of the Circuit Court and of the District Court for said district shall be held at the seat of government in said state, on the first Tuesdays of May and October in each year, and one grand jury and one petit jury only shall be summoned and serve in both of said courts.

Sec. 19. That the circuit and district courts for the District of Dakota, the judges thereof, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction and perform the same duties possessed and required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws, rules and regulations.

Sec. 20. That the district judge appointed for the District of Dakota shall receive as his compensation the sum of $3,500 per annum, payable in four equal installments, on the first days of January, April, July and October of each year.

Sec. 21. That the marshal, district attorney and clerk of the circuit and district courts of the said District of Dakota, and all other officers and persons performing duties in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the power and perform the duties lawfully possessed and required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States, and shall for the service they may perform receive the fees and compensation allowed to other similar officers and persons performing similar duties by the laws of the United States, excepting such provisions thereof as are specially applicable to some particular officer or district.

Sec. 22. That all cases of writ of error or appeal heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon any record from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota, or that may hereafter be lawfully prosecuted from said court, may be heard and determined by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the Circuit or District Court of the District of Dakota or to the Supreme Court of the State of Dakota, as the nature of the case may require, and each of said last mentioned courts shall, as the case may require, be treated as the successor of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota as to all such cases, with full power to proceed with the same and to award means or final process herein. And that from all judgments or decrees of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Dakota prior to its admission as a state, the parties to such judgment shall have the same right to prosecute appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States as they had by law prior to the admission of said state into the Union.

Sec. 23. That in respect to all cases, proceedings, and matters pending in the supreme and district courts of the Territory of Dakota at the time of the admission of the said state into the Union, whereof the circuit or district courts by this act established might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases, the said circuit and district courts respectively, shall be the successors of said Supreme and District Court of said territory, and all the files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating thereto shall be transferred to said circuit and district courts, respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law. Provided, however, That in all civil actions, causes and proceedings, in which the United States is not a party, such transfer shall not be made except upon the written request of one of the parties to such action or proceeding filed in the proper court.

Sec. 24. That the convention herein provided for shall have the power to provide, by ordinance, for the transfer of all actions, proceedings, cases, and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of the Territory of Dakota at the time of the admission of the said State of Dakota into the Union, arising within that part of the said Territory of Dakota herein described as the said proposed new state, and not included within the provisions of the foregoing section, to such courts as shall be established under the constitution to be thus formed. And no indictment, action or proceeding shall abate by reason of any change in the courts, but shall be proceeded with in the state courts according to the laws thereof.

Sec. 25. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the defraying of the expenses of the said convention, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislature, Provided, That any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purposes, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

This bill passed the Senate but no vote was taken in the House. This was the short session of Congress which adjourned March 4, 1885.

DAKOTA'S POPULATION IN 1884

Regarding the claim that Dakota's growth in population had been without precedent in the previous settlement of any portion of the United States during the years from and including 1880 to 1883, it is found that in May, 1880, by the federal census, the number of inhabitants was 135,177, and four years later early in 1884, we find the Committee on Territories of the United States Senate, in reporting favorably the foregoing bill, expressed the conviction that the population was, for the whole territory, 350,000; and predicted that by the time Southern Dakota was ready to enter the Union, her population would entitle her to two members of Congress, in other words her population would be over 250,000. The unit of apportionment for members of Congress at that time was one member to each 135,000, or major fraction thereof. The committee had based its estimate of population largely on the number of homestead land entries, a perfectly safe and conservative basis. From the organization of the territory up to 1880, there had been 29,714; and from 1880 to the end of 1883 these had increased to 77,800, an increase of 48,096, or more than 150 per cent. The number of postoffices had more than doubled in these four years, giving Dakota a greater number than Massachusetts or South Carolina.

In the settlement of any portion of the United States we fail to find an instance where population of a permanent character increased as rapidly as that of Dakota Territory during the years mentioned.

The senate committee had selected the name of Lincoln for the new territory to be erected in Northern Dakota. This name was selected from a list that included Pembina, Mandan, Garfield, Jefferson, Ogalallah, Franklin, Hidasta, and Isabella—the latter being the enterprising Queen of Spain, who borrowed funds on her jewels to furnish and complete the equipment of Columbus for his voyage which resulted in the discovery of this American continent.

THE NAME OF THE STATE

There was a great deal of objection from influential quarters, including societies interested in philological subjects, and from various parts of the Union, to calling Dakota by any other name, and particularly to adding a prefix such as "North" and "South," and the same was true at home in Dakota. Either portion of the territory would have been delighted had the other half proposed or consented to select a new name, and let but one of the states be named "Dakota." This, however, could not have been agreed upon by Dakotans at that time. The southern half claimed the name by virtue of age and long use; and the north division insisted that its grain product had given world-fame to the name "Dakota," and it would retain it if only for a valuable "trade mark" already recognized the world around.

South Dakota, in its substantial and majority opinion, believed that the name of "Pembina" should be taken by the north, and North Dakotans shared in this opinion for some years after that portion of the territory was occupied by a civilized and industrious people. The early Legislatures, in memorializing Congress for a division of the territory, usually recommended Pembina, or some other cognomen, but never North Dakota, for the name, and there was no objection by the northern members, but on the contrary the name was left to their suggestion. All believed that Pembina was as widely known as Dakota, and they knew it was a century or more the elder. Before the Territory of Dakota was organized, the "Pembina country" was the title given to all or nearly all this portion of the Northwest. The Hudson Bay Company knew it as Pembina. The Canadians had no other name for it, and the early explorers of the United States War Department used it in referring to what is now a great part of the Dakotas. Nearly every intelligent person in the United States had heard of "Pembina," and knew where the Pembina region was situated, and that it covered a large area of the wilderness of the Northwest.

Under these circumstances it is somewhat remarkable that the name was not retained for the territory or state, for "Pembina wheat, No. 1, hard," would have been as euphonious as "North Dakota wheat," of the same unapproachable quality, and would have added just as much value to the land, and been a more distinctive commercial asset than "North Dakota," for when one would speak of any Dakota product it became necessary to use the right adjective to indicate in which section it was produced. The Dakota Legislature at one time organized nearly a fourth of the territory into a county and named it "Pembina," and if we have a correct understanding of the location of the Indian tribes, a very small proportion of North Dakota was ever occupied by the Dakota Indians. The Chippewas held all the territory east of James River, and a large part of that west of the James was unoccupied except that held by the Mandans, Rees and Gros Ventres, who were not Dakotas but were undoubtedly the oldest settlers. Lewis and Clark found no Dakotas or Sioux in villages above the Cheyenne. And the reader has observed that the senators and representatives who made any examination of the nomenclature of the Indians in the Northwest favored "Pembina" as the name of Dakota's north state, and Senator Burrows was so wedded to that name and had such an exalted idea of its appropriateness, that he refused to report a bill for a new territorial organization in that region with any other name than "Pembina."

Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, in December, 1888, presented in the Senate a memorial from the New England Historical and Genealogical Society, giving reasons why the states soon to be admitted, should have more distinctive nomenclature than that furnished by the words "north," "south," "east" or "west," and to accord with the theory upon which the Government had gone heretofore, that our political divisions should not be in any way identified with personality. On this basis the society asked that "North Dakota," when admitted, be called "Pembina," and Washington Territory, "Tacoma."

Other names for South Dakota were: "Minnisese Wakpa," is the Dakota language for "Missouri River"; "Tinta-Maka," "Prairie land"; "Mazatinta," or "Makatinta," the land of the prairie; "Maga-Wakan," God's country; "Maga-tankka," big country; "Wah-ca-tin-ta," the "prairie flower"; "Waz-yata," means "northern"; "okali," means "south," Itokali, "southern."

CENTRAL NEW YORK OPINION

In December, 1884, it was known that a democratic President had been elected to succeed President Arthur, and also a democratic House of Representatives, and as Dakota had just passed through a delegate election giving a majority of 25,000 votes for the republican nominee, the prospect for obtaining any favors from the incoming administration was not encouraging. But there was some consolation found in the tone of a portion of the eastern press, which weighed the matter in the scale of justice, demanding that the Dakota question must be settled upon a higher plane than that afforded by political partisanship—that certain inalienable rights had been guaranteed to the citizens of Dakota which Congress could not ignore without the exercise of a tyrannical perversion of liberty, beset with dangers to the free institutions of the Republic if established as a precedent. Such a position was taken by the Utica, New York, Gazette, one of the oldest newspapers in Oneida County, and the native county of the writer and compiler of this work, from which he emigrated in 1856. The contribution of the Gazette is given as follows:

The vote in the recent election in Dakota establishes conclusively the right of the southern portion of that territory to admission into the sisterhood of states. This journal has joined with other republican papers in insisting that there should be no new states until the population equalled that of a congressional district in other states. By the census of 1880, the total population of Dakota was 137,000, of which at least one-third was located in the northern section of the territory. On that showing the southern section was not entitled to a representative in Congress.

In the interval the growth of Dakota has been more rapid than that of any of the American states at any period, and may fairly be said to be without parallel in the history of civilization. It is possible to approximate this growth on the basis of the recent election statistics. It appears that something less than eighty-five thousand votes were cast for delegate to Congress. The ordinary methods of calculation show this vote to represent a total population of about four hundred and twenty thousand. The number of inhabitants has thus increased three times over what it was four years ago. At the same rate of increase the territory will contain about a million and a quarter souls when the federal census of 1890 is taken. Nineteen of the thirty-seven states had less than a million population in 1880. In other words, Dakota, as she stands today, has an incontestable right to immediate admission into the Union.

But the immense territory included within the limits of Dakota, and the diverse interests that predominate in the northern and southern sections, both point to the expediency of a division, and both sections now claim admission into the Union, each as a full fledged state. The title of South Dakota is clear—North Dakota may with propriety be asked to wait a few years longer. Home estimates put the population of the southern section at 245,000, leaving that of the northern section at 175,000. South Dakota, therefore, has a population larger than that of either Florida, Colorado, Nevada, Oregon, or Delaware, by the ninth census. By 1890, if no interruption occurs in its prosperity, South Dakota will have a population equal to that of more than a third of the states of the Union.

But will a democratic House give due weight to facts and figures we have stated? The republican candidate for delegate to Congress received about fifty-five thousand of the 85,000 votes that were cast at the territorial election. Dakota, as a state, will be as overwhelmingly republican as either Kansas or Iowa. It will fortify the republican majority in the Senate by two senators, at a time when the democrats are calculating upon the early control of that body. If we can judge the democratic House by its predecessors of like politics, Dakota will be kept knocking at the gate as long as the House remains democratic. Or, perhaps, a compromise will be effected, and Dakota admitted to her rights simultaneously with the carving of Texas into four states.

CITIZENS' MEMORIAL ASKING FOR CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION LAW

On or about the tenth day of the session of the Legislature of 1885, a memorial was presented in the council, signed by a numerous body of citizens, asking for the enactment of a law calling a constitutional convention for that portion of Dakota south of the 40th parallel, with the view to its admission as a state. The memorial fairly bristled with substantial arguments supporting the ultimate object sought to be accomplished, and is entitled to a place in the territorial history. It is here given in full:

A MEMORIAL TO THE LEGISLATURE OF DAKOTA TERRITORY

Your memorialists respectfully represent that the interests of the people of Dakota, material, political and moral; their numbers, area, and resources; their rights under the Constitution; their rights under the guarantees of the Ordinance of 1787; their rights under the treaty with France, of 1803, by which their territory was acquired; and the unanimous wishes of all its people, as evinced by the Legislature of 1881 for a constitutional convention; by the votes of the people of South Dakota at the Huron and Sioux Falls conventions of 1883; and by the resolutions of the democratic and republican conventions of 1884, demand in the strongest terms the division of the territory and the admission of the southern half as a state in the Union.

That the people of Dakota have an undoubted right to proceed to form a state constitution and a state government for South Dakota, and for North Dakota, if the people of that section so desire. That we need no enabling acts of Congress to exercise these rights.

That the recent vote of this territory demonstrates that Dakota has a population of 500,000; larger than two Colorados, five Delawares, three Floridas, twelve Nevadas, two New Hampshires, three Oregons, two Rhode Islands or two Vermonts. It covers a territory of 150,932 square miles, equal to the combined area of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio and West Virginia, less 1,954 square miles, as will be seen by the following table which gives the area in square miles of each of these states:

Maine, 35,000; Connecticut, 4,750; Ohio, 39,964; New Hampshire, 9,290; Massachusetts, 7,800; Vermont, 10,212; Rhode Island, 1,300; New Jersey, 8,320; Delaware, 2,120; West Virginia, 23,000; Maryland, 11,124. Total, 152,885. Dakota, alone, 150,932.

Or Dakota equals in area the combined States of New York, with 47,000 square miles; Pennsylvania, 46,000; Ohio, 39,964; Maryland, 11,124; Massachusetts, 7,800. Total, 151,888. Dakota, 150,932, less than the five great states, only 956 square miles.

Dakota equals in area the combined areas of Illinois, 55,410; Indiana, 33,809; Michigan, 56,451; Connecticut, 4,750; Kansas and Nebraska combined, the former, 81,318, and the latter, 75,990, were larger by 6,381 square miles.

As a territory it pays more internal revenue tax than either Delaware, Florida, Nevada, or Vermont, and more postoffice revenue than thirteen of the states, to wit: New Hampshire, $339,000; Rhode Island, $317,000; Delaware, $95,000; West Virginia, $227,000; North Carolina, $319,000; South Carolina, $250,000; Florida, $192,000; Alabama, $315,000; Mississippi, $246,000; Arkansas, $254,000; Oregon, $208,000; Nevada, $97,000; District of Columbia, $283,050. Dakota, $367,000, and has more banks and bank capital than five states.

Therefore it is demonstrated beyond contradiction that we have the territory, the population and the resources, to entitle us to two states.

We have the right to form a state government without the permission of Congress. This is demonstrated by the precedents of thirteen states, to wit: Vermont, Kentucky, Tennessee, Maine, Michigan, Arkansas, Florida, Iowa, Wisconsin, California, Kansas, Oregon, Nevada. Congress justified all these states by admitting them, under their constitutions formed without its permission. It admitted most of them without a struggle. It made a struggle with Kansas, and refused her admission, and the political party which perpetrated this outrage, as a consequence, was hurled from power for twenty-four years. That party has but just regained power. Do you think it will desire to go out of power again upon such another struggle?

Let Dakota stand upon her rights, and assert them, and act upon them. Let her go to Congress no longer as a supplicant or petitioner, but as a body of American citizens to their servants, and demand her rights. Let her say to the party in power in Congress, in the words of the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Dred Scott vs. Standford: "You have no power to hold this people as a territory permanently, but you are bound to admit us as soon as our population and situation entitle us to admission."

If you refuse us admission we will go to the people of the United States on that question, and turn you out of power. That is the language for a free people, who are American citizens and have rights guaranteed by treaty and compact, which are irreversible without our consent.

This right to frame a state constitution and state government for ourselves has been affirmed by the Congress of the United States, by the Supreme Court of Michigan by the Supreme Court of the United States, by the most eminent statesmen and lawyers of America. Among these are George Washington, Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams, Zachary Taylor, James Buchanan, Thomas Morris, Thomas L. Harmer.

The State of Michigan put the doctrine of the right of the people of a territory to form a state government without permission of Congress, whenever they had the population and territory to support a state government, and the people willed it, into practical operation to its fullest extent. They convoked a constitutional convention, adopted a constitution, elected state officers, and inaugurated a state government without any enabling act of Congress. Their Legislature enacted laws, their courts exercised jurisdiction, their people paid state taxes. And the Supreme Court of Michigan adjudged all these acts to be legal and valid. And the Supreme Court of the United States confirmed this decision by declaring the subject to be beyond their powers. Congress decided in favor of Michigan's action and endorsed the doctrine of its courts by a vote of 153 ayes to 45 nays in the House, and 24 ayes to 18 nays in the Senate.

Afterwards, Iowa, Florida, California and Wisconsin were admitted upon the same doctrine, under constitutions formed without an enabling act, without a struggle. So that Congress has re-affirmed the Michigan doctrine five times since its first decision.

The Ordinance of 1787 was extended over Dakota by four successive acts of Congress— that of June 28, 1834, of April 20, 1826, of May 31, 1838, and of March 3, 1849. The Supreme Court of Michigan decided that that ordinance was a compact with the people of a territory who settled it under the pledges of the ordinance, and that this compact was irreversible without the consent of the people of the territory. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Cooper vs. Roberts, 18 Howard 340, also decided that that contract was irreversible without the consent of the people of the territory. The ordinance itself reads as follows:

"The following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original states and the people and states in said territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent."

The act of Congress of 1836, April 29, is as follows:

"The inhabitants of the said territory (Wisconsin, then including Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakota), shall be entitled to, and enjoy, all and singular, the rights, privileges and advantages guaranteed and secured to the people of the territory of the United States north-west of the River Ohio, by the articles of compact contained in the ordinance for the government of the said territory, passed on the 13th day of July, 1787. And the said inhabitants shall also be entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities heretofore granted and secured to the State of Michigan, and to its inhabitants."

Now, one of these rights was, "that whenever one of the states (meaning any state formed out of that territory), shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein, such states shall be admitted by its delegates into the Congress of the United States on an equal footing with the original states in all respects forever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and state government." See Ordinance, 1787, I, Statutes at Large, page 52.

Therefore we claim that that part of Dakota south of the 46th parallel with over three hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, and over eighty thousand square miles of area, has the same right that Michigan had to frame its constitution and state government.

We therefore respectfully memorialize your honorable body, to pass at this session an act convening a constitutional convention, and convening it to meet as soon as practicable hereafter, for the purpose of framing a constitution and state government for the people of Dakota, south of the 46th parallel. We ask for this action on the part of the Legislature,

- 1st. Because it is the legal right of the people of Dakota.
- 2d. It is the most practical means of securing the opening of the Sioux Reservation.
- 3d. It will give the people the sovereign control over their railroads and power which they do not possess to correct the evils under which they labor.
- 4th. It will stimulate all branches of trade and business, and enhance the values of property.
- 5th. It will give the people the power to limit and control their state and municipal indebtedness.
- 6th. It will give the people the benefit of their school lands, and in that much reduce taxation.
- 7th. It will settle the capital question and leave the people of South Dakota the right to select their own capital.
- 8th. It will secure to the people the rights of all American citizens to regulate and control their own domestic affairs.
- 9th. It will put an end to an unauthorized and usurping colonial dependency, which by right should have ceased long ago, and to the exercise of a power which the Supreme Court of the United States has declared has ever been jealously guarded by the American people, as contrary to the genius and spirit of our free institutions.

This memorial was followed by the introduction of a bill by Councilman Washabaugh, of Lawrence County, to authorize and provide for holding a constitutional convention for that part of the Territory of Dakota lying south of the 46th parallel of north latitude, for the purpose of framing a state constitution. The convention was appointed to be held in the City of Sioux Falls on the 20th of the following September, to be composed of 111 delegates or one delegate to each 500 votes cast at the election in 1884. An appropriation was provided for to defray the expenses of the convention, to be paid in the first instance by the territory, but the counties comprising the southern half were to pay a special tax for the purpose of reimbursing the territory. The provisions of the bill were similar to the one passed by the Legislature of 1883, which was vetoed or pocketed by Governor Ordway. The preamble of the bill recited that:

Whereas, Experience has abundantly demonstrated that the welfare of the people is promoted by the establishment among them of a permanent government, sovereign in character and republican in form; and

Whereas, The territorial system of government has no stability, is temporary in character, possesses no sovereign powers, and meets neither the requirements of the people nor, in the case of Dakota, the rapidly increasing demands of its varied and growing interests; and,

Whereas, It has ever been and still remains the wise policy of the parent Government to foster and encourage the development and settlement of the territories until such time as their population shall be sufficiently numerous to entitle the people to become admitted into and become a part of the United States on an equal footing with the states which compose the Union; and,

Whereas, That part of the Territory of Dakota south of the 46th parallel of north latitude now contains a population sufficient to entitle it to admission into the Union, and such population now being desirous of being fully enfranchised and of enjoying all the privileges of American citizenship; and,

Whereas, Public opinion in the United States has decided, and the Congress of the United States, by their action upon the bill for the admission of such part of Dakota into the Union, has admitted that that portion of Dakota south of the 46th parallel does possess the requisite population and all other qualifications necessary to entitle it to admission into the Union as a state; therefore,

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota:

Section 1. That for the purpose of enabling the people of that part of Dakota south of the 46th parallel to organize and form a state government and make application for admission into the Union of States, a delegate convention is hereby called to meet at the City of Sioux Falls, in the County of Minnehaha, in said Territory of Dakota, on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, A. D. 1885, at 12 o'clock, meridian, for the purpose of framing a constitution, republican in form, and performing all other things essential to the preparation of the territory for making application to the general Government for the admission of such part of Dakota into the Union of States.

The election of delegates to said convention will be held on the 1st day of September, 1885.

The said convention shall be composed of 111 delegates, who shall be apportioned among the several counties of that part of the territory south of the 46th parallel as follows:

Name of County.	No. of Del.	Name of County.	No. of Del.
Aurora	2	McPherson	1
Bon Homme	3	Beadle	5
Buffalo	1	Brookings	3
Brule	3	Brown	4
Campbell	1	Turner	4
Charles Mix	1	Walworth	1
Clay	2	Moody	2
Custer	1	Potter	1
Day	2	Sanborn	2
Douglas	2	Sully	2
Fall River	1	Union	3
Lawrence	8	Yankton	4
McCook	2	Butte	1
Miner	2	Clark	2
Minnehaha	6	Codington	2
Pennington	2	Davison	2
Roberts	1	Deuel	1
Spink	6	Edmunds	1
Grant	2	Faulk	1
Hand	3	Hamlin	1
Hughes	3	Hanson	2
Hyde	1	Hutchinson	3
Kingsbury	2	Jerauld	2
Lake	2
Lincoln	2	Total	111

Provided, That all organized counties in the territory south of the 46th parallel, at the time the election hereinafter provided for is held to choose members to said convention and which counties are not above named, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall be given a seat and have a vote in said convention as other members thereof, and said delegates shall be in addition to the 111 heretofore provided for.

Sec. 3. An election for the purpose of choosing said delegates is hereby appointed to be held on the 30th day of June (Tuesday), 1885, at which time the delegates to the said constitutional convention shall be chosen. Said election shall be conducted in all respects as elections under the general laws of this territory, and the several county clerks of the several counties of the territory are hereby required to issue notice of such election at least twenty days prior thereto, stating the object of such election and the number and character of the officers to be chosen, and shall deliver the same to the sheriff, who is required to post the same as the law now requires. And the several boards of county commissioners are required to establish precincts for such election, and to appoint polling places, and judges of such election, and to do and perform all things that are now required of them by law in the case of general elections. And the canvass and return of the votes shall be as now required by law for county officers. And it is hereby made the duty of the several county clerks to issue certificates of election to all persons who shall be declared elected. Provided, That the persons receiving the highest number of votes at such election shall be elected as such delegates. It shall be the further duty of such county clerks, within ten days after such election, to certify to the secretary of the territory the names of all persons chosen as such delegates from their respective counties, and to transmit the same to said secretary by mail.

Sec. 4. The secretary of the territory shall receive all certificates so transmitted to him by the several county clerks, and shall preserve the same, and it is hereby made his duty to enter the names of all persons so certified to him as such delegates in a book which he shall provide for that purpose.

Sec. 5. The delegates so elected at such election shall meet at the time and place appointed by the act, and in such room as the secretary of the territory, or the convention, has provided, and at the hour heretofore named. The secretary of the territory, or some member-elect of said convention, shall call the convention to order, and shall call the roll of the members from the book heretofore provided, if such book can be obtained, and if not, from the official returns of said election, and the certificate of election of each member, in such manner as the convention shall prescribe, and the several delegates, as their names are called, shall take their seats in said convention. When the calling of the roll of members shall be completed the several delegates shall be required to take and subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to faithfully and impartially discharge their duties as delegates to said convention. Said oath may be administered by said secretary or by any judicial officer of the territory. The convention shall then proceed to organize by the election of a president, who shall be chosen from among the delegates, and the other officers herein provided for. Said convention shall adopt such rules and regulations for their government as are provided in the case of legislative bodies. It may adjourn from time to time, and shall be the sole judge of the election and qualification of its members. The president and all officers of said convention shall take and subscribe an oath to faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their respective offices.

Sec. 6. Said convention, after its organization, shall proceed to draft a constitution for that portion of Dakota south of the 46th parallel, republican in form, in which shall be defined the boundaries of the proposed state south of the 46th parallel. It shall be the further duty of said convention to provide for an election by the people of the proposed state, at which election the said constitution shall be submitted to the people for ratification, and at which election the state officers, members of Congress, members of the Legislature, and all other officers provided for in said constitution, shall be elected. And the said convention shall have power to provide all necessary means for holding said election, and for reassembling said Legislature when elected, and for carrying into effect all the purposes of said constitution. Provided, That the expenses of all special elections under the provisions of this act, and of any ordinance of said convention, shall be paid by each county in that part of said Territory of Dakota south of the 46th parallel, respectively, in the manner hereinafter provided.

Sec. 7. The delegates to the said constitutional convention shall each receive a per diem of two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50) for each day's attendance upon said convention, and 5 cents per mile for each mile necessarily traveled in going to and returning from said convention, said per diem and mileage to be paid by the territorial treasurer upon the warrant of the territorial auditor.

Sec. 8. The territorial auditor is hereby authorized to audit and allow the accounts of the several delegates to said convention, upon certificates of the presiding officer of said convention, countersigned by the secretary thereof.

Sec. 9. Said convention shall have power to elect a secretary, assistant secretary, employ stenographers, a chaplain, sergeant-at-arms, messengers and clerks, and janitor, each of whom shall receive such compensation as the said convention shall determine, to be audited and paid in the same manner as the accounts of the members of said convention are audited and paid; Provided, That said convention, before its adjournment, shall ascertain the entire expense of holding the same, including the per diem and mileage of its members, compensation of its officers, and all necessary expenses, and shall certify the same under the hand of the presiding officer of said convention and attested by the secretary thereof, to the secretary of the territory, which shall be filed by said secretary of the territory in his office and be kept as a record thereof. And it is hereby made the duty of the several boards of county commissioners of the counties named herein or represented in said convention to cause to be levied and collected, in the same manner as other taxes are levied and collected, a special tax sufficient to pay all of said expenses, which tax shall be apportioned among the said counties in proportion to the assessed valuation. And when said tax is collected in each of said counties, the same shall be paid by said counties into the territorial treasury. Provided, That in case of the division of the Territory of Dakota, or the admission of the southern half as a state before the collection and payment of said tax into the territorial treasury as herein provided, then the treasurer of said state or territory formed from that portion of Dakota south of the 40th parallel, as the case may be, shall pay over to the Territory of North Dakota such proportion of said moneys as the assessed valuation of the property in North Dakota bears to the assessed valuation of property in South Dakota, in said new state or territory.

Sec. 10. The laws now in force governing elections, and the canvass and return of the votes cast therein, and the qualifications of voters, shall govern in any election that may be held under this act or under any ordinance of said convention. But said convention shall designate the board of state canvassers, and ordain the method by which the result of the state election shall be promulgated. The said convention shall also provide the manner of presenting the said constitution to the Congress of the United States, and do and ordain all things necessary to be done for the purpose of carrying into effect the government of the state, as soon as it shall be admitted into the Union of States.

Sec. 11. That the members of said convention shall not receive pay for a session of more than thirty days, but said convention may sit for a longer period, and may adjourn from time to time.

Sec. 12. That for the purpose of defraying the expenses of said convention, there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the territorial treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to defray the expenses of said convention, not to exceed in the aggregate $20,000.

Sec. 13. This act shall take effect after its passage and approval.

Approved March 9, 1885.

This constitutional convention bill was the most important measure acted upon at this session. The constitution framed under it was, after waiting a period of four years, adopted a second time by a vote of the people, and under it South Dakota was admitted to the Union.

As the time drew near for holding the election for delegates to the convention, June 30th, the democratic territorial committee and the democratic committees of several counties, issued formal notice that the democrats would not participate in this election. It was claimed at the time that the democrats who took this position were influenced by the change in the national administration, and desired the territorial condition to continue, now that they were assured of democratic territorial officials, and further that the democratic sentiment in Congress was opposed to statehood for Dakota if the division of the territory was insisted upon.

When the day of election came, it was strikingly manifest that the feeling in favor of the state movement among a portion of the democratic party had grown lukewarm, a light vote at all precincts being the rule, but the vote that was cast exhibited an encouraging majority for the state. One feature of the law, designed with the best motive, required the various counties of the proposed state to levy a special tax to defray the expense of the election and convention, in order that the northern counties might not be chargeable for it, and this provision, not being fairly interpreted, operated to reduce the vote and actually prevented the holding of an election in a very few counties. Then again it was claimed that the election was held at a season when the farmers were busy, the polling places were inconveniently located, hence the agriculturally employed only partially participated. And possibly the most serious hindrance to getting a larger vote was the very prevalent opinion that the election was largely for "buncombe," that until Congress authorized the movement nothing of importance could be gained, hence there was nothing to be derived by holding the election or convention. This view was quite generally held, even among those who favored the proceedings for a constitutional convention, these latter being encouraged by the belief that Congress would be influenced to early favorable action when confronted with the earnest desire of the people for statehood as expressed in a state constitution voluntarily and lawfully constructed, and all the expenses of the movement defrayed from the purses of the people to be benefitted by it. And there is no question that this influence was felt and acknowledged by Congress, the best evidence of which is furnished in the action of Congress later when it finally decided to admit the state in accordance with the wishes of the people. The constitution framed by this convention was accepted by the Congress without material change, an election authorized for the purpose of voting upon its adoption (though this had been already done, but without the authority of the parent government), and to "make a long story short," as the saying is, South Dakota, as a state is today governed by the constitution framed, under so many doubts and drawbacks, at Sioux Falls, in 1885.

The convention assembled at 12 o'clock M., Tuesday, September 8, 1885, at Germania Hall, Sioux Falls. Seventy-two delegates out of the 102 composing the entire body were present, and was called to order by Secretary of the Territory James H. Teller, as provided by law, who proceeded to call the roll of members elected, as follows:

Aurora County: H. F. Fellows, Matt. A. Ryan. Beadle: J. H. More, J. K. P. McCallum, F. F. B. Coffin. S. C. Weatherwax, J. M. Baker. Bon Homme: Geo. W. Snow, Robert Dollard, Daniel Wilcox. Brookings: Miles White, Warren M. Wright, R. C. Walton. Brown: J. D. Mason, C. J. C. McLeod, George R. Laybourne, J. T. Dow. Brule: A. G. Kellam, C. J. Maynard, C. M. Gregory. Buffalo: Robert J. Brown. Butte: H. J. Grant. Campbell: Frank Alexander. Charles Mix: Thomas Edes. Clark: John E. Bennett, R. A. Proudfoot. Codington: S. G. Updyke, I. M. Westfall. Clay: John M. Cleland, J. M. Schultz. Custer: Stephen M. Booth. Deuel: Charles S. Lowe. Edmunds: S. H. Cranmer. Faulk: E. M. Jessup. Grant: Henry Neill, N. I. Lothian. Hamlin: C. E. Andrus. Hand: L. W. Lansing, H. M. Smith, M. E. Williams. Hanson: W. H. Murphy, Isaac Gray, Sr. Hughes: James A. Ward, Samuel Miller, William A. Lichtenwallner. Hutchinson: David Bellon, C. Buechler, William Harding. Hyde: George C. Crose. Jerauld: S. H. Huntley, Albert Gunderson. Kingsbury: John A. Owen, H. H. Sheets. Lake: George L. Wright, Wm. McGrath. Lawrence: G. C. Moody, D. Corson, Kirk G. Phillips, Frank C. Ayers, W. H. Parker, John Johnson, Leo H. Weeden, Alpheus E. Frank. Lincoln: J. W. Taylor, Jeremiah Gehon. McPherson: Frank Gault, Sr. McCook: T. H. Conniff, W. H. Goddard. Miner: Stephen A. Jones, John H. Patten. Minnehaha: W. W. Brookings, E. P. Beebe, A. J. Berdahl, C. S. Gifford, J. B. Goddard, E. T. Oaks. Pennington: J. W. Fowler, Alexander Mitchell. Potter: Willis C. Stone. Roberts: W. G. Ashton. Sanborn: Robert Dott, Theodore D. Kamouse. Spink: J. B. Churchill, F. I. Fisher, C. H. Meyers, G. C. Britton, George Boyer, F. H. Craig. Sully: H. F. Pendleton, C. M. Reed. Turner: A. Haines, Joseph Allen, M. C. Tychsen, R. C. Tousley. Union: John Dahl, J. P. Kendall, H. H. Blair. Walworth: B. B. Potter. Yankton: A. J. Edgerton, Joseph Ward, J. R. Hanson, H. J. Campbell.

It had been practically agreed to make Judge A. J. Edgerton chairman of the convention. Hon. G. C. Moody, of Deadwood, had been urged to be a candidate, but he refused to permit the use of his name. He would be of more service on the floor.

The counties of Day, Davison, Douglas, Fall River and Moody had held no elections, which reduced the number of delegates from 111 to 102. There were forty-two counties represented out of forty-seven organized. At the completion of the first roll call, with Secretary Teller presiding, Chief Justice Edgerton was elected president of the convention, and upon assuming the chair delivered the following brief address:

Gentlemen, I return to you my sincere thanks for this expression of your confidence. This distinguished honor is unexpected and unsought, and I might add, undesired. To be a member of a convention called to form the organic law of a great commonwealth is a distinguished honor. To be selected to preside over its deliberations requires a peculiar training and experience which I do not claim, and I am constrained to accept the place only in consideration of the manner in which it was bestowed, and the further fact that the personnel of this body assures me that in the discharge of the trying duties imposed I shall receive your kind indulgence.

We have met here under peculiar circumstances. Congress has passed no enabling act. The Legislature of this territory, last winter authorized delegates elect from Southern Dakota to meet for the purpose of forming a constitution, republican in form, and in performing all other things essential to the preparation of the territory for making application to the general Government for the admission of such part of Dakota into the Union of states. The territory has about 150,000 square miles, and if divided on the proposed line, each portion will have about 75,000 square miles or thereabouts. Our growth has been phenomenal in products, in wealth, in population. The number of inhabitants in the territory is now 415,064, as ascertained by the recent census, of which North Dakota has 152,109, and South Dakota, 243,465.

This portion of Dakota has today a greater population than any territory ever admitted into the Union. It has greater wealth and pays annually more taxes. It has more organized and equipped public institutions than any other territory ever had since the formation of the government. Under such circumstances is it not reasonable that our people should desire admission? Our duty here under the circumstances may be a delicate one, but it is nevertheless a plain one, and requiring knowledge, judgment, and patriotism in its performance. Our deliberations should, as I have no doubt they will, be characterized by the utmost prudence and discretion.

It is said by some that our acts here will be useless from the fact that our enemies will never consent to division and admission. The men who thus prophesy must cruelly judge, as I think, the foremost statesmen of the nation. I have that confidence in the patriotism, the justice and the sound judgment which have generally characterized the public acts of these leaders, which induces me to believe that they will act wisely when the question is fully presented. But whatever may be the determination of the President and the Congress of the United States, whether in accord with the wishes of our people and the best interests of the nation or otherwise, we shall acquiesce obediently, although if the decision be against us, reluctantly.

Let us bring to the discharge of our duties here all the light which experience can furnish us and all the judgment and wisdom which nature and education have endowed us with. Possibly in the future, when this commonwealth has grown to be great and to be one of the leading states of the Union, standing abreast of her sister states on the east and south, it may not be said of us as it frequently is of the framers of their constitutions, that they builded better than they knew, but it is sufficient to fill the measure of a good man's ambition to feel assured that those who come after should be able to say, "they builded as well as they knew."

The convention then elected John Cain, of Huron, secretary and A. B. Avery, of Sioux Falls, assistant secretary. M. B. Kent, of Union County, was elected sergeant-at-arms.

At this point, Henry Neill, from the Grant County delegation, arose and presented the following preamble and resolution, to-wit:

Whereas, The Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota assumed the right to authorize the calling of a constitutional convention for that portion of the territory south of the 46th parallel, a movement which ought to have its origin from the people themselves of that portion of the territory affected thereby, and

Whereas, It is not the desire of the people of this territory that the same should be divided and said portion admitted separately to statehood, but that they desire admission as a whole, therefore be it

Resolved, That this convention do now adjourn, sine die.

The resolution was laid on the table by a vote of 59 to 12, the following members supporting it or voting against laying it on the table, namely: Messrs. Andrus, of Hamlin County; Cranmer, of Edmunds County; Dow, Mason, McLeod and Laybourne, of Brown County; Gault, of McPherson County; Lewthian and Neill, of Grant County; Potter, of Walworth; Tousley, of Lincoln; and Westfall, of Cedington. The claim was made by a portion of those who opposed tabling the resolutions, that their purpose was to get the subject before the convention for discussion in order to learn the reasons for the opposition of the anti-divisionists.

A committee was appointed on rules and order of business, and the employment of additional officers, consisting of Judge Moody, of Lawrence County; T. D. Kanouse, of Sanborn; W. W. Brookings, of Minnehaha; H. J. Campbell, of Yankton; and Henry Neill, of Grant. This committee was made up of a member from each faction supposed to be represented, to-wit: Kanouse, prohibitionist; Campbell, ultra state rights; Neill, favor of one state for all Dakota; Moody, for division and admission without entangling alliances, with Brookings on the same platform. The convention adjourned after the appointment of this committee until 10 o'clock the next day, when the thirty absent members were expected to be present.

The convention assembled the second day at 9 o'clock A. M., and was opened with prayer by Rev. A. Jamieson. The number of delegates present was eighty-six. Judge G. C. Moody, from the Committee on Rules and Order of Business reported as follows. We give a synopsis containing the substance:

The rules provided that a majority should constitute a quorum.

That a daily journal shall be kept and published in pamphlet form.

Ten members may demand the yeas and nays.

Two-thirds may expel a member.

No outsiders except newspaper reporters shall be admitted within the bar except by invitation.

No smoking allowed.

Every member shall vote unless excused.

One-third of the members present may demand a call of the House.

Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice adopted.

Salary of secretary and assistant, $5 per day each. Engrossing and enrolling clerk, $4 per day. Sergeant-at-arms, $3. Doorkeeper and janitor, $2.50 each. Two messengers, $2 each. Four stenographers, same pay as for court services, but only one transcript to be paid for.

Expenses of the convention to be audited by the committee, approved by the president and submitted to the convention for final action.

Thirty-four standing committees provided for.

The report was adopted.

The president desiring further time to make up the list of committees a recess was taken until 4 o'clock P. M., at which time the body convened and the president announced the appointment of the following standing committees:

Judiciary—Moody, of Lawrence County; Kellam, of Brule; Campbell, of Yankton; Brookings, of Minnehaha; Dollard, of Bon Homme; Lichtenwallner, of Hughes; McCallum, of Beadle; Taylor, of Lincoln; Corson, of Lawrence; Haines, of Turner; Owen, of Kingsbury; Wright, of Brookings; Fowler, of Pennington.

Executive and Administrative—Kellam, of Brule; Weeden, of Lawrence; Ryan, of Aurora; Walton, of Brookings; Grant, of Butte; Gault, of McPherson; Mason, of Brown.

Legislative—Kanouse, of Sanborn County; Hanson, of Yankton; Jones, of Miner; Lowthian, of Grant; Snow, of Bon Homme; Maynard, of Brule; Grant, of Butte.

Education and School Lands—More, of Beadle; Ward, of Yankton; Updyke, of Codington; Owen, of Kingsbury; Phillips, of Lawrence; McLeod, of Brown; Miller, of Hughes; Myers, of Spink; Haines, of Turner.

Congressional and Legislative Apportionment—Dollard, of Bon Homme; Fisher, of Spink; Frank, of Lawrence; Baker, of Beadle; Wright, of Brookings; Mason, of Brown; Gregory, of Brule; Booth, of Custer; Lowe, of Deuel; Lichtenwallner, of Hughes; Tousley, of Turner; Goddard, of Minnehaha; Schultz, of Clay.

Seal of State, Coat of Arms and Design of Same—Cleland, of Clay; Ward, of Yankton; McCallum, of Beadle; Blair, of Union; Miller, of Hughes; Westfall, of Codington; Gray, of Hanson.

Printing—Neill, of Grant; Gunderson, of Jerauld; Tousley, of Turner; Cranmer, of Edmunds; Jessup, of Faulk.

Bill of Rights—Owen, of Kingsbury; Moore, of Beadle; Craig, of Spink; Gifford, of Lincoln; Goddard, of Minnesota.

Election and Rights of Suffrage—Westfall, of Codington; Dow, of Brown; McCallum, of Beadle; Ward, of Hughes; Parker, of Lawrence; Campbell, of Yankton; Lansing, of Hand.

Name, Boundaries and Seat of Government of State—Frank, of Lawrence; Patten, of Miner; Fisher, of Spink; Blair, of Union; Reed, of Sully; Lothian, of Grant; Murphy, of Hanson.

Federal Relations—Fowler, of Pennington; Ashton, of Roberts; Andrus, of Hamlin; Baker, of Beadle; Bellou, of Hutchinson.

Municipal Corporations—Wright, of Brookings; Buechler, of Hutchinson; Murphy, of Hanson; Tyehsen, of Turner; Bebee, of Minnehaha.

Corporations other than Banking or Municipal—Ward, of Hughes; Brookings, of Minnehaha; Britton, of Spink; Hanson, of Yankton; Jessup, of Faulk; Lansing, of Hand; Laybourne, of Brown; Conniff, of McCook; Ellis, of Charles Mix; Ryan, of Aurora; Gehon, of Lincoln; Gray, of Hanson; Gault, of McPherson.

County and Township Organization—Allen, of Turner; Coffin, of Beadle; Berdahl, of Minnehaha; Brown, of Buffalo; Buechler, of Hutchinson; Churchill, of Spink; Crose, of Hyde.

State, County and Municipal Indebtedness—Carson, of Lawrence; Tyehsen, of Turner; Andrus, of Hamlin; Baker, of Beadle; Bebee, of Minnehaha; Bellou, of Hutchinson; Churchill, of Spink; Cranmer, of Edmunds; Dow, of Brown.

Revenue and Finance—Reed, of Sully; Allen, of Turner; Churchill, of Spink; Crose, of Hyde; Goddard, of Minnehaha; Potter, of Walworth; White, of Brookings.

Public Accounts and Expenditures—Williams, of Hand; Huntley, of Jerauld; Kendall, of Union; Laybourne, of Brown; Maynard, of Brule; Oakes, of Minnehaha; Ryan, of Aurora.

State Institutions and Public Buildings, including Penitentiaries and other Reformatory Institutions—Fisher, of Spink; McLeod, of Brown; Walton, of Brookings; Ward, of Yankton; Oakes, of Minnehaha; Cleland, of Clay; Fellows, of Aurora; Wright, of Lake; Kanouse, of Sanborn.

Mines, Mining and Water Rights—Booth, of Custer; Hanson, of Yankton; Gifford, of Lincoln; Frank, of Lawrence; Grant, of Butte; Fowler, of Pennington; Phillips, of Lawrence.

Roads, Bridges and other Internal Improvements—Blair, of Union; Craig, of Spink; Weeden, of Lawrence; Pendleton, of Sully; Patten, of Miner; Weatherwax, of Beadle; Crose, of Hyde.

Exemptions, Real and Personal—Bellou, of Hutchinson; Allen, of Turner; Craig, of Spink; Dahl, of Union; Elfes, of Charles Mix; Gehon, of Lincoln; Gray, of Hanson; Gunderson, of Jerauld; Wright, of Lake.

Rights of Married Women—Coffin, of Beadle; Gault, of McPherson; Fellows, of Aurora; Westfall, of Codington; Haines, of Turner; Goddard, of Minnehaha; Cranmer, of Edmunds.

Military Affairs—Taylor, of Lincoln; Weatherwax, of Beadle; Tonsley, of Turner; Huntley, of Jerauld; Jones, of Miner; Sheets, of Kingsbury; Buechler, of Hutchinson.

Banking and Currency—Bebee, of Minnehaha; Jessup, of Faulk; Andrus, of Hamlin; Goddard, of McCook; Stone, of Potter; Cranmer, of Edmunds; Alexander, of Campbell.

Amendments and Revision of the Constitution—Dow, of Brown; Corson, of Lawrence; Ashton, of Roberts; Britton, of Spink; Reed, of Sully; Stone, of Potter; Gifford, of Lincoln.

Schedule—Campbell, of Yankton; Kellam, of Brule; Dollard, of Bon Homme; Ward, of Hughes; Booth, of Custer; Kanouse, of Sanborn; Neill, of Grant; Lansing, of Hand; Patten, of Miner; Coffin, of Beadle; Huntley, of Jerauld; Conniff, of McCook; McGrath, of Lake.

Miscellaneous Subjects—Alexander, of Campbell; White, of Brookings; Mason, of Brown; Brown, of Buffalo; Elfes, of Charles Mix; Schultz, of Clay; Gunderson, of Jerauld.

Compensation of Public Officers—Brookings, of Minnehaha; Snow, of Bon Homme; Laybourne, of Brown; Phillips, of Lawrence; Taylor, of Lincoln; Cleveland, of Clay; Lowthian, of Grant.

Arrangement and Phraseology of the Constitution—Ward, of Yankton; Moody, of Lawrence; Moore, of Beadle; Lichtenwallner, of Hughes; Meyers, of Spink; Neill, of Grant; Walton, of Brookings; Williams, of Hand; Wright, of Lake.

Manufactures and Agriculture—Myers, of Spink; Gregory, of Brule; Brown, of Buffalo; Kendall, of Union; Conniff, of Minnehaha; Sytone, of Potter; Pendleton, of Sully; Snow, of Bon Homme.

Engrossment and Enrollment—Potter, of Walworth; Pendleton, of Sully; Sheets, of Kingsbury; Dahl, of Union; McGrath, of Lake.

Expenses and Disbursements of this Convention—Fellows, of Aurora; Murphy, of Hanson; Snow, of Bon Homme; Weatherwax, of Beadle; Gregory, of Brule.

Preamble—Updyke, of Codington; Parker, of Lawrence; Berdahl, of Minnehaha; Williams, of Hand; Britten, of Spink.

John A. Owen, of Kingsbury County, arose and said he had not discovered in the list of committees, any for the consideration of matters pertaining to prohibition, unless it might be the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects, and the matter was too important to be thus treated. He therefore introduced a resolution providing for a committee of nine on prohibition, to be appointed by the chair, to whom all resolutions and petitions upon the subject should be referred.

Mr. Owen's resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Owen then introduced the resolution following pursuant to direction of the Kingsbury County Temperance Union:

Resolved, That no person or corporation shall manufacture for sale any intoxicating liquor, or shall keep for sale such liquor as a beverage. The Legislature shall by law, prescribe regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this section, and provide suitable penalties for the violation thereof.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Prohibition, which was appointed by the president consisting of Owen, of Kingsbury; Goddard, of Minnehaha; Moore, of Beadle; Jessup, of Faulk; Walton, of Brookings; Dow, of Brown; Lichtenwallner, of Hughes; Phillips, of Lawrence; Gault, of McPherson.

The president announced the appointments of Sawyer G. Carter, of Lincoln, as doorkeeper, and William Bullivan and George Grigsby, as messengers.

The third day's session was opened with prayer, after which the president announced the appointment of stenographers, as follows: T. G. Brown, of Sioux Falls; I. W. Goodner, of Huron; E. A. Maglene, of Yankton; and Mrs. J. D. Washburne, of Yankton.

The remainder of this day's session was occupied in discussing the subject of providing a printed daily report of the proceedings of the convention as kept by the stenographers, which was finally disposed of by a resolution instructing the printing committee to secure the printing of 250 copies of the daily proceedings for distribution on the desks of the members each morning.

On motion of Ward, of Hughes County, the several standing committees were instructed to proceed at once with the business before them.

The Committee on Rooms and Time of Meeting for the various committees was announced, designating twenty-six places in convenient buildings in the city for committee rooms.

The members were occupied with their committee duties and not much business was transacted in convention for several days, though sessions were regularly held. On the fourth day Henry J. Morris was appointed transcribing clerk, and W. J. McKennen, enrolling clerk.

The arrival of additional members made necessary an increase in the membership of some committees, and the additional number were supplied by the president's assigning the new comers as follows:

Elections and Right of Suffrage—Wilcox, of Bon Homme; Alexander, of Campbell. Municipal Incorporations—Updyke, of Codington. Federal Relations—Proudfoot, of Clark. Executive and Administrative—Smith, of Hand; Wilcox, of Bon Homme. Legislative—Proudfoot, of Clark; Smith, of Hand.

On the ninth day, September 10th, Delegate Ward, of Yankton, presented a petition from forty-five residents of Yankton, praying for the submission of the woman suffrage question to a vote of the people by a separate article—the vote to be taken at the same time as the vote on the constitution.

The following communication was then read by the secretary:

Webster, D. T., September 15, 1885.

Mr. President and Delegates of the Convention:

In your wise deliberations let me implore you in behalf of your sister, mother or wife, to place the women of our glorious territory on an equality before the law with yourselves. Do not force this important question to a vote of the people, remembering that a large majority of them are as ignorant of the advantages freedom would be to them, as were the slaves in the south, who, had they endorsed the action of John Brown at Harper's Ferry in their interest, this country would have been saved the horrors of a terrible war. Give us equality, not to make us manly, but more womanly. We do not aspire to being the "Head of the Family," but are honest and just enough to let each individual possess a "head of their own." Industrial and property rights are now wholly in the keeping of men—the law-makers; therefore how necessary it is that we women have practical equality to defend ourselves against this great odds. Some of your honorable body may claim that this matter is inexpedient to act upon at the present time (in our opinion the opportune time), and is it inexpedient in you to at any time be anything less than just? And in the language of your preeminent president of the convention, "how necessary it is for us to elect only good and honest men to office, and to do this, woman must likewise act her part in the labor of arresting the advance of crime and corruption. Although through timidity (timidity, mark you! also remember what the Bible says about cowards), the politician is slow to invest her with the higher duties and obligations of American citizenship."

As a pecuniary interest to Dakota, what can your convention do more than to make the grandest state in the Union for woman? Then will they emigrate here by thousands, to a land where they are not taxed without a voice in what their money is to be used for, another benefit of no small importance this would prove to our future aggrandizement—in giving to our marriageable men wives that are free instead of slaves.

Gentlemen of the Convention, do yourselves honor by bestowing upon oppressed woman all the privileges in law that you so much enjoy, and thus immortalize yourselves in the third volume of Woman Suffrage history now being edited, as well as securing the heartfelt gratitude of every intelligent (for they only care to vote) woman in this semi-republic. As this country is not governed by the consent of the people, and cannot be with one-half of its citizens disfranchised, it is in no sense a republican form of government, and is, as aptly said by Matilda Joslyn Gage, "The ballot is consent."

Why not now do for us what you can? Why not now do for us what you can to secure this priceless boon?

Very Respectfully,

MARIETTA M. BONES,

Vice President for the National Woman Suffrage Association.

The communication was referred to the suffrage committee under the rule.

The committees were diligent in considering the various subjects referred, and on the fourth day the Committee on Military Affairs submitted its report. And on the seventh day the committee reported the article entitled "Bill of Rights." The Committee on Corporations other than banking, also reported; the legislative committee also; and the committee having charge of the executive department.

The constitution of 1883 proved of great advantage, as a labor saver, to the delegates of this convention. Many of its articles were transplanted to this new document, and hardly any material changes made. Unquestionably the convention had the ability to frame an entirely new document, but such was not their desire, for the constitution of 1883 had already been ratified by a two-thirds vote, indicating that it suited the people, and there had since grown up no demand for new features or changes, therefore the disposition was to respect the text of the constitution of 1883. The bill of rights, the suffrage and prohibition questions occasioned the larger part of the discussions. But the convention showed no disposition to favor adjournment. It was taking ample time to give all subjects consideration and where necessary, reconsideration, and no suggestion of adjournment was made until the third week.

On the 12th day, the following resolution was presented by Mr. McCallum, and referred.

Resolved, That the president of this convention be requested to obtain from the surveyor-general of this territory the information necessary to determine through what organized counties, if any, the 46th parallel of latitude runs, and whether or not said line is the boundary of organized counties, and if not to ascertain the amount of territory of counties not represented in this convention that will be south of the 46th parallel.

Mr. Conniff, member from McCook County, offered the following from the Farmers' Alliance of McCook County, to be incorporated in the constitution:

The right of eminent domain shall never be abridged or so construed as to prevent the Legislature from taking the property and franchises of incorporated companies and subjecting them to public use the same as property of individuals; and the exercise of the police power of the state shall never be abridged, or so construed as to allow their business to be conducted in such manner as to infringe on the equal rights of individuals or the general well-being of the state.

The resolution was referred to the judiciary committee.

Mr. Conniff also presented, from the same alliance, the following:

All railroads and transportation companies are declared to be common carriers, and subject to legislative control, and the Legislature shall have power to enact laws regulating and controlling the rates of charges for transporting passengers and freight as such common carriers from one point to another in this state.

Referred to Committee on Corporations other than Banking or Municipal.
Also the following from the same parties:

The Legislature shall provide such revenue as may be needful by the levy of a tax by valuation, and all property in this state shall bear the burden of taxation equally.

Referred to legislative committee.

Resolutions submitted by member J. R. Hanson, of Yankton:

Railroads are hereby declared to be public highways as well as common carriers, constructed for the convenience and benefit of the people, and are proper subjects of legislative control. As such, no railroad hereafter constructed in this state shall pass within the distance of three miles of any town containing not less than 200 inhabitants without constructing its line of road through said town, and building and maintaining a depot within the town limits for receiving and unloading passengers and freight in the usual manner, unless prevented by natural obstacles, such as rivers and mountains. Provided, that such town and its citizens shall grant the right of way through its limits, and sufficient land for ordinary depot grounds. And no railroad shall establish and maintain any other depot for receiving and unloading passengers and freight within a distance of ten miles of such town.

By Mr. Hanson for woman's suffrage clause:

Whereas, The subject of woman's suffrage has become one of great public interest and demands recognition by this convention; therefore,

Resolved, That the first Legislature that convenes under the provisions of this constitution shall provide by law for submitting this question to be voted upon at the first general election thereafter, and at said election none but women having in all other respects the qualifications enumerated in the article on suffrage in this constitution shall be allowed to vote on this question, and if a majority of the votes so cast shall be in favor of the proposition, then, and in that case, the word "male" shall no longer constitute one of the qualifications of an elector in this state, and women shall forever thereafter become qualified voters and eligible to any office within the gift of the people on an equal footing with the male population of the state. And these rights shall be never, and in no particular, infringed by legislative enactment.

A somewhat notable debate occurred when the report of the committee having the "Bill of Rights" to prepare, was submitted, which was on the fifteenth day of the session. It was considered in committee of the whole, with Cramer, of Edmunds, in the chair. The committee had neglected, through oversight or with the purpose of bringing the subject more prominently before the convention, to incorporate a declaration defining the political power and rights of the people, which being observed by Delegate Hugh J. Campbell, he called attention to the omission, and offered an appropriate clause which he stated he had copied from the Constitution of Pennsylvania adopted in 1870, as follows:

All political power is inherent in the people, and all free government is founded on their authority, and it is constituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right at all times to alter, reform or abolish their form of government in such manner as they may think proper.

Then followed the discussion.

Delegate Neill, of Grant County, was first to offer an opinion. He said:

I don't like the word "abolish" in this proposed section. I object to a revolutionary scheme which proposes to abolish any form of government whatever.

Delegate Campbell replied:

I introduce it because I think it peculiarly adapted to the present state of affairs in regard to Dakota.

Judge Edgerton then took the floor, and said:

I don't know that I should say a word on this occasion, but it has been intimated by the mover that the propriety and necessity for this declaration rests upon the peculiar relations that we this day occupy. In other words, that while Dakota is a territory, and knocking at the doors of the general Government for admission, we have the right to abolish that form of government, and I protest against the declaration. It is not my declaration. I desire in this event that we should present to Congress a constitution which will receive the approbation of Congress. I desire to appeal to them, not declare, that we have an absolute right to establish a different form of government, for I think with such sentiments declared we will not accomplish what we desire. We should appeal to Congress and show them that we have conformed to all that they have required at our hands. That we have sufficient population, sufficient territory, that we have intelligence, that we are law abiding, that we have fulfilled its requirements, and that therefore we ask, as law abiding citizens, that they shall emancipate us from a territorial form of government, but we do not come before them as rebels, with the statement that we have the absolute right to abolish our territorial form of government.

Delegate Campbell then took the floor, and in self-defense, and in reply to Judge Edgerton, spoke as follows:

There was a time, Mr. President, when such sentiments as were just now presented to us from the lips of our president were considered loyal, and the opposition doctrine was considered rebellion. There was a time when it was thought to be revolutionary to say that the power of the government rested upon the authority of the people; but, sir, from the time that Patrick Henry made his speech for Virginia, from the time the Constitution was adopted by this people, and from the time the Declaration of Independence was formed, in which our forefathers did not hesitate to say, in the face of the government they abolished, that the government was based upon the authority of the people; from that time to this I have never heard that doctrine disputed, and I hope the time will never come when the people of Dakota will have less spirit than did their fathers. On this subject what did the people of other states say? There are many men whose heads are getting gray who were boys in 1860 who remember that when the democratic Congress, to whom some men would have us now as before demigods, to whom they would have us bend the knee and bow the head as if they were czars and satraps; as if we were not people of the American Government—what did that democratic Congress say to the people of Kansas? It said you have no power to act until we grant that power. And what did it do? It turned out their Legislature, and forced down their throats the Lecompton constitution. At the end of that administration that party went out of power and did not return for twenty four years. And what did the people of Kansas do? They hurled back to Congress the declaration now proposed here, and you will find it embodied in almost every constitution that has ever been adopted. If such a proposition be treason, I pray God I may always be a traitor.

Judge Campbell's remarks suited the temper and opinion of the delegates, except that he betrayed a partisan feeling that was entirely out of place in a constitutional convention representing the whole people, and there were democrats among the delegates; besides his reference to conditions in Kansas were not pertinent to the situation in Dakota. Neither was it claimed that the delay in Dakota's case was wholly due to democratic opposition. While Pettigrew was delegate division might have been secured had the republican members of Congress been earnest and punctual in their support. But aside from this unnecessary reference to the party character of the opposition, it might have been said that there was neither a democratic or republican member of Congress who would not have cordially approved of the Campbell resolution as a proper reiteration of the broad principle upon which the Government of the United States was founded, and which the American people of all parties cordially and heartily endorsed. And this convention of Dakotans would never vote it down, for that would have been abject hypocrisy. But the issue in Kansas was whether the state should go into the Union as a slave state or a free state. Whether slavery should be regarded as national or sectional. It was the great question that had divided the country and parties from the beginning, and Kansas brought it to a focus or to a climax. But before the climax was reached the democratic party of the nation had divided radically on the slavery question, the northern democrats headed by Stephen A. Douglas, of Illinois, declaring for popular sovereignty, while the democrats of the South were led by Jefferson Davis, John C. Breckinridge, and the pro-slavery school. The Douglas democrats demanded that the people of Kansas should be allowed to settle the slavery question by the ballot, and the great majority of the Douglas school were free state men, but did not favor any interference with the institution where it existed under state laws as was the case in many of the southern states. Kansas was a territory in 1860 when Lincoln was first elected, but the people took an active interest in the campaign. Stephen A. Douglas was the presidential candidate of the free state or popular sovereignty democrats, Breckinridge of the pro-slavery democrats, and Abraham Lincoln of the new republican party. Lincoln was elected, the Civil war had been practically begun, and when Lincoln was inaugurated Douglas was conspicuous among the senators who attended the ceremonies and conspicuous in his friendly attitude toward Mr. Lincoln, and the Douglas men with their chief became actually the great leaders in the war for the suppression of the rebellion and were practically one with the republican party. Among the most notable was Douglas himself, Ulysses S. Grant, William T. Sherman, Philip Sheridan, John A. Logan, Edwin M. Stanton, the secretary of war, and the rank and file of the volunteer armies was said to have been about equally divided between the Douglas men and the Lincoln men. And it might be mentioned that the first newspaper published in the territory after its organization, which was in 1861, at Yankton, flew the Douglas flag and supported General J. B. S. Todd for delegate to Congress and Todd was elected. Frank M. Ziebach was the editor and proprietor of the Dakotian newspaper, which was the first, and he was an ardent supporter of the "Little Giant," as Douglas was called. It would therefore seem that a more suitable companion for Dakota could have been selected than Kansas.

Judge Edgerton briefly replied to Campbell's spirited remarks, saying:

I stated at the outset that so far as the proposition made is concerned, as an independent declaration, I have no objection to it. But when you say that it is on account of any peculiar position which we occupy, I reply that those words are unnecessary, and I do not think it will conduce to our best interests.

But the tenor of Judge Edgerton's critical remarks had struck a chord in the breasts of many of the members which did not respond in sympathy with his sentiments. He had mistaken the temper of his audience, nearly all of whom seemed rather eager for a fray with Congress whether it hastened or delayed admission.

The next speaker was Major McCallum, of Beadle County, a mild-mannered man and a good speaker. He said:

I admire the sentiment of our distinguished president, but I am here as a delegate from the people. I respect the laws of the American Congress, but if we have to go into the Union on our knees, let us stay out. I say that the voice of 400,000 American citizens is entitled to be heard in this Government. And if there is anything revolutionary in the resolution offered by the gentleman from Yankton, excepting as to the words "abolish" the form of government, I fail to see it. Nor do I feel that by being a citizen of Dakota I am any the less loyal. I respect the conservative sentiments of our president of this convention, and I think his motive is a good one. He seeks to avoid any inflammatory sentiments in the constitution. At the same time I would like to know by what authority under the sun Congress has to say, Dakota shall not be admitted? It is time for the people of Dakota to arise, and if necessary throw off their political thralldom, and say by all the principles of eternal right and justice we will no longer be slaves. In doing that would we be going before Congress with an inflammatory document? It certainly cannot be by any section declared to be revolutionary in its nature.

Rev. Joseph Ward, of Yankton, the acknowledged head of the Congregational Church in Dakota, a direct descendant of General Ward, of Revolutionary war fame, was the next to address the convention, and what he had to say was apparently what every delegate present desired to say. He spoke as follows:

As a matter of logic, if we are willing to say that the right of government rests upon the consent of the governed, we have got to take the rest that follows it. We, the people of Dakota, acknowledging that the law of the United States is the supreme law of the land, our loyalty cannot be questioned. Disloyalists usually fight to get out; we are fighting to get in. Ours is a situation which is reversed, and if anybody must be charged with disloyal sentiments to the Constitution of the United States it is those who by any method, direct or indirect, would keep us from entering the Union. As has been expressed, the self-respect of 200,000 freemen is worth keeping. Why cannot we go there and stand just as good a show before our brothers and keep our self-respect as to go there and, in any respect, take the part of a mere supplicant? A great deal is to be gained by taking a good deal for granted, especially when the things we take for granted are ours. Congress is no more of an august body or a respectable body than this one, and it is as great an honor to stand here and claim our rights and assert them as it would be to stand in that house and have them give them to us. I think it is worth something to keep our integrity, even if it costs us ten years of waiting as a territory.

Judge Moody, of Lawrence, followed Mr. Ward. He said:

I do not intend to make a speech. Do not get alarmed, anybody. There seems to be a misunderstanding about this. We are preparing a constitution for a state, not a territory. It don't take effect until we become a state. When Dakota becomes a state, is not the proposition a declared truth that cannot be gainsaid by anyone on earth? I see all the other constitutions in the Union contain the same declaration. What is it? A sort of Fourth of July declaration. It is simply to hand down to our children and children's children. Now, with the kindest of feeling for every member of this convention, and, of course, unusually so for the presiding officer, I would dislike to see this declaration of the inherent power of the people voted down by this convention. There is not anything revolutionary in it. I would dislike to see this convention say by a decisive vote that it is not the truth, because we all feel that it is the truth. We do not declare by our action that we endorse what every member says about the proposition. If Judge Campbell has got up to a fighting pitch, I am glad of it. I like to see it. I would be glad to see every man in the territory get to a fighting pitch so he would be ready to shoulder arms to get it. We would not be likely to accomplish much, but I would like to see them in the frame of mind. We have the right, and if we do not claim it we ought to go home at once. We have the absolute right granted us by the Constitution—a right which has not only been granted to us by the Constitution of the United States, but we have the pledged faith of Congress that if we will come here and settle these public lands and organize communities, just as soon as we have a sufficient population and resources to form a state government it will admit us into the Union. This is a legal right. It is a constitutional right. We cannot enforce it, but we can declare it in the constitution which we propose shall take effect when Congress shall say you are admitted into the Union of States. We can declare these principles, and that is all. I don't think any sort of feeling ought to grow out of this. Our friend here, Judge Campbell, is combative. The very cut of his countenance and figure is combative. I have known him five or six years. I have met him at the bar. I have had him before me when I was presiding in court. He is always combative when anybody comes against him. (Laughter.) He has the kindest of intentions. He merely states with much more emphasis than we can state it just what we all believe.

Delegate Lothian, of Grant County, after a few remarks, supporting the resolution offered by Campbell, moved its adoption, which motion prevailed by a vote of 46 to 17.

The committee of the whole then arose and reported its action. A motion was made to adopt the report, when Judge Edgerton asked division of it so as to secure separate action on Campbell's resolution. The remainder was adopted, and when Campbell's resolution came up, Moody moved an adjournment. Some confusion ensued, when Judge Edgerton, not understanding that the motion had been made, undertook to speak. A point of order regarding the motion to adjourn was made, while Edgerton commenced speaking, who said he only wanted five minutes. The motion to adjourn was put, however, and resulted in a tie vote, 36 to 36, whereupon the chair decided it and declared the adjournment carried.

The Campbell resolution was referred to the Committee on the Bill of Rights the following day, the 16th, not having been before that committee prior to its introduction by Judge Campbell, and was reported to the convention in the following form, in which form it was adopted and remains a part of our state constitution to the present day:

Section 26. All political power is inherent in the people, and all free government is founded on their authority, and it is instituted for their protection and benefit, and the right, in lawful and constituted methods, to alter and reform their forms of government in such manner as they think proper; and the State of Dakota is an inseparable part of the American Union, and the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land.

The report of the Committee on Prohibition was considered at the same time by the committee of the whole, as a special order. The report proposed to submit as a part of the constitution, for adoption or rejection by a special vote, an article prohibiting the manufacture or sale of liquor within the state.

Lichtenwallner, of Hughes County, had hoped the proposition would not be made, as the defeat of either party would lead it, after election, to oppose admission. But out of deference to the opinions of so large a number who favored it he would support it, assuring the members that, speaking, not for the liquor dealers, but for that large body who are opposed on principle to sumptuary legislation, he and they would abide the result, and asking his prohibition friends to make a similar declaration.

Delegate Kanouse, of Sanborn County, replied, and stated that as a prohibitionist, he would pledge his friend of Hughes County, that the defeat of prohibition should not dampen his ardor for statehood.

Judge Moody, of Lawrence County, then took the floor. He said he feared the convention was approaching a dangerous rock in the channel of its progress. He was for a state first, and questions of domestic economy afterward. He feared the introduction of a prohibition article into the body of the constitution would be disastrous, even if there was a subsidiary proposition to strike it out unless it get votes enough—for this subsidiary feature could not be well understood by all the people, who therefore would vote against the constitution. He therefore suggested that it be referred to the Committee on Schedule, that it might be arranged for submission as an independent proposition, outside the body of the document. And as preliminary thereto moved that a vote be taken on the question:

"Shall a proposition for prohibition be submitted to the people for adoption or rejection?"

On this question the yeas and nays were called, resulting in 75 yeas and 10 nays—those voting nay being Alexander, Belleu, Bennett, Buechler, Dollard, Fellows, Fowler, Frank, Phillips, Ryan and Weeden. The mode of submission was then referred to the Committee on Schedule, which committee reported a resolution favoring the submission of the article as a separate measure outside of the constitution, which was adopted.

The question of the dividing line between the proposed state and the Territory of North Dakota engaged the earnest attention of the convention. This line would be the northern boundary of the state, and it had not been questioned that the 46th parallel of north latitude would be the boundary finally fixed upon, but upon further and closer investigation of the subject it was discovered that the 46th parallel would divide counties and townships already established and settled, and even farms, in some instances. This led to a change of sentiment in favor of the seventh standard parallel, a surveyed line, as the best boundary and most definite boundary, and already defined east of the Missouri River. The 7th standard was about four miles south of the parallel of latitude, and the convention at one time voted to adopt it as the northern boundary, but reconsidered and decided upon the 46th at the same session. It was said that Congress would favor the 7th standard, because of the confusion of surveyed lines and county boundaries which would result if the parallel of latitude was adopted. There was much outside discussion of the proposition, with the sentiment favoring the 7th standard, as that had, practically, become the boundary, the county boundaries of each division, east of the Missouri, having that line for their northern and southern boundary, while the domain west of the Missouri was an Indian reservation, and could be conformed to either boundary when surveyed. The 7th standard finally won.

The several judicial circuits of Dakota and their members of the state committee were:

First Circuit—Union, Clay, Yankton, Bon Homme, Hutchinson, Charles Mix, and Douglas counties; Major Joseph R. Hanson, of Yankton County.

Second Circuit—Lincoln, Turner, Minnehaha, McCook, Moody, Lake and Miner counties; E. P. Bebee, of Minnehaha County.

Third Circuit—Brookings, Kingsbury, Deuel, Hamlin, Codington, Clark, Grant, Marshall, Roberts and Day counties; Rev. S. G. Updyke, of Codington.

Fourth Circuit—Beadle, Sanborn, Davison, Aurora, Brule, Buffalo and Jeward counties; John Cain, of Beadle County.

Fifth Circuit—Spink, Brown, Hand, Hyde, Hughes, Sully, Potter, Faulk, Edmunds, Walworth, Campbell and McPherson counties; James A. Ward, of Hughes County.

Sixth Circuit—All that portion west of the Missouri River; A. J. Simmons, of Pennington County.

Member at Large and President of the Committee—Hugh J. Campbell, of Yankton County.

The form of the vote decided upon for the ratification or rejection of the constitution, was as follows:

For the constitution, Yes.....No.....
 For prohibition, Yes.....No.....
 For minority representation, Yes.....No.....
 For as the temporary seat of government.
 (The state, congressional and legislative tickets to follow here.)
 (As a heading to each ballot, the following instructions to voters will be given.)
 All persons desiring to vote for the constitution, or for any of the articles submitted, will erase the word "No."
 All persons desiring to vote against the constitution, or against any article separately submitted, will erase the word "Yes."

The convention concluded its labors and adjourned on Friday, September 24th, after a session of seventeen days. The last day was devoted to the arrangement and phraseology of the constitution. The constitution was read, beginning at 10.30 A. M., and closed at 5 P. M. At the close of the reading the constitution was adopted by a unanimous vote. The document was ordered bound, signed by the members of the convention, and placed in the custody of the president to deliver to the proper authorities.

The final vote was followed by loud and long continued applause. Eighty-nine members signed the document. This constitution was the one South Dakota was admitted under, four years later, with a very few additions added by the omnibus bill passed by Congress in 1889.

The expenses of the convention were reported by the Committee on Expenses, as follows, showing that less than one-half of the appropriation had been consumed:

Mileage, $2,005.45. Per diem of members, $3,022.50. Per diem of employees, $1,155.50. Transcript, $618.60. Rents, $291.00. Tables, $69.95. Printing, $975.00. Stationery, $93.05. Editing debates, $300.00. Total, $9,430.05, less $22.00 proceeds of sale of tables.

The convention held an evening session for addresses, no business being in the way. Brief addresses were made, and parting hand-shakes and good-byes were said in many instances. That band of Dakota freemen would probably never meet together again.

The executive committee held a meeting the morning after adjournment, and completed the organization by the election of C. M. Reed, of Sully County, secretary, and then appointed the county boards for each county, as provided in the schedule. Names of appointees:

Aurora County, J. B. Jenkins, Henry Davlon, G. A. Graves; Beadle, A. Davis, J. W. Dare, E. C. Issenhuth; Brown, Geo. H. Johnson, C. W. Sterling, Doctor Pettingill; Brookings, Wm. Fisher, D. S. Darrow, U. D. Palmer; Buffalo, S. K. King, A. H. Orves, C. A. Osman; Brule, C. M. Gregory, T. B. Wetherell, S. W. Duncan; Bon Homme, T. O. Begert, Joseph Stowe, J. H. Turner; Butte, H. J. Grant, Mr. Bowman, Henry Chamberlain; Custer, S. O. Starkland, A. D. Clark, A. D. Tearly; Campbell, William Mattison, E. H. McIntosh, William Owen; Clark, John E. Bennett, F. T. Conklin, Captain Barry; Codrington, J. M. Westfall, P. B. Spicer, E. D. Wheelock; Clay, N. C. Hanson, Judge Copeland, Hans Myron; Deuel, B. A. Wade, H. H. Guernsey, F. A. Bretcher; Faulk, F. F. Hughes, James W. Johnston, F. A. Pangborn; Grant, A. M. Hogan, F. A. Eldridge, W. S. Crawford; Hutchinson, M. Schlengen, Wm. Baldwin, J. S. Scouber; Hughes, J. S. Macnamara, R. Lather, John Scholler; Hyde, John T. Cogau, John Pyle, C. R. Court; Hamlin, J. P. Chuver, H. M. Gilbertson, J. C. Springer; Hanson, John Foster, J. C. Gregory, R. F. Wickhem; Jerauld, H. M. Rice, M. J. Hournis, A. Gunderson; Kingsbury, John A. Owen, H. H. Shut, J. C. Southwick; Lake, C. B. Kennedy, R. R. Wentworth, H. P. Smith; Lincoln, J. W. Taylor, Mr. Treat, A. B. Wheelock; Marshall, Deyee, Britton, Clark; Miner, John H. Potter, S. H. Bronson, Hugh Smith; McPherson, H. F. Moulton, Frank Warren, Mr. Hunt; Roberts, Edmund Cook, David Eastman, E. W. Lewis; Sully, J. A. Melon; Spink, F. J. Fisher, Jonas Bushnell, George Jarvis; Sanborn, C. E. Hendes, S. J. Mitchell, Judge Church; Turner, A. L. Peterson, R. C. Teasley, Chris Olsen; Union, A. O. Ringsrud, W. M. Williams, Frank Wade; Walworth, Tom Orr, H. H. Potter, Doctor Edwards; Yankton, J. R. Gamble, A. L. Van Osdel, B. F. Brooks.

A caucus of the delegates who belonged to the republican party was held after the convention adjourned, at which A. C. Mellette was chosen chairman, which decided to call a convention for the nomination of a state ticket, and a circular was prepared calling a meeting of the members of the territorial republican committee from the counties south of the 46th parallel, to assemble at Huron, September 29th, and arrange and issue a call for the state convention.

CHAPTER CIX

THE SECOND CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION—THE LEGISLATURE ELECTS SENATORS

1885

OFFICIAL NOTICE OF STATE ELECTION—ORGANIZATION OF THE STATE LEAGUE—THE FIRST STATE CONVENTION PROCEEDINGS—NAMES OF MEMBERS—GOVERNOR MELLETTE'S MESSAGE—PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATURE NAMES OF MEMBERS—ELECTING SENATORS—G. C. MOODY AND A. J. EDGERTON CHOSEN—PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS—DEBATE IN THE SENATE—DAKOTA'S CONSTITUTIONAL PROCEEDINGS PRESENTED—SENATOR BUTLER INTRODUCES AN ENABLING ACT FOR ONE STATE AND DELIVERS AN ADDRESS—REPRESENTATIVE W. D. HILL, DEMOCRAT, OF OHIO, ESPOUSES DAKOTA'S CAUSE—GRAND SPEECH.

OFFICIAL NOTICE OF THE ELECTION FOR THE CONSTITUTION

Notice is hereby given, that on Tuesday, the 3d day of November next, at the several precincts and polling places which are now provided by law for the general election in each of the counties of the territory south of the 46th parallel of north latitude, an election will be held by the qualified electors of such counties, for the adoption or rejection of the constitution and separate articles, submitted to a vote of the people by the constitutional convention on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1885, at the City of Sioux Falls, Dakota, and for

The selection of a temporary seat of government and for the election of a governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, attorney general, superintendent of public instruction, commissioner of school and public lands, two representatives in Congress, three judges of Supreme Court, and in each circuit as established and defined by article 5 of said constitution, for a judge of the Circuit Court, and in each county for a judge of the County Court, and in each senatorial district as established and defined by article 19 of said constitution, for state senators, and in each representative district as established and defined by article 10 of said constitution, for representatives in the Legislature, which election will be opened at 8 o'clock in the morning and will continue open until 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day.

The several sheriffs of each of the counties aforesaid, and the several county boards are required by the schedule and ordinance, to post this notice in their respective counties, in the manner required by law for notices of general and annual elections. The several newspapers of said counties are hereby requested and authorized to publish the same.

By authority of the constitutional convention begun and held at the said City of Sioux Falls, on the 8th day of September, A. D. 1885, and of the schedule and ordinance adopted by said convention, and of the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota, approved March 9, 1885.

Dated at the City of Yankton, Dakota, this 2d day of October, 1885.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
President State Executive Committee.

After the adjournment of the constitutional convention in May, 1885, an organization was perfected at that place entitled the "Dakota State League," for the purpose of securing a division of the Territory of Dakota on or near the 46th degree of north latitude, and the admission of the southern portion into the Union as a state under the Sioux Falls constitution. Its purposes are clearly set forth in the following articles which comprised its constitution:

The officers of the Dakota State League shall be a president, one vice president for each county, a treasurer, a secretary, an executive committee of five, consisting of the president, treasurer, secretary, and two other members, whose terms of office shall be one year and until their successors are elected.

2. The general direction of the affairs of the state league is intrusted to the control of the executive committee.

3. Any resident of the Territory of Dakota, male or female, may become a member by signing this constitution, paying a membership fee of 25 cents, and subscribing to the following pledge:

Pledge: I pledge my sacred honor to the faithful performance of the following obligation—

1st. To exert my influence upon all occasions in behalf of the division of the Territory of Dakota on the 46th degree of latitude, or seventh standard parallel, until so divided.

2d. To labor for the admission of the southern portion into the Union as a state, under the Sioux Falls constitution, until the same shall be admitted into the Union.

3d. To use every honorable endeavor to secure the election of men for all county, territorial and state offices who are known to be unqualifiedly in favor of the state government, as provided for in the Sioux Falls constitution, until the same shall be admitted into the Union.

4. Charters for township or local leagues will be issued upon application of five or more persons to the secretary of the state league, accompanied with 10 cents for each application.

5. Charters for county leagues will be issued upon application of ten or more persons, in like manner with like fees.

6. Ten cents for each new name added to the membership of local and county leagues during the month, with 5 cents per capita dues, shall be forwarded to the secretary of the state league, on or before the tenth day of each month.

7. County and local leagues will make their own rules and regulations, conforming to this constitution, and instructions from the state executive committee.

8. The vice presidents in the several counties shall have general supervision of the affairs of the league in their counties, under the direction of the state executive committee.

9. Local and county leagues shall hold one meeting during the first week of each month, and at such other times as they may severally determine.

10. The secretaries of local and county leagues shall report to the secretary of the state league, the names and postoffice address of all members on the 10th day of July, 1886, and of all new members added during the month on or before the 10th of each month thereafter.

11. All money received by the secretary of the state league shall be duly receipted for, and on or before the 20th day of each month, forwarded to the treasurer, who shall receipt to the treasurer for the same.

12. The secretary shall keep an itemized account of all money received, and orders drawn upon the treasurer, and all other financial transactions of the secretary, and report the same to the president on July 13, 1886, and quarterly thereafter.

13. Money shall be drawn from the treasury only upon the order of the president, duly attested by the secretary.

14. The second regular meeting of the Dakota State League will be held at Sioux Falls, July 13, 1886.

15. County and local leagues will each be entitled to one representative, and an additional representative for every ten members.

16. Every friend of division on the 46th, and admission under the Sioux Falls constitution, is cordially invited to become a member of the state league and participate in the second regular meeting at Sioux Falls, July 13, 1886.

MEMBERS MAY 6, 1886

Theodore D. Kanouse, Woonsocket.

J. K. P. McCallum, Huron

J. H. Patten, Carthage.

Geo. L. Wright, Winfred.

R. Croner Walton, Aurora.

John A. Owen, DeSmet.

Thomas McConnell, Carthage.

John Cain, Huron.

E. J. Oakes, Hartford.

A. J. Kellam, Chamberlain.

J. P. Goddard, Leopi.

J. T. Dow, Frederick.

A. Haines, Parker.

A. J. Berdahl, Pennington.

W. S. Bowen, Yankton.

Hugh J. Campbell, Yankton.

S. C. Mathews, Alpena.

D. Elwell, Sioux Falls.

E. P. Bebee, Sioux Falls.

H. H. Sheets, Esmond.

Willis C. Stone, Copp.

J. H. Moore, Winthrop.

W. M. Wright, Volga.

Fred Coffin, Huron.

A. Frizzell, Sioux Falls.

T. H. Conniff, Bridgewater.

Joseph Ward, Yankton.

W. H. Murphy, Alexandria.

W. H. Goddard, Montrose.

C. S. Gifford, Dell Rapids.

Isaac Gray, Alexandria.

Joseph Allen, Hurley.

Thos. W. Stevenson, Sioux Falls.

Augustine Davis, Huron.

Stephen Jones, Roswell.

Arthur C. Phillipp, Sioux Falls.

S. T. Clover, Sioux Falls.

G. A. Uline, Dell Rapids.

VICE PRESIDENTS APPOINTED MAY 6TH

George R. Scougal, Yankton.
 M. Billon, Olivet.
 E. W. Ferrell, Bridgewater.
 H. F. Fellows, Plankinton.
 Chas. B. Kennedy, Madison.
 F. T. Meyer, Woonsocket.
 D. J. Darrow, Brookings.
 J. T. Cogan, Ree Heights.
 F. H. Kent, Huron.
 C. M. Reid, Omeida.
 Geo. E. Matteci, Wilmot.
 S. H. Elrod, Clark.
 Chas. A. McConnell, Copp.
 J. B. Richards, Frederick.
 Charles N. Herreid, Leola.
 John H. King, Buffalo Gap.

S. B. Jones, Parker.
 A. Frizzell, Sioux Falls.
 A. J. Parshall, Alexandria.
 C. J. Maynard, Kimball.
 S. H. Bronson, Howard.
 Prof. Huntley, Wessington Springs.
 C. P. Sherwood, DeSmet.
 Eli Johnson, Highmore.
 George Schlosser, Blunt.
 M. F. Greeley, Gary.
 Frank Crane, Watertown.
 J. A. Pickler, Faulkton.
 J. C. Adams, Webster.
 W. R. Ruggles, Ipswich.
 Frank Alexander, LaGrace.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

John A. Owen, DeSmet.
 Thos. McConnell, Carthage.
 J. T. Dow, Frederick.

A. J. Kellam, Chamberlain.
 W. S. Bowen, Yankton.

To facilitate the organization of subordinate leagues, the state league was prepared to send speakers on request. John A. Owen was president of the state league, and Thomas McConnell, secretary.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION

..

There will be held at Huron, on Wednesday, October 21, 1885, at 2 o'clock P. M., a republican delegate convention, for the State of Dakota, being that portion of the Territory of Dakota lying south of the 40th parallel of north latitude, for the purpose of placing in nomination republican candidates for state officers, to be voted for on the 3d day of November, 1885, pursuant to enactment of the constitutional convention, convened on the 6th day of September, 1885. The following are the officers to be nominated, viz.:

- One candidate for governor.
- One candidate for lieutenant governor.
- One candidate for secretary of state
- One candidate for state auditor.
- One candidate for state treasurer.
- One candidate for state attorney general.
- One candidate for state superintendent of public instruction.
- One candidate for state commissioner of school and public lands.
- Two candidates for Congress.
- Three candidates for Supreme Court judges.

The several counties in Dakota Territory will be entitled to representation in said convention as follows:

Aurora	6	Beadle	10	Bon Homme	7
Brookings	8	Brown	12	Buffalo	1
Burdick	1	Butte	1	Campbell	1
Charles Mix	4	Clark	5	Clay	6
Codington	6	Custer	1	Davison	6
Day	6	Deuel	4	Dickey	1
Douglas	4	Edmunds	2	Emmons	1
Ewing	1	Faulk	3	Fall River	1
Grant	7	Hamlin	4	Hand	8
Hanson	4	Harding	4	Hughes	6
Hutchinson	9	Hyde	2	Jerauld	2
Kingsbury	8	Lake	5	Lawrence	10
Lincoln	8	Mandan	1	Marshall	2
McCook	6	McIntosh	1	McPherson	2
Miner	5	Minnchaha	14	Moody	6
Pennington	3	Potter	2	Roberts	2
Sauborn	4	Sargent	1	Spink	10
Sully	3	Turner	8	Union	8
Walworth	1	Yankton	9

Total 267

The above representation is based upon the population of counties as determined by the census of 1885, allotting one delegate to each 1,000 inhabitants or majority part thereof, provided that every organized county shall have at least one delegate.

The committee recommends that the several county conventions, when assembled to select delegates to the state convention, also nominate candidates for the State Legislature to be voted for at the ensuing election, and also to authorize the delegates selected to the state convention to represent said county in their respective judicial circuits and senatorial district conventions.

By order of the Territorial Central Committee for the subdivision of South Dakota.
 W. S. REYNOLDS, Secretary, A. C. MELLETT, Chairman.
 S. H. ELROD, Ass't Secretary.

Pursuant to the foregoing call, the delegates-elect to the first state convention held in Dakota for the purpose of nominating state officers assembled at the Grand Opera House in Huron on Wednesday, October 21st, at 2 o'clock P. M., and the first formal proceedings were had by the call to order and the reading of the official call by Hon. H. J. Patterson, of Lake County. This should have been followed by devotional exercises, but the clergymen of Huron appear to have been elsewhere engaged, and the convention was compelled to proceed, each depending upon his own prayer.

Mr. Patterson called for nominations for temporary chairman, whereupon Samuel Lockhart, of Grant County, nominated Judge J. E. Bennett, of Clark, who received a unanimous vote and took the chair. He returned thanks for the honor conferred, and expressed reluctance at accepting the position and endeavoring to discharge its duties in the presence of so many eminent persons. He promised, however, to act fairly, and gave his hearty endorsement to the constitution about to be voted upon by the people. His emphatic announcement of loyalty to the principle of division first and admission next, was most earnestly applauded, as was also his expression of confidence that within a year we should witness the placing of Dakota's star on the American Union's field of blue, as the newest and brightest orb of the galaxy that adorns the Nation's ensign.

On motion of Capt. W. V. Lucas, of Brule, Hon. L. C. Taylor of Hanson County, W. C. Allen of Brown County, C. M. Reed of Sully, and L. E. Mayhew of Sanborn were chosen temporary secretaries.

On motion of C. H. Winsor, of Minnehaha, the chair appointed the following named gentlemen a Committee on Credentials, viz.: C. H. Winsor, F. A. Parsons, Hanlin; J. O. B. Scobey, Brookings; W. S. Reynolds, Davison; B. K. Watson, Aurora; W. V. Lucas, Brule; C. Buechler, Hutchinson.

In compliance with motions, Messrs. F. G. Fahnstock of Codington, J. R. Gamble of Yankton, W. R. Ruggles of Edmunds, A. B. Smedley of Grant, F. M. Goodykoontz of Brule, I. N. Cotes of Clark, O. S. Basford of Spink and A. E. Frank of Lawrence were appointed a Committee on Permanent Organization.

John H. King of Brule, H. A. Humphrey of Faulk, H. J. Campbell of Yankton, J. F. Hammond of Spink, H. C. Preston of Davison, J. F. Stahl of Lake, M. D. More of Clay, C. W. Starling of Brown and B. B. Benedict of Bennington were appointed to prepare a platform.

Reverend Doctor Lore, of Beadle County, being invited by the chair, then invoked the divine blessing on the convention.

It was ordered that all resolutions presented referring to the proper subjects be referred, upon presentation, to the Committee on Resolutions. The chair then announced a recess for an hour to give the credentials committee time to make up their report. The attendance was quite full, and great interest was manifested in every step taken. During the recess addresses were made by A. C. Mellette, T. D. Kanouse, Hugh J. Campbell, Reverend Mr. Updyke, John R. Gamble and Col. E. Evans, of Hot Springs. The addresses were highly complimented for their patriotic tone and absence of partisanship.

The credentials committee reported at 5 o'clock, through Mr. Winsor, of Minnehaha, and recommended the following named delegates entitled to seats:

Aurora County—J. N. Auld, C. J. Stockwell, C. J. Anderson, B. H. Sullivan, B. K. Watson, S. L. Coc. Beadle—O. W. Blair, H. J. Rice, A. Davis, H. G. Wolfe, N. B. Appleman, S. C. Nash, J. W. Dove, S. C. Fassett, A. W. Page,

J. E. Coombs. Bon Homme—Sol. Wenzlaff, J. C. Clemmie, B. R. Wagner, L. O. Bogert, Robt. Dollard, Daniel Wilcox. Brookings—A. J. Dox, H. S. Murphy (2 votes), W. M. Nichols, W. J. Poole, J. O'B. Scobey, W. M. Fisher, J. W. Shannon. Brown—W. C. Allen (2), C. J. Melcod (2), Chas. Sterling (2), S. J. Jumper, C. M. Cannon, H. J. Hauser, J. B. Richards, K. W. Jones, H. A. Tice. Brule—W. V. Lucas, H. E. Gates, J. H. Kee, Alex. Inges, S. W. Kent, W. A. Scott, F. M. Goodykoontz. Buffalo—S. K. King. Campbell—Frank Alexander. Charles Mix—D. H. Henry (4 votes). Clark—John E. Bennett, S. J. Conklin, S. H. Elrod, J. W. Coates, E. F. Conklin. Clay—H. J. Austin, H. C. Copeland, John P. Hoyer, W. D. Moore, J. W. Gilbert, H. Gunderson. Codington—F. G. Fahnstock, C. G. Church, W. R. Thomas, Alex. Davidson, J. L. Robinson, S. G. Updyke. Davison—H. C. Preston, Wm. C. Metcalf, W. S. Reynolds (2), J. S. Wilson, W. C. Baker. Day—W. H. Ware, J. O. Thompson, J. Ally, Elias Winger, E. R. Ruggles, E. Huntington. Deuel—F. P. Crane (2), Wm. H. McIntyre, F. P. Phillips. Douglas—George Spencer, Homer Johnson, George Woolman, G. S. Perry. Edmunds—A. G. Barnard, W. R. Ruggles, A. E. Ashcroft. Emmons—Frank Alexander. Faulk—C. H. Ellis, H. A. Humphrey, F. M. Jessop. Grant—Wm. W. Downin, Wm. N. Evans (2), A. B. Smedley, S. S. Lockhart, C. S. Amsden, J. A. McGovern. Hamlin—F. A. Parsons, F. A. Carrutyl, Geo. W. Pierce (2). Hand—A. A. Stebbins, C. G. Clark (3), B. F. Payne, J. F. Martin, Levi Harris, O. B. Dewey. Hanson—L. C. Taylor, A. J. Parshall, M. J. Curran, E. P. Brown. Hughes—W. S. Welles, V. E. Prentice (2), J. C. MacManima, G. Jones, H. Besancon. Hutchinson—C. S. Carr, C. Buechler, M. Schamber, S. M. Daboll, John Swartz, J. G. Hawley, J. D. Welch. Hyde—D. A. W. Perkins, N. F. Bates. Jerauld—R. Chase, F. B. Phillips, T. H. Null. Kingsbury—W. N. Glendenning, I. A. Keith, N. F. Barber, A. G. Cook, J. H. Carroll, E. E. Pinkerton, Eli Benke, John A. Smart. Lake—J. E. Stahl, Wm. Lee, H. J. Patterson, John Jones. Lincoln—J. W. Taylor, E. S. Lewis, R. A. Pierce, C. S. Pounce, N. M. Jacob, W. B. Waite, J. W. Carter, Edgar Dean, T. H. Coniff, W. H. Goddard, R. B. Jamison, J. C. Headle, J. J. Stultz, O. C. Potter. Miner—J. H. Patton, Thomas McConnell, E. J. Rogers, S. Jones, H. Winden. McPherson—S. P. Howell, J. W. Hewitt. Minnehaha—C. H. Winsor, W. A. Wiley, R. S. Alexander, E. E. Ellipson, J. E. Calton, C. A. Sorderburg, W. H. Lyon, S. T. Clover, C. E. McKinney, H. H. Keith, John Sunbach, Andrew Burradge, Peter Morse. Potter—Wm. Whitford, Wm. A. Epling. Pennington—B. B. Benedict (3). Moody—J. F. Goodsell, J. H. Eno, Thos. Haskins, G. R. Lanning, F. A. Stafford, Albert Fagie. Sully—H. W. Edgerton, Phineas Helm, M. L. Howes. Sanborn—H. F. Mayhew, W. H. Burbick, J. E. Whiting, F. F. Myers. Roberts—J. H. Drake (2). Spink—S. F. Hammond, D. W. Poindexter, F. Waller, F. I. Fisher, S. H. Riggs, G. W. Sickles, O. S. Baford, M. L. Read, N. W. Badcock or Babcock, G. W. Fenne. Union—N. A. Kirk (3), W. I. Himes, Isaac More, John Larson, J. P. Kimball, Levi Shinny. Turner—C. F. Hackett, Joseph Allen, C. D. Seiffert, F. F. Hanford, John Vantrollen, F. E. Andrews, Jr., G. C. Stewart, T. B. Martin. Yankton—J. R. Gamble (3), W. S. Bowen, W. H. Stearns, J. R. Hanson, Newton Edmunds, Hugh J. Campbell.

The report was adopted.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported recommending Col. A. B. Smedley, of Grant County, for permanent chairman, and that the temporary secretaries be retained as the permanent secretaries, which report was adopted, and Colonel Fahnstock, of Codington, and Gen. M. L. Howes, of Sully, being appointed thereto, escorted the president-elect to the chair, who inaugurated his induction into the office of the chairman of the first state convention held in the territory by an eloquent address, returning his thanks to the convention for the distinguished honor, announcing his own earnest sympathy with the state movement, promising an encouraging report from his section on election day, counseling harmony of action, the presentation of a thoroughly good ticket and hard work on all hands until the objects of the movement are accomplished.

His address was frequently interrupted with manifestations of approval from the delegates.

A recess was then taken until evening, and on reconvening at 7 o'clock P. M., Colonel Fahnstock moved to proceed to the nomination of officers, which motion prevailed.

F. L. Fisher, of Spink County, in an eloquent speech, nominated A. C. Mellette, of Watertown, for governor.

A. B. Burdick, of Sanborn County, arose and, after eloquently reciting the abilities and deserts of Hon. Theodore Kanouse, stated that he withdrew that gentleman's name from the list of gubernatorial candidates, and seconded the nomination of Mr. Mellette. Lanning, of Moody, and McConnell, of Miner, also seconded the Codington County nomination. Mellette was then nominated for governor by acclamation.

Howe, of Lake, nominated H. J. Patterson, of Madison, for lieutenant-governor, and Winsor, of Minnehaha, nominated S. C. Young, of Minnehaha. A. E. Franks, of Lawrence County, was placed in nomination for the same office by Delegate Benedict, of Pennington. Franks won the nomination on the second ballot. Hugh S. Murphy, of Brookings, was named by J. W. Shannon, and on motion of J. O'B. Scobey was nominated by acclamation for secretary of state.

S. H. Elrod, of Clark, presented the name of Frank Alexander, of Campbell County, for state auditor, and B. F. Payne named C. M. Reed, of Sully, for the same office. Alexander won the majority vote, and his nomination was made unanimous.

S. H. Jumper, of Brown, and D. W. Diggs, of Grant, were each nominated for state treasurer. Diggs was nominated on the first ballot, and the nomination was made unanimous.

T. O. Bogert, of Bon Homme, placed in nomination the name of Hon. Robert Dollard, of Scotland, for attorney-general, and Mr. Dollard was accorded the nomination by acclamation.

A. Sheridan Jones, of Hutchinson County, and S. L. Coe, of Aurora, were named as candidates for superintendent of public instruction. Jones won on the first ballot by a vote of 167 to 89, and was then nominated by acclamation.

F. H. Conniff of McCook, Gen. W. H. H. Beadle of Yankton, H. W. Babcock of Spink, A. E. Barker of Day, S. F. Hammond of Spink and W. S. Reynolds of Davison were named as candidates for commissioner of school and public lands. On the fifth ballot General Beadle was nominated, and the nomination was made unanimous.

It was moved that O. S. Gifford be nominated by acclamation for representative in Congress. The motion was amended to include the name of T. D. Kanouse. After much discussion, a substitute was offered and carried, and Judge Gifford was nominated by acclamation, and Mr. Kanouse was also nominated as the second representative by separate unanimous vote.

For judges of the Supreme Court, A. J. Kellam of Brule, Dighton Corson of Lawrence and John E. Bennett of Clark were nominated by acclamation.

This completed the list of nominations.

The Committee on Resolutions then submitted the following report:

We, the republicans of the new State of Dakota, in convention assembled, affirming our loyalty to the National Government, one and undivided forever, do declare and resolve:

1. That we affirm the doctrine enunciated by the National Republican Convention of 1885.
2. That we fully endorse the action of our last Territorial Legislature in calling a constitutional convention of South Dakota, and that we are in hearty accord with the action of that convention, and recommend the constitution framed thereat to the people of the proposed new State of Dakota, and pledge our hearty support to its adoption at the polls.
3. That the people of the proposed State of Dakota are firmly and unalterably opposed to any and all schemes for the admission of the territory as a whole, and pledge our continued and loyal support to the division of the territory on the 46th parallel, and the admission of the state, until our claim is recognized by Congress.

4. Affirming that under the precedents of Congress in the case of thirteen states, including the states of Michigan, Florida, Iowa, Wisconsin, California and Oregon, under the guaranties of the Ordinance of 1787, and of the Louisiana treaty, and under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, we have an undoubted and indefeasible right to form a state government, and to be admitted into the Union on equal terms with all the other states.

5. That this right having been repeatedly affirmed by Congress, and based upon compacts that are irrevocable without the consent of the people, we have exercised a lawful prerogative in taking the necessary steps to form a state, and we now call upon the National Government to carry out its precedents, and make good its guaranty to a loyal people.

Resolved, That while this convention is met to put in nomination persons representing the republican party, the entire movement to form and submit the constitution was non-partisan in character, and the question of its adoption is addressed to the people in their individual and aggregate capacity, wholly free from party interest, and in no way obnoxious to party action. And we observe with regret the action of a democratic conclave of this territory, recently held at Mitchell, condemning the action of the constitutional convention at Sioux Falls, and we charge that its aims and purposes in opposing the new constitution, and division of the territory, and the admission of South Dakota as a state are subversive of our interests, that they trample upon the rights of 200,000 people solely for a selfish purpose, hoping thereby to screen and keep the patronage of the Federal Government pertaining to a territory—and we shall hold any party or any people responsible who encourage these sentiments, as contributing to our continued disfranchisement.

Resolved, That we favor a government close to the people, opposed to granting any more public lands for any purpose but for actual settlement, but favor enlarging the rights and privileges of the soldiers who desire to secure homes upon our public domain. And that this convention invokes the immediate action of Congress, by wise and humane legislation, in opening to actual settlement the Great Sioux Reservation, now an unoccupied wilderness containing over thirty thousand square miles within our borders, capable of furnishing homes to over one million people—securing first to each Indian thereon land in severalty of his own selection, granting him full protection under our laws and liberal appropriations for his assistance, civilization and education.

S. F. HAMMOND, Secretary.

J. H. KING, Chairman.

The customary complimentary resolutions were adopted, patriotic songs sung, and at 1 o'clock A. M., Thursday, October 22, 1885, the first republican state convention of Dakota came to a happy termination.

After the adjournment the delegates held six separate judicial district conventions and selected an executive committee for each. For the first district, E. G. Smith and W. S. Bowen, Yankton; second, Hosmer H. Keith, Sioux Falls, and W. B. Wait, Canton; third, John A. Owen, Kingsbury County; fourth, C. H. Dillon and H. S. Preston, Davison County; fifth, Seward Smith and W. C. Allen; sixth, J. W. Nowlin, Pennington County.

A fairly vigorous canvas was made and a number of public meetings held in behalf of the ticket for state officers under the new state constitution, nominated by the republicans. There was but one ticket; the democrats, through the medium of their party organizations, having declined to participate, though many of that party, prominent as leaders, among whom were Bartlett Tripp, Captain Zeibach and M. H. Day, were the strongest supporters of statehood on non-partisan grounds. The matter of vital importance at this time was to get out a full vote of all parties, that Congress and the eastern people might be informed of the urgent need of a state government, and the prevailing sentiment among the people on the statehood question.

There was an active campaign waged for the adoption of the new constitution, for the temporary capital of the state, Huron, Pierre, Chamberlain, Alexandria, Redfield, Watertown all being in the field. As the campaign progressed it became evident that the chief contestants were Pierre and Huron, who appeared to be running "neck and neck." Huron won by a moderate majority, but the campaign left an impression that with a less number of candidates for the institution Pierre would remain a promising rival when it came to a permanent location. The strong points in favor of Pierre appeared to be that it would best accommodate the Black Hills counties and the settlements on the great Sioux reservation which was then in the process of being partially opened, and that it was located on the Missouri River, insuring an abundant supply of the purest of water. Huron, however, had the James River, was in the midst of an empire of the most productive lands, and more accessible by railway lines than any other point in the territory except Aberdeen. These were valuable advantages and had evidently been properly considered, particularly the latter, by the voters at the first election in 1885. The vote was officially canvassed, as required by the constitution at Yankton, on the 21st of November, and the result declared as follows: For Huron, 12,695; for Pierre, 10,574; for Chamberlain, 3,170; for Sioux Falls, 3,338; for Alexandria, 1,374; scattering, 602. Plurality for Huron, 2,121.

The state board of canvassers convened at Yankton on the 21st of November, in accordance with the constitution, and canvassed the returns of the election held on the second Tuesday of November for and against the constitution and the several separate articles proposed, also for state officers, members of the Legislature, Supreme Court judges, congressmen and circuit judges. The board consisted of the following named members of the state executive committee: Hugh J. Campbell of Yankton, chairman; C. M. Reed of Sully County, secretary; E. C. Bebee of Sioux Falls, John Cain of Huron, S. G. Updyke of Codington County, J. R. Hanson of Yankton County. The board was assisted by Hon. James H. Teller, secretary of the territory, and Dr. D. Frank Etter, superintendent of the Dakota Insane Asylum. The better part of two days was consumed in the canvass. The results found and declared by the board are here given:

Counties	Constitution		Prohibition		Minority Representation
	For	Against	For	Against	For	Against
Aurora	818	100	431	480	296	384
Beadle	2,071	280	1,207	1,130	161	747
Bon Homme	615	115	319	462	266	497
Brookings	1,382	415	277	358	258	295
Brown	351	383	447	280	76	520
Brule	1,019	116	58	499	...	355
Buffalo	183	11	...	95	97	78
Butte	96	...	81	...
Campbell	96	129	237	128	224	97
Charles Mix	469	41	367	248	59	426
Clark	441	114	345	200	246	286
Clay	373	144	367	178	70	429
Codington	583	64	66	198	134	227
Custer	128	48	329	108	238	51
Davison	469	52	287	165	192	245
Day	360	221	165	231	...	153
Deuel	237	135	165	201	...	174
Dickey
Douglas	716	32	267	440	282	364
Edmunds	175	121	185	111	168	88
Faulk	620	144	488	280	421	281
Fall River	14	...	6	7	5	5
Grant	370	161	329	196	269	205
Hamlin	98	40	78	66	83	36
Hand	646	161	552	295	328	465
Hanson	478	111	301	249	172	579
Hughes	1,093	93	552	634	500	660
Hutchinson	797	122	260	635	247	588
Hyde	351	80	254	142	249	136
Jerauld	563	41	326	302	185	401
Kingsbury	583	170	512	276	508	207
Lake	260	141	236	199	112	228
Lawrence	1,003	467	103	1,004	84	1,000
Lincoln	496	271	464	288	91	630
Marshall	119	27	58	90	68	66
McCook	405	121	281	219	209	268
McIntosh	99	57	69
McPherson	56	100	55
Miner	454	156	573	217	157	426
Minnehaha	1,292	515	1,001	886	525	1,170
Moody	484	119	251	334	36	456

Counties	Constitution		Prohibition		Minority Representation
	For	Against	For	Against	For	Against
Pennington	540	54	126	439	32	529
Potter	273	44	149	156	170	83
Roberts	195	45	108	99	43	125
Richland
Sanborn	465	47	397	151	250	232
Sargent
Spink	1,029	110	604	528	670	292
Sully	637	31	435	220	102	508
Turner	1,254	243	844	704	477	1,009
Union	531	399	395	498	438	344
Watworth
Yankton	637	78	282	455	32	495
Totals	25,138	6,527	15,552	15,218	11,256	16,640

FOR STATE CAPITAL

Huron, 12,695; Pierre, 10,574; Chamberlain, 3,170; Sioux Falls, 3,338; Alexandria, 1,374; scattering, 602. Huron's plurality, 2,121. Total vote for capital, 31,815.

The following was the number of votes cast for each candidate on the state ticket:

Governor, A. C. Mellette, 28,994. (There was no organized opposition to any of the candidates, but there were 226 votes cast for various persons for governor.) There were from 50 to 200 scattering votes cast for each office.

- Lieutenant governor, A. E. Frank, 28,726.
- Secretary of state, H. S. Murphy, 28,417.
- State auditor, Frank Alexander, 27,323.
- State treasurer, D. W. Diggs, 29,170.
- Attorney general, Robert Dollard, 29,067.
- Superintendent of public instruction, A. S. Jones, 28,406.
- Commissioner of school and public lands, W. H. H. Beadle, 28,311.

FOR STATE SENATORS

1st district, E. C. Ericson; 2d district, J. V. White; 3d district, R. J. Gamble; 4th district, T. O. Bogart; 5th district, F. R. Aikens; 6th district, S. Haines; 7th district, H. L. McClure; 8th district, Theodore Elfes; 9th district, G. H. Johnson and C. E. McKinney; 10th district, L. O. Foote; 11th district, E. V. Miles; 12th district, O. O. Stanchfield; 13th district, J. C. Headlee; 14th district, W. B. Cameron; 15th district, S. H. Bronson; 16th district, James McVay; 17th district, V. V. Barnes; 18th district, John Cain; 19th district, J. W. Templeman; 20th district, T. E. Sanborn; 21st district, F. A. Parsons; 22d district, Henry Neill; 23d district, J. C. Adams; 24th district, F. J. Fisher; 25th district, J. Q. A. Braden and J. D. Lavin; 26th district, C. H. Banor; 27th district, C. M. Reed; 28th district, B. J. Templeton; 29th district, F. J. Washabaugh and W. H. Parker; 30th district, G. C. Boland.

FOR REPRESENTATIVES IN STATE LEGISLATURE

(1) Union County: S. S. Adams, John Dahl and J. Akin; (2) Clay County: D. C. Shull, O. N. Oleson, Jr.; (3) Yankton County: A. L. Van Osdel, L. B. French, J. R. Hanson and Philip K. Faulk; (4) Bon Homme County: J. D. Elliott, Daniel Wilcox and John Todd; (5) Lincoln County: Thos. Thorson, R. Z. Burnett, F. H. Treat; (6) Turner County: Thomas P. Ward, T. B. Buchanan and D. C. Turner; (7) Hutchinson County: F. A. Morris, Christian Buechler and Frank Hosmer; (8) Douglas County: F. LeCoq, James Brydon; (9) Charles Mix County: A. G. Jones, W. F. Shaw; (10) Minnehaha County: Lewis Lyman, E. P. Bebee and Lemuel Shaul; (11) McCook County: A. O. Johnston, D. F. Newton; (12) Hanson County: J. R. White, L. P. Chapman; (13) Davison County: George B. Kelsey; (14) Aurora County: J. B. Jenkins, V. J. Cook, G. B. James, J. A. Andrus; (15) Brule County: J. R. Low, J. W. Coe, J. W. Green; (16) Moody County: James Goodsell, John Hobart; (17) Lake County: Geo. W. Wright, A. H. Tuttle, R. L. Munro; (18) Miner County: Thomas P. Pease, John H. Patten; (19) Sanborn County: Robert Dolt, John Porterfield; (20) Jerauld County: S. F. Huntley, J. W. Harden; (21) Brookings County: A. W. Hall, Sol. Walters, John Amundson; (22) Kingsbury County: K. Lewis, J. R. Smith, L. F. Dow; (23) Beadle County: J. W. Shannon, C. J. Sheffler, Karl Gerner, F. F. B. Coffin; (24) Hand and Buffalo counties: Joseph Donahue, J. T. Cogan, Hugh Smith, J. O. Dean, R. F. Sidam; (25) Hyde County, Elkanob Gay, J. R. Goudy, Levi Dingley; (26) Hughes

County: William Summerville, R. W. Letcher; (27) Sully County: Samuel Dewell; (28) Deuel County: Peter Mulholland, M. F. Greeley; (29) Grant County: J. B. Whitcomb, Alonzo Wardell; (30) Roberts County: G. E. Martise, A. J. Ingersoll; (31) Hamlin County: H. P. Ryan; (32) Codington County: T. V. Eddy, J. B. Sweet; (33) Clark County: W. N. Berry, J. W. Cotes; (34) Spink County: Ed Burwell, S. H. Riggs, Thomas Farrell, Thomas Sterling, G. W. Fenn; (35) Faulk County: John R. Dritch, L. M. Bailey; (36) Potter County: J. J. Loveless; (37) Marshall County: H. R. Turner, David Davis; (38) Day County: John Norton, J. O. Trouson; (39) Brown County: J. T. Dow, J. S. Mason, W. C. Allen, J. L. Carlisle, F. H. Sineth; (40) Edmunds County: J. B. Richmond, M. K. Kirk; (42) McPherson County: S. P. Howell; (43) Campbell County: E. H. Crain, J. L. Thompson, A. C. John; (44) Fall River and Custer counties: A. S. Stewart, G. C. Boland; (45) Pennington County: S. P. Wells; (46) Lawrence County: W. W. Smithson, A. J. Knight, Lee A. Weeder, John D. Patton.

THE VOTE FOR JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT

First district, D. Corson, 28,661; scattering, 115. Second district, A. G. Kellam, 29,149; scattering, 122. Third district, John E. Bennett, 28,130; scattering, 120.

FOR REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS

O. S. Gifford, 29,181. Theodore D. Kanouse, 28,750. Scattering, 184.

CIRCUIT COURT JUDGES

First district, E. G. Smith. Second district, H. H. Keith. Third district, D. C. Thomas. Fourth district, C. H. Dillon. Fifth district, Seward Smith. Sixth district, J. W. Nowlin.

The state board of canvassers appointed under the authority of the state constitutional convention met at the courthouse in Yankton on Saturday, the 21st of November, 1885, and, assisted by the secretary of the territory, James H. Teller, opened the election returns from the various counties of the proposed State of Dakota, tabulated them, and declared the result. The board consisted of the following members of the state executive committee—Hugh J. Campbell, of Yankton County, chairman; C. M. Reed, of Sully County, secretary; E. C. Bebee, of Sioux Falls; John Cain, of Huron; S. G. Updyke, of Codington County; Joseph R. Hanson, of Yankton County. D. Frank Etter, superintendent of the Dakota Insane Hospital at Yankton, assisted as clerk. The vote on the constitution and its separate articles was as follows:

For the constitution, 25,182. Against the constitution, 6,522. Majority for constitution, 18,660.

For prohibition, 15,552. Against prohibition, 15,218. Majority for prohibition, 334. Against minority representation, 16,640. For minority representation, 11,256. Majority against minority representation, 5,384.

There was a sentiment prior to the election that the vote on the constitution would show a diminution of popular interest in the subject, but the canvass of the vote proved that the constitution was the most popular of all the questions submitted, exceeding the vote on the prohibition question by over one thousand.

CALLING STATE LEGISLATURE TOGETHER

The following proclamation was issued by the state executive committee, following the canvass of the vote by which the constitution was ratified and adopted:

Whereas, It is enacted by the ordinance of the constitutional convention held at the City of Sioux Falls, adopted September 25, A. D. 1885, that the state executive committee, immediately after the result of the election for the constitution and state officers and temporary seat of government, shall have been ascertained, shall issue a proclamation directing the Legislature elected at said election, to assemble at the place chosen at said election, as the temporary seat of government, on the 2d Monday in December, A. D. 1885, and

Whereas, At said election held by virtue of said ordinance, on the third day of November last, the constitution submitted at said election to the votes of the people of Dakota, was ratified and adopted by a majority of the votes cast at said election, and the same has been legally declared to be, and is in full force and effect as the constitution of the State of Dakota. And

Whereas, The state executive committee have, in connection with the territorial officers legally associated with them, canvassed and compiled the certificates and returns of said election in accordance with law and with said ordinance, and have thereby ascertained as the result of said election, that the City of Huron was duly chosen at said election by the qualified electors of the State of Dakota as the temporary seat of the government;

Now, therefore, we, Hugh J. Campbell, president, Joseph R. Hanson, E. P. Bebee, A. J. Simmons, J. A. Ward, John Cain, and Stephen G. Updyke, members of the state executive committee, by virtue of the authority in us vested by the said ordinance and by law, do hereby call upon and direct the senators and representatives of the Legislature of the State of Dakota, to assemble on Monday the 14th day of December, 1885, the same being the second Monday of December, at the hour of 12 o'clock, meridian, at the said City of Huron, in the County of Beadle, in said state, then and there to organize as the Legislature of the State of Dakota, and to exercise the powers and perform the duties by the constitution devolved upon them as such Legislature.

By order of the constitutional convention,

Dated at Yankton, D. T., November 24, A. D. 1885.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL, President,
 E. P. BEBEE,
 STEPHEN G. UPDYKE,
 JOHN CAIN,
 J. R. HANSON,
 JAMES A. WARD,
 A. J. SIMMONS,

State Executive Committee.

Attest, C. M. REED, Secretary.

A proclamation was also issued by the state executive committee announcing in official language and at great detail the result of the election, the adoption of the constitution, the number of votes cast for and against said instrument, the number of votes cast for and against prohibition, and minority representation, together with the names of the state officers elected, members of the Legislature, judicial officers, etc., said proclamation being signed on the part of the territorial government by James H. Teller, secretary of the territory, and Daniel W. Maratta, United States marshal, Dakota Territory.

In order that the claim for statehood for South Dakota might find favor with the people of the United States, as well as with Congress, the results of many elections in the older states for the adoption of their constitutions, were compiled and published in connection with the result in South Dakota, and it will be borne in mind that a large number of votes were cast in the negative by democrats who yielded their convictions to the demands of party—they were for statehood, and there was no objection to the constitution.

The following list will show that Dakota could not be objected to because of lack of popular support at the polls. The figures given show the majorities by which the constitutions of the states named were adopted, namely:

Iowa, 1846	456	Florida	3,020
Iowa, 1857	1,630	Georgia	17,698
Nebraska	100	Louisiana, 1804	5,270
Kansas, 1860	4,891	Maryland, 1804	375
Oregon	4,000	Missouri	1,862
Wisconsin	10,293	North Carolina	18,000
Arkansas	1,316	Ohio	10,664
Connecticut	1,557	Pennsylvania, 1838	1,212
Dakota, 1883			5,522
Dakota, 1885			18,611

The constitution requiring Hugh J. Campbell, chairman of the state executive committee, to convene the two houses of the State Legislature called to meet at the temporary capital December 14th, and to administer the oath to the members, Mr. Campbell first called the House to order in the Huron Grand Opera House at 12.23 o'clock, Monday, December 14, 1885. Fully 1,000 people were in the hall, the floor and the gallery being crowded. After rapping for order, he read the list of members to whom credentials had been issued by the committee, each member responding to his name as called. All but eight of the ninety-eight representatives were present, there being no member from Walworth County, owing to no election being held. At the conclusion of the roll call, each member rose and took the oath, read and administered by the chairman. The latter then stated that they were duly qualified as representatives, and their course was entirely in their own hands.

Mr. Green, of Brule, nominated Mr. Turner, of Marshall, for speaker pro tem. The nomination was seconded by Mr. Beebe, of Minnehaha, and Mr. Turner's election was made unanimous. Mr. Cone, of Brule, nominated Thomas McConnell, editor of the Carthage Home, for temporary secretary. Carried unanimously. Prayer was then offered by Rev. J. W. Davis, of Huron, all the members standing.

The permanent organization was then effected on motion of Mr. Elliott, who nominated T. V. Eddy, of Watertown, for permanent speaker, and Mr. Elliott being elected without opposition, he was conducted to the presiding officer's station by Representatives Elliott and Beebe.

Mr. Elliott made a brief speech acknowledging the honor of the position and thanking his fellow-members. McConnell was chosen and continued as chief clerk; Peter Royem, of Yankton, assistant clerk; and Charles A. Neer, of Turner County, sergeant-at-arms. The officers then took the usual oath of office. As explaining why all the officers had been chosen unanimously, the secretary inserted in the minutes that there was but one democrat among the 131 members of both houses, and he did not have party applicants enough to run for the offices.

A joint resolution offered by Representative French, of Yankton, was adopted, requiring the clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate to make a compilation of the votes for state officers for the use of the Legislature.

Representative Allen's motion to apprise the Senate of the House's organization was adopted, and Messrs. Allen, Carson and Beebe were appointed for that purpose. After a recess the latter committee reported that the Senate would meet the House in joint session at 4 o'clock to witness the qualification of the state officers.

On motion of Representative Levi B. French, of Yankton, a committee of seven was appointed by the speaker to draft rules and order of business, as follows: Messrs. Weeden, Hanson, Robart, Shannon, Wardell, Tuttle and Wilcox. At 4 o'clock the state officers and senators appeared in the hall of the House, where the oath was administered to Governor Mellette and the other state officers. Whereupon the Senate retired, and the House then adjourned until 9 o'clock, Tuesday morning, the 15th. Seventy-four members were present.

At 12.45 o'clock on Monday, December 14, 1885, the State Senate was called to order in Grand Army Hall, by Hugh J. Campbell, who proceeded precisely as he did in the House. Lieutenant Governor Frank, of Lawrence County, then took the chair. John H. Drake, of the Aberdeen Pioneer, was elected secretary, with only two negative votes. Senators Washabaugh, Reed, Barnes, Cain, Gamble, Haines and Braden were appointed a committee on rules.

Prayer was offered by Rev. A. W. Adkinson, pastor of the Methodist Church. The following subordinate officers were then chosen: Assistant secretary, George L. Breckett, Beadle County; enrolling clerk, J. M. Preston, Lake County; engrossing clerk, Thomas Gawin; sergeant-at-arms, T. B. McCoy, Marshall County. A committee, consisting of Messrs. Niell, McClure and Lavin, was appointed to notify the House of the organization of the Senate. The House joint resolution to meet at 12 o'clock Tuesday to elect United States senators, was concurred in. The Senate then adjourned until 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, when the two houses will meet in joint convention and receive the governor's message.

Both houses then adjourned at 2 o'clock until 4 o'clock, when they met and received the governor's message.

A large majority of the members of both houses answered to roll call. The election of two United States senators was to be the only business of the session, except to provide for future sessions. Judge Gideon C. Moody appeared to have clear sailing for one of the senatorships. The other one was in contest between Judge Alonzo J. Edgerton and Hon. Hugh J. Campbell, the former of Davison County, and the latter from Yankton County. Mr. Campbell was on the ground working, while Mr. Edgerton had a large following among the conservative members.

The candidates for the United States senatorial positions on the evening before the election were Hugh J. Campbell, A. J. Edgerton, G. C. Moody, John A. Owen, of Kingsbury County, Seward Smith, of Beadle, and C. G. Williams, of the Watertown land office, and the correspondent stated that none of these, except Judge Campbell, had anywhere near enough to elect. No one could tell who would be hit.

Herewith is presented the first executive message addressed by the governor of the State of Dakota to the first State Legislature. The Legislature assembled at Huron on the 14th of December, pursuant to the authority of the constitution, and after organization, Governor Mellette delivered a most excellent state paper, in words and figures following. This was the first incident of the session on the second day:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

You have assembled to exercise for the State of Dakota the first governmental functions. You are assembled at the edict of more than a quarter of a million of free American citizens to ordain for them a state government. You come anointed for your work by their ballots, liberty's simple badge of power. Your warrant of guarantee is the Constitution of the United States and the Legislative enactments of the American Congress, written in the blood of patriots shed from Bunker Hill to Appomattox.

I deem it pertinent to call your attention to the peculiar relation sustained by the State of Dakota to the Federal Union. While that portion of the Territory of Dakota south of the 46th parallel unquestionably constitutes a state, de jure, and by the present exercise of their functions by the legislative and executive officers becomes essentially a state de facto, she has not yet obtained the recognition by Congress to which she is clearly entitled by statutes, precedent, justice and reason.

Michigan was for almost two years a state in the full exercise of her functions, legislative, administrative and judicial, before admission into the Union, and official acts during that period have been fully sanctioned and sustained by the law of the land. Arkansas was recognized and admitted upon like proceedings, as were also the states of Vermont, Kentucky, Tennessee, Maine, Florida, Iowa, Wisconsin, California and Oregon, some of them at the end of long and bitter controversies, accompanied by violence and bloodshed. These victories of the cause of self-government were won by the most exalted courage of American citizenship, supplemented by the most thrilling eloquence of the American forum. They have been fully confirmed by the official judgment of the state and national judiciary, and are grounded forever in that safer final depository of all American liberty, the minds and hearts of the people.

Both the compact contained in the Ordinance of 1787, upon which the State of Michigan rested, and won her cause, and the guarantee contained in the Treaty of the Louisiana Purchase, which was especially evoked in behalf of Arkansas, apply in direct terms and with positive force to sustain the constitution and government of the State of Dakota.

The citizens of Dakota inherit the right of self-government from the Pilgrim Fathers and the Huguenot exiles. The blood of their ancestors in the revolution cries out against taxation without representation, while their own blood and limbs left on freedom's battle-fields entitles them to freedom.

How great soever Dakota's faith in the guides who hold her leading strings, she would walk alone. In truth she has long been of age and needs no guardian. She certainly possesses the best knowledge of and deepest interest in her own welfare, and concedes to no state a more ardent zeal for the common union.

Her sturdy toils on the public domain which they have made to blossom as the rose and yield as the pomegranate, insist that they have some rights and interests which deserve to be conserved by a common voice to give true knowledge; backed by a common voice to give power in the decision of questions affecting the title of their homes, as well as those who model their ideas of the "interior" after that building and its grounds in Washington.

Statehood would also speedily result in a speedy reduction of the Great Sioux, Crow Creek and Sisseton Indian reservations, which would so greatly conduce alike to the welfare of both citizens and Indians. To the former by opening to settlement vast tracts of fertile lands, and to the Indians by bringing them in close contact with civilization and affording them at the same time means and encouragement to industry and advancement. Forty-four per cent of the area of the entire state is devoted to the occupancy of less than twenty-five thousand Indians, who can use at most but a small fraction of their lands, and would gladly dispose of the remainder. I am rejoiced to observe that the President of the United States recommends to Congress the reduction of these reservations by fifty per centum, an act which would speedily result in doubling the wealth and population of the state and conduce greatly to the comfort of the Indians.

The State of Dakota demands the possession of the lands set apart for her citizens by Congress for the support of their schools, for which they are now taxed almost beyond endurance, while the lands lie idle and begging for the plow, awaiting to unfold their riches to the state and nation.

But why pursue a question which is not debatable? An American Congress does not need to be told why 200,000 American citizens, who have been guilty of no crime, fully equipped and organized as a state, and bringing all the possible prerequisites to meet every test of statehood, should be admitted into the Union. If refused it will be an unwarranted and shameful act of blind partisan lust for power, to remain forever a burning disgrace to the annals of the nation, and the memory of those who perpetrated the crime.

But greatly as the state desires and deserves admission, her people will never accept it with boundaries more extended than at present defined, whose area of 80,207 square miles is more than equal to that of the six New England States combined with New Jersey and Delaware, and in the near future, by aid of self-governing power to be the abode of millions of prosperous people. If they are told they cannot have two United States senators, while the states mentioned, containing a less area, shall have sixteen, they prefer to have none. If her people are to be dependents in fact, they will remain so in name likewise. We adjure the people of North Dakota, in behalf of our common interest, to remain firm in this their often expressed avowal. If under the promptings of personal ambition we were mean enough to accept such injustice ourselves, we cannot be so base as to sacrifice the untold future of generations of freemen to whom we must soon transmit our magnificent heritage.

While I fully appreciate the importance to the state of her boundless mineral resources contained in the Black Hills Region, which, though still in the infancy of their development, now yield annually more than five millions of gold and silver and possess untold wealth of coal, petroleum, salt, mica, tin, copper and building material, and commend to you a subject of their development as of the greatest importance, the fact remains that the state must ever rely upon her agricultural resources for the support of the dense population, which is to constitute her chief greatness and importance as a commonwealth through all times.

The fact that the great and paramount adjustment between various interests of producing and transporting the nation's products, between capital and labor, and which from necessity must ever be an issue of vital importance in the arena of national politics until a happy mean is discovered and established which shall do even and exact justice to all and oppress none, is still unsettled, demonstrate the necessity that the people of this state and of the territorial domain remaining to the United States should insist upon admission to the Union in states of real extent which will afford them at least a respectable representation in the Senate of the United States, one of the co-ordinate departments of national legislation.

The fact that the balance of wealth is now and will remain forever with the East, is rather an argument in support of than against my position, as since constitutional liberty was established and while it exists among men, it must ever be maintained in the interest of the poor rather than the rich, the weak rather than the strong and mighty, as it is the toiling millions who create wealth and power upon earth.

The following official statistics, for which we are indebted to the Hon. Lauren Dunlap, commissioner of immigration for the Territory of Dakota, furnish an argument for division which cannot be questioned. Their absence has been the only excuse ever offered in Congress for refusing for five years the appeals of our people for admission. The population has been ascertained by an accurate census taken by sworn officers, appointed by statutory enactment of the territory of which the state recently formed a part, and by authority also of the Federal Government, and the statistics gathered and compiled in the same manner, and are as accurate as possible to be obtained:

Population, census of 1885.....	263,465
Vote for delegate, November 4, 1884.....	53,650
Vote on constitution, November 3, 1885.....	31,791
Majority for constitution	18,661
Number of farms, June 1, 1885	50,264
Number of acres of improved land, June 1, 1885.....	3,754,868
Number of acres under cultivation	1,883,058
Number of bushels wheat raised, 1884	12,829,578
Number bushels of oats, 1884.....	11,783,727
Number bushels corn, 1884	7,540,654

Total value of farms, June 1, 1885.....	$87,131,050
Value of live stock	25,950,622
Value of farm products, 1884	17,095,805
Number of schools, 1884	1,535
Number schoolhouses	1,340
Number colleges and universities	8
Number of postoffices	490
Total assessed valuations, 1885	$93,579,197
Number of miles of railroad.....	1,615
Area, square miles	80,207

The following table of comparisons shows whether Dakota is entitled to statehood from precedents established by the admission of former states having the popular support of the movement by the people, and the comparative density of her population, and shows a greater vote cast on the constitution, and when it is remembered that 44 per cent of her area is embraced in reservations, a denser population than any state in the list when admitted.

Comparisons:

- Wisconsin, admitted 1848; vote on constitution, 23,591; population, 180,000. Ratio of area to population, 1 in 8.
- Kansas, admitted 1861; vote on constitution, 15,951; population, 112,000. Ratio of area to population, 1 in 7.
- Nebraska, admitted 1867; vote on constitution, 7,774; population, 100,000. Ratio of area to population, 1 in 12.
- Dakota, admitted 1885; vote on constitution, 31,791; population, 263,465. Ratio of area to population, 1 in 8.

While I have not at hand statistics touching her manufacturing, banking and other commercial development, nor of her benevolent societies and institutions, they are all that could be anticipated as the result of the foregoing facts. Her people are peaceable, moral, temperate, earnest, upright, patriotic, many of them scarred and maimed in defense of the Union which they helped to preserve, and for whose crown they bring a new star which they now ask Congress, in the name of their 100 posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, to fix in the diadem of liberty.

The people of Dakota have carved the new state out of the wilds of the prairie in a half decade of years, at a touch of the magical wand of progress. The skeptics of the East, as of old, will not believe until they come and see, when they exclaim in wonder that the half had not been told.

The state is a product from the people, not from Congress. While Congress can endow it with the authority to act, it cannot construct it, else the state were not the "Government of the people, for the people, and by the people." The "enabling act," which has preceded the formation of the constitutions of some of the states, is at most but an invitation on the part of Congress, accompanied by money to pay the expenses incident thereto, to construct a state. The state's admission must in this case succeed the formation of the constitution and its inspection by Congress, which must first pass upon its legality and admit the state, which is already complete as a sovereign state. Congress declined to extend the courtesy of assisting in the formation of our state, as she might, but she can now only deny admission by arbitrary and unwarranted power. As a noted jurist, in delivering a decision in a similar case, expressed it, "because there is no power above to compel it to do its duty."

The only possible argument against the case we present to Congress is that the Civil war materially changed the construction of the Constitution and modified the traditions of American law as to the relation sustained by the states to the Federal Government. It is urged that every precedent upon which we predicate our case is antebellum construction of our unwritten Constitution obliterated by the blood of that awful sacrifice. Upon careful examination, however, we discover that our issue is not involved in or related to the questions settled by the Civil war.

The theory in support of the right of secession was that the rights of the state are original, while those of the Federal Government are derived, and therefore strictly limited to the needs of the state for a larger protection. It would follow from this construction that a state might narrow or enlarge the power of the Federal Government as its necessity or interest might require, or even nullify or secede from the operation of its laws. It is this construction that was overthrown by the war, and which has given place to a newer one never to be effaced from our book of Constitution or severed from the language of our hearts. It is the broad and comprehensive construction of Hamilton as expounded by Webster and sealed by the crisis of war, embracing the grand doctrine that the right of the state and the right of the Federal Government to be, are both original rights emanating from the people of the state and the people of the nation respectively, and therefore neither can limit or nullify the powers of the others as expressed by the people from whom they originate. But neither Hamilton nor Webster nor the apologists for the rebellion, ever maintained the theory necessary to support the objection offered to our procedure and our demand of absolute right to statehood, viz.: "That only the rights of the National Union are original, and that state governments are but charters of privilege, of derived authority to be enlarged, narrowed or suppressed, as national interest of party greed may dictate."

The boundaries of the state have been fixed according to the long avowed and practically unanimous wish, not only of our own citizens but also of the citizens of North Dakota. This common desire has been manifested to Congress during the last five years in every manner possible to this people. It has been repeatedly and unanimously conveyed by the territorial committees of both the great parties, and also by unanimous memorials of the territorial assemblies. It has been urged by the territorial delegates in Congress as well as by delegations of her prominent citizens, repeatedly sent from all sections and representing every possible phase of local, political and popular sentiment, and never has any representative body pretending to possess authority thereto from the people, declared against it.

In 1883 the people of the State of Dakota, in their primary capacity as sovereign citizens of the United States, proceeded to form for themselves a constitution. After a session of sixteen days' duration of nearly one hundred delegates, duly chosen from all the counties by ballot, a constitution was promulgated and afterwards ratified by the people. The charter of the statehood being still withheld by Congress, in 1885 the Territorial Legislature unanimously provided for the formation of a second constitution, and also for a state government thereunder. The convention, consisting of ninety-two members, regularly elected by ballot, remained in session eighteen days and framed a constitution which commended itself to the people, as expressed by their ballots, 25,225 being cast for its adoption, and 6,525 against it. This remarkable vote, representing nearly one-half the suffragists of the state, cast at an election held at the busiest season of the year, without any general canvass or agitation of the subject, and upon an issue which it was conceded would unquestionably prevail, should furnish proof positive abroad of the fact so well known at home, of the practical unanimity of the sentiment of the people in support of the measure. This constitution is republican in form and will commend itself to the nation as pre-eminently fitted to mature and conserve the interests and development of the state. At the regular election which ratified the constitution, officers were also elected to fill the several state, district and county offices as provided by the schedule and ordinance, as were also two representatives to which the state is entitled in the lower house of the National Congress, the state and congressional ticket elected receiving an average of 29,000 votes out of the 32,000 cast.

The question as to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage should be prohibited in the state, was submitted as a distinct issue at the election, and 15,570 votes were cast for the proposition, while 15,337 votes were cast against it, so that Article XXXIV thus becomes incorporated in the constitution according to the provision of section 9 of the ordinance and schedule.

The issue of minority representation in the Legislature was also separately submitted, and 11,273 votes were cast in its favor, while 15,765 votes were cast against it. Article XXV accordingly fails to be incorporated in the constitution.

The following was the number of votes cast upon the temporary location of the seat of government, namely: Huron received 12,695 votes; Pierre, 10,649; Chamberlain, 3,232; Sioux Falls, 3,383; Alexandria, 1,374; scattering, 662 votes.

The City of Huron thus receiving a plurality of votes, becomes the temporary seat of government of the state, as provided by section 10 of the ordinance and schedule.

You will thus observe that your convention at this time and place as the first Legislature of the State of Dakota, is regular in procedure, and that in my opinion you constitute the sole law-making power within the limits of the state, subject only to the legislators of the Constitution of the United States, the senators of Congress, and the constitution of the State of Dakota.

Section 32 of the schedule and ordinance of the state constitution, provides as follows:

"Nothing in this constitution or schedule contained, shall be construed to authorize the Legislature to exercise any powers except such as are necessary to its organization, to elect senators of the United States, to provide and pass means and measures necessary, preliminary and incident to admission to the Union, and to assemble and reassemble, and adjourn from time to time; neither to authorize any officer of the executive or administrative departments to exercise any powers of office except such as may be preliminary and incident to admission to the Union; nor to authorize any officer of the judiciary department to exercise any of the duties of his office until the State of Dakota shall have been regularly admitted into the Union, except such as may be authorized by the Congress of the United States."

While this section confines your active functions prior to the admission of the state into the Union to such "means and measures" as may be necessary, preliminary and incident thereto, it leaves you the sole judges as to what means and measures may become necessary from time to time to secure such admission. It, however, indicates to my mind that it is the desire—that it is the intention of the law-makers that you be required to first exhaust all means and measures before resorting to such as would place the authorities of the state in conflict with those of the Government of the United States and the Territory of Dakota.

In view of the fact that our state constitution provides for the continuance of the territorial government, the laws enacted thereunder, and continues the territorial officers in the discharge of their duties until admission into the Union.

I therefore recommend that after fully completing the organization of both Houses, memorializing Congress on such internal questions as may in your judgment seem pertinent to the interests of the state enacting such legislation as may facilitate the labors of succeeding sessions which you are authorized to hold, and after electing two representatives of the state to the United States Senate, you do then adjourn your session subject to such future assembling as you may by law direct. I cannot doubt that the simple justice of your cause, when presented by your legally constituted representatives in Congress, will forthwith secure the admission of your state. I have faith in the broad patriotism, sound discretion and sensitive regard for the right manifested by the President of the United States, to believe that he will be a warm supporter of your cause.

I do not deem it necessary, at this time, to communicate my views upon the general legislation necessary to give vitality to the constitution. I trust, however, that in the near future it may become our duty to further confer as to enactments necessary to give full vigor and vitality to the intent and purpose of the fundamental law of the state, and the promotion of her interests, when we should feel above, beneath, and around us, not only the support of the laws of our country, but also the sympathy and sustaining power of the union of the states.

The people of Dakota, so long removed from party strife and ambition, cannot conceive that their fellow citizens, to whom is consigned a brief authority, can be so blinded by selfish motives as to mock our helplessness by the very surfeit of power.

Kansas struggled to statehood through blood, but her course can never excite the sympathy of intelligent statesmanship, as has the contempt so persistently shown to the rights of the people of Dakota. The state has not only demonstrated herself to be capable of administering and maintaining government, being a very hive of industry and thrift, presenting throughout her domain a model of law and order, sustained virtually without courts, the admiration of all well-minded and liberty-loving people.

While constitutional liberty is still against the steel hand of the invader, it is as delicate as the petal of the rose to the touch of the injustice from within. Robbed of justice, it is robbed of respect. Robbed of respect, it is robbed of its power. Robbed of power, it is robbed of life.

"Outraged contempt, death," is the epitaph inscribed on liberty's tablets adown the mausoleum of time. A wrong to the state is a wrong to the Union. While injustice injures her directly, the gangrene of her wounds is absorbed into every fibre of the body politic of which she is a member. Amputation is deformity. The only remedy is heal and the only ointment righteous justice. She no longer solicits a favor within the province of Congress to grant or withhold. She demands a right granted by law which Congress cannot legally refuse. If her people are content with less than justice, we are unworthy to be freed; if the nation offers less, it is unworthy to exist under the name of constitutional liberty. Dakota is a state, with every possible prerequisite fulfilled, a fact which she knows and will cause Congress to know. She embodies the best effort of the civilization of the age, and the broadest clarity the world ever produced, begotten by the religion of Christ, fostered by the Constitution of the United States, under the tutelage of the Declaration of Independence.

Situated in the bosom of the Union, whose great artery cuts her in twain as it presses on to the sea, embracing her mountains of gold, and the limitless expanse of the most fertile soil which laughs at the caress of her happy husbandmen, rejoicing in the most salubrious climate which the sun blesses in his journey, she brings her willing hand and loyal heart—herself—to the sisterhood of states. I have full confidence that your patriotic devotion and courageous manhood will never permit you to betray the sacred trust committed to your keeping, and that you will devise and adopt such "means and measures" in the future as may be found necessary to fully realize the expectations of your constituencies. If their rights continue to be ignored, if their disfranchisement is enforced until the hardships arising from dependency shall reduce them to poverty and starvation, whether to abandon the beautiful land of their adoption and the ruins of the magnificent state of their construction, a land sacred to them by every tie of partial and social endearment, and by the graves of their dead, and return to their former homes which will have passed into the hands of strangers, or to adopt further measures to maintain their rights, will be a question for freemen and the sons of freemen to decide. The prospering of this state cannot long endure in its present condition. Schools, churches, and benevolent institutions must be abandoned or reduced, without the aid of the proceeds of the lands held in abeyance for their support.

Liberty is the touchstone that inspires the civilization of the age. Tyranny long sustained, begets subjects fit for tyranny.

The State of Dakota commits her cause to the decision of the American Congress, and claims for its consideration an interest paramount to the remote people of the Eastern or even of the Western Continent, and expects justice. Being again denied her rights she will carry her cause to the national judiciary, and finally to the people of the Union, with firm reliance upon primary and sovereign capacity as monarchs of even the legislative, executive and judiciary, which are, after all, the creatures of their will. By this verdict they will abide,

A. C. MELLITE, Governor.

ELECTING SENATORS

At the election held the following day, after listening to the governor's message, the houses separated and each house voted for senators. In the Senate the contest was between Edgerton and Campbell, it being conceded that Moody would receive every vote. The ballot stood: Edgerton, 27; Campbell, 3.

In the House the vote stood: Edgerton, 53; Campbell, 35. Judge Moody, for second senator, received a unanimous vote.

The issue in the selection of senators was presented in the contest between Edgerton and Campbell, the former insisting that there could be no state government until the state was admitted into the Union, and the latter ostensibly insisting upon the practicability of the Michigan plan of setting up a state government, should Congress refuse admission. Judge Moody's position was well known, as is shown by his letter hereto annexed. He had no confidence in the success of any state movement outside the Union, but there was such confidence in his ability that it was generally conceded that he could do more with Congress, even an unwilling Congress, than any other citizen, and that he would work faithfully to secure statehood.

The Legislature met in joint session on the 15th, and confirmed the election of Judges Moody and Edgerton. In the afternoon of the same day another joint session was held for the purpose of listening to addresses from the senators-elect, both of whom acquitted themselves very satisfactorily. Judge Campbell, though defeated, made a very satisfactory address, and later a joint resolution was adopted, publicly thanking him for his valuable services to Dakota during the long statehood campaign.

Authority was given to the governor, the lieutenant governor and speaker of the House, to reconvene the Legislature at any time. Any two of these officers were empowered to act in this matter. A supplementary memorial to Congress passed, citing the fact of the complete organization of the state government, and requesting Congress to recognize it.

A resolution was introduced later in the House declaring that Dakota would accept nothing less from Congress than statehood. This was intended to shut off any compromise by accepting division, should it be offered, but the resolution was tabled. It was apparent that if admission was refused and division offered, it would be well to take it into consideration, but a contingency of that sort was not seriously apprehended.

There was nothing the Legislature could do in the way of legislation, had it desired, the restraining clause in the constitution forbidding that body from attempting to exercise its functions as a Legislature, barring the way.

At this time the constitutional convention held an adjourned session at Huron, and its members attended the sessions of the Legislature.

On the first day, the 14th, after organization, the two bodies appointed a joint committee of conference, nine of whom were members of the constitutional convention, and twelve from the legislative bodies, for the purpose of considering the proposition to repeal the clause in the schedule and ordinance of the constitution which restrained the Legislature from exercising its legislative authority.

A state executive committee of one from each county was appointed with the following membership: Union County, George Freeman; Yankton County, L. B. French; Lincoln, Thomas Thorson; Hutchinson, C. Buechler; Minnehaha, C. S. Gifford; Davison, R. W. Wheelock; Brule, A. G. Kellam; Miner, Stephen Jones; Brookings, H. H. Natwick; Beadle, S. C. Nash; Buffalo, Joseph Donahue; Hughes, W. Summerside; Grant, A. B. Smedley; Hamlin, H. P. Ryan; Clark, J. E. Bennett; Faulk, J. A. Pickler; Marshall, H. R. Turner; Brown, John H. Drake; Pennington, A. J. Simmons; Clay, John L. Jolley; Bon Homme, Robert Dollard; Turner, A. Haines; Douglas, F. LeCocq; Hanson, Thomas Chapman; Aurora, C. J. Anderson; Lake, George Wright; Sanborn, T. D. Kanouse; Kingsbury, J. A. Owen; Hand, J. M. Templeman; Hyde, John McDowell; Sully, Samuel Dewell; Roberts, George E. Maticc; Codington, H. R. Pease; Spink, G. W. Foster; Potter, W. P. Stone; Day, John Norton; Campbell, Frank Alexander; Lawrence, Samuel Roy.

A state central committee was also appointed consisting of A. C. Mellette, Hugh J. Campbell, Joseph Allen, Turner County; Frank P. Phillips, Brule County; A. Davis, Beadle County; Thomas Sterling, Spink County; Frank J. Washabaugh, Lawrence County.

The governor was advised by a motion unanimously adopted, to call the State Legislature together at as early a day as practicable, and the meeting then adjourned.

PROCEEDINGS IN CONGRESS—DEBATE IN SENATE

While the subject of Dakota's division into two nearly equal parts occupied the attention of Congress for a great many years, beginning as early as 1872, and the subject of statehood, naturally, because of its relationship, became prominently a national topic about the year 1880; a climax of interest and discussion similar to that of 1882-83, was reached during the session of Congress beginning in December, 1885, following the adoption of the state constitution framed at Sioux Falls.

The opponents of division and admission, in Congress, viewed all these proceedings as revolutionary, because without authority from Congress. The advocates of division and admission, in that body, approved and defended the proceedings, not only as lawful but sustained by abundant precedents.

Senator Harrison, of Indiana, who had championed the cause of Dakota, introduced a bill to provide for the admission of Dakota into the Union as a state under the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885, which had been formally presented to Congress.

Prior to the introduction of the Harrison bill, a day or two, the president of the Senate laid before the body a memorial from the state executive committee appointed by the constitutional convention of Dakota, praying for the admission of Dakota as a state of the Union, and transmitting a "draft of the constitution for the approval of Congress." The committee's note of transmission is herewith quoted:

To the Honorable President of the Senate of the United States:

We, the state executive committee of the State of Dakota, appointed by the constitutional convention of that part of the Territory of Dakota, situated south of the 46th parallel of latitude, have the honor herewith to transmit to you a certified copy of the constitution of the State of Dakota, and of the memorial from the constitutional convention to the President and Congress of the United States. We have also furnished, through Hon. B. Harrison, United States senator, an engrossed and certified copy of the constitution for presentation to the Senate through the President. Therefore I am instructed, on behalf of the constitutional convention of Dakota, to request you to have the said memorial and constitution duly presented to the Senate of the United States for its consideration and the same be referred to the proper committee and acted upon on the application of said committee, and on behalf of the people of said state, for the admission of the said state into the Union.

Yours Respectfully,

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,

President of the State Constitutional Executive Committee.

JOHN CAHN, E. C. BEEBE, A. J. SIMONS,

JAMES R. HERRON, JAMES ATWOOD,

STEPHEN J. UPDYKE, Committee.

Senator Harrison then stated that the territorial committee only awaited the receipt of the memorial in order to introduce the bill providing for the admission of the territory named, and would introduce the measure at the earliest opportunity.

On the 10th of December, Senator Butler, of South Carolina, offered a resolution directing the Committee on Territories to inquire and report by what authority the so-called Legislature had been organized in the Territory of Dakota, and whether such organization was not calculated to bring about a conflict of authority prejudicial to good order in that territory. The senator requested immediate consideration of his resolution, but Senator Ingalls objected, and, under the rules, the resolution was laid over for one day.

The following day the Butler resolution was laid before the Senate, whereupon Senator Harrison stated that he did not think a committee was necessary for that purpose. The efforts of Dakota, he said, were perfectly respectful to the United States. Its new constitution fully recognized the authority of the United States and stayed the hand of the new state organization until the new constitution should be approved by Congress. For six years the people of Dakota had been trying to secure action by Congress looking to their admission. The Senate had passed the bill for their relief, but the bill had not been passed by the other house.

Senator Butler inquired by what authority United States senators had been elected in Dakota.

Senator Harrison replied that he could show that senators had hitherto been elected under precisely similar circumstances, and Dakota had the right to go as far at least as Tennessee, California and Michigan.

Senator Butler responded that if the proceedings in Dakota were regular and proper, no one would more quickly recognize the fact than himself. He had offered the resolution for the purpose of ascertaining facts. He thought the senator from Indiana had worked himself into a passion unnecessarily.

Senator Harrison replied that he was not in a passion. The senator, said he, has never been in a passion, or he would be able to discriminate. Mr. Harrison briefly reviewed the question of the admission of territories, and said that the democrats, at any rate, ought not to question the propriety of the action of Dakota.

Mr. Butler responded that no question of politics was involved.

Mr. Harrison said he was pleased that Mr. Butler took such a statesmanlike view of the subject.

Mr. Butler inquired whether Mr. Harrison would sustain action by the Territory of Utah similar to the recent action of Dakota. (The Mormon question was involved in the Utah measure.)

Mr. Harrison replied that he would, but reserved to Congress the power to approve or disapprove their constitutional power, as was recognized and admitted by Dakota.

Senator McMillan, of Minnesota, said Minnesota had been admitted into the Union without an enabling act, and that democratic senators had been elected, and were ready to take their seats immediately on the passage of the bill for admission.

Senator Vest, of Missouri, democrat, said that the Senate by its report stood committed to the fact that there was no such thing in existence as the State of Dakota. A paper heretofore presented by Mr. Harrison and read from the desk, had borne the words "State of Dakota." The body of gentlemen coming here representing Dakota style themselves the executive committee of the State of Dakota, the chairman being Hugh J. Campbell, who was not unknown to fame since Hayes' administration, and his zealous and not overscrupulous assistance in that administration. That person, as he, Vest, saw by the newspapers who was to receive an ovation for having secured the recognition of the United States Senate for "the statehood of the State of South Dakota."

Senator Plumb said he thought Vest was giving Campbell a good deal of gratuitous advertising. Plumb represented Kansas.

Senator Vest retorted that Campbell was welcome to it. He, Vest, was a lawyer and regarded this Dakota organization as revolutionary. He had no doubt that the intent of the men concerned was to organize a state government in case this Congress should adjourn without organizing the so-called state.

In reply to the remark by Vest as to the condition under which the territories might be admitted into the Union, Mr. Harrison said there was no such thing as breaking into or breaking out of the Union.

Mr. Vest said that if he was talking of "breaking out," "we have settled that." (Mr. Vest was one of the secessionists from Missouri.)

Mr. Harrison:

Then there could have been no point to the senator's remark.

Mr. Vest:

I am not leaving this matter to the senator. He then argued the question from a legal standpoint, and cited authorities to show that the recent action of Dakota was revolutionary, and he offered an independent resolution to the effect that the memorial from the persons calling themselves "State Executive Committee of Dakota," be considered as coming from private individuals of Dakota.

The resolution was laid over and ordered printed.

Senator Logan thought it unfair for senators to regard the action of Dakota as revolutionary until they should set up a state and undertake the functions of a state.

Senator Butler said he had misapprehended what constituted a state, if the election of senators and judges was not asserting statehood.

Senator Logan said this was done so as to take effect when they should be admitted, as had been done before.

Mr. Butler could remember but one such instance.

Mr. Logan said he could not undertake to correct the senator's recollection of history, but cases of Michigan, Minnesota and Kansas were cited, by republicans.

Senator Plumb said that Kansas presented exactly a similar case to Dakota.

Senator Vest said he had not especially looked up the case of Kansas, although Missouri had some interest in that admission, "for," said he, "a large portion of Missouri's personal property escaped into that state."

Senator Plumb:

"Yes, some that was black."

Senator Vest:

"No, sir, some other, but let that pass." He would not accuse the republicans of needing three electoral votes.

Senator Logan suggested (sotto voce) that the reason urged for trying to get a state into the Union might be applied to the attempt to keep a state out.

Senator Harrison attacked the resolution of Senator Butler where it was declared "that the action of the people of Dakota in organizing a state government and electing United States senators was in contempt of the national authority." The senator quoted the concluding relation of the Dakota constitution and the memorial accompanying it, each of which declares that the functions of the government so constituted are to be held in abeyance until favorable action of Congress. Mr. Harrison continued:

The people of Dakota have done only what they had a perfect constitutional right to do, as established by repeated precedents. At least thirteen states have been admitted into the Union whose state constitutions and government were formed without any previous enabling act of Congress, so that with the original thirteen states, the weight of authority is on the side of the Dakota proceedings. In the case of Tennessee the state government was set up and the papers were forwarded to the President, with an accompanying notice that on a certain day the territorial government of Tennessee would terminate. These papers were laid before Congress by President Jackson with no word of censure, but with a message of approval.

Senator Harrison said he was glad to see the sensitiveness of the senator from South Carolina to anything like treason, and believed with him that anything like rebellion should be rebuked in its incipency. President Jackson knew nullification and rebellion when he saw it, and did not hesitate to proclaim against it. In the case of Tennessee, despite the peremptory notice to the world, neither the President nor Congress saw anything disrespectful.

The cases of Arkansas and Michigan were presented. Quotations from John Quincy Adams, John Morris and Mr. Raner, as well as from James Buchanan, being read, in which all of them said that the proceedings in Michigan were perfectly orderly and respectful to the national Government, Mr. Buchanan being especially emphatic. These states came in by virtue of the Treaty with Louisiana and the Ordinance of 1787, the privileges of which have been extended over Dakota by four successive acts of Congress. In both these cases the vote in the House was 150 to 40 in favor of admission, and in the Senate there was a pronounced majority, thus settling the question of the right and propriety of the people of a territory to frame a constitution, organize a state government, elect officers, and then come to Congress for the ratification of their act. In the cases of California and Michigan, the state governments were in active operation before admission, and in the former John C. Fremont and William M. Gwinn had been elected senators and were in waiting in Washington, and were sworn in the moment the act of admission was passed.

On the 18th, Senator Butler called up his resolution at the expiration of the morning hour, and at once gave way to Senator Vest, of Missouri, a radical opponent of Dakota, who declared that the Senate had, without its knowledge, endorsed the claims of the people of Dakota to be now in a condition of statehood without respect to the action of Congress. Vest declared this to be their attitude and wanted to know whether any senator would assert that there could be such a thing as a state outside of the Union. If that was not revolution, then the English language had lost its force, and he would like to know what revolution was.

A member said: "You ought to know."

In supporting his position, Vest quoted from the address of Hugh J. Campbell, chairman of the state executive committee, which, he said, was a memorial to Congress, but which in reality was simply an address to the people of the state.

Senator Harrison interrupted him and made the distinction clear, but Mr. Vest continued his assertion that Campbell's address was an authoritative and official expression of the attitude of the people of Dakota, and he had asserted that Dakota was a state without reference or respect to the action of Congress. Vest's whole speech was upon this line, the principal point he made being the exercise by the people of Dakota of the highest act of state sovereignty in their election of United States senators. This, Vest said, had never been done except in one instance.

Senator McMillan, of Minnesota, here interrupted, rehearsing the admission of Minnesota into the Union, from which it appeared that the people of Minnesota had assembled in two constitutional conventions, sitting simultaneously, and at the close of the conventions' sessions the two united in the formation of a constitution. A full ticket of state officers was elected, with General Sibley as governor, he (McMillan) being one of the judges elected. The Legislature elected two United States senators, General Shields and another. Some months before the admission of the state, and at the time these state officers were elected and this state government was formed, the territorial government was in active operation, with Sam Medary, of Ohio, as territorial governor, and nobody at that time pretended that the people of Minnesota were in a state of rebellion.

Senator Plumb, of Kansas, asked Senator Vest if he knew how Kansas came into the Union, and Vest confessed that he did not. He only knew that it got in somehow. Senator Plumb then gave the history of the state under the Wyandotte constitution, showing that the people of Kansas had done precisely as the people of Dakota had done in every particular, going so far as to elect a member of the lower house, Martin F. Conway, who had been in Washington for months waiting for the admission of that state. Mr. Plumb suggested that the senator from Missouri ought to be intimately acquainted with the history of Kansas, for obvious reasons. Mr. Plumb showed that in the case of Kansas, the boundaries of the state were not the same as the boundaries of the territory, but were identical with the action of the people of Dakota.

The debate over the Harrison admission bill continued through January, 1886, and in the meantime Senator Butler, of South Carolina, introduced another measure as a substitute for the Harrison bill, which was an "enabling act providing for the admission of the Territory of Dakota as a whole, and as one state of the Union, when an election shall have been held under the act, and a constitution, republican in form, shall have been adopted by the people of such territory." The substitute also prescribed in detail conditions to be observed by the proposed state as to public lands and schools. It provided for a convention of 175 delegates to meet in December, 1886, and frame a constitution, which, if satisfactory, the state was to be admitted by presidential proclamation. It was said that the bill was furnished to the senator ready-made by ex-Governor Ordway, and other Dakota anti-divisionists, who remained in Washington pursuing the one-state phantom. On this occasion, Senator Butler spoke as follows:

Mr. President: I concede the right of the people of a territory to apply for admission as a state when it has the necessary conditions, but I deny that a territory inherits a right to organize a state government. Congress alone can authorize the transition from a territory to a state, and the exercise of that power by any other body would be bold usurpation. Mr. Butler argued at length in support of this proposition, but produced nothing new, but he contended further that "territories have no right to divide themselves up at their own pleasure and do as Dakota has done in this instance. As to the admission of Tennessee, Kentucky and Maine, these had been carved out of territory belonging to North Carolina, Virginia and Massachusetts, three of the thirteen original states, and under the Constitution, the consent of the Legislatures of these states was all that was necessary, and was taken as tantamount to an enabling act."

In the case of Arkansas and Michigan—two political Titans—slavery and anti-slavery—were approaching each other by converging lines. Michigan represented one and Arkansas represented the other, and both were taken into the Union in an unconstitutional manner. Those cases were cases of compromise—attempts to temporize with the impending irrepressible conflict. It would have been better for the country if the issue had been at that time met and settled, than to have postponed it to a time thirty years later, when the power and capacity of the sections to struggle with each other had so largely increased.

Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin and Nevada, had come into the Union under enabling acts. Slavery was now dead. The people of the Union are becoming more and more homogeneous. Time has been melting down the asperities that came of conflict. All are happily at peace. Our territories are being occupied by intelligent and hardy pioneers. Why then should we depart from safe, time-honored constitutional rules for the admission of new members into the family of states?

Was there a pressing political exigency lurking behind this movement which impelled it forward with almost unseemly zeal? Was there a purpose to hasten proceedings lest a change might come which might alter the political complexion of the representatives in the National Legislature? I cannot disabuse my mind of such a suspicion, and that a snap judgment will be rendered if we refuse to ratify the present movement.

The action of South Dakota has been ultra vires and void. I have received intimations of fraud in the proceedings taken there—of crimination, recrimination and ringism. Much division of opinion prevails in the territory as to a division on the line of the 46th parallel.

Why not have a fair hearing on the questions involved, so that when Congress meets again it will have material for intelligent action? I can hardly conceive that any personal discourtesy had been intended by the "railroading through the committee of territories of an adverse report on the resolution offered by the senator from Missouri (Mr. Vest), and himself, relating to Dakota. They had been adversely passed upon at the very first meeting of the committee after their reference by the Senate, without notice or opportunity to me to be present at their consideration. Was this haste because of fear that after a full consideration had been given to those resolutions, the weakness of the cause now made of Dakota would be made manifest, and the motives behind the efforts of the "state executive committee" would be exposed? If Dakota is admitted under the unconstitutional action already taken, we might as well abolish all parliamentary proceedings and judicial forms.

When Dakota shall come here provided with the proper countersign, and it shall be my duty on guard, I will, with pleasure, pass her on to the heart of the citadel of the nation.

The bill was not reported from the committee.

Another measure was introduced in the House by Representative Fredericks, of Iowa, providing for the division of Dakota on a north and south line, which had its initial point on the 49th degree of latitude where said line was intersected by the 23 1/4th degree of longitude west from Washington.

The Fredericks' division bill proposed to divide the Territory of Dakota with a boundary line beginning at the mouth of the Big Sioux River and following the channel of the Missouri River as far north as the northwest corner of Emmons County, on the ninth standard parallel north, thence running a line due north through the counties of Burleigh, Sheridan and McHenry, to the international boundary—the 49th parallel. All the territory west of the river and the line, to be called Lincoln, leaving Bismarck the capital of the new Territory of Lincoln.

The territory east of this boundary was formed into the State of Dakota, with a temporary capital at Redfield or Aberdeen.

Nothing came of either of the measures, which were said to have been the work of Dakotans who were opposed to division.

Senator Harrison's bill for the admission of Dakota under the constitution adopted in 1885 passed the Senate on the 6th of February, 1886, by a vote of 32 to 22, Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, being the only democrat voting for it. Under this bill the portion of the territory north of the 46th parallel was made a territory with the name of Lincoln.

The bill having been transmitted to the House, was reported from the House Committee on Territories about the 1st of June, 1886. There were two reports submitted, a majority and minority. The former report was adverse, and concluded with these words:

The vote by which the constitution of the state was adopted demonstrated the truth of the assertion made by them in these words, "It cannot be said, in view of these facts, that the people of Dakota, and especially of South Dakota, are in favor of the admission into the Union of the southern part of Dakota as a state."

This reasoning was based on the assumption that the vote did not show that a majority of the people had voted upon the proposition; that the members of the democratic party had largely abstained from voting, and that the voters of the northern half had been given no voice in the election which divided the territory. The committee might have offered an amendment to the bill requiring a vote of the whole territory on the question of division, and might also have required the people of the southern half to vote again on the adoption of the constitution had it been at all willing to afford the people their right to a state government, but this was not the plan of the democratic majority, which had already prepared and introduced a bill providing for the admission of the entire territory as one state.

The minority report supported the action of the people of the territory, whose representatives had in the first instance through the Territorial Legislature authorized the holding of the constitutional convention, showing the consent of the northern section to the division, and all that followed, up to the adoption of the constitution and all else connected therewith.

The minority report, by five members of the House committee, stated:

The people of Dakota, and especially of South Dakota are in favor of admitting into the Union the southern part as a state; that every fact justifies, and every consideration demands and establishes beyond question, the claim of Dakota to immediate admission into the Union. We beg to submit that the majority have erred in failing to suggest any proposition by way of amendment to the pending Senate bill, by which the people of Dakota may be afforded their rights, under the constitution, to admission.

The majority report was adopted, but the Sioux Falls constitution survived.

REPRESENTATIVE HILL, OF OHIO, A CHAMPION OF DAKOTA'S INTERESTS

Sen. Benjamin Harrison and Rep. William D. Hill, the former of Indiana, and the latter a democrat of Ohio, were the champions of Dakota's interest during the long session of Congress beginning December 4, 1885, and lasting nearly ten months. Hill was a democrat. There was a great deal of information regarding the rights of the people of the territories disseminated. The public had an opportunity to learn, if they read the news of the day closely, much regarding the Constitution of the United States and the authority it conferred on Congress to rule the territories, or rather the power it did not confer. There had been no rule established by the national Government, either in the legislative or judicial departments, that provided a method by which new states were to be admitted. The most learned and experienced statesmen in the country, when asked in what manner a territory should proceed to gain admission into the Union as a state, would usually reply that it was necessary that the territory should have a population sufficient to entitle it to a member of Congress, but would qualify this by adding that this requirement had not always been insisted upon. Beyond this he would be unwilling to say further than to cite the State of California, which had never had a territorial government; Texas had an independent republic of her own and simply consented to be annexed, reserving the right to divide herself into five additional states at her discretion; Michigan, where the people set up a state government and were governed by it, ignoring the territory, for some time before being admitted; Kansas, where no questions or consent of Congress had been asked until the state presented itself with its Wyandotte constitution and state organization and demanded admission. And other states where a procedure somewhat different from any of the states that had traversed the way to statehood, showing that there was not only no defined rule nor even an authoritative precedent. It seems remarkable that a matter of so much importance to our nation and to the states should have been left to—Providence, fortunately.

Colorado was admitted in 1876, winning the distinction and title of the Centennial State, and she participated in the election of the President chosen that year, the contest being between Hayes, republican, and Tilden, democrat. It will be remembered that the result of this election was so close that it required an electoral commission to decide it, and the democrats held that if they had kept Colorado out another year it would have given them the Presidency. And in the Dakota case the control of the United States Senate and the election of a President were powerful factors in influencing the minds of eastern statesmen and democratic congressmen and republican congressmen also. The story has all been told in preceding pages.

Now in 1886, South Dakota had her constitution adopted—the same that she was finally admitted under; she also had her senators and congressmen elected and commissioned, and her state officers elected and sworn; her Legislature elected and organized, and only awaited the invitation of Congress to step into the sisterhood of states, and take her part in the legislative work of the Nation. But the Committee on Territories of the House, controlled by Mr. Springer, apprehensive that a large number of democratic members would vote for the admission and division bills, as a matter of justice, delayed their reports until so near the close of the session that a vote on the bills was not reached.

Harrison had put the Dakota bill through the Senate by the force of his aggressiveness, which was a prominent characteristic of the Indiana statesman. It is the man behind the bill in a legislative body that usually wins, if he has a meritorious measure.

Congressman William D. Hill was a democrat and had been elected from a close Ohio district, going in on the tidal wave that swept Mr. Cleveland into the Presidency. It will be observed that a new President has a House of Representatives of his party elected with him as a rule. But Mr. Hill was, nevertheless, an ardent supporter of Dakota's claims to division and statehood. He had introduced a bill early in the session for the division of Dakota. Originally, he had provided for separate elections in the northern and southern sections, the dividing line being the 46th parallel, and if either section voted a majority against division it would defeat the proposition. Reflecting upon the apparent injustice of this provision, which would give the minority an equal power with the majority if that minority happened to carry either section, the author of the bill voluntarily struck out that provision, and left the victory to the majority vote of the whole territory. Mr. Hill was a member of the Committee on Territories and was not satisfied with the non-action policy of the committee. He took the liberty of reporting his own bill to the House accompanied by a most valuable review, showing that he was master of the historical as well as legislative history of the territorial subject. His report left no tenable ground for an opponent to occupy. Because of its historical value it should be interesting to the people of the Dakotas, and is here reproduced:

The undersigned cannot fully agree with all statements made in the majority report of the committee on territories, on Senate bill 967, "providing for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union, and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln." Nor can the undersigned give his consent to a favorable report on House bill No. 8120, providing for the admission of Dakota as a whole into the Union, and hereby gives his reasons for his dissent therefrom.

The undersigned agreed with the majority that Dakota should not be admitted under Senate bill No. 967, because all of the people of the territory were not consulted fairly on the question of division, and in the formation of the constitution for the proposed state of Dakota. I cannot agree with the conclusion reached by the majority in their interpretation of section 3 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, which is as follows:

"New states may be admitted by Congress into this Union, but no new state shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other state, nor shall any state be formed by the junction of two or more states or parts of states, without the consent of the Legislatures of the states concerned as well as of the Congress."

As applied to the division of a state already in the Union, the construction of this provision of the constitution by the majority is undoubtedly correct, but as applied to the division of a territory, I claim this provision of the constitution has no application at all. On the other hand, I believe that Congress has the undoubted power to divide a large territory into two territories, or to consent, by proper legislation, to a division thereof by the people who are qualified electors therein.

As stated by the majority, Dakota has 149,000 square miles, and by the census of 1885 a population of 415,000, probably now 500,000. The fact that Texas has a large number of square miles, and has not divided, is no reason, in the opinion of the undersigned, why Dakota should not be divided. It is a fact presumably known by every member of Congress, that the admission or rather the annexation of Texas to the Federal Union was without precedent in our national history. That before Texas consented to become a state of our Union she reserved the right to her people, by solemn treaty stipulations, to divide the territory into five states without the consent of Congress, and that those treaty obligations make a higher law than any act of Congress.

The fact that the people of Texas have not seen fit to divide their territory does not alter the paramount fact that the Government of the United States, through the chosen and constitutionally appointed representatives, conceded to the people of Texas the absolute right to do so, nor can the undersigned see the force of the argument of the majority, that Montana, New Mexico, Arizona and Wyoming have a larger number of square miles than the two sections of Dakota would have if the territory were equally divided. This Congress knows, and the people of the country know, that nearly every acre of the Territory of Dakota is susceptible to a high state of cultivation, and that the soil and climate of that territory make it capable of sustaining as dense a population as any of the western states. Though open to settlement but a few short years, it is conceded by the majority that the population of Dakota already exceeds that of eight states of the Union and four of the original thirteen states. It now has a larger number of presidential postoffices and a larger revenue therefrom than any other territory, though younger in its organization, and larger than eleven states of the Union. The undersigned cannot agree that the number of square miles of any territory should constitute a state. Five hundred millions of square miles of sterile rocks and mountain canyons, such as composed a large part of Arizona, Colorado and Nevada, mentioned by the majority, would never make a state. More wheat can be grown in one county in Dakota than in 200,000 miles of a country like Pike's Peak.

The undersigned is under the impression that it requires a large number of intelligent people, with bone, muscle, mind and patriotism, with proper facilities for development, to constitute a state. All of these each section of Dakota has already, or soon will have, more than any other territory as a whole, more than any of the New England states, than any state on the Atlantic seaboard except New York and Pennsylvania, and equal to any of the middle, western or southern states.

As to representation in Congress, in the event of division, it will have to be conceded that it will make no difference as to numbers and power in the House of Representatives. There would, it is true, at some time in the future, be two additional United States Senators, from a great western state, who would represent, before the year 1900, more square miles of territory, more people and more wealth, and as much intelligence, as five of the New England states, with the State of Delaware combined.

The six New England states with New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, are now represented by eighteen members in the United States Senate, and out-vote in that body eighteen other senators of the nine largest states who represent one-half the population of the entire Union. While finding no fault with the balance of power given to the smaller states of the original thirteen, in the Senate, but firmly believing in the wisdom of the framers of our Government in providing for this original representation in the Senate, the undersigned cannot see the wisdom of this great disproportion when we have the power to correct it in this single instance by consulting the wishes of a half million people in Dakota on the question of a division of that territory.

Dakota is a part of the Louisiana Territory. If divided, it will still be larger than any state yet carved out of the Louisiana Purchase by act of Congress and the people, and yet Dakota is as capable of sustaining as great a population as any state in the Mississippi Valley, has developed more rapidly than any of said states, or any other territory ever organized by Congress.

The undersigned cannot agree with the majority, that Congress ought to exercise absolute power over the people of a territory, without consulting the wishes or wants of that people concerning questions of local and internal polity. Even before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, who ought to be good authority on questions of public policy, and who is now the best authority to the undersigned, was of the opinion that the people of a territory should be consulted on questions which were to bind them to certain conditions for all time to come.

In an able article, written by Stephen A. Douglas, in 1850, that great senator and patriotic Democrat stated Mr. Jefferson's views and his own in Harper's Magazine of that date, and from which I quote:

"On the last day of March, 1784, Thomas Jefferson and his colleagues in Congress executed the deed of cession in pursuance of the act of the Virginia Legislature, which was accepted and ordered 'to be recorded and enrolled among the acts of the United States in Congress assembled.' This was the first territory ever acquired, held or owned by the United States. On the same day of the deed of cession, Mr. Jefferson, as chairman of a committee which had been appointed, consisting of Mr. Jefferson, of Virginia; Mr. Chase, of Maryland, and Mr. Howell, of Rhode Island, submitted to Congress 'a plan for the temporary government of the territory ceded or to be ceded by the individual states to the United States.'

"It is important that this Jeffersonian plan of government for the territories should be carefully considered for many obvious reasons. It was the first plan of government for the territories ever adopted by the United States. It was drawn by the author of the Declaration of Independence, and revised and adopted by those who shaped the issues which produced the Revolution, and formed the foundation upon which our whole American system of government rests. It was not intended to be either local or temporary in its character, but was intended to apply to 'all ceded or to be ceded,' and to be universal in its application and eternal in its duration, wherever and whenever we might have territory requiring a government. It ignored the right of Congress to legislate for the people of the territories without their consent, and recognized the inalienable right of the people of the territories, when organized into political communities, to govern themselves in respect to their local concerns and internal policy. It was adopted by the Congress of the Confederation, on the 23rd day of April, 1784, and stood upon the statute books as a general and permanent plan for the government of all territory which we then owned or should subsequently acquire, with a provision declaring it to be a 'Charter of Compact,' and that its provisions should stand as 'fundamental conditions between the thirteen original states and those newly described and admitted, unalterable but by the joint consent of the United States in Congress assembled, and of the particular state within which such alteration is proposed to be made.'

"Thus this Jeffersonian plan for the government of the territories—the 'Charter of Compact'—these fundamental conditions, which were declared to be 'unalterable' without the consent of the people of 'the particular state (territory) within which such alteration is proposed to be made,' stood on the statute book when the convention assembled at Philadelphia in 1787, and proceeded to form the Constitution of the United States."

Now let us examine the main provisions of the Jeffersonian plan:

First, "That the territory ceded or to be ceded by the individual states to the United States, whenever the same shall have been purchased of the Indian inhabitants and offered for sale by the United States, shall be formed into additional states," etc.

The plan proceeds to designate the boundaries and territorial extent of the proposed "additional states," and then proceeds:

Second, "That the settlers within the territory so to be purchased and offered for sale, shall either on their own petition or on the order of Congress, receive authority from them, with appointment of time and place, for their free males of full age to meet together for the purpose of establishing a temporary government, to adopt the Constitution and laws of any one of these states (the original states), so that such laws shall be nevertheless subject to alteration by their ordinary Legislature, and to erect, subject to a like alteration, counties or townships for the election of members of their Legislature."

Having thus provided a mode by which the first inhabitants or settlers of a territory may assemble together and choose for themselves the constitution and laws of some one of the original thirteen states, and declare the same in force for the government of their territory temporarily, with the right on the part of the people to change the same, through the local Legislature, as they may see proper, the plan then proceeds to point out the mode in which they may establish for themselves a "permanent constitution and government," whenever they shall have 20,000 inhabitants, as follows:

Third, "That such temporary government only shall continue in force in any state until it shall have acquired 20,000 free inhabitants, when, giving due proof thereof to Congress, they shall receive from them authority, with appointments of time and place, to call a convention of representatives to establish a permanent constitution and government for themselves."

Having thus provided for the first settlers a "temporary government" in these "additional states," and for a "permanent constitution and government," when they shall have acquired 20,000 inhabitants, the plan contemplates that they shall continue to govern themselves as states, having, as provided in the Virginia deed of cession, "the same rights of sovereignty, freedom and independence," in respect to their domestic affairs and internal policy, "as the other states," until they have a population equal to the least numerous of the original states, and in the meantime shall keep a sitting member in Congress, with a right of debating but not of voting, when they shall be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the said original states. And "Until such admission by their delegates into Congress any of the said states, after the establishment of their temporary government, shall have authority to keep a sitting member in Congress, with the right of debating, but not of voting."

Attached to the provision which appears under the third head in this paper is a proviso containing five propositions, which, when agreed to and accepted by the people of said additional states, were to "be formed into a Charter of Compact," and to remain "unalterable," except by the consent of such states, as well as of the United States, namely:

"Provided, That both the temporary and permanent government be established on these principles as their basis:

"1. That they shall forever remain a part of the United States of America.

"2. That in their persons, property and territory they shall be subject to the government of the United States in Congress assembled, and to the articles of confederation in all those cases in which the original states shall be so subject.

"3. That they shall be subject to pay a part of the federal debt contracted, or to be contracted, to be apportioned on them by Congress, according to the same common rule and measure by which apportionments thereof shall be made on the other states.

"4. That their respective governments shall be in republican form, and shall admit no person to be a citizen who holds any hereditary title."

The fifth article, which relates to the prohibition of slavery after the year 1800, having been rejected by Congress, never became a part of the Jeffersonian plan of government for the territories, as adopted April 23, 1874.

The concluding paragraph of this plan of government, which emphatically ignores the right of Congress to bind the people of the territories without their consent, and recognizes the people therein as the true source of all legitimate power in respect to their internal polity, is in these words:

"That all the preceding articles shall be formed into a Charter of Compact; shall be duly executed by the President of the United States in Congress assembled, under his hand and the seal of the United States, and shall be promulgated and shall stand as fundamental conditions between the thirteen original states and those newly described, unalterable but by the joint consent of the United States in Congress assembled, and of the particular state within which such alteration is proposed to be made."

This Jeffersonian plan of government embodies and carries out the ideas and principles of the fathers of the Revolution, that the people of every separate political community (dependent colonies, provinces and territories, as well as sovereign states), have an inalienable right to govern themselves in respect to their internal polity, and repudiates the dogma of the British ministry and the Tories of that day, that all colonies, provinces and territories were the property of the empire, acquired with the common blood and common treasure, and that the inhabitants thereof have no rights, privileges or immunities, except such as the imperial government should graciously condescend to bestow upon them.

This plan recognizes by law an irrevocable "Compact," the existence of two distinct classes of states under our American system of government, the one being members of the Union, and constituting the original thirteen and such other states, having the requisite population, as Congress should admit into the Federal Union, with an equal vote in the management of federal affairs, as well as the exclusive power in regard to their internal polity respectively. The other, not having the requisite population for admission into the Union, could have no vote or agency in the control of federal relations, but possessed the same exclusive power over their domestic affairs and internal polity respectively, as the original states, with the right, while they have less than twenty thousand inhabitants, to choose for their government the constitution and laws of any one of the original states; and when they should have more than twenty thousand but less than the number required to entitle them to admission into the Union, they were authorized to form for themselves "a permanent constitution and government," and in either case they were entitled to keep a delegate in Congress with the right of debating, but not of voting. The "Charter of Compact," with the "fundamental conditions," which were declared to be "unalterable," without the joint consent of the people interested in them, as well as the United States, thus stood on the statute book un repealed and un repealable, furnishing a complete system of government for all territory "ceded or to be ceded" to the United States, without any other legislation upon the subject, when on the 13th day of May, 1787, the Federal Convention assembled in Philadelphia and proceeded to form the Constitution under which we now live.

Thus it will be seen that the dividing line between federal and local authority in respect to the rights of those political communities which for the sake of convenience, and in contradiction to the states represented in Congress, we now call territories, but which were then known as "states," or "new states," was so distinctly marked at that day, that no intelligent man could fail to perceive it.

Having thus divided the powers of government into three appropriate departments, with which they had always been familiar, they proceeded to confer upon the Federal Government substantially the same powers, which they as colonies had been willing to concede to the British Government, and to reserve to the states and the people the same rights and privileges which they as colonies had denied to the British Government during the entire struggle which terminated in our independence, and which they had claimed for themselves and their posterity as the birthright of all free men, inalienable when organized into political communities, and to be enjoyed and exercised by counties, territories and provinces, as fully and completely as by sovereign states. Thus it will be seen that there is no organic feature or fundamental principle embodied in the Constitution of the United States which had not been familiar to the people of the colonies from the period of their earliest settlement, and which had not been repeatedly asserted by them when denied by Great Britain during the whole period of their colonial history.

Let us pause at this point for a moment and inquire whether it be just to those patriots and sages who formed the Constitution of the United States to assume that they intended to confer upon Congress that unlimited and arbitrary power over the people of the American territories which they had resisted with their blood when claimed by the British Parliament over British colonies in America?

Did they confer upon Congress the right to bind the people of American territories in all cases whatsoever, after having fought the battles of the Revolution against a "preamble" declaring the right of Parliament "to bind the colonies in all cases whatsoever?"

If, as they concluded before the Revolution, it was the birthright of all Englishmen, inalienable when formed into political communities, to exercise exclusive powers of legislation in their local legislatures in respect to all things affecting their internal polity—slavery not excepted—did not the same right, after the Revolution, and by virtue of it, become the birthright of all Americans, in like manner inalienable, when organized into political communities, no matter by what name, whether colonies, territories, provinces, or new states?

Names often deceive persons in respect to the nature and substance of things. A signal instance of this kind is to be found in that clause of the Constitution which says: "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

This being the only clause in the Constitution in which the word "territory" appears, that fact alone has doubtless led many persons to suppose that the right of Congress to establish a temporary government for the territories, in the sense in which the word is now used, must be derived from it, overlooking the important and controlling facts that at the time the Constitution was formed the word "territory" had never been used or understood to designate a political community or government of any law, compact, deed or cession, or public document, but had invariably been used either in its geographical sense to describe the superficial area of a state or district of country, as in the Virginia deed of cession of the "territory or tract of country" northwest of the River Ohio, or as meaning land in its character as property, in which latter sense it appears in the clause of the Constitution referred to, when providing for the disposition of the "territory or other property belonging to the United States."

These facts, taken in connection with the kindred ones that during the whole period of the confederation and the formation of the Constitution, the temporary governments which we now call "territories" were invariably referred to in the deeds of cession, laws, compacts, plans of government, resolutions of Congress, public records, and authentic documents, as states, or "new states," conclusively shows that the words "territory and other property" in the Constitution were used to designate the unappropriated lands and other property which the United States owned, and not the people who might become residents of the lands and be organized into political communities after the United States had parted with their title.

It is from this clause of the Constitution alone that Congress derives the power to provide for the surveys and sale of the public lands and all other property belonging to the United States, not only in the territories, but also in the several states of the Union. But for this provision Congress would have no power to authorize the sale of the public lands, military sites, old ships, cannon, muskets, or other property, real or personal, which belong to the United States and are no longer needed for public purposes. It refers distinctly to property in contradistinction to persons and communities. It confers the same power to "make all needful rules and regulations," in the states as in the territories, and extends wherever there may be any lands or other property belonging to the United States to be regulated or disposed of, but does not authorize Congress to control or interfere with the domestic institutions or internal polity of the people (either in the states or territories) who may reside upon the lands which the United States once owned. Such a power, had it been vested in Congress, would annihilate the sovereignty and freedom of the states as well as the great principle of self-government in the territories wherever the United States happened to own a portion of the public lands within their respective limits, as at present in the states of Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, California and Oregon, and in the territories of Washington, Nebraska, Kansas, Utah and New Mexico. The idea is repugnant to the spirit and genius of our complex system of government, because it effectually blots out the dividing line between federal and local authority, which forms an essential barrier for the defense of the independence of the states and the liberties of the people against federal invasion. With one anomalous exception, all the powers conferred on Congress are federal, and not municipal, in their character, affecting the general welfare of the whole country without interfering with the internal polity of the people, and can be carried into effect by laws which apply alike to states and territories. The exception being in derogation of one of the fundamental principles of our political system (because it authorizes the Federal Government to control the municipal affairs and internal polity of the people in certain circumscribed and limited localities), was not left to vague inference or loose construction, nor expressed in dubious or equivocal language, but is found plainly written in that section of the Constitution which says:

"Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may by cession of particular states and acceptance by Congress become the seat of government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the state in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings."

No such power to "exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever," nor indeed any legislation in any case whatsoever, is centered on Congress in respect to the municipal and internal polity either of the states or of the territories. On the contrary, after the Constitution had been finally adopted, with its federal powers delegated, enumerated and defined, in order to guard in all future time against any possible infringement of the reserved rights of the states of the people, an amendment was incorporated into the Constitution which marks the dividing line between federal and local authority so directly and indelibly that no lapse of time, no partisan prejudice, no sectional aggrandizement, no frenzied fanaticism, can efface it. The amendment is in these words:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people."

This view of the subject is confirmed, if indeed any corroborative evidence is required, by reference to the proceedings and debates of the federal convention, as reported by Mr. Madison.

It is sufficient to say that the position then taken by Mr. Douglas was sustained by his party in Congress, and in the presidential campaign of 1856. It is true the right vouchsafed to the people of Kansas, under the leadership of Douglas, was a right, among other things, permitting them to decide by a popular vote whether Kansas, which was then organized by the division of the Territory of Nebraska, should become a free or a slave state. But if Congress could permit the 15,000 people of Kansas to decide whether that territory should be doomed to human bondage forever, it might with far greater propriety allow a half million of people in Dakota to have a voice in the division of that territory, or any other question of internal polity.

The undersigned agrees with the majority that the people of Dakota would, at some time in the future, have a voice in the election of a President and vice president, and the undersigned cannot see any reason why they should not. A less number of people in New Hampshire, Vermont, Florida, Oregon, Colorado, Nevada and Delaware have already participated in the election of President and vice president, and the undersigned can see no reason why a larger and equally as intelligent population should not at some time in the future have the same privilege in Dakota. The people of Dakota now expend three million annually for school purposes. They have more miles of railroad, better railroad facilities, more colleges, schoolhouses, and a larger number of small cities, than many of the states. They emigrated from the states to that territory, and their development of it in all that is required to found a great state is without precedent in all our history. Because her young and enterprising population has seen fit to endure the hardships and privations of a pioneer life for a few years forms no reason, in the opinion of the undersigned, why their wishes, so often repeated in their territorial legislative assemblies, in obedience to the popular will, should not be consulted by Congress.

The right of petition in this country has ever been held sacred. All political power is inherent in the people, and the people have a greater right to instruct members of Congress than members of Congress have to instruct the people. The vast number of petitions signed by many thousands of people of Dakota, referred to the Committee on Territories, and the expressions of the public press, impress the undersigned with the belief that this Congress ought not to attempt to force upon that people a condition of things which they do not want.

The undersigned, for the purpose of ascertaining the true wishes and wants of these people, prefers to ignore all the conflicting statements which have been made to this Congress from time to time by self-constituted representatives, town lot speculators, state capital locaters, and office-seeking politicians, by first referring this question of division of the territory on the 7th standard parallel rather than the 46th parallel, because that division will not require a division of counties, townships, and farms, as would be required by a division on the 46th parallel. The fact that the 7th standard parallel is only three or four miles south of the 46th parallel of latitude would make no material difference to the people of that territory as to the dividing line, if they want one.

For the reasons herein above given, the undersigned believes that a respectful consideration of the subject makes it the duty of Congress to first refer this question of division of that territory to a full vote of the people thereof, fairly ascertained by proper legislation, after which Congress can take proper steps to admit to the sisterhood of states Dakota and North Dakota, after the people of the two territories, once established, have taken the proper steps to organize state governments under the authority of enabling acts submitted by Congress and subject to the approval of the people.

For the reasons above stated, the undersigned respectfully reports that the passage of House Bill No. 7379 would better conform to the condition of affairs in Dakota, and is at least an act of but just concession to the rights of the people of said territory.

Respectfully submitted,

W. D. HILL.

CHAPTER CX

DAKOTA'S SENATORS PAY PRESIDENT CLEVELAND A VISIT

1885-86

THE FARGO WATERWAY CONVENTION—BIG STONE AND LAKE TRAVERSE CONNECTION—PRESIDENT AND DAKOTA COMMITTEE—ADDRESS TO THE PRESIDENT—OPTIMISTIC DAKOTANS—SEVENTH STANDARD BOUNDARY—DEMOCRATIC HOUSE CAUCUS ON DAKOTA QUESTION—DAKOTA STATE LEGISLATURE CALLED TOGETHER—GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE—REPEALING RESTRAINING CLAUSE—MOODY AND CAMPBELL—MOODY'S LETTER—LOUNSBERRY, OF BISMARCK—JUDGE CAMPBELL'S EFFORTS AND HIS REWARD—DIVISION SENTIMENT DID NOT CHANGE—DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S RECORD IN DAKOTA ON DIVISION.

A WATERWAY CONVENTION AT FARGO

About the last of December, 1885, a territorial convention was called to meet at Fargo, January 12, 1886, for the purpose of discussing various public questions, particularly the proposition to divide Dakota on the 46th parallel. While it was declared to be a territorial convention, the call for it included only the following named counties, which indicated that the convention was designed to secure only a partial sentiment on the subjects to be discussed, to-wit:

Counties named: Barnes, Burleigh, Billings, Benson, Bottineau, Cass, Cavalier, Dickey, Emmons, Eddy, Foster, Grand Forks, Griggs, Kidder, LaMoure, Logan, McLean, Mercer, McHenry, McIntosh, Morton, Nelson, Pembina, Ransley, Ransom, Richland, Rolette, Sargent, Stark, Steele, Stutsman, Towner, Traill, Villard, Walsh, Wells, Buford, Flannery, Renville, Ward, Garfield, Allred, Dunn, Oliver, DeSmet, Hettinger, Grant, Day, Codington, Hamlin, Potter, McPherson, Faulk, Walworth, Mountraille, Wynn, Stevens, Wallace, McKenzie, Williams, Sheridan, Bowman, Roberts, Marshall, Brown, Deuel, Clark, Spink, Edmunds, Campbell.

And the call concluded with an invitation to the unnamed counties, all in the southern half, thirty-five in number, in the following paragraph:

No portion of Dakota is excluded from sending delegates upon the basis given. The counties mentioned in the call are urgently requested to send full delegations, as the questions to be discussed are matters of importance to every citizen.

It was somewhat remarkable that inasmuch "as the matters to be discussed were of importance to every citizen," that the counties containing nearly one-half of the population were refused a place in the call, and did not feel that they would be welcome at the gathering and declined the rather discourteous manner in which they had been indirectly invited. It was plain that they were not wanted. The questions to be discussed at the convention were given out, thus:

1. The project to connect the waters of Big Stone Lake and Traverse Lake.
2. The Supreme Court decision relative to North Pacific land patents.
3. The proposed division of Dakota and the admission of the south half—division without admission—and admission as a whole.

While the convention was a movement of parties interested in the northern half of Dakota, and favoring something beside admission of the southern half and a consequent division of Dakota, its leaders were apprehensive that they could not trust the safety of the real design to go before the public, which had to do with division and admission, and to give support to the Butler one-state bill then before the Senate, therefore the other questions were added and had precedence. That the friends of division in the north were watching the matter was shown in the following note of warning given out by the Fargo Republican a week in advance of the assembling of the convention. Here is the quotation:

It may as well be taken for granted that the opponents of division will seize any opportunity afforded to make capital out of the convention. Whether they shall succeed depends upon the watchfulness of the advocates of division. If the latter passively permit the former to select themselves as delegates to the convention, they can be depended on to do it. If the friends of division take any interest in the matter there will not be an opponent of division in the convention, for there is not a community in all North Dakota where the advocates of division are not overwhelmingly in the majority. The Republican hopes to see the press of the territory earnestly call the attention of the friends of division to the danger of not attaching sufficient importance to the work of selecting delegates to the convention. Let the delegates be selected at public mass meetings, and let only those be named who are known to be in sympathy with the wishes of the community they are to represent.

The convention was well attended from Northern Dakota counties, but as Hon. R. E. Wallace, of Jamestown, was chosen temporary president and Henry Dickey, of Dickey County, temporary secretary, it is proper to infer that there were no delegates present from the counties of South Dakota.

Committees were appointed on credentials, on permanent organization, and on programme. Those on credentials were Messrs. Plummer of Traill, Bray of Grand Forks, Ryan of Cass, Mapes of Nelson, Dickey of Dickey, Johnson of Ransom and Wing of Barnes.

On permanent organization: E. P. Wells of Stutsman, Alex Griggs of Grand Forks, E. P. Condon of Dickey, S. G. Roberts of Cass, Charles Billodeau of Wells, D. F. Ellsworth of Sargent and J. O. Kjolsberg of Traill.

On programme: McLaren of Steele, Jordan of Cass, Stevens of Cavalier, Breed of Ransom, Root of Barnes, William C. White of Stutsman and George H. Walsh of Grand Forks.

In all these committees the name of no delegate from south of the 46th parallel appears, and we must infer that even those southern counties named in the call declined the courtesy. There were eighty-three delegates present representing fifteen counties. Waldo M. Potter, of LaMoure County, was made permanent chairman, indicating that the divisionists were in the lead, but it was not the division the people desired, for the convention finally supported a resolution to divide on the Missouri River, according to the Fredericks bill. This was rescinded before adjournment and the following adopted as the sense of the convention on the division and admission question:

Whereas, Steps have been taken at the seat of government at Washington looking to the immediate solving of all questions of the division of Dakota Territory, and admission as a whole or part, with a view to avoid any embarrassment of our delegate in Congress and the members of Congress having these questions under consideration, and to avoid in any way hindering them in their action, be it

Resolved, That this convention take no action whatever on this question of admission and division, either or both, and formulate no further resolution thereon, either recommendatory or advisory.

Resolved, That the citizens of the entire Territory of Dakota have aided in its upbuilding to its present position of prosperity, and to all of the citizens alike is that name endeared, and it is the sense of this convention that the name "Dakota" should be given to no section of the present territory to the exclusion of any other section.

Resolved, That all resolutions heretofore referred to your committee be hereby referred back to this convention with the recommendation that they be laid upon the table.

Without hereby deciding upon the merits of the Harrison bill and without intending hereby to endorse the same, be it

Resolved, That the said bill should not be passed through the present Congress of the United States without first incorporating therein the amendments proposed in these resolutions

In addition to the foregoing the convention passed a resolution requesting Congress to appropriate $400,000 for the purpose of building a waterway connecting Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverse. Also a resolution requesting the secretary of the interior to issue to the Northern Pacific Railroad patents for its land, in order that it might be required to pay taxes on the same.

It had been the desire of citizens of Minnesota and Dakota, living in the vicinity of Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverse, to have a waterway connection constructed by the Government that would connect the two lakes by a navigable channel, and Congress had been petitioned in regard to the project. In response to the petitions the secretary of war was authorized to have an examination made by competent army engineers of the proposed artificial strait, and report the result of the examination. Accordingly, in the spring of 1885, a survey and estimate of the proposed work was made, an account of which was officially reported to the secretary of war, as follows:

Big Stone Lake is almost twenty-five miles long and from one-half a mile to one mile in width, being, in fact, an enlargement of the channel of the Minnesota River, and near the sources of that stream. It is separated from Lake Traverse by a strip of land about five miles in width. The examination authorized was for the purpose of ascertaining the practicability and cost of connecting the two lakes. Nothing is said in the instructions about any further improvement upon or in connection with the lakes.

The connection between the lakes would have to be by means of a canal lock, and with proper lake approaches, etc., constructed at great expense, probably, including damages, $400,000. The connection might result in securing competition between two railroads. But the improvement of the Minnesota River, from the outlet of Big Stone Lake to its junction with the Mississippi River, would be necessary for the products of the country under consideration to reach their markets independently of railroads. And also the improvement of the Bois de Sioux and Red rivers to Breckinridge, at heavy cost, so as to afford egress from the lakes in that direction, would, it seems to me, be simply bringing the products to the same railroads that now tap the country adjoining the lakes. It does not appear that the advantages to the public consequent upon connecting Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverse would be by any means proportional to the expense involved in making and maintaining the connection.

Nothing further was done by the Government regarding that waterway.

It did not appear in the further progress of legislation at Washington that the action of this convention produced any change in the current of legislation, but it was manifest that it disclosed no weakening of the strong division sentiment in the northern portion, where the hostility to division was claimed to be quite general. The convention revealed nothing more than was generally known, that a comparative few of the prominent men in that section were sympathizing with the efforts of ex-Governor Ordway, who, at his post in Washington, was endeavoring to defeat division by delay, and was assisted by the element headed by Ordway Johnson and Hon. Abraham Boynton, of Lincoln County, and were said to be furnishing Mr. Springer, of the House, and Senators Butler and Vest, of the Senate, with the ammunition they were using to show that the sentiment of the territory was very much divided on the question of division.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND AND THE DAKOTA STATE COMMITTEE

There appears nothing of record to prove that President Cleveland made any statement during the long pendency of the Dakota division and admission question which would commit him in favor of or against the division of the territory. Dakota had been knocking at the door of the Union for two years prior to Mr. Cleveland's inauguration, and the Dakota question was the principal one his administration had to deal with, involving, as it finally did, the admission of four states simultaneously, or virtually so, an increase of sovereign states, under one administration and at one time, unprecedented in the annals of the United States. The only clue we get of his desire in the matter of the admission of Dakota as one or two states is the long delay in appointing a successor to Governor Pierce. He had doubtless settled, in his own mind, that he would give the place to Lewis Kossuth Church, whom he first appointed from New York to the fifth district judgeship in Dakota, for reasons heretofore stated, and his subsequent delay in appointing a governor for Dakota may be accounted for by his desire to appoint a citizen of Dakota to that office; the delay afforded Judge Church abundant time to qualify as a legal resident of the territory before he was appointed to the governorship. Judge, or rather Governor Church, proved to be a persistent promoter of the one state for the entire territory plan—the same plan that Congressman Springer so persistently and industriously labored for, and from this circumstance it might be inferred that the President favored that plan. But on the other hand Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, who subsequently led the President's forces in the repeal of the silver purchasing act, was a supporter of the Harrison bill, which provided for division and admission, though this may have been influenced as a matter of courtesy to his Indiana colleague. It would seem from the President's leaning toward eastern influences or predilections, that he preferred to see Dakota come in as one state, but he kept aloof from any entangling alliances in the affair. His appointments, unless that of governor was an exception, were made apparently without reference to the state issue. Captain Ziebach was the choice of 90 per cent of the rank and file of the democratic party of the territory, but he was transferred to the receivership of a U. S. land office, and the governorship was left unappropriated until Judge Church had served his probation as a citizen of the territory. There was a factional opposition to Ziebach, led by some of the one-state democrats, and aided by ex-Governor Ordway, who lived at Washington and was acquainted with the democratic leaders, that might justify the President in believing that Ziebach's appointment would aggravate the schisms that divided the councils of Dakota democrats, hence he felt justified in turning a deaf ear to the importunities of several thousand Dakotans, and Ziebach was moreover a pronounced divisionist.

In January, 1886, the Dakota delegation from the constitutional convention of 1885, and also representing the new state government, composed of Governor Mellette, U. S. Senators Moody and Edgerton, Representatives Kanouse and Gifford (who was also the delegate) and others, visited Washington, the officials to lay before Congress and the President the proceedings had in Dakota in forming a state constitution and adopting it, and the election of state officers, all for the purpose of gaining admission into the Union as a state. The visit and interview with the president forms an important event in our territorial history, and we are afforded an opportunity to give an authentic account of the interview from one who was present and who wrote under date of January 19, 1886, as follows:

President Cleveland gave a very respectful, attentive and considerate hearing to the Dakota delegation this afternoon, and listened to their arguments in favor of division and admission to statehood under the provisions of the state constitution, supplemented by the Harrison Senate bill. The delegation was composed of Senators Harrison, Moody, Edgerton, Representatives Kanouse and Gifford, Governor Mellette (who has been elected governor under the new constitution), and John H. Drake.

Mr. Cleveland gave them over an hour of his time, and the whole subject in every possible phase of its bearings was talked over, and he left a very favorable impression upon the minds of his guests.

Senator-elect Edgerton was the principal spokesman for his people, and his arguments are worthy of the most careful perusal of the citizens of the whole country, giving as they do the most comprehensive and clear statement of the cause he and his colleagues represented. The senator said:

"We are grateful, Mr. President, for an opportunity in the first place of assuring you that our people are not revolutionists; that everything done by us has been done in the most orderly manner and in accordance with established precedents; and in the next place for an opportunity to lay before you the reasons that have induced our people to take the steps they have.

"The Territorial Legislature in 1885 passed a law, approved by the governor, for a constitutional convention for that portion of the territory south of the 46th parallel of latitude. The convention met at Sioux Falls and prepared a constitution, which was ratified by a vote of the people by a majority of over eighteen thousand votes. While that convention was in session preparing the constitution, several questions arose and were discussed, showing the temper of that body. When the bill of rights was under discussion the following amendment was proposed, taken from some older declaration of rights, and still retained in some of the state constitutions:

"All political power is inherent in the people, and all true government is founded on their authority and is instituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right at all times to alter, reform or abolish their form of government in such manner as they may think proper."

"After a full discussion the convention voted down the amendment and adopted the following substitute:

"All political power is inherent in the people, and all free government is founded on their authority, and it is instituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right, in lawful and constitutional methods, to alter or reform their form of government in such manner as they may think proper; and the State of Dakota is an inseparable part of the American Union, and the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land."

"And again, after the constitution and the schedule had been reported to avoid the possibility of misconstruction and the more clearly to define the purposes of the convention, the following section was added:

"Section 32. Nothing in this constitution or schedule shall be construed to authorize the Legislature to use any of its powers except as to organization, to elect United States senators, to provide and pass means and measures necessary, preliminary and incident to admission, and to assemble and reassemble, and to adjourn from time to time; neither to authorize any officer of the executive or administrative departments to exercise any power of his office except such as may be preliminary and incident to the admission of the state into the Union, nor to authorize any officer of the judiciary department to exercise any of the duties of his office until the State of Dakota shall have been recognized and regularly admitted into the Union by the Congress of the United States."

"It will take, Mr. President, a very astute lawyer to detect anything revolutionary in the proceedings of that convention. But it has been said that there was no authority for calling the constitutional convention; in other words that the law enacted by the Legislature is without authority and consequently void. I will not examine the question as to whether the organic act passed by Congress, investing the Legislature with the power 'to legislate upon all rightful subjects of legislation,' not prohibited by that act, gave the territorial Legislature power to provide by law for a constitutional convention or not.

"That is not necessary for our present purpose. When statutes are silent, precedents make law. While the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have the power to admit new states, it nowhere provides in direct terms or by implication what steps shall be taken in the matter of bringing a new state to the attention of Congress, or how or by whom the first steps shall be initiated. The precedents have varied. In many cases Congress has initiated the proceedings by providing for a constitutional convention. In other cases, and not a few, the convention has assembled by the authority of the people of the territory. This was the case in Tennessee, and many of the founders of the government recognized the right of Tennessee to pursue the course she did. In addition to the somewhat precedent of Tennessee, Michigan had no enabling act but President Jackson transmitted her constitution to Congress with a special message on the subject, as Washington had done before in the case of Tennessee. California had no enabling act, or even the authority of a local Legislature. The convention that formed the constitution under which Florida was admitted into the Union was convened by virtue of an act of her Territorial Legislature in the same manner we did. We would likewise respectfully call attention to the admission of Iowa, Oregon, Nevada, Arkansas and Wisconsin. We confidently claim that our course was justified by abundant precedents.

"Some have claimed that Dakota was pursuing an unusual and revolutionary course in electing officers. I think the parties who make this charge have not fully read history in connection with the admission of other states. In nearly every case, so far as I am informed, the state, prior to its admission, has elected its state officers. In Minnesota, with whose history I am most familiar, when the constitution was submitted to a vote of the people in October, 1857, a full state and legislative ticket was elected. The Legislature assembled in December, 1857, and elected two senators. Three members of Congress had been elected at the fall election, and the senators and three congressmen thus elected came at once to Washington and remained here until the following day, when the senators and two members of Congress were sworn in. I think the precedents on this question are nearly all one way.

"It has been said by some few that the people of Dakota do not desire division on the 46th parallel. I invite your attention to the evidence on the question. The Legislature of 1871 passed a memorial to Congress by a unanimous vote to divide the territory on the 46th parallel. Two years later a similar memorial was passed, with but four dissenting votes in both houses. Again in 1875 another memorial was passed, with but one dissenting vote in both houses. Again in January, 1877, another like memorial passed both houses unanimously. Again, at the next session in 1879, a protest against the admission of the territory as one state was passed. At the next session a memorial was passed asking a division into three territories. In 1883 a bill for a constitutional convention for South Dakota was passed, but failed to become a law for want of the governor's approval. At the last session of the Legislature it passed the law providing for the constitutional convention, and the same Legislature passed a memorial to Congress asking for division on the 47th parallel. The Legislature is composed of twenty-four members of the council and forty-eight members of the house. Upon this vote there were twenty-three ayes in the council and no nays, and in the house forty-eight ayes. Thus it will be seen that at every session of the Legislature for the past fifteen years the representatives of the people have been pronounced and nearly unanimous upon this question of division. What better mode has any one for determining the will or choice of the people? The party convention of each party composed of delegates from the whole territory declared in favor of division in 1884, and in this connection I desire to read the resolution of the Press Association of South Dakota, passed at its Huron meeting:

"Resolved, That we are in full sympathy with the proposition that under no circumstances shall we endorse any move looking to anything less than the division of Dakota on the 46th parallel, and the admission of the south half into all the privileges and immunities enjoyed by all states of the national Union.

"Resolved, That the members of this convention devote their time, energy and ability to the promotion of the success of the movement for the statehood of Dakota, and earnestly urge upon the people to enter heartily, earnestly and persistently into the work, to the end that its great influence may be brought to bear in the movement as at present constituted."

"Another evidence of the desire of our people upon this question is the fact that for a number of years, whenever a public institution has been provided for in South Dakota, a like institution has been provided for by law in North Dakota. The law has located one university at Vermillion, in South Dakota, and one at Grand Forks, in North Dakota; one penitentiary at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, and one at Bismarek, North Dakota; one insane hospital at Yankton, South Dakota, and one at Jamestown, North Dakota; and so on with other institutions. The supporters of the movement are not confined to one party. The first convention which met at Huron to initiate the proceedings for the constitutional convention was presided over by a well-known democrat, formerly a member of Congress from Illinois. The first constitutional convention which met at Sioux Falls in 1883 was presided over by a very eminent lawyer and a democrat, the present distinguished chief justice of our Supreme Court. In view of these facts we claim there can be no question as to the desire of our people on the subject of the division of the territory upon the 46th parallel, as provided for in the constitution now submitted to you and to Congress.

"The next and perhaps more vital question is this: That portion of Dakota south of the 46th parallel now prepared for admission has been a territory longer than any territory which has heretofore been admitted into the Union. Its population is over 203,000. It has more and better equipped public institutions than any territory ever had. It has a system of free schools, supported entirely by taxation and deriving no aid from the reserved grant of the 17th and 36th sections of the public lands now lying idle. Last year we expended for school purposes $1,200,000. That part of Dakota now applying for admission has 50,237 cultivated farms, averaging in size less than 200 acres. The people have 724,482 head of horses and cattle. They own 450,000 head of sheep and hogs. They raised in 1884 7,553,030 bushels of corn, 11,783,000 bushels of oats and nearly 13,000,000 bushels of wheat, and as much more the past year, but I have not been able to ascertain accurately the exact amount.

"There has been some criticism about the propriety of dividing Dakota. The founders of the republic never contemplated the idea of a few large states, but rather a greater number of small and medium-sized states. Notice how guarded they were as to the size of the states to be carved out of the northwestern territory. The ordinance of 1787 provided that Congress should divide the territory into not less than three nor more than five states. Now if Congress had determined to divide that territory into as large states as possible it would have averaged less than that portion of Dakota now seeking admission. If Dakota is divided the new state will have 77,000 square miles, making it the eighth state in size in the Union—larger than Ohio and Indiana combined—larger than Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and Delaware combined.

"Considering then all these questions, Mr. President, that Dakota has been a territory so long, that her population is so great, that her industries are so large, that every condition and purpose of territorial life has been subserved, that the proposed constitution is republican in form, and that our people have so long and so patiently awaited the will of Congress, we confidently expect the approval of just men who will give the subject an intelligent and impartial consideration.

"It has been suggested in some quarters that while Congress makes annual appropriations for certain expenses we should not be anxious for admission. This is a narrow view of such a question, and I maintain that when a territory has fulfilled all these conditions and still desires to remain a ward, Congress would better emancipate her, willingly or unwillingly, unless there are exceptional reasons to the contrary. If a people who have fulfilled all the conditions of territorial tutelage, who have the wealth, the numbers and the intelligence, entitling them to emancipation, should willingly and uncomplainingly remain in that inferior condition, it would be an evidence of their incapacity for emancipation and self-government, and be a cause of serious apprehension with patriotic statesmen everywhere.

"On behalf of our people I thank you, Mr. President, for this opportunity to explain our position."

The President showed a decided interest in the subject, and evidently regarded it as the most important question that had been presented for his consideration, which it undoubtedly was. He said that many features of the subject, as presented, were new to him. He stated to the delegation in the course of an informal conversation that the question should be impartially considered from a judicial view of right and justice, solely without regard to its partisan aspect. He impressed the members of the delegation with the belief that he proposed to consider it on that basis. He assured the delegation that he would give the matter careful consideration, and do what he thought right in the premises.

The delegation was so favorably impressed with the interview that they thanked the President with much warmth for the sincere interest he had shown in Dakota's cause, and retired much gratified with the interview.

DAKOTANS CONFIDENT OF ADMISSION

The friends of the admission of the state who formed the delegations sent to Washington in the winter of 1885-6, as bearers of the new constitution, memorial, etc., and to promote the cause of admission under the Sioux Falls constitution, were smilingly sanguine of their success after they had been at the capital a few days, had met the President officially, and had been cordially greeted in a social way by multitudes of people of all shades of politics. So much were they encouraged and primed with confidence in ultimate success that they began to express some pity for their opponents. Delegate Gifford wrote to some of his friends and to some of the papers in the territory that "the bill for the admission of South Dakota (Harrison bill), under the Sioux Falls constitution, will pass the House even if it goes before that body under an adverse committee report;" and Senator Moody expressed the same opinion. The senators were both confident, and determined that at least one of them should remain there constantly keeping things straight, and as Senator Edgerton was obliged to return to Dakota to look after important private business, it was arranged that Moody would "keep the bridge" alone until Edgerton's return, and then Moody was to have a leave of absence to visit his domestic hearth in Deadwood for a few days. This anticipation was positively exhilarating and imparted a most pleasing charm to the greetings of our embryonic officials while it lasted.

Hon. Melvin Grigsby was among the Dakota visitors to Washington during the winter of 1885, having been sent by the Sioux Falls people to secure the appointment of Sioux Falls as a place for holding the United States court in case the state was admitted. Delegate Gifford and Mr. Grigsby agreed upon a plan for holding the court in four places, Sioux Falls being one, and Rapid or Deadwood another. Senator Harrison, who had the reporting of the Dakota admission bill in charge, was favorable to this plan, but the new senators from Dakota, particularly Senator Moody, disagreed with them and favored establishing the seat of the court at the capital, though in so doing Moody was depriving his section of a term of the court. The Harrison bill failed to pass, however, and nothing came of the work that had been done, but at that time Mr. Grigsby said that the prospects were quite encouraging for admission during the session then being held. Prominent democrats had openly expressed a determination to favor Dakota.

THE SEVENTH STANDARD BOUNDARY

It was confidently asserted at Washington that the territory would be divided, but the intelligence came that the dividing line would be the seventh standard parallel, and not the 46th parallel of latitude. Congressmen were objecting to the boundary on the parallel of latitude, because it was an imaginary line, and would divide counties and bring on litigation. The friends of division were in agreement for the change, believing it would be more satisfactory to the people along the boundary. It would give to the northern half a five-mile strip across the territory from the eastern to the western boundary, and increase the area of Northern Dakota considerably, making it at least two thousand square miles greater than its southern sister.

Early in April the friends of admission and division were satisfied that the House Committee on Territories were not intending to report the Harrison bill at this session, and Delegate Gifford had come to the conclusion that there was no chance for admission; and as to division alone, while he hoped to secure it, he could make no prediction. The democratic members of the Committee on Territories, constituting a majority, appeared to have come to an understanding with themselves that they would disagree among themselves, refuse to unite upon any of the Dakota measures, while professedly ardently desiring to do something for the territory. But by scattering themselves over the several Dakota propositions, and refusing to agree upon the Senate's bill for statehood, or upon anything else connected with Dakota's division, no particular measure could obtain a majority vote, and thus no measure could be reported. The democrats felt, undoubtedly, that they ought, justly, to do all that Dakota asked—that there was no legitimate reason for refusing. But the spectre that stood in their way was the loss of power. The admission of Dakota would be a blow at democratic supremacy in the nation. The division of Dakota would be two blows in the same direction, for both of them were populous enough to demand admission. Then there was Washington Territory, safely republican on national issues, demanding admission, and while Montana could also be admitted, it was looked upon as a doubtful state (and so it proved). Thus the democrats were in a most perplexing predicament. Justice was appealing to them to overthrow the brief supremacy of their party in national affairs by admitting their political enemies to the citadel of the Union where they were morally certain to accomplish the defeat of their party at the next election. It was fortunate Justice was blind. It was also deaf.

The Congressional caucus was a potent weapon in the hands of statesmen and politicians who knew how to use it. The many indications that scores of individuals, members of Congress, democrats, had expressed themselves as favorable to the division of Dakota Territory, was the foundation of the optimistic sentiment that had grown up at this time, 1885-86, and the confidence felt that Congress would pass the division bill at this session, and possibly the Harrison Senate bill that provided for division and the admission of the southern half of the territory under the Sioux Falls constitution. Mr. Springer was quoted as stating that he believed a division bill would get through the House unless a caucus should be called on the subject. The Harrison bill was pending in the House at this time, and the moderate wing, and the wiser one, of the democratic side, led by Hill, of Ohio, held that the division of the territory, nor the admission of a state, were party questions, and were not legitimate subjects for a party caucus to decide, but the majority of the party held the opposite opinion, and were inclined to use it in case it became necessary to check the growing sentiment in favor of Dakota.

However, the day of adjournment came, and Dakota had made no progress toward her desired haven.

DAKOTA AT HOME

An adjourned session of the constitutional convention was held at Sioux Falls, beginning May 4, 1886. The meeting had been provided for by the convention of 1885, as a measure of prudence, in order to take advantage of any favorable disposition on the part of Congress, which body had now had abundant time to consider the Dakota questions. The senators and governor and representatives-elect had journeyed to Washington and presented a copy of the constitution, with Dakota's request for admission, to the President and the presiding officers of the two congressional bodies, and Senator Harrison had been able to put his bill granting statehood under the Sioux Falls constitution through the Senate; and while it was at this time in the hands of the Committee on Territories of the House, there was a strong sentiment in the minds of that committee, led by Mr. Springer, not to report the bill to the House at all, fearing that it might be passed, owing to the friendliness of a number of democrats for it. It had also transpired that Mr. Springer had introduced or was about to introduce a bill for the admission of the territory as one state and permit no opportunity for even a vote on the division question.

With the defeat of the Harrison bill perished the last opportunity for a territorial government for North Dakota alone. While the people of the territory would have accepted division cheerfully, without statehood at the same time, Congress was not disposed to grant it. Neither republicans or democrats appeared to approve of such a measure, though a large number might have voted for it because they were more or less committed.

But when the division question was presented on its merits it was difficult to find a good reason for it, as the Washington statesmen would view it. It would mean simply a larger number of offices, national as well as territorial, hence an increase of taxation to support the extra number, and without any apparent advantage. As long as the national Government retained the territory in vassalage, two territorial governments would not have relieved the situation, and hence the state government would afford the only relief, and the success of the South Dakota measure would afford Northern Dakota its only opportunity of experiencing the benefits of division under a territorial charter.

The democratic party of Dakota was divided. That made little difference to matters within the territory, but it cut quite a large figure at Washington, where one of the factions led by Hon. Abraham Boynton, democrat, under the experienced and skilful pilotage of ex-Governor Ordway, was laboring to promote the one-state plan. Hon. M. H. Day, democratic national committeeman, was also there holding up the division side of the controversy. Ordway's knowledge of Washington ways and his extensive acquaintance with senators and representatives, which he once referred to in a private interview with Editor Caldwell, of Sioux Falls, enabled him to make good use of Mr. Boynton, whose position as an anti-division democrat from Dakota, Ordway could magnify, in talking to congressmen, into an army several scores of thousands strong, back on the plains of Dakota. Mr. Boynton was never before in a position where he attracted greater attention or was the subject of more comment.

Mr. Cleveland apparently paid no particular attention to the division question. He treated Dakotans cordially, and no significance attached to the fact that among his first year's appointments he selected two leading divisionists for two of the most important positions in the territory, Bartlett Tripp for chief justice, and Maris Taylor for surveyor general, and he must have known that Tripp was a staunch divisionist.

An important step was taken at this session of the constitutional convention. In the statehood movement there had been a radical and a conservative faction. The former was in favor, in case Congress neglected to provide for the admission of the state at the session then being held, to proceed with the state organization and set up a state government. This faction was led by General Campbell. The conservatives were opposed to taking this step, regarding it as revolutionary and likely to offend the friends of the territory in the country at large. This faction was represented by Judge Edgerton more particularly, but he was numerously supported; still it would appear that the Campbell faction outnumbered the other in the convention. Hence at this adjourned session in May, 1886, a resolution, which is herein given, was adopted:

Resolved, That we recommend, if Congress shall adjourn without action upon the claims of Dakota for division and admission, or division, the constitutional convention should reassemble and submit to the people at the November election the question of the repeal of section 32 of the schedule and ordinance of the constitution.

The section referred to read as follows:

Section 32. Nothing in this constitution or schedule contained shall be construed to authorize the Legislature to exercise any powers except such as are necessary to its organization, to elect United States senators, to provide and pass means and measures necessary, preliminary and incident to admission to the Union, and to assemble and reassemble and adjourn from time to time. Neither to authorize any officer of the executive or administrative departments to exercise any powers of his office except such as may be preliminary and incident to admission to the Union, nor to authorize any officer of the judiciary department to exercise any of the duties of his office until the State of Dakota shall have been regularly admitted into the Union, except such as may be authorized by the Congress of the United States.

With this action completed, the constitutional convention adjourned until July 12th after adopting a recommendation to the July meeting to submit to a vote of the people at the November election the constitutional amendment abolishing section 32. The members of the convention at this session, at least a large majority, favored starting the machinery of the state unless Congress took favorable action before it adjourned.

The constitutional convention met in adjourned session at Sioux Falls July 13, 1886. All officers were present and sixty delegates. Only thirty-eight were required for a quorum. The main purpose of this adjourned meeting was to consider the repeal of section 32 of the ordinance and schedule of the constitution which had been framed and adopted in the fall of 1885, which section prohibited the carrying into full effect the organization of the state government. There was considerable debate over the proposition to repeal, participated in by Judge Kellam of Chamberlain, Judge Edgerton of Mitchell, Judge Campbell of Yankton, Mr. Haines of Hughes and others, Mr. Haines being the author of the restraining clause which it was desired to repeal; and finally a vote was taken on a resolution submitted by Mr. Coffin, of Huron, who represented a conference of members, which brought the question of repeal squarely before the convention.

Resolved, That this convention submit to a vote of the people at the next general election in November the repeal of section 32 of the schedule and ordinance.

Campbell, Owen, Rev. Joseph Ward and J. K. McCullum supported the resolution, and Judge Edgerton, Mr. Haines and Hon. Jerry Gechon, of Lincoln County, opposed it. Mr. Gechon stated that he was opposed to division, anyway, and favored the admission of the territory as one state. The vote resulted:

Ayes—Allen, Baker, Campbell, Coffin, Conniff, Goddard of McCook, Gundersen, Hanson, Huntley, Jones, McCallum, Owen, Proudfoot, Sheets, Stone, Tychsen, Ward of Yankton, Weatherwax, Wilcox and Williams—20.

Nays—Ashton, Bebee, Berdahl, Buechler, Dahl, Dollard, Dott, Dow, Fellows, Gechon, Gifford, Goddard of Minnehaha, Gray, Gregory, Haines, Kanouse, Kellam, Maynard, More, Murphy, Neill, Oaks, Patten, Taylor, Undyke, Walton, Ward of Hughes, White, Wright of Lake, Wright of Brookings, Edgerton—31.

The negative result of the vote on the repeal was not interpreted to mean that the convention was opposed, on principle, to clearing the way for establishing the state government. The debate disclosed that the sentiment upholding the right of the people to take the government into their own hands was nearly unanimous, but they felt that the time for such a grant of authority had not arrived. It was thought best to await further developments. It was not at this time anywhere seriously disputed that the people possessed the inalienable right to form a government republican in form, and would violate no law, custom or precedent, by setting up a state government without congressional authority. It was felt that Congress would not declare against the great principle involved by refusing admission to such state, citing Michigan as a precedent, but there would be a state and territorial government in conflict, which aroused unpleasant reflections. The right was not disputed—but was it expedient?

The state league also held a meeting in Sioux Falls at this time and adopted resolutions declaring the willingness of the league to join with any other association or organization having a like purpose in view for the promotion of division and statehood, and extended a special invitation to the Farmers' Alliance to form a coalition for that purpose. This was the beginning of a sympathetic bond, which probably led the alliance to favor Campbell for senator later.

Congress adjourned August 12, 1886. Dakota's affairs did not appear to have moved a notch forward during the session. These affairs, most prominently before it, were the division of the territory, the admission into the Union of the southern half under the Harrison bill, and the treaty with the Sioux Indians for a portion of their great reserve.

It is quite doubtful that a majority of the people would have favored the repeal of the restraining clause had they believed that it would have resulted in an attempt to establish the state government independent of admission to the Union, nor would they have favored the setting up of a state government in opposition to the territorial government had there been no restraining clause. But the existence of the restraining provision in the constitution, it was claimed, was viewed by the one-state and Springer men, as a virtual admission that there would be no attempt made to put the machinery of state government in operation until the state was regularly admitted. Therefore, in order that the menace of a state government might be rendered more formidable and sufficiently formidable to impel Congress to admit the state, it was held that the restraining clause should be repealed. With this view, many supported the repeal that would not have advised the extreme act of setting the state machinery in motion, and in the under current of discussion and comment, among the "advocates of repeal this was the view taken—that the repeal of the prohibitory clause did not compel doing all that would then be constitutionally permissible."

Dakota had a territorial government in full operation under the control of an authority that would not have abandoned the field without orders from national headquarters. Among the precedents cited where state governments had been instituted in the same domain occupied by the territorial government, there was no conflict because the latter made no protest, but gave way voluntarily to the state. In Dakota such would not have been the case in all probability. The territorial government would have been upheld by the national Government, it would have continued to execute the territorial laws, it would have insisted on control of the penitentiaries, the insane hospitals, the universities and various institutions, and would have continued to collect taxes throughout its territorial boundaries and would have required the county treasurers to remit the taxes collected for territorial purposes to the territorial treasurer. How would the new independent state have been able to do much more than it was already doing, which may be summed up as "waiting to get in?" It would not seem that everything was ordered for the best. Dakota was denied the privilege of forming a new precedent in the history of state making, and even had it been accorded that distinction, there would have been no more territories to profit by it.

The constitutional convention, at a later session, passed a resolution expunging the restraining clause from the state constitution by a vote of over two-thirds majority. The State Legislature, it was apprehended, would put the machinery of the state in operation, and while there were few or even none, who questioned the right, there was a strong sentiment opposed to haste, and favorable to one or two months' delay in order that the sentiment of the people might be more accurately gauged, now that they were almost face to face with statehood outside of the Union.

In the constitutional convention the only business of importance that was considered was the repeal of the restraining clause. Judge Campbell introduced a resolution from the conference committee appointed early in the session, recommending as follows:

Be it ordained by the constitutional convention that section 32 of the schedule and ordinance appended to and accompanying the constitution be and the same is hereby rescinded, abrogated and made null and void.

The minority report of this committee submitted by Mr. Haines, of Hughes County, recommended the following in lieu of the majority report:

Resolved, That this convention submit to the vote of the electors of Dakota, at the next election for legislative and state officers, the following ordinance:

Be it ordained that the section under the heading schedule and ordinance of the constitution, numbered 32, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded, abrogated and held null and void.

The majority report by Campbell was adopted by a vote of 28 to 9, and the vote was then made unanimous.

As the terms for which the present state and legislative officers were elected would expire at the close of the year the convention adopted the following ordinance presented on behalf of the executive committee:

Be it ordained by the constitutional convention of the State of South Dakota, that there shall be held an election on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, A. D. 1887, for all state legislative and judicial officers to fill those offices the terms of which shall expire by limitation in the year 1887 or 1888. And that at such election as the state executive committee may designate, the state executive committee may submit to vote the question: "Shall the state government go into full operation?"

This ordinance was passed by a unanimous vote.

Judge Moody was not present at this meeting, but sent word that he was not in favor of any action looking to the putting of the state government in operation, and that the people of the Black Hills were opposed to such a movement. Judge Edgerton, the other senator elect, was also opposed, but owing to the unanimity that prevailed, he supported the radicals. The convention then adjourned until June, 1887. The constitutional convention had authority to perpetuate itself as long as the situation demanded it.

At a citizens' meeting held at Huron during the 17th, Governor Mellette, L. B. French, of Yankton, Judge Haines, of Turner, John A. Owen, of Kingsbury, Editor Shannon, of Beadle, Mr. Adams, of Day, and C. V. Eddy, of Codington, were appointed a committee to formulate a plan for arousing the people of the state to their danger from the one state omnibus scheme that Mr. Springer had built up, and to crystallize and render effective the sentiment of the people for the state government already perfected.

This committee recommended, that in case the Springer Omnibus Bill providing one state for the entire territory, should become a law, the people of Dakota who support division should be urged to attend the conventions called under it by the governor, and being largely in the majority could control them, and elect a majority of the delegates to the constitutional convention, who were to re-adopt the Sioux Falls Constitution of 1885 making the 46th parallel the northern boundary of the state, and changing the name to "South Dakota." The constitution would then be presented to the President and Congress.

It was claimed, but upon what respectable authority cannot be stated, that a sufficient number of republican senators had signified their willingness to support the Springer Omnibus Bill which included the Territory of Washington, to insure its passage through that body, hence the anxiety of the divisionists of Dakota to checkmate the omnibus measure. This plan would have worked successfully so far as Dakota had an interest in the omnibus measure, but presuming that it had passed and Dakota had been able to defeat it as to our territory, how would the case have stood as to the other territories named whose action would not have been affected by the ruse adopted by Dakota? The others would undoubtedly have complied with the congressional act and have been admitted to the Union, giving the democrats two states and the republicans one. It may be that the republican senators, who favored the one-state plan for Dakota, discovered this possible contingency, for after a strenuous campaign in favor of his measure, Mr. Springer was unable to secure sufficient support for it.

STATE LEGISLATURE AND GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE

The Dakota State Legislature met in called session at Huron, December 16, 1886, with the presiding officers in their seats, and a quorum of each House present. After prayer, and calling the roll, the two bodies met in joint session, and received a special message from the governor, as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have joined your presiding officers in the notice of this convocation, not because of any counsel of value which I may impart, but for the benefits to be derived from our common deliberations, aided by the gentlemen of the constitutional convention and the representative friends of Dakota's statehood gathered about us.

Upon your last adjournment you were hopeful that ere this Dakota would have been assigned her proper place in the Union of states. Having done your duty and done it well, you relied upon the American Congress to do hers, but in that you have been disappointed.

The committee provided by the twenty-sixth section of the ordinance and schedule to present the constitution, after ratification by the people, to the President and Congress of the United States, and to request the admission of the state thereunder to the Union of States, consisting of the governor, your representatives in Congress, the Hon. O. S. Gifford and Theodore D. Kanouse; your duly chosen senators of the United States, the Hon. Alonzo J. Edgerton and Hon. Gideon C. Moody; and the Hon. John H. D. Drake, duly accredited representatives of the state executive committee, during the month of January last, faithfully discharged their duty by presenting the constitution to the President of the United States and to the proper committees of the houses of Congress, and remained during the month of February to second your request with whatever of ability and energy they were possessed. The President received them courteously and listened patiently, but declined to express an opinion or take action touching the matter until it should approach him for executive action through the demands of legislation.

The Senate Committee on Territories warmly espoused your cause and its chairman, the Hon. Benj. Harrison of Indiana, is especially deserving the thanks of the people of the State of Dakota, having brought his untiring energy and preeminent ability and learning to your service, by means of which and the able support of many senators, distinguished for ability and patriotism, a bill was passed by the Senate of the United States during the month of February, admitting the State of Dakota into the Union, which was transmitted to the House of Representatives and duly referred to its territorial committee, a majority of whom refused to sustain your request, and in their hands the senate bill still slumbers and will doubtless expire with the present Congress on the 4th of March next.

In the discussion evoked by the passage of the bill through the Senate, the honorable member from South Carolina, Mr. Butler, in the plenitude of his loyalty to the Union, denounced your action in creating a state government without the prior consent of Congress as unwarranted and revolutionary, and declared, in his zeal, that Congress might lawfully, in its wisdom, refuse any additional states admission, and that the Senate of the United States might find it unwise to permit an increase of its number, and conclude to perpetuate the condition of the present territories as vassals. I cannot believe, however, that these views are seriously entertained by any goodly number of the political compeers of this gentleman of distinguished loyalty from a distinguished loyal state, and hence do not require serious consideration here, but they were to me utterances of grave portent coming from the Senate chamber of the United States.

Upon no occasion did there reach the ears of your committee any criticism or objection to your constitution, the wisdom and broad statesmanship of which was everywhere conceded. Your committee, however, found a determined resistance to the admission of Dakota by the dominant political party of the nation, based upon solely partisan reasons. The same objection intensified exists to her division and admission.

Partisan consideration did not and do not enter into the reasons that exist why the Territory of Dakota should never be formed into a single state, and the movement for division and admission was inaugurated and conducted by the united sentiment of the people, regardless of party affiliations, but it will be after many long years that her people will either forswear or pledge their fealty from or to any party or policy in order to obtain a just recognition of their rights. They are not anxious to exchange one kind of servitude for another more degraded. They desire to assume the responsibility for their own local government intended for their own welfare, and their share of that greater and higher responsibility evolved from their new relation to the federal Union. This they do with a just and full conception of the obligations assumed and a patriotic purpose to faithfully discharge them, without evasion or reservation, and pledging their fortunes and if need be their lives to the perpetuity of the Union.

Notwithstanding our reverses, so great is my faith in the almighty force of the enlightened sentiment of justice of the age, that I can but hope that upon calm deliberation the popular House of the national Legislature will yet concede your request, which it concedes to be reasonable, since an unrequited wrong to any citizen or lawful political organization of the citizens of our common country is a blow at the rights of every citizen and state. Anything short of conceding the reasonable demands of the people of the new state, securing to the people a just representation in the Senate of the United States, can but fail to be followed by that content and loyalty so essential to the public well being.

If Congress in its discretion divides the territorial domain of Dakota on or near the present northern boundary line of the state, insuring us our state in the end, and if this division is made subject to the approval by ballot of the people, we will disclaim the solution of the problem and will cheerfully accept the new situation. But until this is done we can afford to defer statehood, but this must be done and not promised only. Until we have actions, but not words, let us maintain intact our state government, permit no ruse to divest us of it, and oppose it to any subsequent effort to exercise the right of statehood within her domain, with all the vigor the law gives us, by the right of peerhood in citizenship and priority in statehood.

To what extent under the state constitution you may deem it expedient and lawful to exercise the functions of legislation, I leave for you under your solemn responsibilities to decide. Upon the common result to be obtained there is practically no variance among you or your constituents. Upon question of expediency opinions must ever vary. I may, however, urge you to take no step backward in the work committed to your care. With each succeeding discouragement renew your courage from an unswerving faith in the ultimate triumph of justice. You have already sacrificed much and are ready and willing to sacrifice more. With the exception of the first sitting of the second constitutional convention, all the expenses incident to the promotion of the state, extending over a period of five years, have been cheerfully borne by the individuals representing their several constituencies; their only reward and yours is the conscious satisfaction of the discharge of the highest duty of American citizenship and the thanks of a grateful people.

One paramount duty of this General Assembly is, in my opinion, to provide by law for elections to fill vacancies in office under the constitution. This alone I deem sufficient cause for this convocation. Beyond this your proper action is debatable, and I shall trust to the conflict of opinion to develop the course of wisdom.

I desire to reaffirm my belief in the absolute and unqualified legal right of the State of Dakota, as organized, to be and maintain a local government. Then if it is a positive, a legal existing right, there must exist a means of enforcing it so far as may be done without interfering with existing rights of other political organizations. The houses of Congress are made the sole judges of the qualifications of their membership, and hence cannot be compelled to admit your representatives to their bodies. Thus far their prerogative to oppress to this extent is unquestioned. Your right, however, to self-government as a political organization formed under the Constitution of the United States, and the positive enactments of Congress, exists, if it exists at all, independently of the admission of your representatives to Congress. It is an historical fact that the State of Indiana east and had counted her electoral vote for President of the United States prior to the admission of her representatives to the halls of Congress. While Congress can alone admit you as a state in the Union, you may still be a legally constituted political autonomy without the Union, and as such entitled to the protection of the federal laws. In short the creative powers exist in the state and not in Congress.

The only light thrown on the admission of new states by the Federal Constitution is found in section 3, article 4, which declares that "new states may be admitted by the Congress into the Union," which clearly gives to Congress the discretionary power to reject "new states" applying for admission into the Union. But there must be a "new state" in being before a "new state" can apply for admission into the Union and before Congress can exercise its prerogative of rejection.

Whether we rely upon the fact that the terms of the Ordinance of 1787 became by the organic act of the Territory of Minnesota, of which a portion of Dakota was then a part, a compact between the United States and the people of this territory, or tracing our title to statehood from another and independent source, to wit—the treaty whereby this territory was ceded by France to the United States, and in which it was expressly stipulated that upon the future demands of the inhabitants of this domain it should be admitted into the Union as states upon the same terms and conditions as other states had been admitted, or relying upon the language of the Constitution before quoted, which is the only declaration of organic law in aid of the question, and which, by implication, clearly recognizes the formation of new states or political organizations with certain of the rights of states without the consent of Congress. Evoking the manner of the admission of new states under the Constitution, and which have acquired the force of law as precedents, we are sustained on every hand in the legality of our demand for admission into the Union.

The people of Tennessee formed their state out of a certain definite portion of the then existing Territory of Tennessee, enacted her constitution and elected her state officers without the knowledge or consent of Congress, and sent a copy of the same to George Washington, President of the United States. Her constitution contained a provision that on and after a certain day the territorial government would cease, and the state government take effect within its borders, which President Washington transmitted to Congress upon its assembling with a blunt recital of what had occurred and a recommendation that Congress welcome the State of Tennessee, already in full operation, into the Union, which Congress made haste to do. This was the first new state formed and admitted into the Union. Since then ten of the twenty-five new states have been admitted in the same manner, without any prior act of Congress. It is true that in her amiable moods, in case of the other new states, Congress has extended her greeting in advance to the people indicating a desire for statehood by what has erroneously passed into the common parlance as "an enabling act," authorizing and directing the formation of a constitution, and providing for the payment of the expenses from the public funds. But contemporaneously with these instances and extending down from the admission of the first state, the other and direct method, which has forced upon Dakota, the state, taking the initiative, has been pursued and recognized as regular and legitimate.

Thus we find that the State of Dakota has been formed under the guarantee of an ordinance of compact older than the Constitution itself, as well as that of a solemn treaty stipulation, in accordance with the formula through which eleven states have been admitted into the Union, and presenting no issue that has not arisen and been passed upon in her favor. In fact it is no longer a debatable proposition that Dakota is of right a state, and entitled to admission.

The practical question is how to enforce the right. Section 32 of our ordinance and schedule provides that no act shall be performed of an executive, legislative or judicial character, except such as may be "necessary, preliminary and incident to the admission to the Union," until such time as "the State of Dakota shall have been regularly admitted into the Union." It is urged that this language occurring in the ordinance and schedule is in no sense a part of the constitution, but only incidental to its enactment, and that therefore it may be annulled by the convention now in session, being no part of the instrument ratified by the vote of the people. While this view is technically tenable, this section was promulgated as a part of the constitution, and was so recognized at the election, and I doubt the propriety of discarding it without a formal amendment to that effect, submitted to the popular ballot by an act of the Legislature, as provided for amending the constitution proper, and that until such time all executive, legislative and judicial action by the state should be confined to such acts as may be deemed necessary, preliminary and incident to admission to the Union. But upon the constitutional convention devolves the decision of this convention, and if the members of that body shall feel justified in voicing the will of their constituents upon this subject and shall repeal the restraining clause, and you as the direct representatives of the people of the state shall in your wisdom determine that the time has come for further action, I shall make your policy mine, and afford you whatever aid I can. In that event I should recommend no further immediate action than may be necessary to test the validity of the state as organized in the executive and judiciary departments of the government. Whatever may be the decision of the executive, which is necessarily biased by partisan impulse, I have no doubt of a favorable decision from the highest tribunal of law and justice when its decision shall be obtained, sustaining the state in its right to self-government, and if not now arrived, the time will come when such a decision will be possible if you persevere in your work so heroically commenced. Political tyranny in a free government cannot always prevail against the will of freemen, and the chiefest calamity possible to befall you will prove your deliverance if you maintain your courage and your state intact. I refer to the possibility of the formation of a constitution and the assertion of statehood for the whole of Dakota. Then the Supreme Court cannot evade jurisdiction of the question as involving the legality of the state government, as both parties to the issue will be in the same position and the right of the State of Dakota, having become first vested and never having been allowed to lapse, will prevail against any subsequent attempt to obtain a local government within her borders. Here, in my judgment, should be made the final stand—here the last die cast to determine whether the Constitution of the fathers shall be maintained upon the earth. The public domain which we inhabit was held subject to limitations. The limitation imposed by treaty made with a foreign power before purchase; the Ordinance Compact of 1787 extended over our area east of the Missouri River by the organic act of the Territory of Minnesota, and last of all by the genius of our institutions made at once to foster and secure to men the right of local government through statehood and the right of the state to protection through a common union. This is the grand feature of constitutional government, distinguishing between it and imperialism, and is that which makes civil liberty of priceless worth when weighed against blood and treasure.

Objection is made that Dakota was carved out of an existing territory, which was thereby dismembered without right. Besides being overthrown by existing precedents, this postulate falls by analysis. A territory is in no sense possessed of political sovereignty, being the creature of Congress and formed without the consent of its inhabitants. When a people have erected state boundaries within the possessions of the United States (involving no conflict with states before defined), formed a constitution republican in form, and erected thereunder the machinery of local government, the sovereign power of bringing the new state into being has been exerted and spent. Action by the general Government, preceding admission, is exercised in a fiduciary capacity toward a trust in being. It has already become a "new state" which may be admitted to the Union by Congress. If the "new state" comes bringing reasonable prerequisites as to area, boundaries, population, material resources and development, and her citizens are unobjectionable in their moral practices, and has established its devotion to law and order and its fealty to the Union, and it has acquired vested rights which it is not possible for any lawful power to obliterate, Congress may refuse to receive her representatives in her body, but this does not destroy her political being nor deny the exercise of her remaining functions as a state. Because she is wantonly wronged by the legislative department is no reason why she should be outraged by the executive or ignored by the judiciary. She is entitled to judgment on her cause as she makes it, and to protection in her rights as they are found to exist. This Dakota demands and nothing more. Her people would not assert a right which they do not believe they possess, nor will they tamely yield their rights at the beck of usurpation and tyranny. In asserting her power to maintain a more perfect government, she trespassed on no right of any other state or individual. The true sons of liberty are not jealous of others, but only jealous of the honor of their mistress.

Dakota, a state out of the Union, and asserting her right to enter, has been likened by a South Carolina senator unto a state in the union and asserting her right to secede. This is a pitiful attempt of an apologist of rebellion to get into respectable company. Dakota would enter the Union because she loves it. South Carolina would have left the Union because she hated it. Dakota craves the honor of entering the Union in order to help sustain it. South Carolina courted the disgrace of leaving in order to destroy it. Dakota would enter under the Constitution and by direction of statute, along liberty's highway, under the folds of the banner of the Union, to the music and step of the national anthem. South Carolina would have left, pulling down behind her the pillars of the Constitution and archways of law, trailing through the slime of revolution beneath the black flag of rebellion, to the music of the grand march of treason. Dakota would enter as a patriot loving liberty—South Carolina would have departed as a traitor, nurturing slavery. Let the enemies of free government mock at Dakota's cause as they will, but let them beware not to insult the intelligence of the age.

Then, gentlemen, I commend you to your labors and enjoin that your minds control rather than your hearts—your judgment rather than your impulse, and that you move forward in unbroken phalanx to the accomplishment of the work whereto you are called. To you is committed the weal or woe of this people, and their political significance as freemen throughout the ceaseless ages, and upon you is devolved the gravest responsibility ever to rest upon a representative body of this glorious heritage, and let me admonish that harmony abide in your assemblings, wisdom in your councils, and courage in your souls, until your star with its motto shall become fixed in its eternal place in the galaxy of states, and its words, "Under God the people rule," shall be a lasting beacon to future states of the nation and the world, thus helping to avoid in the future the disgraceful controversies of the past over the admission of "new states" into the Union.

A. C. MELLETTE, GOVERNOR.

Both houses of the Legislature adjourned on the evening of December 17th subject to the call of the governor, lieutenant governor and speaker of the House. The weather was dangerously cold, trains were interrupted by frequent snow storms, and it was difficult to keep up a quorum, in fact it was found impracticable. There was nothing to do, however, that could be done and needed doing. But there was strong apprehension that Congress might pass an enabling act that would authorize a constitutional convention of the whole territory, and place the power of calling the convention and election in the hands of the new Governor Church, who was known to be friendly to the one-state plan and opposed to division. It did not seem probable that the Senate would agree to such a measure, but still there was considerable anxiety manifested because such a measure had already been prepared by Mr. Springer and had been connected with Montana and New Mexico, and possibly Washington, insuring two republican and two democratic states. Our local statesmen and politicians were watching the political kaleidoscope in Washington with nervous solicitude, and while confident it would be beaten in the territory, would much rather it should be defeated in Washington. Happily for the peace of the territory the first efforts of Congressman Springer for an Omnibus State Bill were unsuccessful.

MOODY AND CAMPBELL

The movement looking to the setting in motion a state government, which was indicated by the proposed repeal of section 32 of the schedule and ordinance appended to the state constitution which had been adopted, may be said to have divided even the most determined and uncompromising friends of the division and statehood movement into two camps, one represented and largely controlled by Hon. Hugh J. Campbell, the radical leader, who apparently would have preferred that Congress should be taught a lesson in state-making that it was simply a usurper of the rights of the people of Dakota in delaying the recognition of her demand for statehood under the Sioux Falls Constitution. Judge Campbell's temperament was combative, and he was also an ambitious man—ambitious for political honors, and he could see that his personal aims would be best secured if he could induce the people to sustain his radical policy, and rebuke, thus indirectly, and weaken the influence of the leaders in the conservative camp, who were inclined to favor the counsel of Moody and Edgerton, though the latter had finally yielded to the apparent force of public sentiment, and withdrawn his opposition to the repeal of the constitutional restraining clause. Moody and Edgerton had already been elected United States senators by the State Legislature, and with Governor Mellette and the congressmen chosen had officially notified the President and Congress of the action taken in Dakota. Judge Moody was possibly the ablest all-around lawyer in the territory and was so regarded quite generally. He was among the pioneers of the division movement, and of the statehood movement also. He would under no circumstances accept admission without division. But he had little sympathy with any plan that proposed to force the state into the Union without the consent of Congress. It could not be done, he held, and it was folly to urge it. Concerning the power of the courts to compel Congress to act, Judge Moody said:

It is said by some that this right of local self-government can be secured through some proceeding in court. How? No one has attempted to point the mode. It is a political right and one that cannot be forced through the courts. It is a subject of legislation. I cannot conceive how any proposition can reach any court, and I am confident that no lawyer in the country could be found who would presume, who would be willing to incur the ridicule connected with the attempt to present any proposition to the Supreme Court of the United States involving the right of the people of a territory to set up and put in motion a state government in disregard of the action of Congress in admitting it as a state into the Union. If one could be found he would be met at once by the uniform decisions of that court to the effect that the legislative power of Congress over the territories is absolute.

A state may be formed, and undoubtedly it is essential that one should be formed, for admission into the Union, but it requires the action of Congress to constitute it a state in the Union, and a state out of the Union is as impossible of existence as is that of a bird in the water, or a fish in the air.

Now by this I do not want to be understood as discouraging in any particular the effort of any person to keep alive in the hearts and minds of our fellow citizens the necessity and wish for state government. On the contrary I am ready, and more than willing, to do anything and to encourage others in doing anything which will tend in the least degree toward accomplishing the much desired purpose. I think we should adhere to our present organization, and if necessary keep it alive by subsequent elections, with a stern and unflinching determination that we will take nothing less than the admission of South Dakota into the Union of States.

Beyond this, I think it exceedingly important that such an organization should be had as will enable us to educate the people of the United States to the necessity of justice to this people. They should be taught that it is dangerous to the people of all the states to deny to any portion of the people those political rights and privileges which pertain to the condition of American citizens. They should be aroused and alarmed by the fact that for mere partisan purposes, in order that a few insignificant individuals may hold office, a great people, nearly half a million American citizens, are denied the privileges and the rights for which their Revolutionary forefathers risked everything—honor, life and property. They should have called to their mind that for the people to become familiarized with and their senses blunted by indifference to such outrage and wrong is dangerous to them and to those who shall come after them.

We cannot rebel against the Government. We do not want to. We want to become an integral part of it. We cannot get into the Union or become a state by fighting our way in, either by levying war or by a lawsuit. We have got to secure those political rights to which we are justly entitled by an appeal to the great heart of the American nation.

I have made many sacrifices in this movement, and am ready and expect to make many more. I have believed for years that the absolute welfare of the people of Dakota, both north and south, demands its division into two equal parts by an east and west line, and the speedy admission of both into the Union as sovereign states, under constitutions of their own choosing and with governments of their own volition. I cannot conceive how my mind can be changed on these subjects. I have not thought of this question of division as a mere present expedient, but always upon what I believed would be its effect in the future when these become great and thickly populated commonwealths. As we have grown in years, in population, in strength, and in material resources, my judgment has been strengthened and intensified, and I believe that if such a dire calamity should befall us as that this people were forced into the Union as one state for the whole territory, those who live now and those who are to come after us will reap in bitterness the fruits of such mistaken policy.

Feeling as I do, cherishing this feeling for many years, can it be possible that anyone would think that I was either indifferent or opposed to any project which would have a tendency, however remote, to bring about the speedy habilitating of South Dakota with statehood?

Yours truly,

G. C. Moody.

The people could frame a constitution, elect state officers, and then might set the machinery of state government in motion, but they could not admit the state to the Union, they could not control the public lands, they could not have an acre of these lands for the common schools and public institutions, they might not be recognized as a state by other states. The conservative course was practicable—the radical way was impracticable, and the majority of those who supported it were not under the delusion that they would endeavor to operate a state government outside the Union, but that such a manifestation of their earnestness and determination, would have a favorable influence at Washington and facilitate the early division of the territory and the admission of the state.

Judge Moody and Judge Edgerton were both sufficiently radical, but neither favored setting up an independent state government, and it was stated on respectable authority that Senator Harrison who was leading the efforts for division and admission in the Senate, did not endorse that programme. Hence it was, that while General Campbell's services were acknowledged to be of value in educating and influencing the people regarding statehood, and their inalienable right thereto,—his remedy, carried to the extreme which he proposed in case Congress did not act favorably at this time, was viewed as hazardous. It would lead to a conflict with the territorial government, and this would take the matter officially before the department at Washington and they would in all probability and quite properly decide that the territorial government of Dakota was the only one they could officially recognize. The President would be inclined to enforce the laws of the United States applicable to territories and he would undoubtedly sustain the territorial government. Mr. Campbell's suggestion that a Territorial Legislature, if so minded, could practically render impotent the territorial government by withholding appropriations and by repealing the laws creating territorial offices, could not have been made after mature reflection, for he was aware that Congress had authority to legislate for the territories, and had so acted on more than one occasion in the case of Dakota, and had the emergency required, it could have reenacted all the statutes that were needed to continue in force the territorial government of Dakota.

To a people inclined to peace and progress, and who would be the only sufferers in case the radical plan was adopted and failed to bring relief, the policy of Moody, Edgerton, Tripp, Ziebach and Day and Delegate Gifford was regarded as the saner and safer policy.

Campbell, however, was apparently under the delusion that his efforts had carried the movement successfully to the point of state organization, and that he could induce the state officials so chosen to set the state government in operation. Had he diagnosed public sentiment with the intelligence and skill that he had displayed in promoting the cause and in enlightening the people, he would have here rested on his laurels, and would have advised the people—"thus far can we go, but no farther." Such a temperate course would have greatly strengthened the general with the people, and at least have improved his chances to secure in the future, a United States senatorship, which he desired, but it might not have secured it to him at the first election, for the public mind and the manipulation of leaders, had, probably, earlier than this, fixed upon those upon whom these favors were to be bestowed in the present instance. And Campbell doubtless realized this.

LOUNSBERRY, OF BISMARCK

Col. C. D. Lounsberry was the pioneer journalist of Northern Dakota, and established the Tribune at Bismarck in 1873. He had remained there engaged in journalism up to 1885, and for years thereafter. He was regarded as an excellent authority on the sentiment of North Dakota on the subject of division and on political matters generally. He took much interest in the division of the territory, which he uncompromisingly favored, and had spent much time in Washington during the exciting and busy days of 1885-86, when "what to do with Dakota?" was the problem with democratic congressmen. With republican members it was well understood, they were in favor of division, and the admission of the southern half, with its over a quarter of a million of population as a state. In March, 1886, he gave out the following information of the Dakota situation at Washington, as he saw it, to a reporter of a Minnesota paper.

The reporter first put the question to the colonel, "Is Dakota likely to be divided at this session of Congress, Colonel?"

Lounsberry—There is good reason to hope that it may be. There are many democrats in the house who, if left to themselves, will vote for division. Twenty-two members were pledged to vote for the Dakota bill three years ago, but they were whipped into line by Sam Randall and the caucus. Randall professed to believe that if the bill was taken from its place on the calendar that it would be so amended as to admit the southern part as a state, but as the republicans could pass it in any form they wished, if the rules were suspended, the slaughter of the bill was ordered by the democratic caucus. It was not the division of Dakota then that was feared. It was the admission of the southern portion.

Reporter—Why do you hope for division now?

Lounsberry—Because by conceding division an excuse is afforded for refusing admission of either section, and if admission is insisted on Dakota can be coupled with Montana and Washington territories. Twenty-two democratic votes is all we need. We had them three years ago—we think we have them now.

Reporter—But you do not regard Washington Territory as democratic?

Lounsberry—We will not dispute the claims of the democrats, or even seek to throw cold water on their hopes (until after admission is secured) either as to Montana or Washington Territory, and are perfectly willing for them to claim North Dakota if they can find comfort in so doing.

Reporter—Is there not considerable opposition in Dakota to division?

Lounsberry—No, sir. If an attempt is made to bring Dakota in as a state without division it will be voted down. The people of the north have no relations of a business nature with the people of the south. They do not meet them at St. Paul, Minneapolis or Duluth, because the trade of the south seeks more southern markets by southern lines of travel. We do not meet them except in the Legislature or in political conventions, and then only to struggle for the protection of our rights or through combination to beat them out of theirs. We would prefer annexation to Minnesota to admission without division, and they'd stay out in the cold for twenty years rather than warm their shins by our fireside. Why, the southern members of the Legislature last year almost to a man refused to attend a complimentary reception and banquet tendered them by the citizens of Bismarck. Some of them refused to ride in free buses to the capitol and were so mad they wouldn't pay their fare, so they hoofed it back and forth from the capitol all winter, cursing the north, and praying for division.

Reporter—But a number of leading Dakota citizens are in Washington. Are they not laboring to defeat division?

Lounsberry—No, sir. They are led citizens—led by Governor Ordway, who has a grievance. Most of them are there as his friends or his servants, some working from sympathy, and some for pay. The ex-governor had the goodness to inform me once that he should spend the remainder of his life in Washington when Congress was in session, laboring to defeat the plans of Dakota people, and he was inclined to think that more than one Dakota heart would bleed before he got through with them. This is because of the treatment he received in Dakota. He is playing his part well, working the Associated Press and special reporters to excellent advantage, and he always has a fresh arrival from among his friends or servants in Dakota to back his assertions. The people of Dakota want division, and they will take their medicine if they must, but no amount of pressure will cause them to weaken one bit in their demand for division or in their determination to secure it. If this Congress does not give it to them, the next, or the next, will.

Reporter—Will the people of South Dakota be content to withdraw their claim to statehood until the next Congress if division can be secured?

Lounsberry—Yes, sir. If the democrats offer that compromise it will be accepted.

Reporter—What about the name, Colonel? Is the north willing to accept the name proposed?

Lounsberry—No, sir. They want the name North Dakota and if organized as a territory under any other name, they will demand admission as a state under the name of North Dakota, and they will kick like wild western steers until they get it. The people of the East may call their homes by names as mild, as gentle, as good, or as patriotic as they please, but as for us, we know what we want to call our homes and shall claim that privilege.

JUDGE CAMPBELL'S EFFORT AND HIS REWARDS

In connection with the general effort to secure statehood for Southern Dakota, Mr. Campbell had done a great part of the essential work in bringing the people to a proper understanding of their rights. That he was actuated more or less by a desire for personal aggrandizement may not be denied, but many other leaders might be similarly accused. He had marshalled and displayed before us the indisputable, and all important facts of history, and the laws, precedents and authoritative opinions of eminent Americans, which enabled the people to see and comprehend that statehood was not a favor to be conferred, or a privilege that could be rightfully withheld, at the discretion of Congress, but an undeniable and inalienable right of the people of Dakota, they having fulfilled all the conditions required by the constitution and laws and precedents. That Congress could not withhold from the full enjoyment of this right without violating justice, and ignoring a solemn compact existing between the government and its citizens in the new territories and thus endangering the stability of our country's free institutions. Congressmen understood this well enough, and in private consultation and conversation, admitted as much, but so long as Dakota could be held in peaceful subjugation there was a disposition on the part of some anti-republican leaders, in Washington and possibly at home, to keep the territory intact for partisan profit. But all the while Congress was cautious about establishing a new precedent by any official act that would contravene the well established and dearly prized doctrine of the right of the people to self-government, and a close examination of the procrastinating proceedings had in connection with the Dakota case will not reveal any act where this principle was directly violated. But the postponement and delays sought by such pretexts as "the opposition to division," and the lack of sufficient population as officially shown by the last federal census served to postpone the taking of any decisive step. And these pretexts were spread abroad among the people of the United States to inform them that the delay in admitting the state had a legitimate foundation. The question of division came the nearest to being a legitimate ground for delay, for until that question could be decided by a vote of the people of the entire territory, the Ordway element and the one state democrats were able to assert that the people of the territory did not desire division. But for the reason that General Campbell contributed so much of value in educating the people was not a sufficient reason for rewarding him with any particular office. He may have been much better qualified, and by temperament, better adapted to fill the office of judge than that of senator. He was an able and learned lawyer, and an eager student of the law, and would have made his mark upon the bench. He would probably have filled the executive chair acceptably, and with credit to the state and would have been of value as attorney-general. But as the matter turned out, leaving him without suitable recognition, Dakota could have mustered sufficient influence with the President, who was partial to Dakota, to secure for him an honorable position abroad, which would have given him life-long pleasure, and proved that the people duly appreciated and desired to recognize his valuable service and his talents. And there would have been no partisan opposition to such an appointment within the territory, for Mr. Campbell's work was done in the earlier years of the statehood movement when democrats and republicans were working for the cause, harmoniously, shoulder to shoulder.

Mr. Campbell's ambition, however, was centered on a senatorship, and in the progress of his campaign to that end, he displayed poor judgment. His alliances were not discreetly made, and brought him no reinforcement of value, rather rivals. But the factional conditions in the republican party made it impracticable to select his company, and he was rather obliged to take that which was offered, and this he did precipitately. He could have done no worse, at least, had he held himself aloof from any entanglement with factions, and trusted to some break in the plans of his rivals. But he was not such a politician as could discern the weak points in an adversary's armor and turn them to his own advantage. Though the election of senators in 1885 was of no lawful effect, it conveyed a certain prestige to the victors which served them profitably when the time came to select those who were to represent the state in Congress. Had the members of the constitutional convention of 1885 elected the senators, it is not improbable that Mr. Campbell would have been chosen for one of the places, but when the contest came before the Legislature, composed of a different body of men, the matter of merit did not appear to weigh strongly in his behalf.

SPRINGER'S ONE STATE OMNIBUS BILL

Before proceeding to Washington to take up his official duties in December, 1886, Delegate Gifford gave out a statement that "Congress would not do anything to promote the division and statehood question, during the short session unless forced to, and he did not see any way to force them. I don't think the democrats dare do much and believe they will make no move until 1888. They will continue in control of the House until then and until March, 1889. They are anxious to get control of the Senate, especially if they succeed in electing the next President. The admission of Dakota would lessen their chances materially, and for that reason they won't let her in yet if they can help it."

At this second session of Congress beginning in December, Congressman William Springer disclosed the democratic programme regarding the division and admission of Dakota, by publicly expressing his willingness to agree to enabling acts for the admission of Dakota as one state, together with Montana, Washington, and New Mexico—two democratic territories and two republican territories.

This proposed measure had the support of the newly appointed governor of Dakota, Louis K. Church, and of the Boynton and Inman democrats of the territory, as well as the Ordway republicans. It was opposed stoutly by the Tripp, Zeibach and Day democrats, and by the regular republican organization of the territory, north and south, which had determined to oppose any measure that did not include division.

The proposition was also opposed in Congress by a majority of the Senate, and probably of the House as well, who were not prepared to concede that New Mexico was in condition to assume the duties of statehood owing to its mixed and nomadic populations, unlearned, as yet, in the fundamental principles of free government. While New Mexico contained many intelligent Americans of good ability and enterprise, the majority of its inhabitants were said to be of the turbulent character found in portions of old Mexico, impatient of lawful restraint. But Mr. Springer felt that it was safely democratic, and would, with Montana, offset the partisan complexion of Dakota and Washington.

However, Mr. Springer introduced his bill, which did not become a law, nor did it pass either House, but a portion of its provisions will aid the reader in understanding what the bill designed to accomplish, and will throw light on the comments made herein regarding the struggle impending in 1886-7 between the promoters of the one state plan, and the divisionists or two state party, for the inroads made by immigration had been so marked and were even defying the rigors of one of the most tempestuous and frigid of Dakota winters, during this winter season, that no attention was being given, or at least very slight and unimportant attention, to the proposition for a territorial government for Northern Dakota. Its population would entitle it to admission as a state separated from its southern sister. The first section of the Springer one state omnibus bill described the boundaries of the proposed new states just as they now exist, or would exist with the two Dakotas united, then follows:

Sec. 2. That all persons residing within the limits of the said proposed states (Dakota, Montana, Washington and New Mexico), qualified by the laws of said territories to vote for representatives to the legislative assemblies thereof, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention in each territory, and the qualifications of delegates to such conventions shall be such as by the laws of said territories, respectively, persons are required to possess to be eligible to the legislative assemblies thereof. And the aforesaid delegates to form said conventions shall be apportioned among the several counties within the proposed states, in such districts as are hereinafter provided, in proportion to the population in each of said counties and districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making such apportionments, by persons hereinafter authorized to make the same, from the best information obtainable. That said apportionments shall be made by the governor, the chief justice and the United States attorney of each of said territories, or any two of them. And the governor of each territory shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1887, which proclamation shall be issued at least ninety days prior to the time of said election, and said elections shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to the persons elected to such conventions issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said territories regulating elections therein for delegate to Congress. The number of delegates to said conventions, respectively, shall be ninety-nine, and persons resident in said proposed states who are qualified voters of said territories, under the laws thereof, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates and upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe.

Sec. 3. That the persons hereinbefore authorized shall divide said proposed states into thirty-three election districts, in each of which districts three delegates to the said constitutional convention shall be elected. In voting for such delegates each qualified voter may vote for not exceeding two persons, and the candidates highest in votes shall be declared elected.

Sec. 5. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of each of said territories, on the second Tuesday of January, 1888, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed states, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States, whereupon the said conventions shall be, and are hereby, authorized to form constitutions and state government for said proposed states, respectively.

Sec. 6. That in case constitutions and state governments shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, said conventions forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitutions to the people of said states for their ratification or rejection at an election to be held in each of said territories on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, 1888, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed states shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution, and for or against any provisions separately submitted.

Sec. 8. That the counties of Grant, Roberts, Day, Brown, Edmunds, Walworth, Boreman, Hettinger, Bowman, and all that part of the proposed State of Dakota north thereof shall constitute the first congressional district, and that portion of the proposed State of Dakota lying south of said counties shall constitute the second congressional district of said state. And in each of said districts in Dakota, and in each of the states of Montana, Washington and New Mexico one representative in Congress shall be elected until otherwise provided by law after the next decennial census of the United States, and at the time prescribed by general law for such elections in other states.

Sec. 21. That the constitutional conventions may, by ordinance, provide for the election of full state governments, including members of the legislatures and representatives in Congress, but said state governments shall remain in abeyance until the constitutions framed by said conventions shall have been approved by Congress. In case the constitution of any of said proposed states shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the Legislature thereof may assemble, organize and elect two senators of the United States, and the governor and secretary of state of such proposed state shall certify the election to Congress; and when the constitution so framed is approved by Congress and such state admitted into the Union by special act of Congress therefor, the senators and representatives shall be admitted to seats in Congress, and to all the rights and privileges of senators and representatives of other states in the Congress of the United States. And the state governments formed in pursuance of said constitutions, as provided by the constitutional conventions, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of state officers.

Sec. 29. That the conventions authorized to frame constitutions as provided in this act shall incorporate a provision in each constitution abolishing all counties heretofore established within the limits of said territories, respectively, which contain less than 3,000 inhabitants, excluding Indians not taxed, according to the census of 1885 or other reliable data, and shall consolidate the territory comprising the same into new counties of not less than 3,000 inhabitants each, and shall fix the county seats and names of such new counties, until the same are changed in the manner provided in the constitution. The conventions shall provide in the constitutions of said states such provisions as may be necessary for the payment of the debts of the counties so abolished, and for the disposition of the property of such counties.

The sections of this bill that have been omitted applied wholly to the other territories included in the bill, each one apparently needing some special regulation and legislation not applicable to the others, New Mexico, particularly, but the bill failed to pass as did all the statehood measures presented for the consideration of this Congress, which was the 49th Congress since the formation of the United States.

DIVISION SENTIMENT

As showing that the constitutional convention for the southern half of the territory was supported by the people throughout the territory generally, attention is directed to the nearly unanimous support of the bill calling the constitutional convention, passed by the Legislature of 1883, when the Northern Dakota legislators voted unanimously for it, and the further similar action taken by the Legislature of 1885, at Bismarck, also nearly unanimous and approved by Governor Pierce, which resulted in the adoption of a state constitution which Congress finally approved in 1889 and under which South Dakota was admitted. North Dakota supported these measures correctly interpreting them as the speediest way to secure division and give Northern Dakota a separate territorial organization, which at that time was all the northern portion could claim with the population she possessed. The only indications of dissatisfaction that came to the surface in the north were at Bismarck, and at the Fargo convention of 1885, where a committee was appointed to visit the South Dakota convention at Sioux Falls, then in session, and induce the southerners to accept the name of "South Dakota," instead of "Dakota," and it will be observed that the committee's mission was successful, for among the last unofficial acts of the South Dakota convention was a declaration that the name selected, "Dakota" should not stand in the way of statehood—meaning that South Dakota would be accepted if Congress voted to change the title.

At the same time there was a very strong sentiment in the North that favored the old name of "Pembina," above North Dakota or any other title.

The sentiment of the great majority of the people of the territory never changed with regard to a division of the territory into two nearly equal parts, on the 46th parallel of latitude or the 7th standard parallel, the latter, when the conditions were understood being preferred. Trace the proceedings of the people in all their public assemblies, through from the beginning, almost contemporaneous with the organization of the territory, and you find them adhering to such a division until division was accomplished and the two Dakota states admitted into the Union.

The effort of Governor Ordway to commercialize and change this sentiment was futile. Even after he and others had succeeded in removing the capital to the northern half, he was unable to win over but a small fraction of the northern people, and these were those who were deriving personal benefit from the new location. The Northern Pacific Railway Company was said to favor the one state for the whole territory, after it had secured the capital at Bismarck, but this could hardly be classed as any part of the public sentiment of the territory, nor even the northern part, and while the southern half remained practically solid for division, their brethren of the North numbered more than three-fourths of the population of that section.

The Legislature of 1883 passed a bill calling a constitutional convention for the South, and the governor practically vetoed it because, as he averred, it did not include the whole territory. This was the Legislature that passed the capital removal bill, and was controlled by northern influences, and Ordway's influence because of his veto power; but there was no avowed sentiment among the members in favor of admitting the entire territory as one state. There was not a hint given in the legislative proceedings that any member desired it, and this same Legislature passed a bill calling a constitutional convention for the south half of Dakota, which Ordway pocketed.

It must therefore be accepted as the determined and unalterable will of the people of the territory, that it should be divided and form two states, and this was the sentiment of the larger statesmen in Congress of both parties and of the leading journals of the United States.

The opposition of the democrats in Congress to the admission of South Dakota in 1883 and later did not spring from their objection to the division of the territory, and we find Delegate Pettigrew at that time advising his South Dakota friends to drop the admission project for the time being, unite on division alone, and he believed he could get it through; and there was one vote taken in the House that supported his view but the democrats were opposed to admitting the state at the time on partisan grounds, and this they openly proclaimed. They would not consent to the admission of another republican state on the eve of a presidential election—that they had made the mistake of admitting Colorado in 1876, just prior to the Hayes-Tilden campaign, and they would not repeat it. As the House was then largely democratic this declaration of democratic opposition was a very positive guaranty that South Dakota would be compelled to wear her territorial garments until after the presidential election.

THE DEMOCRATIC RECORD ON DIVISION

The position of the democratic party of Dakota on the subject of division of the territory on or near the 46th parallel of north latitude had been consistently in favor of such division from the time that the question was first proposed in the political conventions of the territory.

In 1872 the democratic territorial convention was held at Bon Homme where a division resolution was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That a division of the territory should be made, giving to the settlement a distinct and separate territorial government north of the 46th parallel of north latitude.

The settlement of North Dakota began the same year with the coming in of the North Pacific Railroad.

In 1874 the democratic convention was held at Elk Point and adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That we believe the best interests of the public demand the erection of a new territory out of that portion of Dakota lying north of the 46th parallel, and we pledge the influence of the democratic party to secure the organization of such new territory.

The democratic convention was held at Yankton in July, 1876, and adopted among others the following:

Resolved, That we earnestly favor the organization of a new territory out of the northern part of Dakota, and believe that such an organization will largely tend to enhance the interests of the people of both sections.

In the democratic convention of 1878 no declaration was made on the subject of division. In 1880 a division resolution was adopted and M. L. McCormack was nominated for Congress. At Mitchell, in 1882, a resolution of which the following is a copy, was adopted:

Resolved, That we are in favor of the division of Dakota on the 46th parallel, and retaining the present name of Dakota for the south half.

In 1884 at Sioux Falls, when John R. Wilson was made the standard bearer, the convention uttered the following affirmative voice in favor of division:

Resolved, That we are in favor of division of the territory on the seventh standard parallel, and appeal to the democratic members of Congress to favor such division.

In 1886, at Aberdeen, M. H. Day was the nominee for delegate, and the division plank was slightly changed in phraseology, but still consistent with its former declarations. The resolution recommended, thus:

Resolved, That we favor the submission to a vote of the people of the whole territory the question of the division of the territory on the seventh standard parallel.

CHAPTER CXI

DIVIDING THE TERRITORY—POPULAR VOTE TAKEN

1887

THE TERRITORIAL LAW ORDERING AN ELECTION FOR A VOTE ON THE QUESTION OF DIVISION—NORTH DAKOTA CONFERENCE ON DIVISION—THE SOUTHERN HALF OF THE TERRITORY HOLDS DIVISION CONVENTION—NAMES OF MEMBERS—THE CENTRAL COUNTIES HOLD CONVENTION—NAMES OF MEMBERS—THE ELECTION AND THE RETURNS—THE ANTI-DIVISION CONVENTION AFTER ELECTION—NAMES OF MEMBERS—ENABLING ACT FOR NORTH DAKOTA—DAKOTA DEBATE IN SENATE—EDGERTON'S LETTER—EDUCATIONAL STATISTICS—SENATOR EDMUNDS ON THE DUTY OF TERRITORIES.

LAW FOR VOTE ON DIVISION

The Territorial Legislative Assembly of 1887 passed the law of which the following is a copy, authorizing an election in Dakota territory for the purpose of giving an expression of the legal voters of the territory on the question of a division of the territory on the 7th standard parallel:

An Act entitled an act to submit to the legal voters of the territory the question of the division of the territory.

Preamble. Whereas, It has become evident that in justice and fairness to all the people, and in the interest of harmony and good will among all sections of the Territory of Dakota, and in support of the just and earnest demand of many citizens for division and statehood, that the question of the division of the territory should be submitted to a vote of the people at the earliest possible day, therefore be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota:

Section 1. That an election for the Territory of Dakota shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1887, that being the date of the annual election, at which election the qualified voters of the territory shall vote upon the question of division of the territory upon an east and west line upon the seventh standard parallel.

Sec. 2. The ballots to be used at such election may be either written or printed, as follows: "For division." "Against division."

Sec. 3. The election provided for in section 1 shall be conducted as elections under the general laws of the territory, and all expenses thereof paid in the same manner. County clerks shall issue notices at least twenty days prior to the election, stating its object, the sheriff shall post such notices, and the county commissioners shall establish precincts, appoint judges of election, provide poll books and other material as in general elections.

Sec. 4. The canvass and return of the number of votes cast shall be the same as required in general elections.

Sec. 5. It shall be the duty of the several boards of commissioners, after they shall have canvassed the vote, to certify to the governor the result of such canvass, and the whole number of votes cast by counties upon said question, "for division" and "against division." The governor shall immediately, upon receipt of such certificates, make public proclamation thereof, and shall also forward a certified copy of such certificate of the result to the President and Congress of the United States. The result of such election, duly authenticated, shall be preserved by and kept in the office of the secretary of the territory, as the result of other elections.

Sec. 6. This act to take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Approved March 11, 1887.

CALL FOR A DIVISION CONVENTION

At a called meeting of the friends of a division of the territory on the 46th parallel of latitude or the 7th standard parallel, held at Huron on the 7th day of June, 1887, it was resolved that it was desirable, in view of the election upon the question of division, provided for by a law of the last Legislature, that the friends of division in both North and South Dakota should be invited to organize themselves thoroughly and to cooperate in harmony, and to obtain as large an expression as possible of the will of the people upon the question of division, at the election.

Therefore for the purpose of affecting such organization, and taking such other measures as they may see proper with reference to effecting division, we, the undersigned friends of division, hereby call upon the friends of division in South Dakota, without distinction of party, to assemble in their various counties on Thursday, the 7th day of July, 1887, and elect delegates to a convention of the friends of division, to be held at the City of Huron, on Wednesday, the 14th day of July next at 2 o'clock P. M.

The apportionment for such convention is recommended to be as follows:

Aurora County, 14 delegates; Beadle County, 21; Bon Homme, 16; Brookings, 18; Brown, 25; Brule, 15; Buffalo, 3; Butte, 3; Campbell, 8; Charles Mix, 8; Clark, 11; Clay, 13; Codington, 12; Custer, 4; Davison, 13; Day, 12; Deuel, 10; Douglas, 8; Edmunds, 5; Faulk, 7; Fall River, 2; Grant, 15; Hamlin, 8; Hand, 16; Hanson, 9; Hughes, 12; Hutchinson, 19; Hyde, 6; Jerauld, 5; Kingsbury, 17; Lake, 12; Lawrence, 22; Lincoln, 16; Marshall, 5; McCook, 12; McPherson, 5; Miner, 14; Minnehaha, 29; Moody, 12; Pennington, 7; Potter, 6; Roberts, 6; Sanborn, 10; Sargent, 4; Spink, 21; Sully, 7; Turner, 17; Union, 17; Walworth, 4; Yankton, 17.

The objects of the convention are to provide for a thorough and vigorous canvass of South Dakota before the next election, for the purpose of bringing out as strong a vote as possible in favor of division, and to transact such other business as to the convention may seem proper.

For the purpose of organizing the several counties in South Dakota, this conference names the following gentlemen as county chairmen, for the purpose of calling the necessary county conventions:

Aurora County, B. F. Bellows, Plankinton; Beadle County, L. W. Crofoot, Huron; Bon Homme County, Daniel Wilcox, Running Water; Brookings County, H. S. Murphy, Elkton; Brown County, John H. Drake, Aberdeen; Brule County, John Strube, Chamberlain; Campbell County, Frank Alexander, LaGrace; Clark County, S. H. Elrod, Clark; Charles Mix County, A. P. Lucas, Castalia; Clay County, D. C. Shull, Vermillion; Codington County, F. P. Phillips, Watertown; Custer County, L. M. Booth, Custer; Davison County, A. E. Hitchcock, Mitchell; Day County, J. C. Adams, Webster; Deuel County, A. A. Harkins, Gary; Douglas County, F. LeCocq, Harrison; Faulk County, A. Lawrence, Faulkton; Fall River County, Dr. Stewart, Hot Springs; Grant County, A. B. Smedley, Milbank; Hamlin County, G. W. Pierce, Castlewood; Hand County, A. D. Hill, Miller; Hanson County, A. J. Parshall, Alexander; Hughes County, H. M. McDonald, Pierre; Hutchinson County, C. Buechler, Freeman; Hyde County, C. H. Price, Highmore; Jerauld County, S. F. Huntley, Wessington Springs; Kingsbury County, J. H. Carroll, DeSmet; Lake County, H. J. Patterson, Madison; Lawrence County, F. J. Washabaugh, Deadwood; Lincoln County, J. W. Taylor, Canton; McCook County, T. H. Conniff, Bridgewater; Miner County, S. H. Bronson, Howard; Minnehaha County, R. F. Pettigrew, Sioux Falls; Moody County, John Hobart, Egan; Pennington County, J. W. Fowler, Rapid City; Potter County, Dr. W. C. Stone, Gettysburg; Roberts County, E. F. Drake, Wilmot; Sanborn County, T. D. Kanouse, Woonsocket; Spink County, E. W. Foster, Frankfort; Union County, E. C. Erickson, Elk Point; Yankton County, L. B. French, Yankton.

The qualifications for voting at the primary and county meetings shall be that the persons so voting must be known, unqualified and thorough friends of division, and all friends of division, irrespective of party, are invited to participate.

This conference invites the serious attention of the people of Dakota to the fact that this expression of the will of the people of Dakota upon this grave and important question will probably be decisive in its results. It is thought by many well advised persons that the next Congress will seriously take up the questions of the division and admission of Dakota.

A decided and unmistakable expression of a large majority of the people of Dakota whose right it is to decide this matter, in favor of division, will doubtless exercise a strong and immediate influence upon the action of Congress.

Therefore we most respectfully call upon all friends of division to unite, both in sending strong delegations from each county to the proposed convention, and also in polling the largest possible vote in the county in favor of division.

This is a critical moment in the fortunes of Dakota. Let her people be united and earnest.

J. J. Kleiner
Hugh J. Campbell
D. N. Hunt
Thomas Sterling
E. W. Foster
Thomas Reed

Joseph Ward
Augustine Davis
L. B. French
A. G. Kellam
T. V. Eddy
F. P. Phillips

H. R. Pease
A. B. Smedley
S. H. Patten
John Fogerty
D. C. Turner
S. V. Jones

A. C. Mellette	John Norton	Frank Crane
John A. Owen	R. F. Pettigrew	R. W. Haire
A. J. Edgerton	T. D. Kanouse	J. R. Lowe
S. H. Craig	W. S. Bowen	M. H. Day
A. W. Wilmarth	Joseph Allen	John E. Bennett
Wm. B. Sterling	C. F. Hackett	E. S. Wheelock
E. T. Cressey	W. C. Plummer	F. LeCocq
A. W. Burt	John H. Drake	T. H. Comiff
W. E. Allen	F. J. Cory	F. Miner
C. P. Sherwood	John Bushell	Joseph Allen
Frank Alexander	A. Haines	T. B. Buchanan
D. C. Thomas	H. S. Murphy
E. D. Wheelock	Ed. Benke

The county conventions were held quite generally throughout South Dakota though the date for the political meetings was not the best for the country people who were more or less occupied with farm work that could not be postponed. There were 568 delegates provided for in the call, and though this number was not expected to attend, a fair representation from each county was looked for, and so it proved when the day came for the assembling of the convention.

The South Dakota division convention was called to order at Huron, July 14, at 2.30 P. M., by local Chairman Crawford, with an estimated attendance of 400 delegates. The temporary organization resulted in the election of J. W. Carter, of Canton, chairman, and Frank Adamson, of Sanborn County, secretary.

A Committee on Credentials was appointed consisting of Delegates Wilcox, of Bon Homme; Sterling, of Spink; Southwick, of Kingsbury; Pinkham, of Hand; Sullivan, of Aurora; Edwards, of Brown, and Caldwell, of Minnehaha, to whom the credentials of the several counties were delivered. This committee reported thirty-six of the fifty counties of South Dakota represented by nearly four hundred delegates. The report was adopted. Addresses were made by Colonel Plummer, of Brown County, and John J. Kleiner, democrat, of Hughes; T. D. Kanouse, of Sanborn and Doctor Blackburn, of Hughes, also spoke. All the remarks were uncompromisingly for division—the keynote being “division or no admission.”

The Committee on Permanent Organization composed of Beadle, of Yankton; Jeffery, of Clark; Maynard, of Brule; Pease, of Codington; Adams, of Day; Foster, of Spink; McManima, of Hughes, reported recommending Hugh J. Campbell, of Yankton, chairman; A. M. Lichtenwalter, of Hughes; John H. Drake, of Brown; and L. W. Crofoot, of Beadle, secretaries. The report was adopted and the president-elect took the chair and made a brief address in the course of which he said “I will never submit to admission as a whole.”

A Committee on Resolutions was appointed consisting of A. J. Edgerton, of Davison; Thomas Sterling, of Spink; Geo. H. Hand, of Yankton; H. R. Pease, of Codington; Oliver, of Edmunds; Adams, of Brown; Haines, of Hanson. There was also a committee appointed on “Plan of Campaign,” consisting of A. C. Mellette, John A. A. Pickler, F. W. Caldwell, T. H. Comiff, A. G. Kellam, Frank LeCocq, and Mr. Hedley.

The report of the Committee on Plan of Campaign brought out considerable discussion. As finally agreed upon and put in formal shape, it was in words following:

Mr. President—Your committee on plan of campaign begs leave to report the following as its suggestions for the organization of the southern portion of Dakota Territory for the work preparatory to the coming election on division:

First. That there be appointed an executive council consisting of thirteen members, the chairman of which shall be chosen by this convention, and two members, one a democrat and one a republican, by the delegates here present from the counties in each of the respective United States land office districts, as follows: Aberdeen district, Watertown district, Mitchell district, Yankton district, Deadwood district, Huron district.

Second. That there be appointed by this convention, at large, from the southern portion of the territory an advisory committee of twelve whose duty it shall be to suggest to the executive council such matters and plans of campaign work as may to them seem calculated to further the cause of division.

Third. That there be appointed by this convention two committeemen in and for each county, one democrat and one republican, to be selected as far as practicable by the delegations from the respective counties, whose duties shall be to attend to all matter of detail regarding the campaign in their county, and to complete the county committee by the appointment of additional members, one from each voting precinct.

Fourth. That the executive council shall have general charge of all matters connected with the campaign, and shall have power to raise funds to pay the necessary expenses thereof, by assessing upon each county its due proportion, and by such other means as may be devised.

Fifth. That the executive council be requested and empowered to provide a press bureau for the purpose of arranging and disseminating through the newspapers of the territory facts and arguments in support of division, and also to engage speakers, both from the territory and abroad, to discuss before the people the question of division.

Sixth. That a committee of six be appointed to correspond with the press of the United States on the subject of this campaign, and to secure their support for the claims of the divisionists.

Seventh. That a committee of five be appointed on printing to superintend the printing and distribution of documents for the campaign.

Eighth. That a committee of nine be appointed to correspond with members of Congress, and present to them the claims of Dakota, and urge the action of Congress at this next session.

Ninth. That a committee of five be appointed to correspond with and confer with the friends of division in North Dakota, and to take such steps as may be necessary to secure their cooperation in this campaign.

The report was adopted.

The convention then proceeded and elected the executive council and appointed the various committees as follows:

Executive Council—Hugh J. Campbell, chairman.

Aberdeen Land Office District—John H. Drake and E. Swellenbach, of Brown County. Watertown District—George A. Mathews, of Brookings and L. W. Stakel, of Clark. Huron District—L. W. Crofoot, of Beadle and J. C. McManima, of Hughes County. Yankton District—O. S. Gifford, of Canton and Gen. Chas. T. Campbell, of Bon Homme. Mitchell District—A. G. Kellam, of Brule and James A. Ward, of Minnehaha. Deadwood District—F. J. Wahabough and B. G. Caulfield, of Lawrence County.

Advisory Committee—R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha, chairman.

V. P. Thielmann, of Turner; D. W. Poindexter, of Spink; John T. Kane, of Sanborn; J. J. Kleiner, of Hughes; J. A. Pickler, of Faulk; A. D. Chase, of Codington; M. H. Day, of Bon Homme; J. C. Adams, of Day; J. H. Patten, of Miner; E. G. Smith, of Yankton; A. Davis, of Beadle.

County Committeemen—Aurora County, W. H. Hooper, H. F. Fellows; Beadle County, J. T. Ohlwine, E. C. Issenbuth; Bon Homme County, Robert Dollard, Joseph Zitka; Brookings County, H. S. Murphy, John Downing; Brown County, Joseph Wells, Thomas Edwards; Brule County, George Butler, E. Greene; Buffalo County, F. K. Payne, E. A. Cleaver; Campbell County, W. F. O. Owen, Frank Alexander; Charles Mix County, John Colvin, Joseph Ellis; Clark County, James A. Grant, John Seaman; Codington County, D. C. Thomas, R. W. Kemp; Davison County, E. A. Hitchcock, James S. Foster; Deuel County, Capt. A. Harkins, Peter Mulholland; Douglas County, C. H. Brown, F. LeCocq; Faulk County, C. W. Johnson, J. H. Wallis; Fall River County, A. S. Stewart, Eugene Norton; Grant County, John Douglas, A. B. Smedley; Hamlin County, William Martin, ——— Beck; Hand County, G. L. Pinkham, C. W. Bowre; Hanson County, P. F. Wickham, ——— Chapman; Hutchinson County, A. S. Jones, G. John Maxwell; Hyde County, M. G. Sinon, S. R. Meggs; Jerauld County, H. A. Miller, John Chapman; Kingsbury County, John A. Owen, Charles Knecht; Lincoln County, J. W. Taylor, James Madden; McCook County, H. L. McClure, J. H. Shanard; Miner County, J. T. Cogan, W. W. Cole; Minnehaha County, R. W. Burkholder, J. T. Gilbert; Moody County, F. A. Spafford, John Hobart; Pennington County, John H. King, P. B. McCarthy; Roberts County, W. G. Ashton, D. Eastman; Spink County, C. H. Meyers, C. B. Stevens; Sully County, W. A. Lynch, E. W. Fakin; Sanborn County, M. M. Price, F. Anderson; Turner County, Joseph Allen, Daniel Dwyer; Yankton County, Geo. H. Hand, James Kingsbury.

The executive council was empowered to fill vacancies in any county.

State Press Correspondence—R. W. Wheelock of Mitchell, L. W. Crofoot of Huron, C. J. Anderson of Plankinton, F. S. Kellogg of Woonsocket, Daniel Wilcox of Bon Homme, John B. Sweet of Codington.

Printing and Distribution—A. Davis of Beadle, Edwin Greene of Brule, J. P. Hilger of Hughes, J. W. Woods of Sanborn, Thomas Thorson of Lincoln.

Conference with North Dakota—A. C. Mellette of Codington, H. M. McDonald of Hughes, John McCord of Hyde, W. C. Plummer of Brown, T. D. Kanouse of Sanborn. Correspondence with Congressmen—J. J. Klemer of Hughes, R. F. Pettigrew of Minnehaha, C. G. Williams of Codington, E. W. Foster of Spink, E. S. Kellogg of Sanborn, O. S. Gifford of Lincoln, C. H. Price of Hyde, W. H. H. Beadle of Yankton, L. W. Whitcher of Hyde County.

To Reconvocate Convention—Hugh J. Campbell of Yankton, John A. Owen of Kingsbury, L. O. Jeffries of Hyde, J. W. Hardin of Jerauld, J. T. Headlee of McCook.

The Committee on Resolutions made a report as follows:

Resolved, That we reaffirm the declaration already many times made, in constitutional conventions, legislative assemblies, and in memorials to Congress, that we are unalterably opposed to admission as a whole.

Resolved, This convention declares for the division of this territory into North Dakota and South Dakota, on the 7th standard parallel, and that we seek such division for the reason, among others, that good government, economical and well administered, will be more readily secured thereby for both sections than by admission as a whole. That thereby we shall have our proper and rightful representation in Congress, preserve that just balance of power to which a great population should be entitled, and secure the highest permanent good for both North and South Dakota.

3. That we earnestly urge upon the people the great importance of casting a full vote upon this question.

4. That on behalf of the people of South Dakota we extend to the people of North Dakota greeting. And that we cordially invite them to join us in a large and overwhelming vote for division upon the 7th standard parallel.

5. That this convention affirms its conviction that it is the just and primary right and province of a people about to be admitted to the Union to designate their state boundaries, subject to be modified with their consent upon the proposal of Congress, for grave reasons only, affecting the public welfare. And that due regard being had to the circumstances and development of Dakota, to the history and practice of the Government in the admission of states, and to the general welfare of the Union. All these considerations unite in dictating the division of the territory in accordance with the plan submitted by the act of the Territorial Legislature to the suffrage of the people at the November election for 1887.

6. That the communication of the result of such vote to the President and Congress, as provided for in the act of submission, is founded upon the great constitutional right of petition. And that we hold it to be the duty of Congress, in the just exercise of its discretion, to grant the prayer of such petition.

7. While we recognize the fact that the Constitution confers upon Congress a just discretion in the admission of new states, we protest against the unjust and tyrannous exercise of such power by refusing to admit a new state into the Union upon an equal footing with other states, after having fulfilled the purpose of territorial life.

8. That our claims for division and admission are of that importance to demand the attention and support of the people of the United States without distinction of party, and that in our efforts to determine our own boundaries and to secure the full rights of citizens of the United States, we most earnestly appeal to their sense of justice, to their understanding of the blessings of free government to aid us in our cause.

9. That this convention approves and endorses the efforts of Senator Dawes and others during the sessions of the forty-eighth and forty-ninth congresses looking to the opening to settlement of a portion of the Great Sioux Reservation.

10. That we respectfully request the President of the United States, the secretary of the interior and the commissioner of Indian affairs to recommend to the Fiftieth Congress the passage of a measure providing for the opening to settlement of a portion of the whole of the Great Sioux Reservation, and we respectfully request the members of the Fiftieth Congress to pass such an act.

11. That the denial of our right to division and admission for so long a period after compliance with all the conditions and requirements for admission is without precedent in the history of this government, and contrary to the principles upon which the Government is founded. And if a people possessing the territory, the wealth, the intelligence, the morality, and the population requisite for a great commonwealth can so long be kept out of the Union by the exercise of arbitrary power, we may well feel uncertain for the future and of the security of our republican institutions.

With the adoption of the platform, the convention adjourned.

NORTH DAKOTA CONFERENCE

A conference of the division leaders north of the 7th standard was held at Fargo on the 25th of August, which resulted in calling a nonpartisan division convention at Fargo, to be held the 4th of October for the purpose of endorsing division and preparing a plan of campaign. The ratio of representation in the convention was fixed at one delegate for every 200 votes cast for delegate to Congress in 1886, and one delegate for every fraction of 100 or over. All organized counties were entitled to at least one delegate. County conventions to select delegates to the Fargo convention were appointed to be held on the 1st of October, and the conference appointed committeemen in each county to arrange for these primary gatherings—the call being based on the plan of the sister convention held in the southern section. The call was signed by the citizens whose names are given below:

Committee at Large—C. T. Clement, chairman; George E. Bowers, Waldo M. Potter, George M. Winship, G. H. Elisbury. Cass County, C. A. Pollock, Alex. McHench, N. K. Hubbard, E. C. Eddy, B. F. Spalding. Grand Forks County, W. J. Anderson, J. B. Winneman, James Elton. Griggs County, C. H. Ford, C. H. Mosley, John Hogason, J. H. VanVorhees. LaMoure County, C. W. Davis, J. M. Bartholomew, W. E. Brewer. Nelson County, J. M. McLaughlin, Nathan Webb, S. W. Bean. Richland County, John C. Pyatt. Ransom County, J. E. Wisner. Ramsey County, Charles Courier, S. A. Nye. Stutsman County, Johnson Nick-eus, J. C. Wanock. Steele County, C. J. Paul, E. J. McMahon. Traill County, F. W. Ames, George W. Griswold, E. J. Smith, L. E. Travers. Walsh County, E. O. Faulkner, George Harvey, Joseph Toombs, John L. Cashel, H. C. Upham, J. G. Millspaugh.

It was announced that Hon. J. J. Kleiner, of Pierre and Hon. A. C. Mellette, of Codington County, would attend the North Dakota convention. Mr. Kleiner was a democratic member of Congress from Indiana, before settling at Pierre, and favored division.

The convention assembled at Fargo, October 4th, in response to the call and was composed of the accredited representatives of over twenty-five thousand voters in the north half of the territory, according to the statement of the secretary of the convention. No list of the names of delegates has been procurable for this work.

Hon. D. S. Dodds, of Nelson County, was elected president and J. B. McMahon, of Steele County, was chosen secretary.

The purpose of the convention being solely in the interest of a division of the territory, the convention devoted itself to outlining plans for a vigorous campaign during the month that would intervene before the election. A committee appointed to prepare an address to the people of North Dakota, composed of Waldo M. Potter, of LaMoure County; H. M. Hansbrough, of Ramsey County; Mr. Falley, of Richland County; Mr. Hudson, of Cass County and J. C. Warnock, of Stutsman County, submitted the following:

To the Voters of North Dakota:

Pursuant to law an election is to be held on the coming 8th of November, to take the sense of the people of Dakota Territory as to a division of the territory "upon an east and west line upon the 7th standard parallel." The ballots to be cast must have either written or printed thereon "For Division" or "Against Division." Returns of the vote are to be made as a general election, and the result in the territory at large is to be communicated by the governor to the President and Congress of the United States.

We are thus confronted with an issue in which every citizen of Dakota has a deep interest—not only for himself alone, but for all that shall come after him. Shall this vast section of the Northwest, embracing an area of 150,000 square miles, become and remain forever one state in the Union, with only two votes in the United States Senate? Or shall it be divided into two territories, and be ultimately admitted as two states with four votes at its command for the protection of northwestern interests? This is the issue on which every voter is asked to express his opinion at the ballot box. If the people of Dakota are themselves willing to abdicate their rights, and to accept two senators as against twenty-two from an equal area in the East, embracing all New England, New York, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia, the responsibility for such disgraceful surrender will be all their own. But if they are unwilling to go into the Union thus shorn of their rightful power, they have but to speak in the thunder tone of their half million of voices to be heard and heeded at the capital of the nation.

But vitally important and far reaching as is the question of additional senators whose vote may seal the fate of policies affecting the Northwest, there are many other considerations, scarcely less potent, which render division a necessity. We are all interested in securing an intelligent, honest and economical administration of public affairs, but there is reason to doubt whether such a government is possible in so large a territory, under our republican forms. In Dakota the people practically have no voice in territorial conventions. The distances are so great that large sections are not represented by delegates in person, but by proxies, furnished to order, enabling sharp managers to control nominations. Legislators, also, are so far removed from the people as to weaken the sense of responsibility, while sectional jealousies make a bear garden of the halls of legislation, of which advantage is taken by lobbyists to defeat promised reforms, and secure unrighteous laws. The history of Dakota legislation is a record of sectional intrigues, crude laws, shameful profligacy and defiance of the popular will. The obvious remedy is to reduce the area by division, cut off the sectional feuds, bring the government nearer to the people, and stop the bog rolling of twin sets of public institutions to reach the very bottom of the treasury. Besides, official records disclose the fact that very large states are more expensive to govern than smaller ones, the rule being, the smaller the state the lower the tax. Which may be accepted as proof that Dakota, divided into two states, will be more cheaply governed than as one.

In addition to these considerations which affect both sections equally, there are others which may well induce the people of North Dakota to give a solid vote for division. The territorial capital is now located north of the proposed line of separation, while the voting power of the territory, by an overwhelming majority, is found south of that line. The south is largely for division, and if the north should falter on the present issue, can we expect to retain the capital? There is food for thought in this inquiry, and in the further suggestion that, as one state, the south will continue to hold the balance of power, and by combinations with Central Dakota will be practically able to disregard the interests and wishes of the north in the Legislature, and in conventions, and to shut her out from equal participation in honors and benefits. In this connection it is unwise to lose sight of the fact that the territory is practically divided now in its sympathies as well as in its material interests. That southern industries center toward Chicago; northern industries toward the Twin Cities and the Great Lakes. That each section has its public institutions. That all the various religious orders draw a dividing line on the 7th standard parallel. And that the antagonism of the two sections crops out whenever they meet in representative assemblies. From all which it is clear that the weakest will inevitably be driven to the wall if forced into an unnatural and permanent union. North Dakota can hardly be so foolish as to accept the hazards of a perpetual minority, when thus warned of the probable fate in store for her.

If there are those who have opposed division in their anxiety for early statehood, it may be well for them to pause and reflect whether the road they have been traveling will soonest lead to the object of their desire. South Dakota has marshaled her hosts directly across their path. She has declared her purpose, and will make it appear clearer than ever before at the November poll that she will resist to the utmost any attempt at admission as one state. Having in her power to control every expression from Dakota, she will make her purpose good. And while her treatment of the north, during her recent race for statehood, was not altogether just or politic, yet as we are only concerned with this issue now presented, we may congratulate ourselves that her position is unexceptionable. She declares for division on the 7th standard parallel—which obviates the danger of dividing counties, townships and farms with the border lines, and also proffers an equal share in a title of a world-wide renown by advocating that the names of North Dakota and South Dakota be given to the proposed separate parts. On this basis she invites the north to join in securing a verdict "by the people, for the people," in favor of division, and to pronounce it with an emphasis that will forever dispel and silence any pretence hereafter on the part of Congress, or the national executive, "to find out what the people of Dakota want."

The manner of Dakota's treatment by the National Government is without a parallel in the history of the nation. A half million American freemen are, and have been for years, denied the common rights of citizenship—self-government, representation in Congress, and participation in the choice of chief executive. With more miles of railroad, more schools, more banks, and more newspapers than half the states of the Union, and less illiteracy than almost any of them, our demands remain unheeded, while eastern politicians are imported to hold the offices and play the part of chiefs over a great and intelligent people. Nor is this all. Dakota is kept in the swaddling clothes of territorial regulation by which justice is practically denied through the infrequency of courts, and the great distances to be traveled in attending them. While as an incident of this condition the vast patrimony of the school lands is being frittered away and lost, from which a princely revenue might be derived under statehood, to the manifest relief from the present burden of school taxation. From evils so great, and wrongs so monstrous, the only avenue of escape would seem to be a popular uprising that will bring the national lawmakers to their senses. A majority will certainly vote for division, and if that vote can be made unanimous, Congress cannot and will not dare defy such a majestic expression of the popular will.

On behalf, therefore, of the people here represented, we invite the electors of North Dakota to vote "For Division" at the coming November election, because such a vote will be equivalent:

1. To a demand on the part of the people of Dakota, without distinction of party, that Congress accord, at the coming session, recognition of their right and redress of their wrongs.
2. To a declaration that Dakota, whether as a territory or state, is too large for wise, economical and honest local government.
3. To a notice that the Northwest will insist that the vast region embraced within the present boundaries of Dakota shall ultimately be represented in Congress by at least four United States senators.
4. To a verdict that the first step in order is the division of the great territory on the line selected by its half million people.

The importance of a full vote cannot be overestimated. A small vote will only aggravate present conditions by affording excuse for further neglect, and settle nothing. But a full vote will put an end to controversy, secure early action in Congress, and give the two Dakotas an impulse of prosperity which neither has yet enjoyed. Again we press the admonition—"Give division a full vote."

A VOICE FROM THE CENTRAL COUNTIES

There was a strong sentiment opposed to a division of the territory in the counties bordering the proposed division line, north and south of it, but it may be questioned whether a majority of the people there held a similar view. During the pendency of the division question in 1887, which was voted upon at the November election, the pioneer newspaper of Aberdeen which was the commercial and political metropolis of Central Dakota at the time, gave out the following regarding the effect a failure to divide would have upon the political fortunes of the central belt and though division followed, it will be admitted that the northern counties of the new state have been able to wield their full share of influence and secure their full share of the most honorable stations in the state. We quote from the Aberdeen Pioneer, October, 1887.

The anti-divisionists are a queer set of fellows. They say no matter how the people of Dakota may vote, it will make not the slightest difference in the world—we shall have to come into the Union just as Congress shall decide to admit us—one state or two just according to which party may be in control of Congress. If this is so, "why do the heathen rage and the people imagine vain things?" Let the people vote. An election is to be held anyway. It will not add one cent to the cost of the election to vote on the question of division. The proposition has been submitted by an act of the Legislature—the voting, according to our anti-division friends, will have no effect upon the powers that be. Where then is the necessity for them to get so stirred up and excited over the question? If they are right in what they say, division will depend entirely upon the supremacy of one part or the other in Congress. Admission as a whole is the democratic idea, and division as two states is now the republican idea. A majority of the people of Dakota are in favor of the republican idea—they will say so at the polls in November. Some republicans will vote with the democrats on this question, and some democrats will vote with the republicans, being governed more by local prejudice and conceit than by fealty to party or by abstract principle.

Here in Aberdeen there is a sentiment of hostility to division which is purely local. It has been born of the idea that in case the territory is admitted as a whole, the capital might be removed from Bismarck to Aberdeen. This we conceive to be an idle dream. By opposing division now we will forever alienate from us the friendship of the south, and it is not to be supposed that the Bismarck ring would have such a lively sense of gratitude toward Aberdeen that it would hurry to transfer the capital here. Once in the Union as a great, grand state, the north and the south would shake hands across central Dakota, and the influence of these central counties would be no greater in the one great state than is the influence of the central counties of the State of Pennsylvania when Pittsburgh and Philadelphia act together, and they always combine forces when they want anything, paying no regard to central counties and cities. Extremes are always ready to combine in politics. Central Dakota in the great state would find herself ground to powder by the combination of the Black Hills, Yankton and Sioux Falls in the south, and Fargo, Grand Forks, Jamestown and Bismarck in the north. Our position would be much better as the northern section of the State of South Dakota, where our influence would be great and command respect, than to be the central belt of the great, grand state, and ground to powder at every session of the Legislature by a combination of the two great sections—north and south. The most we could ever hope to be would be the tail of the political kite of one or the other of them, accepting for services rendered a meagre mess of political pottage. As to the location of our city as a commercial and trade center, it cannot be affected one way or another by division or admission as a whole.

These are the views of the Pioneer upon this subject. They may run counter to the views of many of our citizens, but they are sincerely entertained and will be fearlessly advocated, although there is no particular reason for getting boiling hot on the subject.

THE ELECTION AND LOCAL OPTION

About the last of October the executive council of the division convention issued the following suggestions regarding the form of the ballot to be used at the approaching election, in voting "for" or "against" division:

Upon advice with the leading lawyers of the territory the council recommends that but one ballot be used. Upon the ballot can be printed:

First—The name of the county.

Second—Upon the question of the division of the Territory of Dakota upon an east and west line, upon the 7th standard parallel; "For Division" or "Against Division."

In counties where the question of local option is to be voted upon:

"Intoxicating liquors." "Upon the question of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in County, Dakota Territory: 'For the Sale.' Or 'Against the Sale.'"

In commissioner districts where a county commissioner is to be voted for, add the following:

"For commission, commissioner district,"

HUGH J. CAMPBELL, Chairman.

GEO. H. HAND, Secretary.

November 8, 1887, was election day when the voters of North and South Dakota voted on the proposition to divide the territory on the seventh standard parallel. And the people of the various counties voted on the question of the sale of intoxicating liquor. In effect this local option was a county election, as the vote of each county was separate, and made no difference as to any other county.

THE VOTE ON DIVISION

The following table gives the vote of each county at the election held November 8th, when the question of a division of the territory was voted upon. Under the law the returns for the two divisions of Dakota, north and south, were made separately:

NORTH DAKOTA

Name of County	Division		Name of County	Division
	For	Against		For	Against
Benson	274	294	Mercer	12	56
Billings	9	31	Morton	78	304
Barnes	274	944	Nelson	330	361
Benson	100	200	Oliver	6	36
Bottineau	129	175	Pembina	437	1,252
Burleigh	42	22	Ramsey	562	215
Cass	1,327	2,627	Richland	96	1,686
Cavalier	29	613	Rolette	40	82
Dickey	79	880	Ransom	282	553
Eddy	67	218	Sargent	72	764
Emmons	7	250	Stark	74	227
Foster	99	153	Steele	123	212
Grand Forks	1,587	941	Stusman	384	777
Griggs	100	453	Towner	39	81
Kidder	63	263	Traill	487	1,105
LaMoure	155	359	Walsh	786	1,553
Logan	4	39	Ward	305	167
McHenry	45	50	Wells	43	76
McIntosh	5	213
McLean	93	120	Totals	8,830	18,007

Against Division, majority, 9,717.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Name of County	Division		Name of County	Division
	For	Against		For	Against
Aurora	724	119	Hyde	423	32
Beadle	2,334	65	Jerauld	453	89
Bon Homme	856	363	Kingsbury	973	147
Brown	456	2,440	Lake	614	409
Buffalo	69	26	Lawrence	1,054	641
Butte	37	63	Lincoln	689	491
Campbell	158	231	McCook	669	247
Charles Mix	665	41	Marshall	144	500
Clark	643	136	Miner	640	180
Clay	409	409	Minnehaha	1,926	979
Codington	977	361	Moody	336	387
Custer	158	231	McPherson	15	115
Davison	1,013	179	Pennington	373	473
Day	467	540	Potter	391	143
Deuel	268	353	Roberts	69	163
Douglas	645	110	Sanborn	741	95
Edmunds	133	630	Spink	1,307	576
Fall River	191	59	Sully	370	56
Faulk	836	74	Turner	389	159
Grant	539	510	Walworth	131	570
Hamlin	228	277	Yankton	587	290
Hand	809	260	Yankton	796	67
Hanson	504	205
Hughes	668	17	Total	29,826	15,535
Hutchinson	708	82

For Division, majority, 14,291.

The vote was a light one and the result contained a number of surprises, chief among them the loss of the division strength in North Dakota. And a peculiarity of the vote was the apparent disclosure that it was affected by railway influences. In the counties where the Northern Pacific controlled the transportation interests, the vote favored "against division." Where the Manitoba otherwise the Great Northern held control, the division sentiment was strong and emphatically expressed.

The anti-division vote in many of the counties bordering near the proposed division line was generally expected, owing to a prejudice in that section to being placed on the northern border of the southern state. That the prejudice was not well founded subsequent political events have given ample proof.

EXPLAINS THE NORTHERN VOTES

Mr. Thomas Niell was vice president of the Dawson Banking Company, at Dawson, Kidder County. He gave to the public a statement explaining why a majority of the voters in the northern part of the territory had voted against division. He was an ardent divisionist, and was astonished and thoroughly indignant, when the election disclosed that North Dakota had voted against division. He set to work to ascertain what had changed the sentiment in that section of the territory. His own county had gone against dividing the territory. He made a careful and extended inquiry, and found that the advocates of the "one-state" plan, who had worked among the voters in that portion of the territory, had represented that if the territory was divided, South Dakota would be admitted at once into the Union as "Dakota," while North Dakota would be made a territory under some other name, and be kept in the territorial condition for many years. Mr. Niell believed that if the ballot used had been prepared to read "for division and the admission of two states, 'North Dakota' and 'South Dakota,'" it would have carried in the northern section.

A CONVENTION AFTER ELECTION TO OPPOSE DIVISION

A convention of delegates from the various counties was held at Aberdeen on the 15th of December, 1887, for the purpose of taking formal steps to oppose the division of the territory, and favor the admission of Dakota as one state. The majority against division in North Dakota, and the apparent indifference of the people toward the question, as reflected by the returns of the election, had greatly encouraged the opposition to division. The call for this convention had been put forth with the view of enlisting the participation of members of all parties but Governor Church was connected with the movement quite prominently, and a number of leading democrats were active in promoting it.

The convention assembled at Aberdeen on the 15th of December, and about three hundred delegates from various parts of the territory were present. Governor Church was also present. Others were N. C. Nash, editor of the News, Canton; John D. Lawler, territorial treasurer, Mitchell; ex-Attorney-General George Rice, Moody County; Cyrus Wellington, Grand Forks; W. E. Dodge, Fargo; Dennis Hamman, Col. Wm. Thompson, and W. C. Jewell, editor of the Tribune, all of Bismarek; Hon. E. P. Wells, Jamestown; John H. Drake, Aberdeen; Col. F. A. Gale, Canton, chairman of the Yankton Hospital Board; ex-Gov. John L. Pennington, Hughes East, E. M. O'Brien, Elias Shute, Otto Peemiller, R. H. Hitchman, D. H. Keets, Yankton; Abraham Boynton, Lennox; J. Goodykoontz, Chamberlain or Mitchell; W. C. Grant, Armour; P. H. Wilson, S. D. Griffith, S. P. Smith, Faulk County; H. C. Volkmar, Bion A. Dodge, H. J. Glasset, F. A. Eldridge, Wm. Graham, J. A. McBride, E. E. Gloustead, John Douglas, Asa A. Storas, and G. W. Hoes, Grant County; F. G. Wright, W. H. Carsons, Lem J. Clark, N. J. Johnson, A. C. Phillips, O. D. Norwold, W. W. Goddard, C. H. Winsor, Wm. Van Eps, W. J. Skillman, E. G. Smith, and W. D. Sites, Minnehaha County.

L. G. Johnson, of Brown County, called the convention to order, followed by prayer from Rev. Dr. Lawson.

The formal proceedings are here given: After reading the call, Mr. Johnson stated that he had been requested to nominate the following gentlemen for temporary officers: Chairman, H. C. Preston, of Davison County; secretaries, B. F. Spaulding, of Cass County, Doctur Burdick, of Clay County, W. W. Goddard, of Sioux Falls, and G. W. Kellogg, of Stutsman County. Chairman Preston, on taking the chair, spoke briefly. He said the meeting was not partisan or vindictive. But was called to give expression to the sentiments of that large class of citizens who were opposed to a division of the territory, or who believed that its division so difficult of accomplishment, that statehood should no longer be deferred waiting for it. That the best interests of the people demanded a state government at the earliest day it could be properly secured. He stated that he had always favored division, and would still, were it not that he had come to the conclusion that division was impossible of accomplishment. He then spoke of the advantages of the state government, and also introduced some of the advantages claimed for a large state with commendatory comment.

On motion, the chair then appointed the following Committee on Credentials: Wilson, of Pembina; Wm. Van Eps, of Minnehaha; R. McChesney, of Brown; Jacob Schupe, of Bon Homme; W. E. Purcell, of Richland; M. Alloway, of Grand Forks; F. N. Burdick, of Clay; B. C. Arnold, of Edmunds; Otto Peemiller, of Yankton; A. G. Hawes, of Grant; S. T. Flemington, of Dickey; Emil Moses, of Sanborn; D. C. Ross, of Sargent; A. W. Edwards, of Cass, and T. H. Wilson, of Faulk.

The following were appointed a Committee on Permanent Organization: W. E. Dodge, of Cass; J. C. McCumber, of Richland; C. T. Grant, of Douglas; Hughes East, of Yankton; J. T. Huntington, of Day; Col. L. A. Gale, of Lincoln; D. C. Russell, of Barnes; J. Ronayne, of Aurora; D. M. Fay, of McIntosh; R. M. Allen, of Stutsman; Colonel Thompson, of Burleigh; A. G. Lally, of Hamlin; J. C. Wilkenson, of La Moure; W. C. Gray, of Hand, and D. M. Griffin, of Walworth.

After the noon adjournment, the convention re-assembled, and the Committee on Credentials reported 59 counties represented, with 636 votes.

Delegate L. G. Johnson, Brown County, presented a letter from ex-Judge G. G. Bennett, Lawrence County, commending the object of the convention. Though no proxy was enclosed, a motion was made and carried permitting ex-Governor Pennington, of Yankton, to cast the vote of Lawrence County, there being no delegates from that section.

The Committee on Permanent Organization then reported as follows:

For chairman, Hon. Geo. Rice, of Moody County. Secretaries, B. F. Spaulding, of Cass; W. R. Kellogg, of Stutsman; F. M. Burdick, of Clay; W. W. Goddard, of Minnehaha; N. C. Nash, of Lincoln, and H. M. Williamson, of Moody. The report was adopted and Mr. Rice was escorted to the chair. He accepted the honor conferred by his selection to preside over a convention of the people of the territory assembled for a purpose of considering a subject of such vital and lasting importance. He considered the convention the most important ever held in the territory. This was the first time Dakota had ever unitedly asked for admission. He reviewed the division and admission movements, and stated that no state had the right to self-government without the consent of Congress. He then referred to the great prosperity of Central Dakota, including the grand county, wherein the convention was being held, and said it had never received a dollar in direct appropriation from the territorial government.

Delegate Greene, chairman of the Cass County delegation, moved the appointment of a committee of fifteen who were to nominate a delegation to present the memorial to be adopted by the convention to the proper authorities at Washington. This motion was quite vigorously opposed, and an amendment was offered to make the committee one from each county. A spirited debate followed, during which Mr. Goddard, of Minnehaha, offered an amendment to the amendment, providing for two from each legislative district. Mr. Greene, of Cass County, protested with much earnestness against this amendment. He pointed out that North Dakota had given 10,000 majority against division at the late election, and did not propose to submit to a plan that would give her only four delegates to eight for South Dakota.

(The question at issue and the view point of the several delegates who discussed it presented strong support for division owing to the sectional animosity existing between the North and South.)

When a vote was reached both amendments were defeated, and the motion for a committee of fifteen was adopted by a vote of 364 to 306.

(Note—The vote, however, was not cast by delegates in person but by proxy. For instance, the Black Hills voted entirely by proxy through ex-Governor Pennington and L. G. Johnson. Colonel Edwards, of Cass, voted for seventeen. Traill County's delegates voted the entire seventeen for that county. The committee of fifteen had been the plan agreed upon by the leaders, and they were safe in anticipating a favorable result from the final vote of over six hundred.)

The chair then appointed the committee of fifteen as follows:

Greene, of Cass; Charles Sheldon, of Day; J. D. Lawler, of Davison; J. C. Dobbins, of Barnes; M. Sheridan, of Pennington; R. M. Lauder, of Richland; W. D. Stites, of Minnehaha; S. D. Runkle, of Sargent; Jas. M. Moore, of Brown; J. T. Allen, of Stutsman; Chris Hameister, of Yankton; J. W. Jewell, of Burleigh; A. D. Gawne, of Hanson; and Robt. Wilson, of Pembina.

Delegate Smith, of Minnehaha, moved that the committee select the delegation to Washington by giving two members to each judicial district, and three at large. The motion carried.

LETTER FROM SPRINGER

The following letter from Congressman William Springer, who was leading the contest in Congress as the champion of the one-state movement from Dakota was read to the convention. It was not stated to whom the letter was addressed, and it was presumed that it had been sent to the governor or to Hon. L. G. Johnson, who had been prominently identified with calling the convention. From this incident and others it was inferred that the convention had been suggested by influential anti-divisionists at Washington. Mr. Springer's letter follows:

This is the first concerted movement on the part of the people of Dakota for single statehood which has come to my knowledge. Heretofore the organized efforts of your people have been in the direction of division of the territory into two parts, while individuals, certain localities, and newspapers in the territory have opposed such efforts.

These contending factions among your own people have had the inevitable result of preventing any affirmative action whatever by Congress.

Some of our citizens seem to entertain the idea that the question of division of the territory is purely a local one concerning only the people of Dakota. This is a great mistake. The people of every state in this Union are equally interested in this question, and it is no more a question to be left to the territory than would be the question of dividing the State of Florida and erecting two states out of the territory comprised within its present limits.

The average population of the states of the Union exceeds 1,400,000. Dakota at this time does not claim to have a population exceeding 600,000. Hence, at the present time, on the ground of population, there is no well-founded reason for her insisting upon the formation of two states out of her present territory, or for giving the people within her limits four senators in the Senate of the United States, while the State of Illinois, with three million, and the State of New York, with five million people, have but two senators each.

Under section 3, of article 4, of the Constitution of the United States, no new state can be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other state, without the consent of the Legislature of such state, as well as of Congress. Those who are claiming the right of division are claiming greater power for the territory than any state of the Union has under its constitution. However, if at any time in the future the people of the territory become so numerous that their material interests would be best subserved by division, the Legislature of the state and the Congress of the United States, acting in conjunction, can secure such division.

Those who are wedded to the idea of division may well postpone the realization of their hopes until a more convenient season, for I can assure them from my knowledge of public sentiment that the division of Dakota at this time and the erection of two states within her borders is utterly impossible.

I have been assailed in some quarters for having opposed the admission of Dakota into the Union, and such criticisms are unjust and without foundation. I have earnestly desired and still do desire the admission of Dakota into the Union as one state, but I have opposed and will continue to oppose her dismemberment. While some of her citizens, perhaps, interested in certain localities that may be affected by division, may criticise my course at this time, yet I feel assured that hereafter those who have insisted upon single admission will be regarded as the benefactors of the territory.

After Dakota shall have been admitted to the Union, and taken her place in the sisterhood of states, the magnitude of her domain, the greatness of her resources, and the courage and indomitable pluck of her people will inspire in every citizen a just and laudable pride. It will be the boast of thousands, and perhaps millions, of our citizens who may hereafter reside within your jurisdiction, that they are the citizens of a great state, and in national conventions of political parties, in the halls of Congress, and in the commercial bodies of the world, her representatives will be accorded that distinguished position which the importance of the state will demand.

I have faith in the future of Dakota. She is destined to take her place very soon in the galaxy of our states as one of the greatest and most prosperous in the Union. I therefore bid you Godspeed in the work of the convention of the 15th of December, and trust that its labors will result in the early admission of Dakota as a state in the Union.

WM. M. SPRINGER.

The committee to draft a memorial to Congress and the President then presented its report, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The people of Dakota Territory, assembled in a delegate convention, respectfully represent that they are desirous of the admission of the Territory of Dakota as a state into the Federal Union. We are possessed of the requisite population to entitle Dakota to representation in the House of Representatives in case of admission. We therefore earnestly petition for the passage by Congress of an enabling act authorizing the election of delegates to a convention for the purpose of preparing a constitution, republican in form, to the end that the constitution so framed may be submitted to a vote of the people of the territory at the next general election for ratification, and if ratified, that Dakota Territory be admitted into the Union as the "State of Dakota."

Submitted herewith are the proceedings of the convention of the people of Dakota, held in the City of Aberdeen, Dakota, December 15, 1887. To all of which we earnestly invite your attention and pray for favorable consideration.

Then came the report of the committee of fifteen to select the delegation to Washington, which follows:

For Delegates at Large—L. G. Johnson, of Brown County; M. L. McCormack, of Grand Forks; W. E. Dodge, of Cass County.

First Judicial District—Granville G. Bennett, of Lawrence, and P. B. McCarthy, of Pennington.

Second Judicial District—John L. Pennington, of Yankton, and R. H. McBride, of Davison.

Third District—W. E. Purcell, of Richland, and A. Garnett, of Pembina.

Fourth District—C. H. Winsor, of Minnehaha, and F. A. Gale, of Lincoln.

Fifth District—C. T. McCoy, of Brown, and J. F. Lee, of Day.

Sixth District—Wm. Thompson, of Burleigh, and J. A. Frye, of Stutsman.

The irrepressible "North" and "South" conflict again came up on the question of adopting the committee's report. The committee had given the delegates at large to North Dakota in order to make their apportionment equal to the delegates from the four districts in the South.

Mr. Wright, of Minnehaha, wanted to know why it was that the three delegates at large were all from North Dakota. He wanted the convention to know that the territory extended south of Brown County. He had no personal feeling against any of the gentlemen named, but it was not to the interest of the cause to give all the delegates at large from the great Northern Pacific country. The Northern Pacific business had already given the anti-divisionists of the South great trouble, and he was opposed to giving the divisionists further latitude in that direction. "This thing smacks of slate work, it smacks of scheming." He then moved that McCormack's name be stricken from the list, and Geo. H. Rice substituted. Rice called Governor Pennington to the chair and taking the floor he said he was sorry the motion had been made, that he could not accept the intended honor, and hoped the gentleman would withdraw the motion. Wright consented to withdraw the motion.

Delegate Greene, of Cass, obtained the floor and stated that "We of the north have given a majority of 10,000 against division, and are entitled to some consideration. We do not propose to be satisfied with six votes while you of the south have nine votes."

An effort was made to divide the report and vote on the delegates at large separately, and this led to a parliamentary tangle, owing to numerous motions and amendments which Chairman pro tem. Pennington was not expecting. There was much confusion. W. H. Corson, of Minnehaha, said he did not want the convention to "cram this thing down the throats of the Minnehaha delegation." Pennington thought the best way was to refer the report to the same committee. This suggestion was taken kindly. Finally the pro tem. chairman decided that the question before the convention was on the adoption of the committee report, and without waiting for further remarks the chair put the motion and declared it carried.

No further business was transacted. The convention quietly adjourned.

Almost the first movement in the convention produced a sectional clash between the north and south, and exposed to the delegates the weak point of the one-state plan at home, however it might be regarded in Washington or by Governor Church, who was present and was doubtless acting under the influence of the Springer letter. The northern speakers urged that because North Dakota had given a large majority against division at the recent election, and South Dakota had given a majority in its favor, therefore the north was entitled to the greater consideration in an anti-division convention. This sounded reasonable. These speeches brought before the members and spectators one of the strong arguments made in favor of division, which was that there was an irreconcilable conflict between the north and south growing out of the sectional viewpoint from which their interests and relationship were considered. The north virtually demanded control of this anti-division movement because that portion of the territory had cast about two thousand five hundred more votes against division than the south half, but it was willing to include the south half in its declaration that the people of the territory were opposed to division, though the south half had voted by a majority of over fourteen thousand in favor of division. In its dilemma it felt the need of minority representation. That division was being strengthened by the tactics employed to give the north a preponderating influence in this assemblage was apparent, and that the same rivalry would continue in all the future should the territory be admitted as one state. Thoughtful members of the convention were impressed by this view, and among that element there was a feeling that the proceedings of the convention had dealt the cause of anti-division irreparable injury. It seemed an instance of a "house divided against itself."

NO MAN'S LAND

Congressman Springer, who was the chairman of the Committee on Territories in the 50th Congress which assembled in December, 1887, gave out a statement of his views upon the subject of admitting new states, from which is taken the following quotation:

Mr. Springer said:

Very probably enabling acts will be passed for some of these territories to adopt state constitutions and to construct the machinery of state governments preparatory to admission as states. The admission of a new state is a very important matter and cannot be done on a mere application or on any mere arithmetical basis. Somehow an impression has got abroad that a territory must have a certain population to qualify it for admission. Some put it at 40,000, some at 60,000, some at 100,000, and I have seen it placed as high as 160,000.

Then I have seen it laid down that the population required to qualify a territory for statehood was just the population which in the apportionment of representatives gets one member in the House of Representatives, but all these theories are entirely fanciful and are arbitrary. There is no law, no rule, and no custom about it. The admission of a new state is entirely a matter of legislative discretion. It is within the power of Congress to erect "No Man's Land" into a state and admit it to the Union. There is no census qualification prescribed. The State of Illinois was admitted when she had less than 40,000 population. Dakota has over 600,000 now. The Congress in its discretion may exclude Dakota and admit "No Man's Land."

Mr. Springer at this time was endeavoring to find a way of getting the Territory of Dakota into the Union as one state. His view on the subject of admission, while it was agreed with him that Congress had the power over the matter of admission of states, it was also felt that Congress would never go to the extreme of admitting No Man's Land. Mr. Springer's talk sounded unstatesmanlike.

Congress had the right to admit a state into the Union, but the question in the case of Dakota was, Had Congress the lawful right to refuse Dakota's admission, or any other applicant that came to it asking admission, bringing all the qualifications for statehood in ample abundance? Better democratic authority than Mr. Springer, by the score, led by a chief justice of the United States in an official opinion, seconded by democratic presidents and statesmen, had declared that it had no such right. The discretionary power given to Congress by precedents was confined to refusing admission to states lacking the lawful and necessary qualifications, and New Mexico at this time was such an applicant, in the judgment of democratic members, as well as republican members. The whole duty of Congress in this matter is to see that no unworthy member gets into the Union enclosure. Mr. Springer, however, never became an authority on this subject.

There was no disposition among Dakotans to dispute the power of Congress in the matter of the admission of new states into the Union. This was fully understood and frankly acknowledged by the people of Dakota. But exception should be taken to the statement of Mr. Springer, that Congress had the power to admit into the Union as a state "No Man's Land." It had the power to admit "new states"—that was its power under the Constitution. What is a state? It is not the land it embraces within its boundaries. "No Man's Land" could not qualify for statehood, for the state is made up of enlightened people who are citizens of the United States, and numerous enough to entitle them to self-government. "No Man's Land," having no people to form a state, could not prepare for or ask admission as a state, and Congress would have no power to admit it as a state. This seems very plain and incontrovertible, and it was surprising that a statesman, acting in his official capacity, with Mr. Springer's intellectual gifts, should have fallen into such a stupid and senseless error.

It might be held that Congress does not admit land into the Union when it admits a state. The land is already in the Union, and the Union has jurisdiction over it and makes laws for its government. It is inseparable from the Union, and Dakota had in that respect been a part of the Union from the date of the Louisiana purchase. The state was something else. It did not bring a rod of land to the Union, but formed its state on land that belonged to and was already within the United States. The people living upon the land brought a "new state" which had been formed, not by land, but by citizens of the United States, the only power that is authorized to form a state, and asked Congress to recognize it on an equality with all the other states, by giving it a place in the Union. A simple motion, in each house, to admit its senators and representatives, Congress being satisfied that the constitution of the new state was republican in form, would seem to have been all that it was essential for Congress to do.

AN ENABLING ACT FOR NORTH DAKOTA

In January, 1888, Hon. O. S. Gifford, Dakota's delegate, presented to Congress a bill for the admission of North Dakota into the Union. The bill was in words following:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

That the inhabitants of the section hereinafter described are authorized to form a state government for themselves under the name of North Dakota.

Section 2. That the said State of North Dakota shall consist of all the territory included within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at the point of intersection of the eastern boundary line of the Territory of Dakota with the northern boundary line of the United States, and running thence southerly along the western boundary line of the State of Minnesota to its intersection with the 7th standard parallel of Dakota, thence west along said standard and on a line with the same extended to its intersection with the 27th meridian of longitude west from Washington, thence north upon said 27th meridian of longitude to its intersection with the northern boundary line of the United States, and thence east along said boundary to the place of beginning.

Sec. 3. That in order to secure the formation of such government, the qualified electors within said boundaries are hereby authorized, on the first Tuesday of June, 1888, and in conformity to the laws of the Territory of Dakota, relating to the election of county officers as nearly as practicable and in so far as they may be applicable, to elect delegates possessing the qualifications of such electors, within the limits of such boundaries. There shall be elected at such election the following number of delegates, who shall be appointed among and elected by the qualified voters of each county within said boundaries, the following number of delegates from each county, to wit: One delegate for each 3,000 inhabitants thereof, and in addition thereto one delegate for the major part of the fraction of said 3,000 inhabitants; provided, however, that each organized county within said boundaries shall be entitled to at least one delegate. That said delegates shall each be an inhabitant of the county from which he may be elected. That it shall be the duty of the officers of the several counties herein referred to to provide for the election of said delegates by calling and giving notice of said election, and to canvass the return thereof, as is provided for in the election of county officers, as near as the same may be applicable and practicable.

Sec. 4 That said delegates so elected shall meet at (Bismarck), in Dakota, on the second Tuesday of September, 1888, at 12 o'clock, noon, and when organized shall declare on behalf of the people of that portion of the Territory of Dakota within said boundaries hereinbefore set forth that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; and thereupon said convention is hereby authorized to form a constitution and state government for that portion of Dakota within said described boundaries, and said state when formed and organized shall be known and called the State of North Dakota. Provided, nevertheless, that said constitution shall be republican in form and make no distinction in civil and political rights on account of color, or race, except to Indians not taxed, and not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. Provided, further, that such constitution shall provide that neither the money nor the credit of the state, or of any city, town, or other municipal corporation therein, shall be given or loaned to or in aid of any association, corporation, or private undertaking, and that the aggregate debt of the state shall not at any time exceed $200,000. And provided further, that such constitution shall provide that the Legislature of said state shall, under no circumstances, exempt any portion of the property within said state, belonging to any corporation organized for religious and educational purposes from taxation, and that no distinction whatever shall be made in the assessment and collection of taxes between an individual and corporation. And provided, further, that said convention shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said state, that perfect toleration and the free exercise of religious sentiment shall be secured, that the inhabitants within said proposed state do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands and the lands the Indian title to which has not been extinguished by the United States lying therein, and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States; that no tax shall be imposed by said state on land or property therein belonging to the United States, or to any Indian tribes or Indians sustaining tribal relations, or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States; and that all navigable waters within said state shall be and remain public highways, free to all citizens of the United States.

Sec. 5. That said convention, having formed said constitution as provided in this act, shall provide by ordinance for submitting the same to the people of said state for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held at such time and place and under such regulations as said convention may prescribe.

Sec. 6. That at the election last aforesaid the legal voters of said new state shall vote directly for or against such proposed constitution; and the returns thereof shall be made to the governor of Dakota, who, with the secretary and chief justice thereof, and the president of said convention, or any two of them, shall canvass the same, and if a majority of the legal votes so cast in said proposed state shall be for said constitution, said governor shall certify the same to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said constitution and ordinances.

Sec. 7. That on the receipt of said certification of the vote so cast at said election showing the adoption of said constitution by the people of said state as aforesaid, and a copy of said constitution and ordinances, the President of the United States, if said constitution and ordinances shall conform to the requirements of this act, shall thereupon issue his proclamation declaring the state admitted into the Union, and thereupon the said state shall be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states without any further action on the part of Congress.

Sec. 8. That until the next general census said state shall be entitled to one representative in Congress.

Sec. 9. That the governor and other officers to be provided by the constitution shall be elected on a day fixed by said constitutional convention, the territorial officers to hold over until their successors have qualified.

Sec. 10. That the laws of the United States shall have the same application in the said State of North Dakota as in other states of the Union.

Section 11 provides for the transfer of all actions, causes and matters pending from the territorial courts to such courts as may be established. No indictment is to abate by reason of a change in the courts.

Section 12 provides for the granting to the State of North Dakota sections 16 and 36 of each township, and all swamp lands, or their equivalent, for school purposes.

Section 13 provides that the grant of 500,000 acres of land in the provisions of section 2378 of the revised statutes shall be used for school purposes.

Section 14 provides for a donation of seventy-two sections for agricultural college purposes.

Section 15 provides for a donation of seventy-two other sections for the support of an institution for the education of the deaf and dumb, and blind.

Section 16 provides for the donation of fifty other sections, to go toward the erection of suitable public buildings at the seat of government.

Section 17 provides for the donation of fifty other sections to be used for the erection and maintenance of a state penitentiary.

Section 18 provides that fifty other sections are to be used for the maintenance of an asylum for the insane.

Section 19 provides for the donation of seventy-two other sections for the erection and maintenance of a state university.

Section 20 provides for the donation of seventy-two other sections for a state normal school.

Section 21 provides that all salt springs in the state, not exceeding twelve, with six sections of land adjoining each, are granted to the state for school purposes.

Section 22 provides that ten per cent of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands within such state shall be given to the state for school purposes.

Section 23 provides for the sale of the lands above enumerated at such prices as the Legislature shall direct.

Section 24 provides that such state shall constitute one judicial district, with a judge, marshal and district attorney, and provides for the holding of terms of court.

Section 25 explains the powers and jurisdiction of such courts.

Section 26 provides that the salary of the United States district judge shall be $3,500 per year.

Section 27 provides that the powers of the marshal, district attorney and clerk of the United States district and circuit courts shall be the same as similar officials in other United States courts.

Sections 28 and 29 provide for the transfer of proceedings from old courts to the new.

Section 30 that the secretary of the treasury shall ascertain and audit the expenses incident to the formation of said constitution and the submission of the same to the people of said proposed state, including such compensation to the officers and members of said convention as is allowed to the members and officers of the Territorial Legislature; and the sum of $20,000.00, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment thereof; provided that any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose, shall be covered into the treasury of the United States.

A bill, similar to the above, except as to boundaries and name, was provided for South Dakota.

The bills were referred to the Committee on Territories.

DAKOTA DEBATE IN SENATE

In 1888, the proposition which involved the making of one state or two states of Dakota Territory, attracted more widespread attention and enlisted more interest probably than any similar event in the history of our country, and in Congress it enlisted the active efforts of the ablest members.

A bill for the admission of Dakota as a state was prepared by the Senate Committee on Territories as early as January 7, 1888, providing for the submission of the Sioux Falls constitution to the people of the south half of Dakota on the 13th of the coming August, and upon its ratification, that part of the territory south of the 7th standard parallel would become a state, able to vote at the ensuing presidential election. By the same bill the northern half was organized into a territory and named North Dakota. This measure would pass the Senate, but it would meet with strong opposition in the House, where the democrats were in the majority and would feel it their party duty to keep Dakota out until after the presidential election.

In the early part of the session it was thought by the friends of admission that South Dakota could be admitted in time to participate in the presidential election to be held in November, and the action of the republican Senate in pressing the bill for admission, had its incentive in that motive.

The Senate began the consideration of the bill for admission and division on the 9th of April. This was the Platt bill. The bill provided for the admission of South Dakota and the organization of the Territory of Lincoln originally, but the Committee on Territories had agreed upon amendments and reported a substitute bill establishing the boundaries of the proposed State of South Dakota, its northern boundary being the 46th parallel of latitude, the northern half of the territory to be organized as the Territory of North Dakota instead of Lincoln.

Senator Platt, chairman of the Committee on Territories, who reported the measure, said the bill was one of four that had been reported by the committee for the admission of new states. (The others were Montana, Wyoming and Washington.) He said:

Suggestions had been made against the use of the names of North Dakota and South Dakota, but the conditions were such that the name of Dakota could not be taken from either portion of the territory without injustice. The proposed State of South Dakota had a population of 400,000, and he thought they had a right to be admitted as a state to participate in the next presidential election.

Senator Vest, of Missouri, then interrupted, asking:

Do you mean that the people of South Dakota have a legal and constitutional right to come into the Union as that state, without action on the part of Congress?

Senator Platt, in reply, said:

I do not claim that, but claim that they have the right to form a constitution, and that Congress has not the right to deny their admission. So strongly convinced am I that this territory ought to be divided, that I would be in favor of it, even if the people of the territory were against it. The present territory is too large for one state. And as to the suggestion made at the last session, that the cutting up of the territories into numerous small states would convert the Senate into a mob, it is better that the Senate should be increased so as to represent the popular will and feel the popular pulse, than that a state should be admitted so large as to have an abnormally large representation in the House of Representatives.

If divided the Dakotas, either of them, will be larger than Minnesota, Nebraska or Kansas. Were these states too small? Here was a great agricultural territory capable of supporting a dense population. By 1000 she would have a million of people, and would become a great province of herself. Might she not come in time to feel that she was not as dependent on the Union, as she might be if she were smaller? There is danger in this. I read a dispatch from Washington to a northwestern newspaper stating that certain senators would vote for the admission of but one state, headed "An Imperial State." We want no imperial states. In Dakota poor people cannot get to court on account of the great distances. Such a state of things are subversive of justice. Poor people could not go to the Legislature. It made a government of the rich. There are but six courts for 600,000 people. In many counties court has not been held for two years, and in the jails are criminals who cannot be tried. It was time that the territory with her great population governed herself. The whole present plan made our theory of self-government a lie. A governor from another state was selected and sent down to her. He had the appointment of 125 territorial officers, who spent all her money. I make no charges, but such a state of things breeds fraud and corruption.

Mr. Platt quoted from Franklin's comment on the proprietary government of Pennsylvania to show that appointive governors with a veto power were corrupt. The whole history of appointive officers was one of corruption. Dakota now supported her own government. All that the general Government paid out for her was $24,500 annually, and $63,350 bi-annually.

Senator Chandler, of New Hampshire, offered an amendment providing that elections for congressmen and for the Legislature to elect the United States senators shall be held subsequently to the passage of the bill.

Senator Butler then took the floor and asked for the reading of a bill which he proposed as a substitute for the one under consideration. This measure proved to be the same as the Springer bill introduced in the House, called the omnibus bill, which included New Mexico. After the reading, Senator Butler said:

The question seemed to have narrowed itself down to a single one, namely: Was the Territory of Dakota to be divided before admission? If this agitating question could be laid aside and the matter settled down to the admission of a single state, it would be easily disposed of. That proposition should have his best efforts and his hearty support. He differed with Senator Platt on none of the great questions involved in the admission of the territory, or her qualifications for admission. But when Mr. Platt went a step further and declared that the people of Dakota had an inherent right to come forward and demand her admission as a state, he must deny the correctness of that proposition. This question was one entirely within the discretion of Congress, and he could show the senator why it was necessary that this discretion should be exercised. If, as the senator has said this inherent right existed, why should not Utah be admitted as a state? She was in every way as well qualified as Dakota to become a state. Why, then, should she not be admitted? If this same proposition was true, what would prevent 200,000 socialists, anarchists and nihilists emigrating to this country, settling in some portion of Washington Territory, preparing a constitution and demanding the right of admission? They would have just as much right, so far as the inherent right is concerned, as the people of Dakota, Montana or New Mexico had. In that proposition Senator Platt had gone too far.

Mr. Butler said he was willing to grant even division, if the proposition came with sufficient unity from the entire people of the territory, but in this case it was a demand made by a faction of politicians who had gone further even than any other class of people to prevent the admission of the territory. He presumed that the Senate and House would be governed by the wishes of the people of the territory when they were fully and honestly expressed, but until they were expressed in favor of this proposition, he should not vote to give them what they had not asked for. The chairman of the committee, on the other hand, with the last vote upon this proposition, by the people of the territory, before him, had gone so far as to disregard the wishes of the people, and to bring forward a measure to dismember the proposed state. He asked the Senate to bear with him while he read something from the memorial of the convention held December 5, 1887, at Aberdeen, Dakota, and further from its delegates authorized to come here and represent the sentiment of the people upon this subject. He would read from the testimony of L. G. Johnson, a prominent business man and ex-soldier—a man of ability, who had no interest in politics and who had held no office in the territory and desired none.

(This was the well-known Ordway Johnson, under whose auspices the Aberdeen convention was largely held.)

Mr. Butler then read extensively from Mr. Johnson's testimony, all of which has appeared to the reader in the arguments of the proxy men and delegates to Aberdeen and the proceedings there. Mr. Ordway Johnson had gone on to Washington as the accredited agent of the Aberdeen convention, and had given Mr. Butler the benefit of an interview. Mr. Butler continued:

But 12,000 out of 77,000 votes had been cast for the constitutional convention of 1885, and after the constitution had been adopted, and a sop thrown to the people in the way of a prohibition amendment, it received but 34,000 out of 77,000 votes. This was 2½ years ago. The population of South Dakota was 263,000 at that time, and that of North Dakota, which had no vote on this set of state officers and this constitutional convention had 150,000. At this time the population of South Dakota had increased to 450,000, making 200,000 who had no vote on this thing, and the population of North Dakota had increased 50,000, making in the territory a total of over 600,000 people who had had no voice in this constitution and the set of state officers which it was proposed to thrust upon them. And yet the majority of this Senate committee on territories would breathe the breath of life into this thing called a state government instituted nearly three years ago. He desired to acquit the majority of the Committee on Territories of any desire to make a partisan matter out of this thing, and to congratulate the committee on the differences in the discussion of this measure this year and that which was held over it in the same committee in the Forty-ninth Congress. But the effect of this bill would be practically a partisan one, for it would get upon the floor of the Senate two republican United States senators, thus settling for some time to come the partisan control of that body. He criticized the majority report for declaring that the people of that territory were heterogeneous, and that there was no community of feeling between the people of the north and south sections. It was queer that a territory made up of 600,000 people, nearly all of Union soldiers, could be called heterogeneous. He should look upon a territory peopled in that way as very decidedly homogeneous. Butler then read from the proceedings of the last state convention, in which the division people had asserted that they would prefer to stay in the condition of vassalage and subordination, rather than accept admission as a whole. But, if the testimony of able, disinterested and prominent citizens like L. G. Johnson and Judge Pennington were to be taken as against this assertion of a coterie of politicians, Congress had but one view to take of the matter.

Butler then referred to one of the gentlemen seeking seats as a senator from Dakota (Mr. Edgerton) as one whom he had spoken courteously to in the last Congress, but who, in a recent speech in Dakota, had alluded to him in an offensive manner, drawing a parallel between the southern man who learned nothing, forgot nothing, and resorted to the bowie knife and revolver, and the Dakota man whose weapons were the Bible and the spelling book.

"That," said Butler, reading an extract from Edgerton's reputed speech, "is the language of a man to whom I extended the courtesy of expressing kindly feelings when he was attempting to get a seat on the floor. He is entitled to all the credit and all the honor, and all the eclat and prestige which that character of language can give him. But if I could select either as companions or citizens of a great country, the stalking-hound, the reckless highwayman, with pistol and bowie knife in hand, or the sneaking, lying, crafty, cunning Pharisee, who strikes from the rear and takes cover under the shadow of his own innocence and malignity, I would select the former. If the spelling book and Bible inculcate such education as that, such malignity, such unfairness, such injustice, such falsehood may God have mercy upon the Bible and spelling book which that man carries with him. Better have them made a bonfire of than to have them teach such language as that which I have recited.

"I want to say now and again, that any intimation or suggestion that I am opposed in the remotest degree to the people of Dakota, to their admission as a state, is untrue, is unfounded and cannot be justified by any record that I have made on the subject. I repeat, as I did upon a former occasion, that when she comes, after a fair expression of her preferences, her enlightened people, knocking at the door, in the form I believe to be constitutional and regular, not only will I not oppose her, but I will exert my feeble efforts to see that she consummate her highest ambition in that respect, and may take rank with the states of the Union. I will say the same thing of the question of division."

Senator Davis, of Minnesota, obtained the floor, and spoke on the same subject the following day.

This Dakota speech was one of the first speeches on national subjects Senator Cushman K. Davis, of Minnesota, had delivered, and there was an unusual attendance of members to listen. Many members of the House, also, and the galleries were crowded. In his reply to Senator Butler, of South Carolina, he so wrought up that senator that Butler had difficulty in restraining himself. Davis sent to the clerk's desk a circular exposing L. G. Johnson, who had been Senator Butler's chief authority for many highly colored statements undeserving of the slightest credit in the important discussion pending. Butler should have been convinced that he had been imposed upon by Johnson and Pennington, but the democratic policy in the Dakota matter was to keep Dakota out until after election, therefore the correction of mistakes and apologies for misstatements were deferred until after that event. Mr. Davis said:

Dakota became a territory on the 2d day of March, 1861, when states that have opposed her admission were seceding from the Union. Those states resumed their interrupted relations with little delay, but for years this great northern commonwealth, for purely party purposes, has been denied an equivalent justice. Her people now reappear, demanding rights which reason cannot gainsay or pretext evade with decent plausibility—rights to which they are entitled by treaty stipulations between this nation and a foreign power—by compact between the original states, entered into before the Federal Constitution was adopted, and which by many statutes has since been confirmed, applied and extended as a guaranty of statehood, over regions of the West, Southwest, and on the Pacific Coast. From these domains states have come into being and have been admitted in recognition and performance of both the treaty and the compact. This commonwealth makes claim upon equities more imperative even than these legal rights. In 1803 Napoleon Bonaparte was First Consul of France and Thomas Jefferson was President of the United States. Each of these men was the child of democracy, and they were the most present statesmen of that time. Each had foreseen the world grasping policy of England, and had for told its persistent processes, which have ever since been and are now in course of fulfillment. The hollow truce which followed the Treaty of Amiens was about to be broken by wars which eventually crushed France, and applied the torch to the capital and public buildings of the United States. In contemplation of this struggle these chief magistrates of the only republic then existing negotiated a treaty by which the United States acquired from France more territory than the people of the colonies had wrested from Great Britain by the War of the Revolution. This domain is now Louisiana, Arkansas, Iowa, all of Minnesota west of the Mississippi River, Kansas, Nebraska, the Indian Territory, part of Wyoming, Montana and Dakota.

The senator then devoted some time to a sketch of the Louisiana Purchase, and the states that have been carved from it, and made copious quotations from various reports, debates in Congress, messages of the presidents, from the beginning of the Government, forming thereby a groundwork for his argument in favor of the admission of Dakota.

At this stage of his remarks, the senator interpolated something of a reply to Senator Butler's remarks of the day before. He took up, first, the proposition which Butler had put forward making Utah a case parallel with that of Dakota in regard to the inherent right of the territory to admission. He said Utah was not to be brought into contrast with that Christian community of South Dakota. As a Congress and as a people we are bound to take notice that a hierarchy had grown up in Utah which defied all modern laws and over-rode all republican forms of government. He then took the bill for the admission of Utah, which Butler had introduced in connection with the Omnibus Bill, and showed how much more liberal its provisions were than his bill for the admission of Dakota. He said that he would attempt to answer the arguments of the senator from South Carolina to the effect that the people of the Territory of Dakota did not desire admission or division. He would show that the only protest against division had come from that unique and grotesque gathering of a few people—the Aberdeen convention. Striking the subject of Johnson, the senator sent to the clerk's desk, and had read, an extract from the Huron Democrat, a democratic paper, showing Johnson's record as a republican, and the record of the democratic party on the subject of division of Dakota, how in its various conventions they had adopted resolutions asking for the division of the territory.

The reading of the documents was evidently a surprise to the democrats, who began to smile upon Mr. Butler, and finally Butler gave way and laughed heartily at the authority which had been presented as the exponent of the wishes, not only of the democratic party, but of the people of Dakota. At the close of the reading of the documents, Senator Davis said:

This Johnson, a mugwump in the last stage of progression, having no place on the committee of the Aberdeen convention, had furnished the senator from South Carolina with all the ammunition for his argument. The convention was made up of every land agent, of every county seat speculator, and of every investor of whatever nature in the counties upon the edge of either the proposed new territory or the proposed new state. The call was an anonymous one, signed by the secretary of some alleged club, and it was made the pretext for the denunciation of the division movement.

Davis then turned to the statement made by the senator from South Carolina, that the two United States senators coming here represented but 12,000 votes for Southern Dakota. Davis pointed out the fact that in certain counties lying southeast and southwest of the Potomac River a great party had been wiped out and moved away like a summer cottage. Senator Davis then proceeded to read the election returns from several southern districts, showing the number of votes which congressmen from southern districts represented. Among others he showed that the representative from the First Arkansas district had received 6,092 votes, with no opposition. In Georgia, in the First district the representative had received 1,704 to 17 against; in the Second district the representative had received 2,411 votes, no opposition; in the Third district the representative had received 1,704 votes, with no opposition; in the Fourth district there were 2,209 votes cast, against 830 in opposition; in the Fifth district, 2,909, with no opposition; in the Sixth district, 1,722, with no opposition; in the Eighth district, 2,287, against 55 scattering; in the Ninth district, 2,455, with no opposition. In the State of Louisiana Mr. Blanchard received 1,744, with no opposition. In the Second district the representative had received 3,740, with no opposition. In the Seventh district the representative had received 4,508, with 6 scattering. The same condition of things existed in South Carolina, where the representatives had been elected by 4,000 to 5,000 votes, without opposition. And yet the senator from South Carolina has seen fit to criticize the fact that but 12,000 votes had been cast for delegates to the constitutional convention which had formed this constitution.

Enough and more than enough has been thus adduced on these questions and it stands established:

First—That the Ordinance of 1787, extended as it was after the adoption of the Federal Constitution over regions not affected by its provisions, and also re-enacted as to the territory first affected by it, has been regarded as conferring upon the people of a territory the right to adopt a constitution and to apply for admission into the Union.

Second—That the stipulations of the treaty with France have been regarded in several instances as conferring the same right, and that the treaty with Spain was so regarded in the case of Florida.

Third—That many states have formed their constitutions and have been admitted without enabling acts, and the objection that they thus proceeded was not perceived by Washington, was directly contrary to the opinion of Jackson, and was distinctly refuted by Madison, Macon, Benton, Clay, Buchanan, John Quincy Adams, and by many other statesmen less eminent.

Fourth—That the people of some of these states have thus proceeded, after repeated denials of their petitions for the passage of enabling acts.

Fifth—That in some instances the adoption of a constitution by popular vote has not been required, and that the question of boundaries has been adjusted as proposed by the present bill.

It follows from this that there never has been any consistent practice in admitting states. What other excuses remain for delaying and postponing this long delayed act of justice? This course of evasion, quibbling, pretext and denial has run so long that it has ceased to be a mere error. Never in the history of the Government has such a commonwealth knocked, and in vain, at the doors of the Union. Never has the equity of any people been so shamefully downtrodden. On account of grievances much the same, our ancestors rebelled. On account of grievances less than this, though much the same and committed by the same party, and for the same purpose, the injustice done Kansas shocked the popular conscience, and converged upon its perpetrators the condemnation of the world. On account of oppression much the same, for home government denied, for the imposition of rulers alien to the soil who govern as pro-consuls, we blame England, condole with Ireland, hold meetings, pass resolutions, and contribute money, with self-sufficient hypocrisy, while we are full of the same offense. I shall not, Mr. President, detail the history of this continuous and consistent injustice. It is known of all men.

Senator Coke, of Texas, had the floor in the morning, and spoke at length on the tariff question. Senator Turpie doubtless sympathized with the views expressed by the Texas senator in case he paid any attention, but he had equipped himself for the Dakota debate against Senator Davis, and betrayed some impatience in the long wait which was necessary for Senator Coke to fully express himself. Finally Senator Coke concluded, and Senator Turpie, of Indiana, took the floor, and then it was noticed that a score or two of senators, perhaps more, who had ensconced themselves in the cloak rooms during Mr. Coke's extended remarks, came out and filled up the vacant chairs to listen to the Indiana senator on Dakota. The galleries were also densely filled. Senator Turpie possessed a loud, strong voice. He used but few gestures and those of the simplest kind, giving emphasis to his remarks only by a downward sweep of the right hand. Senator Turpie said:

The reason for the delay in the admission of Dakota is because parties here and elsewhere had misdirected and wasted the energy of that people upon division. The objection to the admission of the territory under the Platt bill is not that proceedings were taken without previous congressional action. We may admit that the people of a territory have the right to petition that a separate portion of the territory be admitted, but the case here is where a portion of the people of a territory have petitioned Congress for the admission of that portion, and as far as historical precedent and example are concerned, the petition is utterly without right or authority. The undisputed fact that Tennessee, Michigan and Arkansas had been admitted upon a state constitution declared without previous congressional action, had been constantly repeated here. But what authority was that for the admission of this fragment of Dakota, this segment called South Dakota? Could the senators instance a case where the people of Tennessee, Arkansas and Michigan petitioned for the admission of a part of these territories as states? There was such a thing as Dakota, but South Dakota was a mere geographical description.

(Senators Platt and Spooner attempted to interrupt Senator Turpie at this point for the purpose of questioning his statement, but he declined to yield, and continuing, said:)

He would not admit that the people of an organized territory alone have the right to pass on the question of admission. The people of the whole Union, to whom the territory owes its birth, form and creation, have a right to be heard upon the policy and propriety of such admission and ultimately to consider and determine it. He then took up the assertion that division was the desire of the people of the territory, and said that as a matter of fact that had never been proposed at an election. He spoke advisedly. The cunctation of the Aberdeen convention was the undeniable expression of the people upon this subject. The senator from Minnesota (Davis) has declared it a unique, grotesque body, but he did not think so. More than two-thirds of the states admitted into the Union had been admitted after just such proceedings. There was nothing singular or extraordinary about it. On the contrary, it was one of the most regular, formal expressions of the sentiments of the people of Dakota ever made. Upon both admission and division its utterance is clear and emphatic. The people of the whole territory are against division.

The statement that the poor people could not actively participate in the new state if admitted as a whole, was untrue. The distance from any part of the territory to the capital would not exceed two hundred and fifty miles. He could remember when the region of the Sangamon and other rivers of Egypt were farther from the Illinois capital. All modern states were large. That had become the fashion. If Dakota was large, the Union was larger. Pennsylvania and New York were larger proportionately to the size of the thirteen original states, than Dakota was to the present size of the Union. Minnesota was three times as large as South Carolina, but no one had ever proposed to divide it. Superficial area did not have such a great deal to do with a state's fortune, power, influence or character. Massachusetts might not be a large state, but it had given the Union Bunker Hill, Lexington and Concord, and a poet who sang of the lands of the Dakotans. The very words of Longfellow are prophetic of this division movement—"I behold our people severed, warring with each other." Harmony, peace and unity should be restored to this great people already so prosperous—maintaining, preserving and securing the territory integrity of Dakota. Should we now, because certain spirits of discord and dissension have disagreed with respect to its future form of guidance and management, whet the knife to cut this ehild in twain? That is no remedy for the evils that have fallen upon this people. Why doesn't the senator from Connecticut stand with the senator from South Carolina as sponsors for Dakota undiminished and her borders unmarred?

Senator Cullom took the floor while the democratic senators were congratulating Senator Turpie. Senator Davis, who had occupied a seat on the democratic side, stepped forward and was the third man to warmly congratulate the senator from Indiana.

Senator Cullom's speech was a reiteration of the arguments already given in favor of the bill, but was delivered in a ringing voice and positive manner that held the attention of senators. After reciting Dakota's claim to statehood, he entered into a comparison of her growth and resources with those of many states of the Union.

He made a strong argument in reply to Senator Butler's statement that the two senators to be placed upon the floor of the Senate would represent but 12,000 votes, those cast for delegates to the constitutional convention. He said the senator from South Carolina himself must know that a simple vote of that kind would attract but very few people, and that unless some exciting contest were on, voters would not turn out. He then compared the vote with that of southern states in contests for congressmen. Continuing, he read from the Washington Post an editorial showing that the opposition of the democratic party in Congress to the admission of Dakota was purely a matter of expediency to keep from changing the presidential electoral vote until after the next presidential election. He warned the democrats that the fight of the last electoral college would be changed, however, and with the votes of the honest states now in the Union.

"The senator, as a presidential candidate, would not be willing to renounce those votes if they were at hand, nor, I think, would the candidate from Vermont," said Senator Butler.

"I should be mighty glad to have them," replied Senator Cullom.

"I shall have nothing to say on that subject myself," replied Senator Edmunds, while a blush suffused his face.

Senator Cullom concluded with a strong protest against the democratic treatment of Dakota.

Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin, obtained the floor to speak in favor of the Platt bill, but the Senate proceeded to executive business, and then adjourned until Monday.

It was now quite evident that the division and admission of Dakota and the presidential election had become so connected that Dakota's affairs were to be treated from a national party or political standpoint. It had become a party question and could not be considered on its merits. Dakota had opened the door to a discussion that reached across the Union, east and west, north and south, and instances of party injustice were to be brought again to light for the instruction of the new generation that was to elect a President in 1888.

Senator Vest, of Missouri, who had been an anti-admissionist and divisionist from the earlier stages of Dakota's efforts to get into the Union, was one of the opposing speakers at this time. He had opposed Dakota back in 1882, and had not changed his opinions. He did not bring out any new features. Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, interrupted frequently and there was a running fire of questioning and answers between the two that interested the Senate but added nothing to the sum total of argument for or against Dakota. Whatever might happen, it was not generally expected that Dakota would be admitted at this session, the House being democratic and opposed to any more states before the national election.

Senator Vest made his best points when he called attention to the objection of Senator Hale, of Maine, to the admission of the territory in 1882, on account of the Yankton bond affair, as he read extracts from Senator Hale's speech at that time to show how the republican party had fought for two years and obstructed the admission of the territory. He said that after the objection of the senator from Maine, the bonds were paid in full by Yankton. He objected to this method of making the United States Senate a collecting agency. He read a statement to show that the percentage of the votes cast south was fully as great as in the north, making the peculiar mistake of taking the population from the census of 1880, and the number of voters from the election returns of 1884. Senator Edmunds called the speaker to account upon the statement that Dakota had intended any defiance to Congress in adopting her state constitution and memorializing that body for admission. Senator Edmunds said the people of Dakota had not by word nor deed asserted that they were a state without the sanction of Congress.

At the close of Mr. Vest's speech there appeared no disposition to debate the bill further, and the presiding officer put the question on the amendment by Butler, which was the Springer bill. It happened that there were but few republicans in the Senate chamber, and on a division the democrats carried it, Voorhees voting with them. Before the vote was announced, however, Senator Dolph called for the yeas and nays, and Edmunds again said he would like to speak on the bill. Senators Coke and Platt said that they would like to speak on the bill, so the vote on the amendment was declared off, and it was agreed that the bill should come to a vote on the 10th.

Senator Sherman, of Ohio, spoke on the 18th. Opening his speech, he said:

Why should not South Dakota be admitted? In the name of heaven, why? Simply because the democratic party did not want that state to be admitted? There is no use in going behind that. The democrats had the power and had prevented it. The people of Dakota were suffering all inconveniences of that state of things. They complained of it. Dakota would be kept out, notwithstanding all these complaints, until some other democratic state, less entitled, should be attached to it, and hauled in at its skirts. Messrs. Davis, Platt and Spooner might expend their learning and eloquence and reasoning, but what they said would fall as impassive and unimpressive on the democratic party as if they spoke to the icy winds of the North Pole. There was no use therefore in wasting argument about it.

Mr. Sherman and Mr. Vest then became involved in a question over the election of President Hayes and the Louisiana returning board, and when that colloquy was ended, Senator Allison, of Iowa, took the floor and talked fifteen minutes on the Dakota question. He said:

Dakota is doing now just what Iowa had done previous to her admission. Iowa Territory had extended to far beyond the Missouri River and northward into a portion of Minnesota. Congress had adopted an enabling act for her boundaries. It was intended to restrict her northern boundaries to a certain extent, and to cut her off so that she should not have the Missouri River upon the western boundary. The people of Iowa rejected this enabling act and refused to accept any part or parcel of it. Iowa fixed her own boundaries, adopted a state constitution, elected state officers, and came here demanding admission, and she was admitted, which is exactly what Dakota has done today. No objection was made to Iowa at that time and he could see nothing but party policy in the objections being made against Dakota. At the time Iowa was admitted, Florida, a slave state, was also admitted, although she had not enough population to entitle her to a member of Congress. The senator from Missouri has said this was a political question. It certainly was a political, a party question, and the democratic party had made it so. They had drawn their lines closely upon it and their policy was one of inaction. They were not in favor of the admission of Dakota.

Mr. Vest here interrupted Mr. Allison to say that he would be willing to guarantee from his own personal knowledge of the opinions of the senators on his side that not one of them would refuse to vote for the admission of Dakota.

Mr. Allison replied:

We could not judge parties by any individual utterances or any individual action, but they must be judged by the action of the party as a whole in both houses of Congress. He was satisfied that there was no disposition to admit Dakota. The Omnibus Bill, which had been reported in the other House for the admission of Washington, Montana, New Mexico and Dakota, was a piece of political legerdemain. The democratic party had for four years past sat down upon Dakota. They will juggle along with this question until after the election of 1888, and then if political expediency demands it they will carry it along for another eight years. They promised in 1884 that if Dakota was kept out of the Union until after the next presidential election, so that she could not interfere with the electoral votes as they then stood, that she should receive immediate attention. They have failed to give her any relief. He would hesitate for a long time to vote for the admission of Dakota as one state. Large states were not needed. He did not believe that a great agricultural country, which Dakota was and must ever remain, should be admitted as one state.

Senator Manderson drew his attention to the fact that it had usually been the practice in the West to cut agricultural regions in small tracts, and that states the size of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Minnesota had been considered large enough for a great state.

Mr. Allison continued:

The agricultural interest in this country is its greatest interest, and the Territory of Dakota is the garden of the agricultural interest. He drew attention to the enormous wheat product of the country, and said that with this country we could make it impossible for India to compete with us in the wheat markets of the world. He inquired if we should, for mere party advantage, stifle the growing agricultural section and block the march of progress of the great and growing agricultural and commercial interests in the Northwest. He stood ready to vote for South Dakota today, and the admission of North Dakota tomorrow.

Senator Butler then took the floor to reply to some of the insinuations that had been made against the South. From this the Senate branched off into a political discussion that had nothing to do with Dakota. Senator Call made a constitutional speech. Then Sherman and Vest locked horns over Hayes' election, and Senator Hoar explained something about the Louisiana returning board. Senator Platt then made the closing speech of the debate, and said:

I had hoped to keep politics out of the debate on the Dakota bill. Inasmuch as it has crept in, however, and southern senators were complaining of carpet-bag government, he would ask them to join hands with him and help to relieve Dakota of a carpet-bag government far more obnoxious than any from which the South has suffered. Southern senators had pleaded for a "white man's government." Let them give Dakota a white man's government.

He lashed the democratic party for contending in the Senate that it would vote for a Dakota bill, while the majority in the House, which shaped the policy of the democratic party, showed conclusively that it was opposed to admitting Dakota. The edict had gone forth that so long as Dakota should fail to elect a democratic Legislature, and thus insure two democratic senators, she must stay out of the Union. But this year we should appeal to the people, and we would assure Dakota that she would not have long to wait. Senator Platt paid his respects to the Aberdeen convention. He exposed Johnson's pretension to being a pure patriot, a non-partisan believer in Dakota's welfare, and showed exactly the motives which actuated the one state party. He said one might as well call Falstaff and his ragged followers an army, as to call Johnson and the Aberdeen assembly a convention. He read a great many affidavits to show the shallow foundation upon which this convention was based. The absurdity of the whole scheme was shown so thoroughly that Edmunds and other senators laughed heartily.

Senator Butler interrupted to inquire, with satire in his voice:

"Did this election occur in the North such chicanery?"

"Yes," replied Edmunds, "and the same old democratic party was responsible for it."

"It was not an election," said Platt, "and is worthy of no name."

Platt closed with another statement of the hopeless nature of the case so long as it was in the hands of the democratic party, and made a strong appeal that Dakota be given justice.

A vote was then taken on Butler's substitute (the Springer bill). It was voted down by a purely party vote, 23 yeas to 20 nays.

The Senate bill (Platt's) was then passed by a vote of 20 for, to 23 against, a purely party vote, also.

Judge A. J. Edgerton addressed the following open letter to Sen. M. C. Butler, of South Carolina, in answer to the latter's attack upon him during the Dakota debate in the Senate:

Mitchell, Dakota Territory, April 13, 1888.

To Hon. M. C. BUTLER, United States Senate.

Sir: This week the country has witnessed a most remarkable spectacle. A United States senator, upon the floor of the Senate, attempts to divert public attention from a question in which the rights of great commonwealths are concerned—a question in which the honor of government is involved, by arraigning before that body the character and motives of a private citizen whose only offense is that he believes in the Constitution as interpreted by the fathers of the republic. One would imagine that a senator from South Carolina, actuated by the traditional aristocratic notions which pervade the people of that state, would ignore the criticisms of one of the mud-sills of society.

Possibly it would be wiser for me to take no notice of your mendacious assault, and I should not, but the character of the tribunal before which it was made and the flimsy excuse you now offer for denying justice to Dakota, renders an answer imperative.

You must remember the different circumstances which surrounded us. I was, at the time you complain of, addressing citizens of South Dakota upon a question of great interest to them. They believed they had been deeply wronged and were indignant. I had counseled all the time patience, and was charged with extreme conservatism. Under such circumstances I should be pardoned for using language that a United States senator, before that august body, in a carefully prepared speech to go to the world and to be preserved among the archives of the nation, could not be excused for. Under such circumstances, for you not to be disinterested was a crime, and for me not to be disinterested was treason. Your first charge is that because you were personally courteous to me a year ago, in your attack on Dakota, therefore I was guilty of hypercisy in criticizing your attitude before the people towards the people.

But few men in this great commonwealth, Mr. Butler, can be seduced from their loyalty to right by weak compliments and diluted taffy. You are offended because I alluded to you in common with many good and wise public men. I said then and there that you were honest, brave and chivalric, with a proud and historic name. For this I am arraigned by you.

I am always willing to rectify an error so far as I can. I admit that I was mistaken—that you are no such man, and after the exhibition you have made this week I promise you I will never again be guilty of such an offense. You take offense at my expression that "Some men have forgotten nothing and learned nothing by the war." If any evidence was wanting of the truth of this assertion, it is conclusively furnished by your unmanly trade. Every sentence of that portion of your speech smacks of the plantation. The crack of the overseer's whip is heard as of old. Many senators from your side of the Senate chamber, although differing from us widely on this question, we esteem and honor. Their votes are controlled by a mistaken idea, but we believe them, nevertheless, to be actuated by patriotism. Not so with you. You have compared Dakota to Texas and recommended that our people emulate that great empire. In alluding to this suggestion, I said "Cities of Dakota were the outgrowths of different civilizations—that our people came largely from New England and the middle states, from small or medium sized commonwealths, and the reverse was the case with the first settlers of Texas, and that consequently their ideas of government and empire were different." This was the sum and substance of my offending.

The man who denies these propositions, Mr. Butler, is sadly and stupidly ignorant of American history. I had been taught that no man who held a public office could claim an exemption from a fair and just criticism. This has been the doctrine in this latitude. You had not only attempted to deny justice to this people in the halls of Congress, but also to dictate to us outside of Congress what course would best conduce to our interest and welfare. And because I had advised our people to reject these counsels, I am made the subject of your venomous assault. I have no right to complain. You have more bitterly assaulted the character of the best men of America, both among the living and the dead.

Let us see by what right you arrogate to yourself such powers. Outside of South Carolina the people know but little about you. Your first claim to notice is that you are a kinsman of Preston S. Brooks, who exhibited on the floor of the United States Senate, nearly thirty years ago, in attacking Senator Sumner for criticising your uncle, the same magnificent courage that inspired you. Your next claim, and the one which secured you a seat in the Senate, is that brilliant and chivalrous attack of yours upon a band of unarmed colored men at Hamburg, who in your state dared to meet as American citizens and discuss the political issues of the day.

Is it a wonder, General Butler, that the people of Dakota should be dismayed in the presence of such a foe-man?

You again criticise my assertion that the people of this territory brought with them from their eastern homes the Bible and the spelling book. But let me assure you, notwithstanding your sneers at the teaching of the Bible, were it not for the fact that the Union men of the North were actuated by that charity which is found inculcated in that book, you, today, would be serving the Government in a different sphere than the United States Senate.

I am only a private citizen in this great republic, for the establishment of which my forefathers fought, and for the maintenance of which their descendants contended against you and your followers. I hold no office, and want none. But if I did ask the suffrages of the intelligent and loyal people of the North, you could do me no greater favor than such exhibitions of your opposition as you have evinced this week. I close this letter, General Butler, by using an illustration drawn from your own chaste and classic rhetoric: "I pray God I may never merit the commendation of men whose lives have been characterized by such acts and principles as yours."

A. J. EDGERTON.

Commenting on the foregoing letter of Judge Edgerton to Senator Butler, the Grand Forks Herald took occasion to say:

The advocates of division and two states have presented an unbroken and unimpeachable line of precedents to warrant their proposed admission of North and South Dakota. Their case was very materially strengthened by the remarks of Senator Butler in opposition to the Platt bill. It is altogether too late in the discussion for Butler or any other man to resort to lying to defeat the admission of Dakota. The question has long since become a national one, and Butler is simply so much of a Bourbon that he doesn't know that other people discern his stupid and blind prejudice. He is doing good work for division and admission, besides furnishing excellent campaign material for the republicans. Weak, indeed, is the case against Dakota, when its enemies stoop to vilify such a man as Judge A. J. Edgerton. Senator Butler asks, if South Dakota is admitted with her constitution as it is, what is to prevent 100,000 socialists, nihilists and communists taking refuge in some corner of a territory and proceeding to frame a constitution and state government, and demanding to be admitted as a state?

How do you like that, citizens of Dakota? The hero of the Edgefield massacre is evidently out of ammunition and he descends to the vilest vituperation of the worthiest people in the Union, for want of anything to say in answer to the showing made by the Senate Territorial Committee.

Senator Spooner, in the course of an able speech supporting Dakota's claims for statehood, said:

But aside from the general interest which invests this subject, involving as it does important considerations, present and pertinent to the Union, and involving also justice or gross injustice to the people of South Dakota, I have peculiar reasons for an intense interest in the fortunes of the people.

It is a little less than twenty-three years since I marched as a soldier over several hundred miles of that territory, and remained many months in the service within its boundaries. At that day, north of Yankton, no herds grazed upon its plains except herds of buffalo and antelope, and one traveling hundreds of miles saw no human habitation save the rude forts of the Government and the lodges and villages of the Sioux Indians.

This contest for the admission of Dakota and the other territories assumed national importance in ways not directly affecting the territories interested in admission, but bringing forward into the arena of politics vitally important national subjects, affecting the growth of the membership of Congress, and with this it was discovered that the membership of the Senate would almost reach its maximum with the admission of the territories now in line for statehood, the only territorial government left being Utah. At the most, in accordance with authentic estimate, the Senate could not in the aggregate have more than a hundred members, while the House would be added to after every decennial census. It was felt that this situation presaged an overweening influence for the Senate unless some means could be found of keeping the balance more evenly between the Senate and House. It was claimed at this time that the United States Senate was the most powerful legislative body in the world. Its membership was then seventy-six, and were all of the eight territories then existing admitted to the Union, there would still be less than a hundred senators. Oklahoma was still out, and the division of Dakota would make the number stated, and there would be no more until Alaska furnished them. In the meantime the House membership will continue to grow. After the census of 1880 the number of representatives was increased from 203 to 325. Another apportionment would be made after the census of 1890, and with the admission of the states then knocking at the door of the Union, the membership of the House, it was estimated, would be increased to 350. Senator Platt, though a New England senator, was impressed with this idea and influenced by it in his prejudice in favor of more states that there might be a corresponding increase in the Senate, and Congressman Ben Tillman, who has gained some fame and much notoriety for his radical utterances, was the first of the southern democrats to lift up his voice in favor of a larger Senate. In an interview at this time he declared his position to be this:

There are more than 500 members of the English House of Commons, while the House of Lords, known as the most aristocratic body in the world, has a membership of 670. Here in free America our House of Commons embraces but 325 members, while our Senate, which corresponds in a sense to the House of Lords, has but 77. We ought to have at least 600 representatives, and no less than 300 senators. Our National Legislature is not keeping pace with our growing population. Our representation in Congress is little more than it was when our population was little more than half its present dimensions. It is no wonder we hear so much about corporate influence in the Senate. Where only two members are elected from each state it is easy for the great corporations to elect whomsoever they choose. Given a greater representation in the Senate, increase the present proportions four times, and the result can but be helpful to the interests of the people. I see, however, no way by which this can be done, and for that reason I shall favor, whenever it is practicable, the admission of all the new states possible. In my judgment Dakota ought to be divided into four equal parts, and each admitted as a state. I know this is contrary to the wishes of my party, which favors Dakota's admission as a whole, but in this case I shall put principle above party and vote for what I believe to be the best interests of the people.

A table showing the amounts, in dollars, expended for education the past fiscal year in Dakota and in fifteen southern states, all of which opposed Dakota's admission as a state:

Dakota	$1,917,258	Texas	$1,001,474
Louisiana	450,080	Florida	335,084
Virginia	1,424,532	Mississippi	872,820
Delaware	215,161	Arkansas	501,745
West Virginia	591,331	Alabama	538,050
South Carolina	428,410	Kentucky	700,700
Georgia	653,300	Maryland	1,745,208
Tennessee	1,012,464	North Carolina	515,205

Vermont, when admitted into the Union, had a population of 85,425; Kentucky, 61,247; Tennessee, 60,000; Ohio, 75,000; Louisiana, 41,000; Indiana, 63,000; Alabama, 45,000; Illinois, 34,000; Missouri, 50,000; Arkansas, 33,000; Michigan, 71,000; Florida, 31,000; Texas, 100,000; Iowa, 78,919; Wisconsin, 123,000; California, 92,307; Minnesota, 87,000; Oregon, 52,000; Kansas, 107,000; Nevada, 40,000; Colorado, 97,000. It was understood, though, there was no law governing the matter, that a territory to be entitled to admission as a state, should have sufficient population to entitle it to one member of Congress according to the last apportionment made under the federal census. This rule, however, had been ignored in a number of instances, but Dakota did not ask any indulgence on this account. The apportionment of congressmen made on the census returns of 1880 had been fixed at one member for each 134,000 of population or the major fraction of that number, and according to Superintendent Beadle's census of 1882, the southern half of Dakota below the 46th parallel had 125,000, and had gained at least forty thousand during 1882 and the first half of 1883.

THE BEST POINT MADE BY EDMUNDS.

During this general debate in the Senate over the bill admitting Dakota to the Union, the question of the powers of Congress was said to have been more ably discussed than at any previous debate in the history of Congress on this subject. It was pretty generally settled that the constitution designed to leave the methods of preparing for admission to the Union to the people of the territories, and that the people interested would see to it that all the preparatory steps should be orderly, dignified and lawful. Subsequent legislation by Congress had fixed the minimum of population in the territory at 60,000 and the constitution they framed and presented must be republican in form. The reader has seen what methods precedents had established, and in what respects they varied, but they had been acquiesced in by Congress in the admission of the states, which in each case ended the matter. But there was one point, and an important one, that had played no part in the long and exhaustive discussions, until this Dakota case brought it out, and that was the duty of the citizens of a territory possessing the requisite qualifications for statehood. This was set forth by Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, when he said: "It is not only the duty of Congress to admit new states, but it is the duty of the people of the territories, when possessing the requisite conditions, to form a constitution, and fix a seat of government, and apply for admission." Judge Edmunds was regarded in that day as one of the ablest interpreters of the constitution of our country, as well as one of the wisest of our statesmen.

CHAPTER CXII

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION OF 1888

SENATOR HARRISON ON THE OUTLOOK—SENATOR HEARST, OF CALIFORNIA—DELEGATE GIFFORD'S STATEMENT—MR. SPRINGER AT THE OPENING OF CONGRESS, DECEMBER, 1887—A TWO-STATE CONVENTION IN DAKOTA, MAY, 1888—THE NATIONAL CONVENTIONS—PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS—CLEVELAND AND THURMAN, DEMOCRATIC NOMINEES—HARRISON AND MORTON, REPUBLICAN NOMINEES—A FOURTH OF JULY ORATION—ROBERT J. GAMBLE'S ADDRESS—HARRISON SPEAKS FOR DAKOTA—THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN PLATFORM SPEAKS FOR DAKOTA—HARRISON AND MORTON ELECTED—NEW YORK INDEPENDENT COMES TO THE RESCUE—HARRISON AND M'KINLEY INTERVIEW—IN CONGRESS AFTER ELECTION—MR. SPRINGER'S FIRST OMNIBUS BILL IN CAUCUS—SPRINGER, COX AND GIFFORD BEFORE THE HOUSE.

Hon. Benjamin Harrison, United States senator from Indiana, and leader of the forces in Congress who were working for the admission of South Dakota to the Union, stated in November, 1887, just before the assembling of Congress, as follows:

I don't think there is any prospect for the admission of any of the territories before the presidential election of 1888. Montana has, I think, a population sufficient to warrant her admission, and there can be no doubt of the right of the people of Washington Territory to admission. But the democrats in the House are determined to control the Government at any cost, and they will not consent to the admission of any new territory which might by any probability cast its electoral vote for the republican ticket. It is another indication of the methods employed by the party now in power to maintain control of the Government. By the suppression of the colored vote in the South and the German methods in Maryland, they are enabled to keep things in their own hands, and it is probable that they will continue to do so as long as they can.

Previous to the election in 1884 I prepared a bill for the admission of Dakota with a proviso that a constitutional convention should not be held until after the presidential election of that year. I hoped that this provision would serve to set at rest the opposition that might be raised to immediate admission, but the hope was in vain. The democrats would not consent to the admission on any terms, and I do not think the prospects are much better now. It is of course possible that there may be some change for the better in the outlook before the close of the Fiftieth Congress.

The only change that was likely to occur was the election of a republican President in 1888.

Hon. George Hearst, the principal owner of the Homestake gold mine in the Black Hills, was a senator of the United States from California in 1888, and a democrat. He was said to be warming in favor of dividing Dakota Territory and making two states, but party fealty held him to a passive support of the democratic program.

GIFFORD'S REVIEW

Hon. O. S. Gifford appeared before the Committee on Territories of the House of Representatives early in February, 1888, and made a statement in support of the two measures he had introduced to provide for the admission into the Union of North Dakota and South Dakota. His statement exhibits the conditions in the territory when near the end of its territorial career, and in many other features is entitled to a place in the historical records of Dakota. The statement on all matters of fact is entitled to the fullest credit, and is hereto appended:

The proposition I have to present to the Committee on Territories contemplates the formation and admission of two states from the present Territory of Dakota, to be named respectively North and South Dakota, the dividing line to be east and west upon the 7th standard parallel of said territory, and will make the states nearly equal in size. The proposed states would contain very nearly seventy-five thousand square miles each, and each state would be exceeded in area by only seven states, namely: California, Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota, Nevada, Oregon and Texas. Each state would exceed in size all of New England, with New Jersey added. I think, without doubt, all unbiased and informed minds upon this subject will agree that the treatment Dakota has received from the hands of Congress, regarding this matter of statehood, is without parallel in our history in its neglect and injustice, and it is sincerely hoped will not be repeated toward any other territory.

I desire now to give the committee some facts, all of which are well authenticated, regarding this question, upon which our claims for self-government are based.

First, as to population, wealth and material prosperity. The area of each of the proposed states has been given, and I will only add that the country is eminently an agricultural country, and as capable of supporting a dense population as any of the states adjoining us—Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa or Nebraska. The number of farms in Dakota in 1885 was 50,237 in the south half, and 31,781 in the north, of the average size. The crop reports of 1887 show that we raised 60,000,000 bushels of wheat and 25,000,000 bushels of corn, while hundreds of thousands of horses and cattle graze on our boundless and fertile prairies. In the matter of live stock we have more cattle than any one of 21 states, more horses than any one of 20 states, more swine than any one of 14 states, more sheep than any one of 12 states. In the matter of banking institutions we have 62 national and 237 private banks. We have more banks than either one of 28 states, including Indiana, Connecticut, California, Kentucky, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Texas or Colorado. We have more than the 8 states of North Carolina, West Virginia, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Delaware and Nevada, combined. And more than twice the number credited to Maine, New Jersey, New Hampshire or Maryland; nearly three times as many as Georgia, Virginia, Colorado or Tennessee, combined, and more than the states of Vermont, Oregon and all the territories put together. In the matter of railways, we have nearly 4,500 miles of completed railroad in Dakota, and more than is contained in any one of 25 states of the Union that could be named.

We have nearly 4,000 schoolhouses, with about 5,000 teachers, and expended in 1887 nearly $1,750,000 for school purposes, the proceeds of taxes raised by the people, or more than was expended by any one of 22 states in 1885.

We have two territorial universities, three normal schools (territorial), an agricultural college, besides a school of mines, and one for deaf mutes, and also a very large number of sectarian colleges and academies belonging to different religious denominations.

It must be remembered that the proposed State of North Dakota contains at least 240,000 people, and South Dakota 360,000, and that each of the proposed states contains a like proportion of the material wealth and educational advantages possessed by the whole territory.

Dakota today is a territory only in name. In every condition and as a fact it is a mere colony or province, as completely as was ever attached to the British Empire, a condition of affairs never intended or contemplated by the founders of this Government, and is most repugnant to the spirit of our institutions. The government which is provided for the territories of the United States is almost identical with that which was extended by England over her colonies a century and a half ago, and against which the fathers of this republic so successfully rebelled. It may be stated as a broad proposition, regarding the admission of new states, when the proposed territory and its people come within the requirements imposed by the Constitution, spirit and policy of our Government, it is entitled as a matter of right to admission into the Union of States. Especially is this true in the case of Dakota, which claims that right by virtue of solemn treaty obligations and by the terms of the Ordinance of 1787, which, by repeated enactments of Congress, have been extended to include our territory. Whatever views may be entertained by the committee regarding a strict construction of the treaty of Louisiana and the Ordinance of 1787, it certainly will strike the average mind that Congress is under an "imperious moral obligation" to admit both North and South Dakota as states into the Union, if the conditions as to area, production, capacity, population, good disposition towards the Government and institutions of the country are found to exist.

What excuse, then, is there for denying Dakota admission into the Union as a state? What impediment stands in the way? Why is not immediate and prompt action taken? Why the hope long deferred? Why this unreasonable delay? Is it strange, in view of all these facts, that our people have become impatient over this long delay and with the injustice and neglect they have received?

Regarding the proposition of the division of the territory and admission of two states from Dakota, I desire to say concerning the bill for admission of North Dakota that the people there have heretofore taken no action looking toward statehood, and have not even asked for admission, simply because they were willing that the people of South Dakota should precede them into the Union. But these people having largely outgrown their territorial condition, have also grown impatient with this unsatisfactory and miserable territorial form of government, and are now demanding admission, and in the name of justice, humanity and freedom and in accordance with the spirit and policy of our Government they are entitled to it. It has ever been a cherished object with a majority of the people of Dakota that a division thereof should ultimately be secured, and this without doubt is their desire today. Various resolutions have been passed by the Territorial Legislature praying for division, and in the matter of the location of public institutions the ultimate division of Dakota has been kept in view. The political division of Dakota into north and south is as distinctive as possible. These terms are used with us as common, and are as necessary as the terms of North and South Carolina are used in their respective states. Our people desire division because they believe that a better and more economical government can be secured in a state of medium size than can possibly be realized in so large, unwieldy and populous a state as Dakota would be if admitted as one state.

The best possible data that can be secured regarding state expenses shows that small and medium states can be more economically managed per capita than large ones. This has not been a matter with us of the mere isolation of the people of the two sections of the territory from each other. The foundation of our whole political structure has been laid with a view of division, because we realized the fact that it is more for coming generations than for ourselves that states are built, and I verily believe, whatever may be the fate of our division movement in Dakota, posterity will insist, as the result of sad experience, and when too late to be remedied, that sound government in a state of moderate size is far better than glory and lavish expenditure in a state of great area.

In regard to the Aberdeen convention recently held, it is entitled to the consideration which might be given to the opinions of a like number of people who may assemble anywhere at any time from neighboring towns, with a few from distant parts of the territory, and to no more consideration. The original call for the convention was an anonymous call, not signed by anybody, or perhaps by one person who purported to act as secretary of something. I will say in regard to this convention, no doubt it was composed of respectable people, and no doubt the opinions of those respectable people are entitled to weight, but I ask this committee in all seriousness if it is not strange, judging from these proceedings, looking at them carefully, that the 995 delegates provided for in that call dwindled down to, I think, 270 who personally attended that convention, and the number of delegates who were selected to present this memorial to the house has dwindled down to one.

I have here a telegram from a very strong divisionist in the territory. I have no authority to divulge his name, but he telegraphs: "The call was for 995 delegates; actually present, 270. Three hundred and thirty proxies were voted, 305 failed to turn up either by actual delegates or proxies." I may say further in regard to this matter as to the attendance these delegates were generally selected by mass meeting county conventions. Well, now I have received information from all over the territory I will not lumber up the records of the committee by presenting them—that the number of citizens who actually attended these county conventions would not aggregate a greater number than is included in the number of delegates provided for in the call of the convention. Counting every man, woman and child who attended the county conventions in the territory would not exceed that of the delegates to be selected.

I wish to say further in regard to the desires of that people for division that each political party, up to the last democratic convention held in the territory in 1889, placed itself squarely on record in favor of division as far as there was any expression at all. In 1884 the democratic convention which assembled at Sioux Falls stated "that we favor the division of the territory on the 7th standard parallel." This was in the platform of the democratic party of the territory in 1884. At the last democratic convention that was held a very strong appeal was made that this proposition of division might be submitted to a vote of the people of the territory. I might add, sub rosa, perhaps, that the nominee of that convention was an intense divisionist, and it was so understood at the time he was nominated.

Now, in regard to the vote of last fall, it can all be explained in a few words—why there was such a small vote cast, and small majority given. Here is a clipping from an anti-division newspaper, which was published January 13, 1888, which says: "The truth is, there are many who want statehood the quickest way possible—more anxious for statehood than for division. Undoubtedly the majority of the people of the territory desire division, but only a minority favor division or nothing. Let us have statehood in some form at once."

That expresses in a nutshell the true condition of affairs in North Dakota. Those people in North Dakota who cast a majority vote against the proposition for division understood that they could not possibly secure admission except they to be admitted as a whole. They had understood that, in many cases, for some time but if they understood today they could secure admission speedily with division they would feel it worth while and by a vast majority. They understood well the opposition and impediment existing to secure admission as a state, and those people in North Dakota had become so disgusted and tired with a territorial form of government that they voted against division because they thought this was the only way into the Union speedily.

It is proper also for me to say a word in reference to the bill introduced by Mr. Springer, the chairman of the committee. In the present condition of this question I not only place it upon the ground that the bill does not provide for the division of the territory, but because I think it contains unusual and unjust provisions never before incorporated in an enabling act, and also because it contains no provision whatever for the admission of Dakota, even if we were to comply with the provisions of the act. Regarding its details, our people want no minority representation. They have once at least voted the proposition down by a popular vote. They do not want, under any circumstances, to have the convention which frames the organic law of the future state to interfere and intermeddle with county seats and county lines. They at least want the privilege also of making their own congressional districts in the first instance. And if the admission as a whole is forced upon us we ought in justice to be admitted upon proclamation of the President, after we have complied with the conditions of the enabling act, as all states have been admitted in later times.

Why should Dakota be compelled to await another act of Congress before being received into the union of states and run the gauntlet, perhaps, of partisan and political objection?

Whatever the fate of this division movement may be, we believe that it is for the best interests of this people that it be divided; we believe that they will secure a better and more economical government by being divided into two states. I do not say they are so different and inimical in interest to each other, but I do say they are isolated. I do say that the difficulties of people meeting and views being interchanged between different portions of this vast country are detrimental to the true interests of the people irrespective of parties. We are making a state for all future time—not for ourselves, but for posterity. It is not a question of parties, it is a question that affects the future really more than the present. We are legislating for those who are to come after us—we are looking to the future for hundreds, and, we trust, thousands of years.

A YEAR OF CONVENTIONS

The passage of the Platt bill by the Senate, and the Springer omnibus bill by the House, the former giving South Dakota statehood, and the latter being an enabling act of a questionable character for Dakota as one state, and the same bill covering Montana, New Mexico and Washington, was the sum total of congressional action, affecting those questions, during the session of Congress of 1887-88. Congress acted in April, and this action was looked upon in Dakota as equivalent to an official notice that the territory could expect nothing further from that source during the session.

Because of the presidential election, which was pending, it was deemed judicious that Dakota should keep her division and statehood questions before the people of the United States for the influence they might have upon the national canvass, and more than all for their effect upon the voters of the congressional districts who were asked to elect representatives who would favor two states in Dakota. In pursuance of this plan a statehood and division convention for the entire territory was called to meet at Huron on the 10th of July, 1888, to take such steps as wisdom should dictate in furtherance of these purposes.

And supplementary to this general call, the farmers and business men united in a call for a convention of their crafts. The editors also called a convention. The attorneys joined in making a call. And the clergy issued an invitation for an assembly of their profession. All these bodies were to assemble at Huron during the session of the general convention, and all citizens of the territory were invited to attend.

The proceedings in Congress connected with Dakota's statehood and division, and the course of political events in the territory, had apparently served to increase and strengthen both the division and statehood sentiment. It was felt that Congressman Springer's policy had been definitely agreed upon by the democratic party in Congress, and was intended as a subterfuge. The design was not to change the status of Dakota but as the Dakota question could not be kept out of sight, and to show the people of the country that the democratic party was not unmindful of the territory's welfare, Springer presented a measure that he knew would fail of adoption. It was in effect the same policy that Governor

Ordway adopted during his term as governor—a policy that favored the very course which it was well known the people would not endorse. Still, it afforded its promoters a pretext for claiming that they favored Dakota's division and admission.

It seemed that the national leaders of the democratic party had concluded that the safest plan to adopt, one that would least jeopardize democratic success in the nation, was to keep Dakota out of the Union. This was charged in the memorable debate preceding the passage of the Platt bill.

Therefore the result of the pending national election was looked forward to by Dakotans with unusual interest, and the election of a republican House of Representatives enlisted even a greater interest than the presidency, it having been observed that for three successive sessions of Congress, the democrats in control of the House had refused to answer the lawful and reasonable requests of Dakota, and it was also understood that there was no way by which Dakota could be extricated from its dependent condition except through favorable action by Congress.

CONGRESS STATE MAKING.

It was apparent early in the session beginning in December, 1887, that the preliminary work of state making was to be the chief employment of the members during the session. Heretofore Dakota had been the only territory urgently demanding admission and two or three bills were early introduced providing for statehood either as a whole or divided. To Dakota was now added Wyoming, and there was another bill presented for the admission of Montana, and also for Washington. Not so much was said about New Mexico, there being objection by members of both parties to admitting that territory, owing to the illiterate character of a large proportion of her population, but Mr. Springer was urging it and Gov. Edmund G. Ross, who had been opposed to statehood, was now in Washington, and declared that he had recently changed his opinion. All this was brewing even before Mr. Springer had got his first omnibus bill in satisfactory shape—the measure providing for the admission of Dakota as one state.

Concerning the situation at the national capital, ex-Delegate Pettigrew, who was there working for the Dakota measures including the Sioux reservation bill, said:

Springer is determined to defeat Dakota's admission of any sort or kind either as a whole or divided. There is little question that his original measure of admission as a whole would have passed the Senate, as five republican senators were found to favor it. And when Springer discovered this he at once substituted the omnibus measure, by which Dakota would be weighted down by New Mexico—a territory which he knew would not be admitted by the Senate.

About this time, March 20th, Governor Church, who was leading the one-state forces in Dakota, issued an arbor day proclamation, and brought upon himself much good natured criticism because he designated two arbor days, one for South Dakota on April 25th, and one for North Dakota on May 5th. It was said that a territory that needed two arbor days, and two of everything else, was badly in need of two governors.

The Pratt bill for the admission of Dakota as a state had passed the Senate in the spring, and had been since pending in the House. It was quite satisfactory to the people of Dakota. It provided for division, and recognized the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885, but because it changed the name of the state from "Dakota" as it was in the Sioux Falls constitution, and also changed the boundaries by making the dividing line the forty-seventh standard parallel instead of the forty-sixth parallel of latitude, it would require another vote of the people to ratify these changes, hence the Senate bill provided for an election for that purpose to be held August 28, 1888.

EVERYBODY'S TWO-STATE CONVENTION

The division question assumed a new and serious phase in 1888, growing out of the anti-division convention held at Aberdeen, the active and untiring anti-division work of Governor Church, the zealous interference of Congressman Springer as shown by his letter presented to the Aberdeen convention, and the remarkable debate in the Senate of the United States on the Platt admission and division bill.

As the matter was viewed within the territory, there was serious apprehension that the Church democratic plan would be greatly strengthened should Mr. Cleveland be reelected President and a democratic House of Representatives chosen, as would probably be the case, as the successful President usually carried the House with him. This result meant either a virtual acceptance of the democratic plan, or four more years of the administration of Governor Church and the territorial government. It was therefore deemed prudent and advisable that a division and two-state convention be held, to counteract the effect of these active and persistent efforts of the one-state faction. With this end in view the following call for a territorial non-partisan convention was promulgated on the 26th of May, calling such a delegate convention to meet at Huron, July 10th, to-wit:

Headquarters Division and Statehood Central Committee,
Yankton, Dakota Territory, May 26, 1888.

To the Friends of Division and Two States in North and South Dakota:

The undersigned were appointed upon a committee by the division and statehood convention held at Huron the 18th day of July, 1887, and charged with the duty of calling a convention when in their judgment an emergency should arise which called for such convention. In the judgment of the committee that emergency has arisen.

It is now certain beyond a doubt that Congress will take no affirmative action upon the demands of the two Dakotas for their legal and constitutional rights.

Since your last convention the people of Dakota have expressed their will upon the subject of division at the polls by an extraordinarily large vote considering the circumstances of the election, and by an unequivocal majority of nearly five thousand votes.

The unauthorized attempt of the Aberdeen convention to reverse this verdict of the people, as expressed at the polls, met with exposure and general disapproval.

The last election in North Dakota was permitted largely to go by default, and the votes there cast were cast, as we are informed, by the people of that section under a prevailing misapprehension that division meant statehood for South Dakota and indefinite territorialhood for North Dakota. This misapprehension has been corrected, and we now learn with pleasure that our brethren of North Dakota are ready and anxious to join hands with us in working for two states and immediate admission.

In this posture of affairs the people of Dakota find themselves confronted with a grave and perilous state of facts.

The elections for a territorial delegate in Congress and a Territorial Legislature are soon to take place. If these elections are allowed to go by default by the friends of division, as they were two years ago, we are threatened with the same results for the next two years as we have had for the two years just past. That is, that a Legislature elected at random, on local issues alone, making combinations for appropriations, will again bargain away what little is left of the rights and liberties of the people to an executive who is already vested with more arbitrary and despotic powers than have ever been bestowed upon an American governor. A worse evil than this threatens us.

To renew and keep alive the struggle for civil and political liberty and for the boundaries and institutions of our choice, and for two states, it is necessary that the coming Legislature shall give us a new starting point by passing an act convoking two constitutional conventions, one for North and one for South Dakota. This is absolutely essential to keep alive our struggle.

But to secure this, with a hostile governor, will require a two-thirds majority of the Legislature. This majority is therefore the first requisite. But to obtain this we need a thorough organization of the friends of the two states, and perfect harmony of action between these friends in both North and South Dakota.

We need also something further. We need a well considered, matured and practicable plan of action, which shall be agreed upon by all, adopted by all, and carried through by all, and which shall therefore be made the only and controlling issue in all the fall elections. Such a plan cannot be devised by one man or one set of men. Such a plan must be agreed upon and carried out by all, or we will fail. A failure now means the loss of the next four, perhaps eight years.

The people of Dakota cannot afford such a failure.

Therefore, to the end that the people may have an opportunity, before the fall nominations and elections are upon them, to consider, devise and adopt such a plan of action as in their wisdom may seem best adapted to secure their rights and that yet the power unjustly and corruptly bargained away from them into the hands of a treason and hostile governor.

This committee, by virtue of the powers conferred upon them, do hereby invite all friends of two states to assemble in delegate convention at the City of Huron on Tuesday, July 10, 1888, at the hour of 12 M., there to consider this question:

"What steps are necessary for them to take to secure their rights of local self government and the speedy admission of the two states of North and South Dakota.

That full time may be taken for consideration, we recommend the delegates to come prepared to hold a two days' session.

We understand that members of the following callings, to wit: The farmers and business men, the clergy, the press and the bar of Dakota, have prepared and will issue calls for conventions of their respective bodies to convene at Huron on Thursday, the day following this convention, to review the proceedings of this convention and to recommend such action thereon as in their judgment shall be right to their respective constituencies.

In view of the necessity for active and hard campaign work and for funds to defray the expenses, the committee urge upon the county conventions, at the election of delegates, to agree upon a sum of money as their quota to a campaign fund and to authorize their delegates to pledge them for that amount and to authorize the proper officers of the convention to draw on them for the same.

The committee recommend to the friends of division and statehood in each county that they at once organize a division and two state club, to appoint a chairman, and that the chairman have power to call a convention on Saturday, July 7th, in each county, to elect delegates to this territorial convention.

The apportionment for delegates, upon a ratio of one delegate to each 800 inhabitants by the last census, will be as follows in South Dakota:

Name of County.	No.	Name of County.	No.	Name of County.	No.
Aurora	9	Beadle	18	Ben Homme	11
Brookings	12	Brown	18	Brule	9
Buffalo	1	Burdick	1	Butte	1
Campbell	2	Charles Mix	6	Clark	8
Clay	8	Codington	9	Custer	1
Davison	8	Day	8	Deuel	6
Douglas	6	Edmunds	3	Fall River	1
Faulk	5	Grant	11	Hamlin	6
Hanson	6	Hughes	8	Hand	11
Hyde	3	Jerauld	5	Hutchinson	14
Lake	8	Kingsbury	11	Lawrence	15
McCook	9	Lincoln	12	McPherson	1
Marshall	3	Miner	8	Mimchala	21
Moody	8	Pennington	5	Potter	5
Roberts	3	Sanborn	6	Spink	15
Sully	5	Turner	12	Union	12
Walworth	1	Yankton	14
					352

Although this committee has no jurisdiction as to North Dakota, yet as earnest requests have been made to us by the divisionists of North Dakota to invite them to meet with us, and as the divisionists of South Dakota as earnestly desire the wise counsel and cordial cooperation of the divisionists of North Dakota.

We do also hereby cordially and earnestly invite and request all friends of division and two states in North Dakota to hold similar county conventions and elect delegates, who shall be entitled to a seat and a vote in this convention.

An apportionment upon the same ratio as that adopted for South Dakota namely, one delegates for each 800 inhabitants, will give the counties of North Dakota the following representation:

Name of County.	No.	Name of County.	No.	Name of County.	No.
Barnes	9	Bottineau	1	Emmons	1
Brown	1	Cass	33	Griggs	3
Burleigh	8	Eddy	1	Logan	1
Diekey	6	Foster	1	Mercer	1
Grand Forks	33	LaMoure	8	Oliver	1
Kidder	3	McLean	1	Ransom	6
McHenry	1	Nelson	5	Sargent	5
Morton	9	Pembina	18	Steele	5
Ramsey	5	Rolette	3	Towner	1
Richland	14	Stark	5	Ward	1
Stanton	1	Traill	12	Billings	1
Stutsman	9	Walsh	2
Villard	1	Butler	1
Benson	1	Cavalier	8

Total, South Dakota, 352. Total, North Dakota, 244. Grand total, 496.

Citizens of Dakota, we solemnly believe this to be the most grave and important convention to which you have ever been, or which you ever will be summoned. Your taxes are multiplied yearly, your industries are being cramped more and more, immigration is discouraged by your territorial condition, public and private enterprises are crippled for want of the proper political power over your own resources; your property interests are sacrificed and ruined by the same cause.

Your energies are benumbed. Your manhood is outraged and humiliated. Rights are invaded, justice is denied, public improvements are held back, rightful political power is withheld, a voice in your own government is insolently refused.

All this, without excuse, without apology, and even with threats of perpetual disfranchisement and possible political persecutions.

Confederate brigadiers, who have been but lately pardoned for their own unprovoked acts of rebellion against the Government, dare to insult the loyal people and old soldiers of Dakota with charges of revolution, for simply demanding that right of local self-government and that admission into the Union which belongs to them under the laws and Constitution of the country.

Recreant representatives of northern Union states, notably Mr. Springer, of Illinois, have the unbounded impudence to threaten our people with indefinite disfranchisement unless they submit to an intolerable partisan dictation.

No help need be expected by us from Congress this session or the next unless you act, and that together. If you wish help you must help yourselves. You have the legal weapons in your own hands to help yourselves in a rightful, lawful and peaceful way. You have only to resolve unanimously to use them to see your chains drop off, your industries revive, and your old-time prosperity return. As you act now, in this emergency, so will your destinies be shaped for all time to come.

Leave your farms, your shops, your offices, and give your time and means to the rescue of your good name, your business, your interests, your rights and your liberties.

If you do this, you have it in your power to effectually rebuke and put an end to this most lawless, high-handed, inexcusable and unbearable outrage ever perpetrated upon American citizens in American history, and to secure the admission of the two states of North and South Dakota in twelve months.

If, on the other hand, you suffer the next three months to pass by without taking the necessary steps, your present territorial condition will be prolonged for an indefinite time.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,

JOHN A. OWENS,

J. C. HEADLEY.

Division and Statehood Central Committee for South Dakota.

LAWYERS' AUXILIARY CONVENTION

The undersigned members of the bar of Dakota request a convention of the lawyers of Dakota, to be held at Huron, at 9 o'clock A. M., July 12, 1888, for the purpose of considering measures which may aid the cause of a division of the territory, and the admission to the Union of South Dakota and North Dakota as two states.

(Signed)

John A. Owen, Kingsbury County.

Chauncey L. Wood, Pennington County.

A. B. Schenlan, B. Dunlay, of Kingsbury County.

A. G. Kellam, J. T. Williams, C. C. Morrow, S. J. Moyer, W. C. Graybill, W. A. Porter, J. M. Long, John A. Stroube, of Brule County.

Melvin Grigsby, F. L. Boyce, J. W. Boyce, A. A. Polk, Wm. H. Lyon, T. B. McMaster, H. H. Keith, J. H. Fernyhouch, Chas. L. Crockway, D. R. Bailey, Park Davis, A. Frizzell, R. F. Pettigrew, S. L. Tate, R. J. Wells, Wm. A. Walker, J. C. Eddy, H. J. Davenport, U. S. G. Cheney, O. A. Fowler, Joe Kirby, of Minnehaha County.

A. C. Mellette, Courtland Wood, W. H. Donaldson, L. A. Denning, J. E. West, T. V. Eddy, Geo. H. Barnes, F. E. VanLiew, W. S. Glass, F. L. Scarritt, John Nicholson, M. H. Naber, D. C. Thomas, J. E. Mellette, C. C. Church, E. A. Cove, of Codington County.

J. P. Cheever, Edward C. Webber, of Hamlin County.

P. C. Murphy, G. A. Matthews, J. O. Andrews, J. E. Diamond, C. L. Davis, of Brookings County.

S. A. Cranmer, A. S. Drake, Wm. T. Hughes, Wm. Duncan, H. C. Briggs, W. O. Stout, S. A. Cochran, C. H. Barrows, Wm. W. Hughes, F. Sharpe, Edmunds County.

Robert Dollard, T. O. Bogert, W. T. Williams, J. D. Elliott, O. Richmond, of Bon Homme County.

Frank Alexander, of Campbell County.

Thos. Sterling, C. T. Howard, H. O. Warnock, D. A. E. Warnock, John J. Cushing, of Spink County.

Carroll Atwood, of Faulk County.

R. B. Smither, D. M. Evans, S. S. Lockhart, of Grant County.

A. L. Chamberlain, H. Medberry, A. J. Prunt, T. W. Burdick, D. H. Williams, of Potter County.

H. F. Fellows, D. H. Sullivan, W. M. Smith, Frank H. Clark, C. H. Bakewell, Dick Haney, of Aurora County.

Wm. B. Sterling, Geo. C. Cooper, A. W. Burt, L. W. Crotoot, John H. Davis, J. B. Kelley, A. B. Melville, P. T. Langley, C. M. West, John Cam, O. W. Sarr, K. W. Wheeler, John F. Fick, Jr., F. Volrath, I. B. Henyan, Ivan W. Goodner, Alansing B. McVilvie, S. C. Nash, K. Kerr, R. P. Hoskyn, W. I. Millen, A. E. Carpenter, J. K. Hannay, Edward A. Morse, F. F. Randolph, Wm. T. Love, Fred E. Grant, H. Ray Myerg, Zack T. Hundley, of Beadle County.

W. A. Lynch, of Sully County.

C. I. Crawford, of Hughes County.

John I. Pyle, Minford E. Williams, S. S. Markham, of Hand County.

J. W. Carter, M. E. Rudolph, J. W. Taylor, J. S. Wilcox, A. B. Brown, Frank R. Aikens, A. C. Strimer, C. B. Kennedy, P. Haas, of Lincoln County.

Robert Dott, R. M. Dott, F. S. Smith, Jas. Baynes, W. S. Arnold, of Hanson County.

V. V. Barnes, L. D. F. Poore, J. H. Teller, H. Geo. H. Hand, French & Smith, Hugh J. Campbell, of Yankton County.

John L. Jolley, Jared Runyon, Judge Copeland, Frank Payton, of Clay County.

J. A. Wallace, E. A. Erickson, of Union County.

DeSmet, Dakota, May 26, 1888.

I respectfully suggest to the bar of Dakota that at the convention named in the foregoing call, after its specified purpose has been accomplished, other matters of general interest to the profession may well be considered, including the question of organizing a South Dakota and a North Dakota Bar Association, and the selection of delegates to the National Bar Association, to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, August 8, 1888.

JOHN A. OWEN, of Kingsbury County.

EDITORS' CONVENTION

Huron, Dakota, May 26, 1888

To the Editors of the Weekly and Daily Press of Dakota:

A general convention of the friends of two states in North and South Dakota has been called to meet at Huron, July 10th and 11th next.

This convention has been convoked by a committee appointed for that purpose by the division and statehood convention of July last.

Its occasion is the failure of Congress to act upon the admission of the two Dakotas, and the threats of perpetual disfranchisement issued by the party in power against Dakota.

In this emergency it is apparent that the people of all Dakota must either consult together and agree upon some practical plan of action or all their interests will be threatened with great and lasting injury.

We are asked in this emergency, as an important and influential body of the commonwealth, to give the assistance of our counsel and deliberations to the general convention upon the question:

"Is there anything that the people of Dakota can do to help this, and if so, what is it?"

We, the undersigned members of the press, cordially concurring in the objects of the convention, do therefore respectfully invite all our brethren of the press in North and South Dakota to assemble in convention for the purpose of consulting and deliberating upon these important subjects, at Huron, on Thursday, the 12th day of July, at 10 A. M.

A. Davis, Huronite.

H. C. Hansbrough, Inter-Ocean, Devil's Lake.

J. J. Sargent, The Dawson Breeze.

T. N. Treat, Dakota Beacon.

F. S. Corwin, The Steele Ozone.

L. L. Bates, The Lake Preston Times.

C. B. Sherwood, DeSmet Leader.

G. W. Fenno, J. P. Lowe, Bijou Hill Times.

A. G. Warner, Deuel County Advocate.

D. P. R. Strong, Park River Gazette.

R. E. Carpenter, Watertown Courier News.

W. N. Girton and L. R. Girton, Miner County

Farmer.

Thomas McConnell, Carthage News.

Eli Johnson and Mrs. Philena Everett Johnson, Highmore Herald.

Zack T. Hundley, Free Trade Democrat

J. B. Cogan, Bon Homme Settler.

W. S. Bowen, Press and Dakotan.

B. W. Lair, Turtle Mountain Times.

G. R. Owen, Chamberlain Register.

C. F. Hayward, Clark Daily Review

Kanouse & Folsom, Woonsick Times

J. E. Britton, McLean County Mail

A. E. Mayhew, Letcher Blade.

S. V. Ghrist, Ree Valley Free Press.

John Longstaff, Huronite

THE CLERGYMEN'S CONVENTION

Huron, Dakota Territory, May 24, 1888

To the Ministers of the Churches of Dakota:

A general convention of the people of Dakota has been called to meet at Huron, July 10th and 11th next, to take into consideration the condition of Dakota, and recommend suitable and effective action thereon.

It is desired by those calling this convention to consult with all the ministers of Dakota, along with other bodies, and to lay before them such propositions as that convention may adopt for their consideration and approval. As we understand it, the matters to be brought before that convention concern vitally and immediately the highest interests of the people of Dakota.

Your counsel and judgment thereon is desired.

In critical times like this, when all the people of Dakota have is at stake, it is natural and right that they should have whatever counsel and assistance we can rightfully give.

Therefore, as requested, we respectfully and earnestly invite all the ministers of churches in Dakota to meet in convention at Huron on Thursday, July 12th, there to consider such matters pertaining to the public welfare as may be submitted to them by the people's convention.

We are informed that arrangements will be made for reduced fares and suitable accommodations.

Rev. D. S. McCaslin, pastor, Presbyterian Church, Huron, Dakota.

Rev. Joseph Ward, D. D., president of Yankton College, Yankton, Dakota.

Rev. Dan F. Bradley, pastor, Congregational Church, Yankton, Dakota.

Rev. A. B. Smart, pastor, Wessington Springs, Dakota.

Rev. J. B. Pomeroy, Presbyterian minister, Huron, Dakota.

Rev. F. A. Burdick, pastor, Methodist Church, Yankton, Dakota.

Rev. A. W. Adkinson, pastor, Methodist Church, Mitchell, Dakota.

Rev. Thomas Hambly, pastor, Methodist Church, Britton, Dakota.

Rev. A. D. Traveller, pastor, Watertown, Dakota.

Rev. E. Hartsough, presiding elder, M. E. Church, Sioux Falls, Dakota.

Rev. W. R. Gordon, pastor, Congregational Church, Milbank, Dakota.

Rev. James Rowe, pastor, Redfield, Dakota.

Rev. C. B. Clark, pastor, Mitchell, Dakota.

Rev. H. M. Springer, pastor, Clark, Dakota.

Rev. P. E. Murray, pastor, M. E. Church, Woonsocket, Dakota.

Rev. C. E. Hager, pastor, M. E. Church, Madison, Dakota.

Rev. E. E. Clough, pastor, Watertown, Dakota.

Rev. D. Gostelow, pastor, Andover, Dakota.

Rev. W. J. Hyde, pastor, Grotton, Dakota.

Rev. R. W. Ely, pastor, Presbyterian Church, LaMoure, Dakota.

Rev. C. E. English, pastor, Huron, Dakota.

Rev. H. S. Mills, pastor, Huron, Dakota.

Rev. Chas. Potter, pastor, Huron, Dakota.

Rev. D. B. Nichols, pastor, Congregational Church, James River, Dakota.

THE FARMERS' AND BUSINESS MEN'S CONVENTION

To the Farmers and Business Men of Dakota:

The statehood committee have decided to hold a convention at Huron on Tuesday and Wednesday, July 10th and 11th, and following this, have requested, on Thursday, the 12th, a farmers' and business men's convention, a clergymen's convention, a convention of lawyers, a convention of editors. Therefore the undersigned farmers and business men of Dakota represent to their friends that there is little probability that the present Congress will take favorable action on any measure for the division and admission of Dakota, and it is of the highest importance that the representatives of the producing and business interests of Dakota should come together and consult as to what steps should be taken to protect themselves.

For grievances similar to those inflicted upon the long suffering people of Dakota our fathers rebelled against the mother country.

What is our condition today in consequence of the denial of our rights?

We are practically denied the right to trial by jury guaranteed to us by the Constitution, because the judicial districts are so large that it is impossible for the judges to meet the demand.

Our laws are unsuitable and conflicting in their provisions. Property is insecure. Capital that would flow through the channels of trade and find investment within our borders is repelled, and the consequence is higher rates of interest.

We are denied the privilege of legislating for our own interests by the restrictive laws of Congress prohibiting any but laws applicable to the entire territory. A city cannot have even its charter amended, however faulty it may be, because that would be special legislation, and forbidden.

We have respectfully asked for admission, we have bowed the suppliant knee in humble position that we might enjoy the rights of freemen, and have been spurned and insulted.

We have endured for years "taxation without representation."

We are told that "unless we see the necessity of coming in as one state, and desist from the present policy of demanding division," we will "be kept waiting another decade." Thus they ignore the will of the people as expressed at the polls.

These wrongs are seriously affecting our business interests.

We therefore call upon every farmer and every business man having his own interests at heart to lay aside all other duties and attend this convention. In the multitude of counsel there is wisdom. Let us consult together as to the action proper to be taken in this crisis in Dakota's affairs. It is an opportune time on the eve of a presidential election. By a proper plan of action we can make Dakota's cause a national issue, and then success is assured.

It is recommended that in each county the business men and farmers should hold a convention and elect as many delegates as will attend this convention at Hearst.

It is further recommended that the county convention shall pledge such sum as they are willing to contribute toward the expense incurred by the statehood committee in furthering this cause, and that the delegation be instructed to pay such sum to the treasurer of said committee.

The usual reduction in fares on all railroads will be made to those attending this convention.

(Signed)

C. W. Diggs	Alex McIntyre	E. D. Hills	D. L. Coleman
D. K. Bryant & Co.	Geo. M. Markley	Frank Smith	B. F. Beach
J. C. Bloodgood	M. C. Keenan	J. C. Crow	J. W. Menzie
Henry C. Sterling	Isaac Daugherty	G. McNight	E. A. Remington
G. W. Wilson	D. P. Wilcox	Wm. Tobin	B. B. Wagner
Wm. L. Blep	O. H. Carney	C. G. Church	J. M. Green
C. B. Alred	A. B. Wilcox	Ole Gasley	John E. Lockhart
Irving Mutchler	Wm. S. Scougal	W. H. Bloom	A. Mittelsteadt
E. C. Issenhuth	J. M. Fogerty	M. F. Hubbard	U. A. Gregory
C. H. Colton	L. M. Purdy	H. D. Walrothe	E. S. Baldwin
A. J. White	Newton Edmunds	J. J. Amesley	N. B. Miller
A. Lampo	A. L. Hinman	John Michael	W. S. Wells
Geo. W. Chase	Frank Loveitt	Dales Eldridge	A. F. Scott
F. E. Potter	E. A. Bruce	W. H. Cooks	D. J. Parkhurst
W. H. Newcomer	W. H. Carr	Will Arthur	J. W. Jacobs
J. C. Klemme	C. H. Goddard	W. N. Munger	M. J. McGallinary
Robert Kuehn	T. J. Matts & Co.	Wm. Warner	R. J. Patterson
F. L. Frary	L. S. Frisby, Jr.	Daniel Nesbit	T. David
Jacob Schaller	A. W. Preston	August Sasse	A. H. Tuttle
C. S. Loveland	T. M. Graham	J. H. C. Young	C. B. Billinghamst
Alek McIntosh	George Willis	J. W. C. Morrison	E. C. Roe
C. C. Beach	F. B. Sherman	Wm. M. Powers	M. D. Alexander
S. W. Merrick	Chas. L. Hyde	Z. Richev	G. A. Dodds
F. D. Maxon	Chas. C. Dunlap	W. H. McVay	J. E. Brock
A. W. Johnston	C. F. Bingenheimer	James Witherspoon	J. W. Jones
H. P. Fish	J. A. Kemp	W. B. Valentine	Frank Crane
H. J. Benedict	J. W. Britton	C. H. Bates	Pete Schamberger
A. Wardell	E. C. Walton	G. W. Roberts	F. P. Thompson
B. L. King	Cass D. Houghton	D. F. Davis	John Best
A. W. Page	Appel Bros	D. W. C. Tanner	Charley Edwards
Henry E. Bennett	D. W. Stiver	Davis, Longstaff &	David Wolfe
J. S. Schree	John Spang	Crouch	M. F. Waite
Jay Wellman	Chas. Simmons	L. W. Hazen	Albert Best
B. Schafer	T. R. Bryant	A. F. Anderson	W. A. Davis
J. A. Trow	F. Cool	L. H. Ramsey	L. D. F. Poore
G. H. Feldman	L. W. Cook	S. F. Adams	D. N. Gross
C. C. Hays	W. O. Mitchell	George C. Ketchum	H. W. Hinman
Eugene Steere	W. Casson	J. H. Devoe & Co	S. S. Groom
P. I. Gerin	N. B. Reed	W. S. Furrington	John Bremner
J. C. Wood	William Stough	C. F. Blount	H. B. Wynn
A. B. Smedley	D. H. Henry	Frank Wilson	H. W. Pike
R. C. Macallister	Henry Shafer	John Blair	W. H. Gould
Wm. Lee	W. F. Smith	John Watt	Frank A. Weeks
E. L. Bradbury	John G. Barnett	William Warbeol	G. W. Kingsbury
T. H. Martin	A. G. Miller	J. H. Jones	Patrick Brennan
V. R. Wadclon	T. D. Kanouse	I. F. Baker	I. W. Hazen
S. B. Sheldon	F. P. Palmer	Joseph Alexander	E. M. Thomas
J. F. West	F. C. Jay	J. M. Stover	Frank Brown
I. D. Lyon	F. B. Roberts	Joseph Speiyar	L. P. Deert
C. E. Boyden	E. K. Fannay	A. Shimmer	W. I. Miller
E. A. Brizee	J. W. Fly	S. N. Preston	A. Sandersen
F. G. Rice	L. M. Kintner	D. S. Banks	Honkins Bros
John Glese	W. H. Glenkler	C. E. Hind	N. H. Merrill
John B. Sweet	F. G. Stevine	Allen Sampson	C. M. Beach
Jacques Fortier	L. C. Owells	S. M. Laird	Edward Curt
Louis Berner	R. B. Smither	R. J. Andrews	M. I. Dinneen

M. B. Cooley	C. S. Amsden	J. W. Davidson	Geo. P. Babcock
E. C. Ferry	D. Bartlett	W. H. Dykens	Luvorn Costley
L. L. Kelley	Thos. Purcell	S. C. Bailey	L. L. Phillips
C. S. Coler	Thad S. Hays	John H. Groce	S. H. Plummer
G. H. Coyton	B. J. Templeton	W. S. Billingshurst	John C. Wagoner
John Westdahl	N. W. Eggleston	W. T. Scarrett	F. J. Kahn
S. J. Eichenberger	S. S. Lockhart	H. R. Pease	E. E. Hudson
W. M. Caldwell	D. M. Evans	E. G. Fabenstock	Oscar Kappel
Ed Ellson	Lewis McDonald	J. E. Carpenter	James, Kingsbury
D. B. Jeffries	Gib. Delewanowski	F. P. Phillips	Christ Boller
B. F. Trumboner	D. T. Hindman	M. H. Cooper	Joseph Ferdinand
W. H. Burdick	R. N. Locke	J. S. Welch	Nicholas Morgan
H. J. Patterson	J. W. Hurlbut	O. H. P. Cram	Wm. H. H. Beadle
G. W. Fenno	J. C. Knapp	M. Bierstad	C. H. Taylor
George Kasson	F. W. Dier	C. G. Williams

These names were procured on a number of petitions, but the residence of the signers was not preserved if given. We gather from personal knowledge of many of the signers that the counties represented were in the southern portion of the territory. There were 272 of the names.

The two-state convention was called in May. During the interval of the calling and holding of the convention, political events of national and territorial importance transpired that had an important influence upon public sentiment and had seemed to modify the apprehensions which might have existed early in the season that Dakota was confronted with imminent danger should the political situation throughout the country and in the nation continue in control of the elements which had been responsible for refusing justice to Dakota. The presidential conventions had been held and Grover Cleveland renominated by the democratic party, and Benjamin Harrison by the republican party, for the presidency. Both parties had held territorial conventions to select delegates to the national conventions, so that the public mind had been quite actively enlisted, and there had not been the attention paid to selecting delegates to the two-state convention, to be held at Huron, July 10th, which its importance would seem to warrant. The convention, however, was held, the following being a brief report of the opening proceedings:

The division and statehood convention met in the City Hall at Huron on Tuesday, July 10th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and was called to order by Hugh J. Campbell, who read the call. Waldo M. Potter, of LaMoure County, was chosen temporary chairman, and W. H. Lyon, of Minnehaha County, secretary. On taking the chair Mr. Potter made an excellent address, giving his reasons for being a divisionist, closing with a few words of caution as follows:

"I think we should go on wisely and cautiously, and take such measures as will more speedily effect our admission into the Union. I would recommend proceeding in such a way as not to interfere with the plans of friends in the East who are working in our behalf."

Joseph Allen, of Turner County, Mr. Sheets, of Kingsbury County, John M. Fogarty, of Yankton, were appointed a Committee on Credentials.

D. N. Gross, of Yankton, W. H. Lyon, of Minnehaha, J. H. Sheets, of Turner, F. H. Withee, of Clay, and John A. Owen, of Kingsbury, were appointed a Committee on Permanent Organization. A brief recess was taken.

The credentials committee then made a partial report, ten counties presenting credentials.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported, recommending Hugh J. Campbell for chairman, E. W. Caldwell secretary, and Mr. Lewellyn assistant secretary, which report was adopted, and Judge Campbell took the chair and delivered an able address.

Colonel Plummer, of Brown County, sent a telegram expressing regret that he was unable to attend, and expressing his concurrence in the two-state movement.

On motion of Mr. Poindexter, of Spink County, the chair appointed the following committee to formulate a plan of action and present it to the convention for consideration, namely: E. W. Caldwell, H. H. Kent, W. W. Brookings, of Minnehaha; Joseph Allen, of Turner; Colonel Adams, of Day; Mr. Poindexter, of Spink; J. A. Pickler and D. M. Humphrey, of Faulk; Waldo Potter, of LaMoure (or Cass); T. M. Devoe, John Langley, E. W. Burt, F. H. Meyers, D. R. Shannon and Carl Gerner, of Beadle; Joseph Ward, of Yankton; John A. Owen and M. M. Sheets, of Kingsbury. An adjournment was then taken until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

In an informal way each member of the business committee gave his views on what should be done. From these expressions it was certain they would not favor the immediate setting in motion of the state government. Rather they would recommend electing a Legislature that would be solid for two states. Then have the Legislature provide for two constitutional conventions, take from the governor all authority where it can be done without detriment to the public interests. The idea is growing rapidly that admission is not far off.

At Wednesday morning's session of the convention, the committee to formulate a plan of work made the following report:

1. To urge upon the people the vital importance of making division and the admission of two states of North and South Dakota the controlling issue, above and beyond every other issue, for all representative officers in the fall elections.
2. To urge upon the people the especial importance of electing for the Legislature honest men, brave and determined men, who will pledge themselves to a sweeping reform of the abuses which flourish under the present administration, especially in its financial departments, and to take from the governor all the despotic and unusual powers which have been bestowed upon him by the Legislature of the Territory.
3. To pass laws immediately, during the first days of the Legislature, convoking two constitutional conventions, one for North and one for South Dakota, if deemed expedient.
4. Who will pledge themselves, in case the result of the coming presidential election shall be adverse to Dakota, and shall place in power men and parties whose policy and measures shall threaten Dakota with perpetual or indefinite colonial vassalage, to enact such other measures as they lawfully may for the relief of the people of these two states.

When the matter of the two constitutional conventions was reached in the report above, an hour's discussion ensued, as to the advisability of another constitutional convention for South Dakota, that section already having a constitution. Finally the debated section was changed to read thus:

To pass a law immediately during the first days of the Legislature convoking a constitutional convention for North Dakota, and to take such steps for the establishment of a state government for South Dakota as the people of South Dakota may demand and the exigencies of the case may require.

The plan of action having been amicably settled and adopted, the committee then reported an "address to the people," which was unanimously agreed to. It was brief and to the point, and is here given:

To the People of the Two Dakotas:

Such a day as the one now shining never dawned upon us before. We have secured recognition from one of the great national parties, the same we shall have when both our states are within the Union, so that the work for two states is now more popular than one.

It now remains for us to make one more supreme effort and our work is done. In the campaign for the first time the two Dakotas are keeping step to the same music. The same goal is before them both. The people of both sections now see alike the necessity of using the same means to accomplish a common end. All this portends victory for us, and in the very near future. But while this is possible, it will not come of itself. We dare not relax a single nerve. We cannot cease our vigilance. Having begun we must stay through to the end. We may have personal choices in party, in hopes for progress, in various opinions, but for the present emergencies we must subordinate them all and make them but our unalterable purpose at all hazards and at whatever cost. Dakota shall be redeemed. To do this we must help ourselves.

"Fear God, and take your own part," must still be our motto.

To do this let us elect for our next Legislature only such men as will, first of all, stand together for the two Dakotas. Men who will neither be frightened or cowed into waver-ing from their position. Men who will not be afraid to strip from the office of our alien governor the power and the perquisites that we would never think of giving to a governor of our own choice. Men who will make no appropriation of our money that is not clearly warranted by the organic act. Men who will, at the first opportunity, move forward to accomplish statehood for both Dakotas.

In this way we shall reduce the evils of our territorial condition to the lowest point, and make more sure the coming of complete triumph of home rule. Only once do we need to act on this appeal. Only once does North Dakota need to join hands to end this provincial degradation and begin the glory of our statehood life.

With the adoption of this address the labors of the convention were ended, and an adjournment was taken. The central committee was empowered to reconvene the convention should occasion warrant such a step.

The auxiliary bodies—the clergymen, the editors, the attorneys, and the farmers and business men, held meetings and each adopted a brief statement supporting the purposes and proceedings of the principal convention.

A very pleasing incident of this occasion was the presentation by the women of Huron of two banners, of appropriate design, one for North Dakota and one for South Dakota. There appears to have been no orator ready to respond to the beautiful and appropriate testimonial on behalf of North Dakota, but Hon. George H. Hand, a Dakota pioneer of merit, appeared and accepted the banners, making a brief and eloquent acknowledgment, in words following.

Addressing the committee of ladies, Mr. Hand said:

On behalf of the president of this convention and the people of Dakota whose homes are scattered from the eastern line to the golden hills in the west, I accept these beautiful banners and tender you our sincere thanks.

Twenty-five years ago, when the earth trembled beneath the march of men, when women wept and prayed, and brave men went forth to conflict, it was customary for our wives, mothers, sisters and daughters to present to companies and regiments the flags which they carried to the fields of carnage. Many a flag that went through storms of shot and shell in war returned in shreds and tatters.

Today, after all these things have passed away and only linger in memory and dreams, when peace has spread her pearly wings all over the land, this beautiful and touching custom is again revived. But today the banner is not one of war but of peace.

It is an emblem of the sympathy and good will not only of the women of Huron, but of all the loving hearts in this great domain, which are dearer to us than all else on earth.

Men of Dakota, behold your banners. And in beholding them, swear in your hearts before God that you will never cease your lawful efforts until victory is gained. If in the days to come discouragements shall appear, think of the fair hands that wrought these banners. If clouds shall lower and defeat shall seem to impend, think of the loving hearts these banners represent and take courage. Swear that they shall never be trailed in the dust of defeat and dishonor.

Ladies of Huron, I again tender you our sincere thanks, and assure you that in the hands of brave men these banners shall never see dishonor. We will bear them aloft until heaven's golden light shall kiss their folds, amidst the plaudits of a free and enfranchised people.

The banners were consigned to the custody of the Huron convention, to be kept until the two states were admitted, and then turned over to the proper representatives of the new state governments.

There was no substantial sentiment in any party that favored any division of the territory upon any boundary except the one along the 7th standard.

The democrats in Congress were inclined to delay, but they would not have dismembered the territory contrary to the wishes of the people, nor would they have favored any such meritless plan as Ordway's, which it is evident was introduced to give a pretext for further delay, on the ground that the people of the territory were not united on the 7th standard parallel division line. A north and south division did not promise any remedy for the diversity of interests existing in the two sections, which had always been the basis for seeking a division of the territory.

A single tax convention was called to meet at Huron, May 22d. Dakota people were reaching out after the best things in the realm of new ideas, in 1888, to put in their constitution, and in their laws the theory of Henry George which he had attractively portrayed in his book entitled "Progress and Poverty" was not forgotten, but the idea was not generally favored. It had no advocate in the constitutional convention, and it is probable the convention took no steps to secure it a hearing. It does not appear to have got beyond the theoretical stage in any part of the country, but there are those who insist that there is something in it worthy the attention of a progressive nation of people.

DAKOTA IN THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

The territorial republican convention having elected ten delegates to the national convention, claiming that the population of the territory entitled it to that number, the entire ten were placed on the roll by the chairman of the national convention, and cast that number of votes throughout the entire proceedings. Under the call for the national republican convention, Dakota Territory was given but the customary two votes allowed to all territories, but its half million of population and its consequent nearness to statehood entitled its people to recognition in the national convention, and with this recognition the information went abroad throughout the United States that Dakota had been for years defrauded of her political rights by the opposition. Through this and other less important channels the question of statehood for Dakota was placed at the forefront in all the states that year, and as a new House of Representatives was to be elected as well as President, the Dakota question was made a national issue. This will not be denied. The result was a triumph for the republican ticket and a majority republican in the House, from all of which it was logically inferred and stoutly proclaimed by many who were well qualified to judge, that the Dakota issue had won the battle for the national republican party.

A FOURTH OF JULY ORATION

Mr. Robert J. Gamble, of Yankton, junior member of the law firm of Gamble Brothers, had not at any time been in sympathy with the radical views and program of Hon. Hugh J. Campbell, who had been one of the prominent leaders of the movement for division and statehood, and had taken the position that southern Dakota had the right to set up a state government without the sanction of Congress, in case that body refused to admit the state, and proceed to enact laws under the state constitution. In order to avoid a clash with the territorial government, then in operation, Mr. Campbell urged the election of a territorial Legislature that would co-operate with the independent state government. Mr. Campbell's views may have been shared by a large proportion of the people, but when the opportunity came to put his plan into practical effect, the people's representatives neglected to take the step. They appeared to doubt the wisdom of it, and preferred to postpone any decisive action, hoping that Congress would relent and grant their petitions.

The Fourth of July, 1888, coming on, the people of Yankton, who had been enjoying a year of unusual prosperity and growth, resolved to celebrate the occasion, and Mr. Robert Gamble was selected as the orator of the day. The question of statehood was not considered in connection with this selection, and the general opinion was that Mr. Gamble would deliver an oration after the prevailing fashion of Independence Day addresses, and at the opening of his speech he made an appropriate allusion to the revolutionary fathers and the grand charter of liberty which they promulgated in 1776, and then took up a discussion of the subject of statehood in which the popular mind of that day, throughout Dakota, was deeply interested. He stated that South Dakota's qualifications for statehood were ample in every feature and were not questioned. Population, intelligence, resources, wealth, all the requirements could be fully met in abundant measure, and then the speaker proceeded as follows:

Under the present conditions what is it possible for the friends of division and admission to do to further the desired end, that we might look with some degree of confidence for the fruition of our hopes? What is expedient? What feasible? What is legal?

1. Shall we follow the old beaten path with high purposes and unflinching courage, and press on and around the policy laid out by the act of the Legislature of 1885 authorizing the Sioux Falls convention, and under which the constitution was adopted, and which has twice received the endorsement of the Senate of the United States? Or

2. Shall we abandon this and follow another policy which is proposed to be inaugurated and carried through the incoming Territorial Legislature:

First. By passing a law convening constitutional conventions for both South and North Dakota, and providing for the election of state officers at the time of the submission of the same for adoption.

Second. Presuming that the constitutions so framed would meet the approval of the people of both the proposed states, the Territorial Legislature would further provide that the territorial government on a day fixed would cease and determine, and thereupon the state governments would go into operation and assume the functions of sovereignty. The Territorial Legislature would further affix penalties and punishments against any citizen recognizing the territorial government thereafter, or in any way impeding the administration of the proposed state governments. This to be done, of course, without the sanction, approval or consent of Congress.

In discussing this, I will content myself by simply stating as to the first proposition, that in the act of the Legislature of 1885 convening the constitutional convention, in its adoption, in the election of state officers and of senators and of representatives in Congress, the whole procedure was consistent and in harmony with well established precedents, justified by previous acts, in numerous instances, by the legislative and executive departments of the Government, and approved by decisions of the Supreme Court of the nation. The course thus far pursued has been the usual, the regular, and, under the circumstances, the only legitimate one. And it seems to me that in it there have been displayed in a high degree, not only self-sacrifice, forbearance, discretion, but wisdom and patriotism as well. We practically with unanimity, through a long series of years, uniformly memorialized—we resolved, we balloted, we petitioned, but thus far the lower house of the national legislature has turned with deaf ears. We did then what I say we had a right to do, but so far the much desired goal either of division or statehood has not yet been reached.

Naturally, then, men look for new expedients, hoping thereby to find a new way and avoid the delays of the old. The second proposition then comes as one of these. And I shall take it up and endeavor to discuss it, and if we find it is feasible and justified by precedent and law, let us follow it; otherwise discard it, and follow that course upon which we stand as on solid ground, surrounded by the light of experience, our course marked out by law and sustained by the adjudication of the highest tribunal of the government. It is not best to let our intemperate zeal to secure the object which we know we ought to possess and of right ought to be ours, lead us into fallacies of argument or place us upon a false basis, which in the long run could only delay the accomplishment of our cherished purpose.

No citizen will go before me in rightful condemnation of the man or set of men, who, without warrant or excuse, for mere selfish interests or party advantage, deny the right of self-government and the management of their local affairs to 600,000 people. It is a crime too grave for language to express, and especially so under a government the pride and flower of all the ages. But condemnation like this does not lead us out of the dilemma, or place us on the highway to the accomplishment of our desired end.

With this brief statement as to the first, I shall proceed now to consider the second proposition. And in so doing I hope thereby to elucidate and sustain the first, and it seems to me in such a manner that there can be no question about the correctness of the first and of the fallacy and ineffectiveness of the second. I do not want to enter this discussion as a partisan, but as a citizen, wedded to no pet theory, but what seems to me to be the right one, and the one that will subserve the highest purpose—impressed as well that he who in the smallest degree takes part in the moulding of a commonwealth is engaged in very serious business.

Dakota was organized as a territory by act of Congress, March 2, 1861. Its organic law defined its boundaries, and provided for the temporary government thus organized, legislative, judicial and executive departments, defining their functions, limiting their powers, and regulating in all respects its method of administration. This government so organized in due course, was properly officered, and since then and today is a fixed fact in our national life. And the laws by which this government was organized and created are unrepealed by the law-making power which created them, and they are still a part of the national statutes.

We must then commence our inquiry with the territorial organization as a fixed fact, every department of it in operation and performing its appropriate functions, its people submitting to its authority and recognizing its validity under the laws and constitution of the United States. To be transformed legally from this condition into a state, a member of the Federal Union, is the line to be followed.

As to the power of Congress to organize the territory, and of the absoluteness, under the Constitution, of its jurisdiction over it, is not open to very serious discussion. The Constitution of the United States gives this power, and such has been the decision of the Supreme Court of the nation. "And the laws of the United States made in pursuance of the Constitution shall be the supreme law of the land." (Const. U. S., sec. 2, art. 6.)

The laws of Congress then, upon a subject within its jurisdiction, are exclusive and supreme, as well by express provisions as by necessary implication. And from the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States, it necessarily results that the interpretation of the laws by the highest tribunal created by the law itself, must be equally supreme over the constitution and laws of the several states. Desty's Federal Constitution, 248-249, and cases cited.

To what position then does this force us? That the law organizing the territory, commonly denominated the "Organic Act," is a subject for legislation within the province and jurisdiction of Congress, and that that law is supreme, and that the territory itself and its Legislature are things of its creation. That this organic law is to us the same as the constitution is to a state. That the original source of power in a territory is from Congress, while in a state it is from the people. And what layman will claim, much less a lawyer, that a Legislature is not controlled and limited and circumscribed by the grant of power in the fundamental and organic law by which its very existence is supported and sustained. But upon this branch of the subject we need not speculate or theorize, for the Supreme Court of the nation in a case with which we are all familiar has so spoken that there need be no misapprehension:

"It is certainly now too late to doubt the power of Congress to govern the territories. There have been some differences of opinion as to the particular clause of the Constitution from which the power is derived, but that it exists has always been conceded.

"All territory within the jurisdiction of the United States not included in any state, must necessarily be governed by or under the authority of Congress. The territories are but political subdivisions of the outlying domain of the United States. Their relation to the general Government is much the same as that which counties bear to the respective states, and Congress may legislate for them as the state does for its municipal organization. The organic law of a territory takes the place of a constitution as the fundamental law of the local government. It is obligatory on and binds the territorial authorities, but Congress is supreme. The power to amend acts of the Territorial Legislature is an incident of sovereignty. Congress may not only abrogate laws of the territorial legislatures, but it may itself legislate directly for the local government. It has full and complete legislative authority over the people of the territories and all the departments of the territorial government." National Bank vs. Yankton County, 101 U. S. 132, 133.

The grant of legislative power to the territory under section 1851 of the revised statutes of the United States I admit is very broad. It is as follows:

"The legislative power of every territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation, not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Can such a rule of construction be asserted in sincerity, that the Legislature can set at naught the express provisions of the laws of Congress, its organic law, its Constitution? Can it, as it is claimed, destroy the very government under which it is acting, and exists, and by which it was created, and annihilate its own integrity, and resolve itself into chaos?

Would not that be in the very face of the provisions of the limitation itself? Would it not be inconsistent with the laws of the United States in the organization of the territory? The very statement of the proposition answers it. The thing cannot be greater than its designer. Could such a proceeding be classed as within the "rightful subjects of legislation?" Upon this subject I quote from Brittle v. The People, 2 Neb. 211:

"The Legislature of the territory owes its existence to 'the Organic Act of Congress, which empowers it to legislate on all rightful subjects of legislation'. To undertake to subvert the very government under which it assembles and acts, is not a rightful subject of legislation. On the contrary it is revolutionary. These rightful subjects must be such as are usual, and as are for the benefit of the governed, and must be acted upon in recognition of the existence of the territorial government. * * * That as long as we were on this territory, we were subject to and had to abide by such laws as Congress under the Constitution, chose to make, and that not until we were strong enough to defeat the United States by arms, could we hope for any change from such territorial rule without the permission of Congress."

Such language may seem strong from our Nebraska brethren, but they are fully justified in following so eminent an authority as the Supreme Court of the United States in the case known as the Michigan case of Scott et al. vs. Jones, 5 Howard at 378, which says:

"Such conduct by bodies situated within our limits unless by states, duly admitted into the Union, would have to be reached either by the power of the Union to put down insurrections or by the ordinary penal laws of the states or territories within which the bodies unlawfully organized are situated and acting."

And upon the same subject I would cite Chief Justice's Constitutional Expositions, page 34, note, in speaking of the power of the Territorial Legislature: "the legislation of course must not be in conflict with the law of Congress conferring the power to legislate."

As above shown Congress simply delegated to the Territorial Legislature the power to legislate for the territory that itself possesses, circumscribed by the limitation expressed in the grant of power. Its legislation is under the direct supervision of Congress. It is made the duty of the territory to report its legislation directly to that body. They are acting as delegated agents, not of the people within the limits of the territory who elect them, but of the supreme legislative power under the Constitution, vested in Congress. That power which encompasses the whole Union, whether it be within the limits of a territory or a state within the Federal Union.

To admit the doctrine contended for would be to assert that Congress practically had no power over the territories, only such as its inhabitants permitted it to exercise. And when I say Congress, I mean the national authority. Does not this plenary power of the Union enter into and over and encompass as a shield every state that is a part of it? And does not every state admit and recognize this power to which they are welded as an integral part? Then how much more would, and does, this power remain with and over the territories before there has been any delegation or surrender of these powers of sovereignty to a state? To admit this doctrine is to belittle this, one of the mightiest Governments of history, and certainly the grandest of all history. It is to assert it is without sovereignty over its own dominions. That under the shadow of its own majestic strength, its integrity is shattered, and especially in a locality with which it is possessed of all its original powers. I maintain that such a doctrine is heresy. That it denies the sovereignty of the Union, and is in conflict with the theory of its foundation.

Leaving this part of the argument I shall next pass to the consideration of the question as to the inherent power vested in the people of the territory, to form a constitution, organize a state government, put the machinery of that government into operation, and relegate the territorial government to a thing of the past. In other words to annihilate it, and to assume for this new organization all the powers of sovereignty, invested and clothed with all the functions of government. This is to be done by this people, by what is claimed in their "sovereign capacity." Not from any outside power but springing from that inherent right reposed in them and belonging as citizens of the National Government under whose jurisdiction they are, and to whose allegiance they are subject.

It would seem to me that in this branch of our subject we are again not left to speculation or theory. These powers have been defined. These rights have been analyzed and passed upon. The way and the procedure have been pointed out, if regard be had to the adjudication of the courts, the precedents in our history, the opinions of our statesmen, and best text writers upon constitutional law.

I do not mean to claim that a citizen of the Government surrenders any of his right, as such, by becoming a resident of a territory. But he assumes a new relation to the Government. He then becomes a resident of a place which was the property of the general government, and over this property and territory the Constitution of that Government has reposed in Congress exclusive dominion and control. The citizen assumes his residence with full notice of that power, and is subject to it. To be sure, he comes here with the guaranty from the general government under the ordinance of 1787, and with the solemn, treaty stipulation of the deed of purchase of Louisiana, with full assurance that the Government will not break its faith. But that the ultimate power is reposed in Congress, he cannot question, for the Constitution to which he is born in allegiance, so plainly states.

But from this general argument let us turn to the Constitution itself and the decisions of the courts and text-writers, and let us, before we try any new experiment, find assurances for the faith that is in us.

Section 3 of Article 6 of the Constitution says: "New states may be admitted by the Congress into the Union." To assert that there can be a state out of the Union, is to deny the supremacy of the Constitution and the integrity of the Federal Union.

To maintain this doctrine, is to repudiate the ordinance of 1787 and violate its express provisions. This is the law under which it is claimed this right is guaranteed, and it is, but not to the extent to which it is asserted. This very guaranty provides:

"That the territory and the states which may be formed therein, shall forever remain a part of the Confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the articles of confederation, and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made."

This was subject to, and was changed by the subsequent adoption of the Constitution with the provision therein engrafted as to the power of Congress in the admission of a new state. This shows the relation of a territory and of the rights of its inhabitants to the National Government, and of the power to change from a territory to a state. In either case, whether state or territory, they must "forever remain a part of this confederacy." Not a state outside and independent of the Union, but one within and recognizing its authority in obedience to its Constitution and laws.

Congress has no power alone to make a state. It requires the concurrent action of both the people of the proposed state and Congress. The one party alone is not sufficient. The people of the proposed state may organize it preliminary thereto, but it requires the action of Congress before it is endowed with sovereignty, and is in the full sense a state.

The reliance that is placed upon the treaty of 1803 with France in what is known as the Louisiana purchase, though strong as a matter of equity and good faith from the Government to the people who settle that domain, certainly does not infringe upon or limit the power of Congress in regard to the admission of new states, erected out of the territory embraced in that purchase. The very article of the treaty relied upon states that they shall be admitted "according to the principles of the Federal Constitution." The Constitution reposed the power in Congress, which at that time was in force. A treaty, of course, has the same force as a law, but must not be in conflict with the Constitution. But in this case it is in harmony with, rests upon, and must be interpreted by it.

To carry this doctrine out, is to say that Dakota, Montana, Washington, Utah, in fact the whole of the western territories, may assert their right to statehood, and be states, without recognizing any supremacy or subversion in that regard by the National Government. They may or they may not agree with the adjoining commonwealth as to boundaries. Their ideas of what a republican form of government meant might radically differ from that of the nation. The right of franchise guaranteed by the Constitution might be intruded. Utah, already a sufficient stain on our civilization, might make her institution perpetual. To say that Congress has not a right to pass upon these, and questions necessarily incident to them, is to withdraw the sovereignty of the nation, and change the theory of its original founders, which is denied by reason as well as by authority.

The case of Tennessee is frequently referred to in this discussion as justifying this form of procedure. But I am not advised whether the new state as organized actually assumed the powers of sovereignty prior to the act of admission by Congress. I have never seen it so claimed. In February they notified the President that on March 28, 1796, "the temporary government established by Congress would cease." This notification, with the accompanying documents, President Washington transmitted to Congress, and the state was, in June following, duly admitted by Congress into the Union. Washington, in his message, recognized the authority of Congress in the premises, in transmitting to it for action, and "with the proof to entitle the territory to be admitted as a state into the Union."

The case of Michigan it is claimed, and the precedent there established, further justifies and sustains the claim made by the adherents of this doctrine. If so it will bear the fullest investigation. The Territorial Legislature passed an act January 20, 1835, authorizing the holding of a constitutional convention, to form a state constitution. Under this convention a constitution was formed, and was submitted and ratified by the people in October following, and state officers were at the same time elected. These were submitted to President Jackson—the constitution thus adopted and accompanying documents. In his message transmitting this constitution and documents to Congress, he says: "That instrument together with various other documents connected therewith has been transmitted to me for the purpose of being laid before Congress to whom the power and duty of admitting new states into the Union exclusively appertains, and the whole are herewith communicated for your early decision."

It would seem there could be no misapprehension as to the view taken by him, representing the executive department of the Government, as to the jurisdiction of Congress in the premises.

It would be needless to go into a full history of the proceedings at that time, or as to the differences between Ohio and Michigan as to her southern boundary; suffice it to say that Michigan was not admitted as a state into the Union by Congress under the above Constitution of June, 1835-36, till January 30, 1837. In the meantime, after its adoption and before the state was admitted into the Union, the state government had organized and had assumed the powers of sovereignty, the territorial officers practically merging into those of the state. Their Legislature convened and assumed to pass laws. Their courts were open, and the territorial governor was the executive of the pretended state, assuming its functions.

There seemed practically a unanimity of sentiment in sustaining the new order of things, and to relegate the territorial government to the rear. Its new executive found it necessary to his convenience and personal safety to go over to the other side of Lake Michigan. Here, then, we find this ideal state of this modern doctrine, outside of the Union, independent of the general government, with a population supporting it—repudiating and ignoring the territory, with a national administration and Congress practically in sympathy with their political faith. It certainly had all the elements of external support, and if this policy could succeed in any case, here the conditions were favorable. Now what do the courts say about it?

An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the state, in which was questioned the validity of a statute granting a corporate franchise by the Legislature before its admission as a state into the Union. It is the case of Scott et al. vs. Detroit Young Men's Society lessee, 2 Doug. 110. I will say as to this decision, that this court of necessity sustained the validity of the act and of the anomalous position assumed by the people of Michigan, and was forced, under the circumstances of the case, to hold a doctrine repudiated by every court, that at that time not only the state but the territorial government was in force—two sovereignties exercising the same jurisdiction in the same place and at the same time. Such a decision ought not and cannot serve as a precedent, when its decision has been overturned by repeated decisions, and that by the highest court of the nation. And further, it ought not to be a precedent, when, upon the results of its decision, depended its own existence and integrity. The case was appealed from this court to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is reported as Scott et al. vs. Jones, 5 How. 343. That court held that in the case presented it had no jurisdiction, for the reason that to justify that court in passing upon the construction of a statute of a state:

"There must be an act of solemnity and importance, such as a statute, and that statute must be by a state, a member of the Union and a public body, owing obedience and conformity to its Constitution and laws. * * * It must be a member of the Union, and it is not enough for it to be an organized political body within the limits of the Union. * * *

It follows, then, that a statute, passed by a political body before its admission into the Union, seems either not to be one under the cognizance of the Union, or its judicial tribunal under the judiciary act."

It may be asserted that this decision is the decision of a divided court. That proposition I deny. The whole court arrives at the same conclusion as to the statute of the pretended state, though through different lines of reasoning. Let us see what Mr. Justice McLean says, and it would seem very pertinent, coming from the source it does:

"Michigan was an organized territory of the United States. Its governor, judges, and all other territorial officers were in the discharge of their various functions. The sovereignty of the Union extended to it. Under these circumstances, the people of Michigan assembled by delegates in convention, and adopted a constitution, and under it elected members of both branches of their Legislature, governor, and judges, and organized the state government. No serious objection may be made, in my judgment, to the assemblage of the people in convention to form a constitution, although it is the more regular and customary mode to proceed under the sanction of an act of Congress. But until the state shall be admitted into the Union by act of Congress the territorial government remains unimpaired. No act of the people of a territory, without the sanction of Congress, can change the territorial into a state government. The Constitution requires the assent of Congress for the admission of a state into the Union, and the United States guaranty to every state in the Union, a republican form of government, hence the necessity in admitting a state, for Congress to examine its constitution."

The act to incorporate the members of the Young Men's Society, was the exercise of sovereign power, a power totally repugnant to the sovereignty of the Union, in its territorial form. * * * This act of incorporation was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, under which the territorial government was organized. It was repugnant to the laws of Congress which formed that organization. It was an exercise of sovereignty incompatible with the sovereignty of the Union, in all its legal forms. * * * The two sovereignties of the state and territorial governments cannot exist at the same time within the same limits. The territorial government exists in full vigor until it is abolished by the admission of the state."

I would cite the comments of Judge Jameson in his work on "Constitutional Conventions," section 209, wherein he clearly expresses himself in approval of the reasons given by Mr. Justice McLean in the opinions I have just quoted. It is as follows:

"The only observation I wish to make upon the case is that our Constitution knows no purgatorial condition, intermediate between that of a territory and that of a state. So long as a political organization is a territory, it is not in any sense or for any purpose, a state, and vice versa. Once a territory, always a territory, until a change is effected by an act of Congress. A territory may seize upon the reins of power and make of itself, de facto, a state, but when it does so it departs from the legal and regular courses, and enters upon the field of revolution."

And he further speaks, in discussing the case of Tennessee, section 182, that:

"If a territory were to proceed to establish a state government it would place itself outside the pale of the law, and invoke the methods and forces of revolution."

The same question as in the case of Scott et al. vs. Jones, supra, was passed upon by the Supreme Court of Ohio by a unanimous court in an opinion pronounced by one of its most able judges. This was upon the validity of another statute passed by the Legislature of Michigan before its admission. The cause was ably argued at the bar. Mr. Waite, afterward chief justice of the United States Supreme Court, asserted the doctrine which I now urge. The opinion of the court is a reiteration of the doctrine enunciated by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Scott v. Jones, supra, and states:

"That the views taken by that court are entirely unanswerable and we adopt them to the fullest extent."

And after embodying as a part of their opinion the views of Justice McLean, they conclude as follows:

"Satisfied as to the correctness of these positions and yielding obedience to the requirements of the Constitution of the United States, we hold that the Legislature of Michigan, assembled under the constitution afterward submitted to Congress, could not, on March 25, 1836, when the act in question was attempted to be passed, rightfully exercise any legislative power whatever."

The historic opinion of Judge Taney in the case of Dred Scott vs. Sanford, 19 How. 393, is cited as approving this doctrine. But it would seem to me that it is therein clearly enunciated, that the question is a political one and the admission of a state rests in the discretion of Congress. He says at page 447:

"The propriety of admitting a new state is committed to the sound discretion of Congress. The power to acquire territory for that purpose, to be held by the United States until it is in a suitable condition to become a state upon an equal footing with the other states, must rest upon the same discretion. It is a question for the political department of the Government and not for the judicial."

I quote without comment from Cooley's "Constitutional Limitations," edition of 1883, page 30:

"If the people of a territory shall of their own motion, without such enabling act, meet in convention, frame and adopt a constitution, and demand admission to the Union under it, such action does not entitle them, as matter of right, to be recognized as a state, but the power that can admit can, also refuse, and the territorial status must be continued until Congress shall be satisfied to suffer the territory to become a state. There are always in these cases questions of policy as well as of constitutional law, to be determined by the Congress before admission becomes a matter of right,—Whether the constitution formed is republican; whether suitable and proper state boundaries have been fixed upon, whether the population is sufficient; whether the proper qualifications for the exercise of the elective franchise have been agreed to, whether any inveterate evil exists in the territory which is now subject to control, but which might be perpetuated under a state government. These and the like questions, in which the whole country is interested, cannot be finally solved by the people of the territory for themselves, but the final decision must rest with Congress, and the judgment must be favorable before admission can be claimed or expected."

I shall also quote further from Judge Cooley, in his recent work, "The History of Michigan," published in 1885. It has been extensively advertised that in this work he approves and sanctions this method and procedure. If so, his authority should have great weight, as he is one of the foremost of our constitutional writers. I shall quote fully so that there can be no misapprehension:

"It was very certain, however, that though Michigan might have a right to recognition as a state, the right was not so far absolute as that its observance could be impelled. Congress could alone recognize a state as a member of the Union, and admit its representatives to seats in the two Houses; and if it should refuse to do this, even in the plainest case of right, no means or methods of compelling it to take the proper action could possibly exist. Michigan, if a state in fact, was, therefore, a state out of the Union until it should please Congress to grant admission. But the condition of things in which a state was exercising powers of sovereignty within the limits of Federal jurisdiction, but not in the Union, was too anomalous for long continuance. * * * The state officers, though supported by the people and in the undisputed possession of their offices, could not fail to realize the fact that acquiescence by the Federal authorities in the present condition of things would only be temporary, and that the time must come when there would be a conflict in which the state could scarcely fail to be overborne. In short it was manifest that Congress was master of the situation, and that however clear might be the right of the state, it must sooner or later accept such terms as should be dictated to it. * * * The state could not maintain its anomalous position, and for any wrong in its treatment only Congress could give redress. The courts, as the seceding states discovered in the reconstruction period, are powerless to control public political action, or to call it in question for any purpose."

The above statements are so clear, I pass them without comment.

Von Hoist in his most admirable and exhaustive "Constitutional History of the United States," in speaking of the course pursued by Michigan in the organization of the state government, characterizes it as being "thoroughly irregular," and in discussing the controversy in Congress over the admission of Missouri into the Union, he states that "as a territory she was absolutely under the control of Congress." As still further showing the views of this eminent writer upon this form of procedure, I quote: "A motion to defer the consideration of the bill for the admission of Missouri was made in the House of Representatives, when Scott, the delegate of the territory, objected that Missouri would, in this case, go on and organize a state government without waiting for any leave from Congress. And this threat of the territorial delegate against the whole Union was punished as a piece of laughable insolence."

He also states in reference to the power given to Congress in the Constitution for the admission of new states: "This does not impose a duty upon Congress, but grants a right which it can use in accordance with its discretion."

This argument then, if I am right, leads us irresistibly to these conclusions:

1. That the act of the Dakota Legislative Assembly of 1885, authorizing the constitutional convention, the formation and adoption of it by the people, the election of officers preparatory to its admission into the Union by Congress, was usual, legal and in accordance with established precedents. That the only power to admit us and to make vital what we had so far done, was Congress, and without that action we cannot be.

2. That the laws of Congress under the Constitution are supreme, and that no act of the people of a territory, without the sanction of Congress, can change the territorial into a state government.

3. That until the state is admitted into the Union by Congress, the territorial government remains unimpaired, and any assumption of sovereignty prior to such admission by Congress is unauthorized and void as being in conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

4. That an assumption of sovereignty by a state so formed, and not admitted to the Union of States, is repugnant to the laws of Congress which formed the territorial organization, and in it is an attempted exercise of sovereignty incompatible with the sovereignty of the Union.

5. That the territorial government therefore being in existence till the admission of the state into the Union by Congress, the state cannot exist as a sovereignty until the happening of that event, as the two sovereignties cannot exist at the same time within the same limits.

6. That the admission of a state is a political question and the right is non enforceable except by political action. It is in no sense judicial.

What then is the ultimate remedy? Certainly not in unusual or extravagant procedure. Not in ways over which the guide post of danger is erected and upon which is inscribed the Constitution and laws of our country, saying thou shall not enter here.

Follow in the way we are on. It is the right one. Hold fast to the things we have, and around that principle and that sentiment stand loyally to the end. It will triumph for it is right. I do not mean of course that we must of necessity stand by the Constitution already adopted, if it is thought another Convention and Constitution would be advisable. I only mean to be understood that as a line of action to be pursued, it is the correct one. By every proper method keep alive the sentiment in Dakota. But that sentiment is not to be fought here alone. We must transfer the forum of its activity to the great heart of the American people. And that heart must be reached so that it will feel our wrongs, and appreciate this monstrous outrage perpetrated upon this people without guise, color or excuse.

If we cannot move Congress the American people can. It has done so before and surely history will repeat itself. Can we afford to assume the responsibility of such a step? Would the friends in Congress we already have justify or sustain it, and can we in a personal sense afford to do it? The wrong, humiliation and suffering of the present are sufficient. Our present condition discourages the approach of capital or the upbuilding and developing of our wonderful resources. Values are insecure. Rates of interest high. Such a form of government is entirely unsuited to the wants and necessities of our people. A condition to which it was united, we have long ago outgrown.

But shall we surrender the present with all its defects, and enter with our eyes wide open into a condition of things upon which no order rests? Shall we resolve ourselves into chaos, without law, without order, without protection? Shall we imperil all property interests, undo all municipal organizations, and take our chances in this new order of things, with a Legislature without authority, with courts without jurisdiction, with an executive without power to command? In fact, a pretended organization that would be a fiction, a substance that would be a shadow, a pretence that would be anarchy. And in this attitude, would our appeal be any more potent, or our cause strengthened? On the contrary I would consider it very much the reverse.

If such an experiment were adopted, what in a practical way would be the possibility of its success? Are the present conditions here the same as they were in Michigan? Are we certain the people here believe in its expediency? Would they give adherence to the new order of things? Are Congress and the national administration now in political sympathy with the large majority of our people here, as they were there? No government can exist without revenue. Would the people sustain it with their money when no law justified its existence? And as soon as the payment was sought to be enforced, would it not be resisted, and would not an immediate conflict of jurisdiction ensue? Would the great corporations that now pay a large tribute into the treasury, then pay at all? Into what court would people go to litigate their rights? You answer it yourselves, without any suggesting. At present it certainly seems to me it would not be recognized or adhered to.

I deplore our position as deeply as any citizen of Dakota. But when I stand in the presence of the Constitution and laws of my country, I submit, until that injustice is so great that revolution would be the only remedy, and the end to be secured justifiable. See I know our present condition and treatment are un-American. It dwarfs the expansive power of citizenship, and stultifies manhood. Instead of promoting the growth of loyalty and patriotism to the Government, it kindles a feeling of resentment. But I would not give up. The times are ripe; a national canvass has just opened. The great parties have just formed their lines. The Dakota question was before both conventions. In the one it was embodied in their platform and the chiefest exponent of Dakota's rights in the Senate is its standard bearer.

It is today the question of all questions before the American people, save the tariff, and it ought to be the first. Let Dakotans go and tell with their own lips, this continuing and unpardonable outrage, in every close congressional district; and the American people, ever given to fair play, will hear her voice, and they will see to it that citizenship is made as dignified here as elsewhere. And that he who would deny us this, under such a government as ours, in this the Nineteenth Century, is unworthy the suffrages of a free people, or to sit in the Council Chambers of the Nation.

Judge Hugh J. Campbell, whose position regarding the right of the people to set up a state government without the sanction of Congress, was diametrically opposed to the views of Mr. Gamble, and had gained for him considerable reputation, had reason to think republicans ungrateful, for he had labored incessantly and intelligently to advance the cause of division and statehood, and never failed to produce abundant evidence sustaining the steps taken by the people to secure their rights, of which he had been a principal and the most zealous advocate. There were many friends of the cause who thought he did more, perhaps, than the exigency of the case required, or good judgment would approve, and in his most radical suggestions offended the judgment of senators who were doing what they could to promote the Dakota measures. It might have seemed to many that a desire to display his erudition through the gratuitous privilege granted by the press, actuated him, as well as his patriotic desire to relieve his fellow men of the burdens of a weak, vacillating and corrupt government.

In his public addresses, Judge Campbell took very advanced ground on the subject of the predominating power of the people of the territories over the territorial government. He claimed that the people of the territory could, through the Legislature, refuse to make any appropriations whatever, could repeal all laws concerning territorial revenue, could repeal all laws that gave to the United States courts the adjudication of territorial business, could close the courthouses and jails—in short, could put the territorial government entirely without anything to do, or to do with, and in this way bring Congress to realize the determination of Dakota to compel that body to acknowledge its rights—its lawful claims to division and admission.

Herein it seems that the judge overlooked the decisions of the United States Supreme Court which had decided in the Yankton County bond case, that Congress had such absolute control over the territories that it could legislate for them and did legislate for them by changing important provisions in the railroad bond bill, after it had been voted upon and ratified by the people, which changes the Supreme Court defended and confirmed. Congress also annulled the law of the Legislature regarding exemptions in the territory. It is therefore to be unquestioned that Congress could have re-enacted every law the territorial Legislature repealed or annulled, and might have abolished the territorial Legislature absolutely and taken the work of providing laws for the territory into its own hands.

There was no apprehension, however, that the conflict would reach such a crisis as to demand any test of the powers and authority of the people, and it would have been a better definition of these to have shown what the Supreme Court had already definitely decided in that direction.

It would seem that under the decision of the Supreme Court quoted, and the practice of Congress, though sometimes reluctantly, to legislate for the territory, and amend or annul the statutes of the territorial Legislature, that the people would have been helpless to obstruct the execution of the territorial laws, especially under such a radical one-state governor as Church, or to stop the machinery of the territorial government, by any legislative action, even admitting that a Legislature could be elected that would be willing to go to such extremes, and there was little probability that such a Legislature could be elected.

HARRISON AT HOME SPEAKS FOR DAKOTA

After the nominations for President had been made, delegations of citizens from the various states journeyed from their homes to Indianapolis to pay their respects to Mr. Harrison, while Mr. Cleveland being President was obliged to have his residence at Washington, and received his friends at the White House. As these visits were of daily and frequently of hourly occurrence, and the presidential candidate was expected to make a courteous response to his visitors and improve the occasion to advocate the principles of his party, and occasionally give out a text for a thousand advocates scattered all over the Union to enlarge upon and impress upon the people, the nominee found every waking hour employed in doing the duties of host and speaking. It required an iron constitution to withstand the strain of such a campaign, and both Harrison and Cleveland were equal to the emergency. On one occasion during the last of July, a delegation numbering a thousand or more of Indiana people called on General Harrison. They bore a number of banners variously inscribed with campaign mottoes, and the general selected a text for a portion of his address from one that spoke of the application of the territories of Dakota and Washington for statehood. He said:

There are several territories organized under public law, with definite boundaries. They have been filled with the very elect of our citizens—the brave, the enterprising, and the intelligent young men from all the states. Many of the veterans of the late war have sought under our beneficent homestead law new homes in the West. Several of these territories have been for years possessed of population, wealth, and all the requisites for admission as states. When the Territory of Indiana took the census which was the basis of its petition for admission to the Union we had less than 64,000 people. We had only thirteen organized counties.

In the Territory of South Dakota there are nearly a half million people. For years they have been knocking for admission to the sisterhood of states. They are possessed of all the elements of an organized and stable community. It has more people, more miles of railway, more postoffices, more churches, more banks, more wealth, than any territory ever possessed when it was admitted to the Union. It surpasses some of the states in these particulars. Four years ago, when a President was to be chosen, the Committee on Territories in the Senate, to meet the objections of our democratic friends that the admission of Dakota would be a disturbing element in the electoral college, provided in the Dakota bill that its organization should be postponed until after the election. Now four years have rolled around, and our people are again to take part in a presidential election, and the intelligent and patriotic people of Dakota are again to be deprived of any participation. I ask you why this is so? Is not the answer obvious? They are disfranchised and deprived of their appropriate influence in the electoral college only because the prevailing sentiment in the territory is republican. The case of Washington Territory is more recent but not more flagrant. If we appropriately express sympathy with the cause of Irish home rule shall we not also demand home rule for Dakota and Washington and insist that their disfranchisement shall not be prolonged? There is a sense of justice, of fairness, that will assert itself against these attempts to coin party advantage out of public wrong. The day when men can be disfranchised or shorn of their political power for opinion's sake must have an end in our country.

DAKOTA IN THE NATIONAL PLATFORM

The national republican platform contained the following reference to Dakota and the territories on the question of statehood:

Resolved, That South Dakota should of right be immediately admitted as a state into the Union, under the constitution framed and adopted by her people, and we heartily endorse the action of the republican Senate in twice reporting bills for her admission. And the refusing of the democratic house, for partisan purposes, to favorably consider these bills is a wilful violation of the sacred American principle of local self-government, and merits the condemnation of all just men.

Resolved, That the pending bills in the Senate for acts to enable the people of North Dakota, Montana and Washington territories to form constitutions and establish state governments should be passed without unnecessary delay, and a similar equitable bill should be passed to enable the people of the Territory of New Mexico to form a constitution and state government.

Resolved, That government by Congress of the territories is based upon necessities only to the end that they may become states in the Union. Therefore, when the conditions of population, material resource, public intelligence and morality are such as to insure a stable local government therein, the people of such territories should be permitted, as a right inherent in them, to form for themselves constitutions and state governments, and be admitted into the Union, and pending this preparation for statehood, all officers thereof should be selected from the bona fide residents and citizens of the territory wherein they are to serve.

It will be observed that the final resolutions declare for the principle Dakota had for years been contending for, that statehood for a territory was a right which the people were justified in demanding and receiving, and not a privilege to be granted or withheld at the discretion of Congress, always providing the territory came with the necessary qualifications of population, resources, and a constitution republican in form.

Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, in his speech in the celebrated debate on the Dakota bill in 1886, declared that it was the duty of the people of a territory to form a state government and come into the Union as soon as their qualifications would warrant; that the territorial government was designed for a probationary term only until the people thereof were qualified by numbers and intelligence and resources to enter the Union as a state.

The resolutions above noticed were prepared by the delegates representing the territories, and South Dakota represented by Colonel Moody and others, had a hand in their preparation. It was the first case where a national convention had defined the right, and it was to be regretted that it came so late that almost no territories remained to take advantage of it.

A WELL TIMED STATEMENT FROM THE NEW YORK INDEPENDENT

One of the most influential non-partisan publications in the United States, the New York Independent, took occasion to speak quite plainly to its many thousands of readers on the political situation in the Territory of Dakota just before the presidential election of 1888.

There was a sagacious partisan design in the article, aside from the general statement made regarding the territory. A national election would occur in thirty days (the article appeared early in October) for congressmen in nearly all the states, and for presidential electors, and tens of thousands of voters in New York and nearly every other state read the Independent and placed considerable confidence in its statements and were influenced by it. It had no little patronage among Dakotans. The result of the election, a close one for Congress, where the republican majority was only four, indicates that a favorable word spoken in the nick of time may save the state. It was evident that the mind of the writer was upon the national canvass more than on the territory at the time, and the purpose was to furnish an unanswerable argument in favor of Dakota's admission into the Union and to persuade the people to so cast their votes at the national election as to assist in securing to the territory her constitutional rights. In so voting the voter in the states would be influenced to vote for the republican candidates for President and vice president and for a republican House of Representatives. It is probable that such well timed articles on the Dakota situation aided materially in the republican victory in November. The Independent article follows:

The great political contest to be fought out within the next thirty days is of supreme importance to the people of Dakota, not because of the tariff issue, though they are deeply concerned in the maintenance of the principle of protection, but because it means either the dominance of a party pledged to keep Dakota in swaddling clothes for four years more—or the dominance of a party which will admit two powerful states into the Union, where they belong by birth, age and suitable preparation.

1. Dakota is qualified to enter the Union as two states by reason of population. A line drawn through the territory east and west, along the 40th parallel of latitude, would make two states almost equal in area, each of them larger than Missouri; the southern state with an actual population of 300,000, the northern with a population of 250,000. These people are qualified to govern themselves as states by reason of their intelligence. There is less illiteracy in Dakota than in any New England state. Dakota spent $100,000 more in 1887 for public schools than did Connecticut. The northern and southern prospective states are already furnished, each, with a state university, agricultural college, normal schools, and institutions for the care of the insane and the deaf and dumb. There are as many newspapers in Dakota as in Maine, Connecticut and Rhode Island combined. There are nearly two hundred Congregational churches, as many Presbyterian, and an equal number of Methodist churches, and other denominations swell the total to 1,000 churches in that territory. Surely such a people of schools and churches are able to govern themselves. They ought to be admitted to the Union because of their commercial importance. One-seventh of the entire wheat crop of the United States is raised in Dakota. Twenty states, including New York, yield less corn than Dakota. Silver and gold worth $33,770,000 have been dug out of her mines. Forty-three million dollars' worth of live stock are fattened upon her native grasses. Four thousand two hundred miles of railroad track traverse her prairies. New York City and Boston were both a hundred years old before they had as large a population as Fargo, in North Dakota, or Sioux Falls, in South Dakota.

2. But this population has been gathered, this intelligence diffused, this valuable property accumulated, in spite of a system of government more despotic than that against which the colonies rebelled. The governor is appointed without regard to the wishes of the people by the President at Washington. The judiciary is appointed in the same arbitrary manner. The Legislature is left for the people to appoint, but is often shaped and molded by the governor to do his will, because of the immense patronage of his office. Today in Dakota the governor can dismiss every officer in every public institution from the penitentiary to the normal school, and put his own friends in these important places, and in some instances has done this very thing, while the people are taxed to support them. In national affairs this imperial realm has one delegate in the lower house, who is allowed to speak on territorial matters, so that in fact Dakota has as much to say about the great national policies that affect her equally with other states as has the Kingdom of Portugal.

This territorial system deprives Dakota of the use of her millions of acres of school lands, which cannot be used before statehood, thus crushing her down with the weight of school taxes. This territorial system prevents the investment of much capital that would otherwise enter this region, as capital is timorous, and will not so readily go where there is as yet no permanent government. As a result, rates of interest are enormous, and if free trade diminishes wages east, territorial government keeps the Dakota farmer a slave to the money lender.

At enormous cost and sacrifice the pioneers of this goodly land have made it what it is, and they have a right to demand that the American people give them the privilege of self-government and statehood. They have asked for and been ready for it these six years, and by a large majority a year ago voted that they desired division and immediate admission. The democratic party, with its hand at the throat of Dakota, says it shall not thus be admitted. The prohibition party has not even heard the cry, or has paid no attention when it did hear, though its platform embodies much sympathy for the wrongs of far-away people. The republican party alone has thought of Dakota, and championed its cause. Through it alone can Dakota hope for liberty. Therefore its people, aside from the democratic garrison of office-holders and office-seekers, are republicans.

The result of the national election assured the early admission of the Dakotas into the Union, though the republican majority in the House of Representatives was seen to be dangerously close to the vanishing point.

The republicans of the nation had espoused Dakota's cause, and made the most of it in their platform speeches during the campaign. They had been aided in their doubtful congressional districts by Dakota speakers, among whom were Colonel Plummer, of Jamestown, Judge Moody, of Deadwood, Judge Edgerton, of Mitchell, H. J. Campbell, of Yankton, Governor Mellette, of Watertown, Hon. J. G. Kleiner, of Pierre, Congressman Gifford and Mathews, ex-Governor Pierce, and others. Dakota's division and admission was their theme, and it proved a more entertaining subject to the eastern voters than even the tariff—it was compared to the demand for "home rule" in Ireland, for which millions of Americans felt a sincere sympathy.

INTERVIEW WITH HARRISON AND MCKINLEY

Within a fortnight after the election and as soon as it was definitely settled that the republicans would control the next administration, executive and legislative, Judge G. C. Moody and Governor-elect Melette visited President Harrison at Indianapolis. Both had been acquainted with the general before, and Mellette enjoyed his friendship. They were anxious to ascertain the mind of the President-elect as to calling an extra session of Congress following his inauguration in March, 1889, for the purpose of admitting the Dakotas into the Union. The visit was made not in a representative capacity, but as friends desirous of expressing congratulations and to obtain such information as they could on the matter then of the first importance to them, one of whom had been elected governor of the new state that was to be, and the other United States senator. General Harrison was extremely cordial—gratified that Dakota would soon be "out of the woods," but without giving any intimation about an extra session, the interview closed. An extra session, however, was most confidently predicted. One would have supposed from the emphatic declarations made in the newspapers and by the well informed people that the election had been held and Harrison and a republican Congress elected for the sole purpose of having an extra session of Congress in order that the Dakotas might be admitted, her senators and congressmen seated, that the Government might pursue the even "tenor of its way," and give its attention to many other matters, possibly of less importance. No one ever suggested that events might so shape themselves during the few weeks of the short term of the Congress then in session, that an extra session to provide for Dakota's admission would be unnecessary.

The question of a new constitution for the State of South Dakota was briefly discussed by the Dakota gentlemen with the President-elect. The sentiment in South Dakota seemed to favor the adoption of the constitution framed at Sioux Falls in 1885, and already adopted and ratified by a vote of the people. The President-elect made no suggestions looking to any changes in the constitution of South Dakota, but stated that he thought it would be better to hold a new election for state officers.

Hon. William McKinley, of Ohio, was a member of the House of Representatives and had been reelected a member of the next. His views on the outlook for an extra session were sought, and he appeared to have given the subject serious consideration, for he stated that "nothing could justify calling Congress together but the urgent need of legislation of broad, national, non partisan character." It was suggested to him that such a justifiable reason might be found in the admission of four new states that had been kept out of the Union for years after they were prepared for statehood. McKinley replied:

No, sir, that will not do. The admission of those territories is too narrow an issue to justify an extra session. They can frame their constitutions in the summer and be admitted in the fall. I cannot think it would be proper to summon Congress in extraordinary session merely to hasten their admission by a few months. Much as I desire to see that object accomplished, public opinion would not approve it. The republicans would be accused of imposing an extra session upon the country, simply to gain a party advantage to increase a party majority in Congress. The issue is too narrow, too local, too partisan. It would give the democrats a pretext for filibustering to obstruct legislation. There is a larger, broader, more patriotic issue close at hand in the urgent need for the reduction of taxation to dispose of the surplus annually increasing in the treasury. There is no party advantage to be gained by it except that of serving the whole country well. I do not know that an extra session will be called. I do not know that there has been any consultation on the subject. But if Congress is called together in the spring I hope it will be on the ground and for the purpose indicated, to reduce the surplus revenue and diminish the burden of taxation in the well-known line of republican policy. When that is done Congress may probably address itself to the question of the admission of new states.

CONGRESS AFTER ELECTION

At the opening of the second session of the Fiftieth Congress, December 3, 1888, Mr. William Springer, chairman of the House Committee on Territories, made a brief statement regarding the action contemplated for the admission of certain territories into the Union, which statement is here appended:

We are going to try very hard to pass a bill admitting to the Union the territories of Washington, Montana, Dakota and New Mexico, and we shall certainly pass the Oklahoma bill at once. The next House will undoubtedly be republican by a small majority, and I suppose the republicans of both the House and the Senate would have no objections to strengthening that majority. The territories could be states in time to elect senators and representatives to the Fifty-first Congress. Montana, Washington and Dakota are republican. The Senate may insist upon the division of Dakota, and such action would probably block matters for a while. I am in favor of any reasonable compromise. I am, and have been, in favor of the admission of these four territories on a broader ground than that of politics. I sincerely hope that we shall be able to pass an enabling act during this short session.

Springer said he had pledges from the committee having charge of business of higher privilege that they will not antagonize him. He is convinced that the coast is clear and that the territories will have their long sought hearing. He is satisfied that his omnibus bill is as perfect as he can make it, and is ready for a vote. The other people were ready too—Mr. Gifford with his amendments to the Senate bill, Mr. Cox with his amendments to the omnibus bill, Mr. McDonald, of Minnesota, with a general statement of amendments, consolidation and compromise.

Mr. Springer had been leading a fight so long on a plan of his own for statehood for Dakota as one state, with New Mexico, Montana and Washington or Wyoming, or Idaho, that "Springer bill" had become synonymous with "Dakota bill," and he was doubtless anxious to have his name coupled in an honorable way with whatever measure should finally be enacted for Dakota's statehood.

The delegates from the territories, Dakota, by Gifford, Toole, of Montana, and Voorhees, of Washington, had concluded to push statehood matters for their territories, being encouraged thereto by democrats in Congress. Toole and Voorhees were both democrats, and many of the democratic congressmen expressed themselves in favor of Toole's plan which was to admit Dakota as two states, Montana and Washington.

The legislative situation in Congress at this time was something like this—Springer's four-state omnibus bill of last session pending in the House; the Platt bill (Senate bill), to admit South and organize North Dakota as a territory, passed by the Senate and pending in the House; enabling acts for Washington, Montana and North Dakota pending in the Senate. As viewed in Washington by those well posted, the only bill that had any chance of success at this session was Springer's four-state bill with the Platt bill as an amendment, and this, with important modifications, was the measure that finally passed.

SPRINGER'S JOINT OMNIBUS BILL IN CAUCUS

Mr. Springer's position, however, remained firm that he would not consent to the passage of single bills for the admission of the territories. He insisted that the Territory of New Mexico had just as many claims for admission as a state as Dakota, or Washington, or Montana, and should be treated like them, even if it does usually give a democratic majority. On the other hand, Senator Manderson, who had charge of territorial matters in the Senate, said that he was willing to agree to the omnibus bill admitting North and South Dakota, Montana and Washington, but he would not agree to admit New Mexico until after the census of 1890 had determined its population to be sufficiently large to justify it.

December 11th, the first democratic House caucus was held and was entirely devoted to the admission to the Union of the territories. Hon. S. S. Cox, of Ohio, here advocated the admission of all the territories except Utah and New Mexico. He said the democratic party might as well gain the good will of the people of the territories as their ill will. The people of Dakota preferred division on the 7th standard parallel almost unanimously, and he was of the opinion that their desires should be listened to. Washington, Montana and Idaho should be given enabling acts at once. The great Territory of Dakota should be divided, and the democrats should secure the prestige which would certainly come to them from the favorable action of their caucus. They had lost Minnesota at the last election because they had failed to admit Dakota, which was on the same isothermal line. After much discussion, Cox evidently being in the minority, and without taking a vote on the resolutions presented, the caucus adjourned for two days.

When the caucus reassembled there were about sixty members present, including Speaker Carlisle. It remained in session three hours. Mr. Cox appeared as the champion of Dakota, but the majority were probably against him, owing to his decided stand in opposition to New Mexico and Utah. Finally the caucus agreed upon the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this caucus provision should be made by which Dakota may be admitted into the Union, as one state or two states, as the people of the two proposed states may hereafter determine. Also that the necessary legislation ought to be provided for the early admission into the Union of the territories of Washington, Montana and New Mexico. That these measures should all be embodied in one bill, either by an amendment to the pending bill or otherwise, as to details, as the Committee on Territories shall determine; and that an order of the House for the consideration of the measure should be made at an early day, and the bill considered in the House at the earliest day practicable.

The caucus then adjourned.

SPRINGER, COX AND McDONALD BEFORE THE HOUSE

The menace of an extra session of Congress following President Harrison's inauguration worked in the interest of all the territories that were in line for statehood, the democrats being quite strongly opposed to it because if called to facilitate the admission of the territories it would be viewed by the people as a rebuke and a reflection upon the intelligence and patriotism of the democratic party, which for selfish partisan reasons, by denying the territories their lawful rights, had made an extra session indispensably necessary. At the same time, in the inner councils of the republican leaders, it had been tentatively determined that it would not be judicious to have an extra session. The admission of the territories was not considered a sufficient reason for convening Congress in extraordinary session. This view of the matter, however, was not known generally, and even the most prominent and presumably the best informed of the Dakota leaders were foremost in proclaiming their confidence in an extra session.

Mr. Springer exhibited some symptoms of yielding to the pressure of Representatives Cox and McDonald, of his party, who were firmly for two states and immediate admission of South Dakota, though both loyal to the democratic caucus decision. That Mr. Springer's views had undergone some modification is evident from the following declaration made by him about January 1, 1889:

We shall insist upon the consideration of the territorial bills when they come up on the 15th of January, and shall allow nothing to step in and set them aside. I shall substitute the house omnibus bill for the Senate (Platt) bill, and will find no difficulty in so doing, for I shall have the solid vote of the majority at my back. The caucus settled that question, and even Mr. Cox and Judge McDonald, who favored an immediate division of Dakota, will vote with us.

I am still as thoroughly opposed to the division of Dakota as ever, and for the same reasons I have always presented. But I stand ready to allow Dakota to vote on this question again, and if she then decides she wants division, my bill is so arranged that she can divide and come in as two states. I am not in this true to my own state, for Illinois, with four million of people, has but two senators, while we are willing to promote harmony among Dakotans by allowing 600,000 people four senators. But we cannot allow this division to be made on the last vote taken on this question in Dakota, for the north half voted by 10,000 against division. Of course, South Dakota voted by 14,000 majority for division, but we could not admit that South Dakota should settle this question against the desires of the north. So I have insisted that Dakota should again vote upon this question, and, if division is carried, she can divide her assets between the north and south and set up two state governments.

Regarding the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885, Mr. Springer said:

It had been submitted to the people and ratified by a vote of 25,000 to 6,000. The total vote had been only 31,000, while at that time there had been 65,000 voters in the territory. In view of the smallness of the vote, he insisted, justice to the people of Dakota required that a new convention should be held. He called attention to the various provisions of the constitution which he considered bore the marks of having been formulated hastily. He criticized the clause that all the existing archives, records and books belonging to the Territory of Dakota should belong to the State of South Dakota. Under that clause the secretary of state of the new state was authorized to go to the capital of Dakota and denude it of every scrap of paper and every book belonging to the territory.

Representative Cox, of New York, followed Springer, and favored the omnibus bill, with some amendments. His speech was addressed to the general subject of the making of new states, and was warmly applauded. He was a democrat, but he was quite friendly to the admission of Dakota, and found it necessary to oppose the dilatory proceedings of Mr. Springer. His initials were "S. S." and he was popularly known as "Sunset Cox," and was quite a popular orator, and Dakotans will be interested in knowing his opinion of the territory and its enterprising and intelligent people. The following is not the entire speech, but quotations of the portions that will furnish a fair idea of the whole. He said:

Dakota in length and breadth, in population, in area, in wealth, and in progress, stands unexampled in the annals of mankind for material, political, and, I may say, intellectual and spiritual advancement.

It is impossible, Mr. Speaker, to resist the demand of such a state even when divided. You cannot chain this Prometheus to a rock. Its organism—counties, towns and cities, governed just now as Indians are governed, by a remote department in this city, cannot afford to wait upon a Congress whose recreations are filibustering and whose best business habits are the ridicule of the nation. Why should such a country so rich, and prosperous, and intelligent, be governed differently from Georgia, or Massachusetts, Illinois or New York? You cannot keep such a people down. Your territorial organization and your 200 federal officers chosen outside; your governor with his little brief authority exacting every dollar spent of the people's money should pass through his palm, is an alien system. Our fathers would have none of it in the Revolution, and our countrymen were prompt to be rid of it after the Civil war.

Refuse to admit this state and its territorial sisters? Why, sir, you may enact that frost shall cease in the North, and bloom in the South, or try to fix the figure of Proteus by statute, but you cannot prevent the people of this territory from their demand, and you must accede to it. And if this Congress does not, we know the next Congress will.

The spirit of the people of the Northwest is that of unbounded push and energy. These are the men who have tunneled our mountains, who have delved our mines, who have bridged our rivers, who have brought every part of our empire within the reach of foreign and home markets, who have made possible our grand growth and splendid development. They are the men who have made our national life. There is no parallel in history to their achievements. You cannot hold them as captive to the federal system. You must give them self-reliant statehood. We should be mindful of those laws which bring to the front those states upon our border whose destiny will be our own. I will not say that all the hardy sons of New England, New York, and the other middle and eastern states, have emigrated to the West and followed the isothermal line who make up the million of men who now ask under this bill for statehood. But such an emigration of men who can grapple with the hardships of pioneer life does drain the best element of our older states.

The emigration from the eastern states does constitute the nerve, the sinew, the muscle, and the mind which penetrates the wilderness and builds up the commonwealth. It is the unaided energy which has made a million of men stand in intelligent masses and asked of the Federal Government participation in its blessings and its glories. The pioneer reckes not of the past. He works in the living present. All the energies of his nature are aroused by the splendid prospect and by the glowing inspiration of budding commonwealths. Government itself is but an incident in the march of civilization. No figures of speech, no flights of imagination can picture or compass the achievements of this state-making and man-ennobling advancement. Like the eagle, to which our nation is often compared, he seeks a wider ether for his wings, and the fire within his heart seeks the source of all illumination—the sun itself.

How much nobler and wiser is the effort to install and institute such states in our own land, rather than chase the "igneus fatuus" of Canadian annexation. There will be time for that when our nebulous territories put off their rudimentary, and don their stately stoles of independence.

All this time in the world's history, when the overgrown nations of Europe are seeking fresh colonial dependencies, when the centers of Asia and Africa and the coasts and islands of every sea are scrutinized as homes for immigration, is it not ennobling to contemplate the quiet, yet immense, expansion of our own numbers, and our realm within our own boundaries during the past hundred years, and to feel that glowing pride over the prediction of what our country shall be when another century comes around.

This energetic and hopeful people have in their veins the vigorous blood of many races. They have inherited the material, intellectual, and moral triumphs of the Old and New World and their civilization. They have settled upon soil which has no rival in richness and no peer in production. Their faith in their future is buoyant. No perplexity about their fortune, no weariness in their work, no despondency in their hope, but exulting ever in their strength, these millions move on to fill up our territory from sea to sea, from Canada to the gulf, and from north to south. Restless, active, and yet ready, their movements are like those of the heavenly bodies, and shining like them they move in orbits of their own, and are as fixed in our heavens as the stars.

Delegate Gifford followed Mr. Cox. His speech was a reply to Mr. Springer. The people of Dakota, he said, wanted no further vote upon the question of "division." The people were also satisfied with the Sioux Falls constitution, which he proved was a better organic law than was likely to be produced under the proscriptions and limitations of this omnibus bill. Gifford's speech was closely followed by members who were seeking information on the subject, and it made a favorable impression. There were five set speeches made, and without reaching a vote, the House adjourned at 5 o'clock, and resumed consideration of the measure the next day, and after much debate the motion of Mr. Springer, striking out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill No. 185, and substituting House bill No. 8,400, the omnibus bill was agreed to by a vote of 133 to 120.

During these proceedings, on the 17th, an amendment to the Dakota bill was adopted, providing that all lands sold for common school purposes should not be sold for less than $10 an acre.

The House finished consideration of the bill on the 17th, when the amended Senate bill was placed on its final passage—the first omnibus bill, in fact—and was passed by a vote of 144 to 98.

The question then being on agreeing to the title of the bill, Representative Grosvenor, of Ohio, suggested that the title should read:

"A bill to try to convince the people of Dakota that the democratic party is willing that Dakota should come into the Union, but in fact intends to keep that territory and all others that have a republican majority out of the Union for an indefinite period of time" During the last session of Congress the gentleman from Illinois and those who acted with him, had refused to consider a bill for the admission of Dakota. But they had heard a voice. It had been the voice of a magnificently popular uprising in the Northwest. It had said in thunder tones that the democratic party was not fit to rule the country. The people of the Northwest had called for bread and the democratic party had given them a stone. There was nothing new in the bill but delay. Its purpose was delay and to defraud the people out of their rights.

Mr. Springer's motion was then agreed to.

The bill was then transmitted to the Senate and its concurrence in the House amendments respectfully requested. The Senate declined to concur, and instead referred the bill to its territorial committee, which did not get together until about the 1st of February, but enough had been learned from the individual expressions of its members to show that the omnibus bill would have to be largely modified before the Senate would agree to it. The chairman, Senator Platt, was quite outspoken in opposition, and Senator Manderson, of Nebraska, who was warmly interested in Dakota's success, was equally hostile to Mr. Springer's measure.

Hon. R. F. Pettigrew, of Sioux Falls, who had been engaged with other Dakotans in promoting admission at Washington, stated that he would prefer to see no action taken by Congress at its present session than to have the omnibus bill pass as it came from the House, and further, he stated that unless it is amended so as to make it certain that there will be two states, Senator Platt, the Senate chairman, would not report it, in which case it will die in the hands of the Senate committee. It was Mr. Pettigrew's opinion that Springer's ambition to be looked upon as the father of the measure making five additional states would lead him to accept much more in the way of amendments than was originally expected of him.

CHAPTER CXIII

CONGRESS PASSES OMNIBUS BILL—STATEHOOD ASSURED

1889

PASSING THE OMNIBUS BILL—DAKOTANS INTENSELY INTERESTED—TEXT OF THE ENABLING ACT—ELECTRICAL EFFECT OF NEW OMNIBUS BILL—EVERYBODY FOR TWO STATES—A GRAND DEMOCRATIC MOVEMENT—DEMOCRATS MEMORIALIZE CONGRESS FOR DIVISION AND ADMISSION—TERRITORIAL FARMERS' ALLIANCE HOLDS FAREWELL MEETING—NAMES OF MEMBERS—ALLIANCE OF NORTH DAKOTA—INFORMAL STATE CONVENTION IN NORTH DAKOTA—JUDGE TRIPP VISITS WASHINGTON—PASSING THE OMNIBUS BILL—AN IMPORTANT MEETING OF THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE WITH CAMPBELL.

EVERYBODY FOR TWO STATES

When it became an acknowledged fact that the country had actually gone republican, and that party would have possession not only of the presidency but of Congress also, the one-state advocates in Dakota lost no time in coming to the conclusion to abandon their one-state position and join in the movement for two states, and the celerity which marked their transition justified the suspicion that they had been warned from Washington, probably by Mr. Springer himself, to "get from under, for something was liable to drop." Governor Church had already subscribed to the North Dakota movement for a constitutional convention, and during the first week in December a party of distinguished democratic leaders, led by James W. Harden, now of Woonsocket and late candidate for Congress on the democratic ticket, with Maj. P. F. McClure, commissioner of immigration, Surveyor Gen. Maris Taylor, Col. E. W. Miller, receiver of the Huron land office, and L. O. Jeffries, of Highmore, were making a tour of the territory in the interest of the general welfare, and advocating the passage of the Platt bill by Congress, which provided for South Dakota's admission, and a territorial government for the north. The bill had already passed the Senate. The party visited the Yankton Insane Hospital and conferred with the board of trustees which was then suffering the pangs of remorse from the recent grievous accident. The party made no secret of the object of their mission—which was to consult with the democrats of the various counties and arrange a concerted democratic movement which would move Mr. Springer to agree upon giving Dakota division, and the southern half statehood during this short session.

Mr. Springer had already reached the conclusion that something of that kind would have to be done, and he would feel much encouraged and happier if he knew he was acting according to the earnest desires of the people of Dakota regardless of party predilections. Mr. Harden was said to have been in the best of humor, and as a salve for his defeat for Congress he had been appointed by the governor adjutant-general of the territory.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION CALLED

The object of the visit of these gentlemen, all prominent democrats, to Yankton at this time, was revealed two or three days later, when a gathering of promi-

ment democratic citizens from various parts of the territory took place at the office of Chief Justice Tripp in Yankton, for the purpose of arranging concerted action among the democrats throughout South Dakota in behalf of the admission of the State of South Dakota under the Platt bill. Besides many local democrats, there were present Col. E. W. Miller, register of the Huron land office, Surveyor General Taylor of Huron, Gen. J. W. Harden, now of Woonsocket, Commissioner of Immigration McClure of Pierre, and L. O. Jeffries, of Highmore. Judge Tripp was also present. An organization was had by the election of Colonel Miller as chairman and General Harden as secretary.

It was finally agreed to issue a call for a delegate convention of democrats to be held at Mitchell, December 20th, and P. F. McClure, of Pierre, Gen. Maris Taylor of Huron, F. M. Ziebach, Hughes East and J. T. Sargent, of Yankton, were appointed a committee to formulate such call. The committee acted promptly and the following call was prepared and adopted by the meeting, to-wit:

Statehood Convention—At a meeting of democrats representing different sections of South Dakota, held in the City of Yankton, December 8, 1888, it was resolved that a call be addressed to the members of the democratic party of South Dakota, requesting that each county of the territory, south of the 7th standard parallel, select three delegates to attend a convention to be held for the purpose of discussing and taking action upon the question of the immediate admission of the State of South Dakota.

In pursuance thereof, a convention is called to meet in the City of Mitchell, on the 20th day of December, 1888, at 2 o'clock P. M., and it is urged that the democrats of the counties entitled to representation will take the necessary steps to be represented in said convention.

E. W. MILLER, President.

J. W. HARDEN, Secretary.

The call was immediately issued in circular form and also published in the newspapers.

The main purpose of the Mitchell convention was to give assurance to the democratic congressmen that the democratic party of the territory were not opposed to either division or admission, but had been identified with division from the earliest day. This could be done and sustained by the record, notwithstanding the very recent efforts of a few persons, very recently identified with the territory as citizens, to betray the record and place the democracy of the territory in the attitude of opponents. The attendance at the convention was made up of Southern Dakotans and was representative of nearly all sections. Chief Justice Tripp and Judge Spencer of the Huron District represented the judiciary. F. M. Ziebach, register of the Yankton land office, E. W. Miller, receiver of the Aberdeen land office, were prominent citizens in attendance.

After some discussion as to the best course to pursue to aid the division movement, the following memorial, prepared by a committee, was unanimously adopted:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the citizens of South Dakota in affiliation with the democratic party, duly assembled in convention at Mitchell, this 20th day of December, 1888, hereby request, urge and solicit at the hands of your honorable body the division of the Territory of Dakota upon the 7th standard parallel of surveys thereof, and the immediate admission into the union of states of that portion of said territory lying south of said parallel of surveys.

We desire most respectfully to represent that the division of the Territory of Dakota, by an east and west line, has for many years been desired and expected by its citizens. That the Congress of the United States has been memorialized to that end, but without avail, by sixteen successive legislative assemblies. That in view of such expectancy the penal, charitable and educational institutions of the territory have been duplicated in the North and in the South. That religious sects have in like manner established northern and southern conferences, and that anticipating division throughout all these years intervening since the first settlement of the territory, all hope has been guided and all interests lulled to that end.

We desire further to represent, that either section of the divided territory would be exceeded in size by but eight of the thirty-eight states in the Union, the smaller portion comprising 74,000 square miles, or more than twenty thousand square miles in excess of the mean average of all existing states. That the southern half, for which admission is now requested, contains within a restricted compass doubtless the most prolific mineral section within the national boundaries, producing gold, silver, copper, iron, galena, tin, nickel, graphite, mica, gypsum, coal, antimony, asbestos, cobalt, salt and oil, while the larger area of prairie, remarkably productive in soil and almost entirely cultivable, by reason of the absence of hills, mountains, swamps and other obstructions to profitable agriculture, constitutes a fair country upon which may safely be predicted for the future an unusual density of population. That the people of South Dakota now number 375,000, and that thus equipped their rights, interests and future welfare will be enhanced, their sense of patriotism exalted, full citizenship realized, and the fundamental right of local self-government guaranteed by a speedy admission into the sisterhood of states.

We desire further and finally to represent, that a constitution for the proposed State of South Dakota, framed in 1885, under the authority of the Territorial Legislature, by a constitutional convention non-partisan in character, and subsequently adopted by the people at a popular election, is deemed by your memorialists a wise, safe and conservative charter of government, and that in its limitation of the public debt, its restriction in official salaries, and rigidity of official requirements, it is in a fair degree favorable and commendable to democratic policy.

We therefore respectfully ask that your honorable body adopt some measure which shall accomplish the division of the territory on the 7th standard parallel, and the admission of the south half into the Union during the present session of Congress.

A committee consisting of James S. Foster, of Mitchell, Capt. Frank M. Zeibach, Judge Bartlett Tripp, Hon. E. W. Miller, of Elk Point, Judge Spencer, of Huron, and J. A. Ward, of Sioux Falls was selected to bear the memorial to Washington and present it to the presiding officers of the House and the Senate. Alternates for the above committee were also chosen, consisting of H. F. Fellows, of Plankinton, S. A. Ramsey, of Woonsocket, I. J. Eales, of Gettysburg, and George Beckett, of Huron.

The convention then adjourned.

This memorial, in its facility of expression, its completeness in covering all the important and strong points of Dakota's claim for division and statehood, was regarded as one of the best that had been produced by any Dakota convention. It unquestionably had an influence upon Congress and was a strong factor in the favorable proceedings of that body during the pending session.

Chief Justice Tripp presided at the convention and delegates were present from the counties of Sanborn, Sully, Faulk, Jerauld, Potter, Hughes, Moody, Yankton, Turner, Hyde, Aurora, Davison, Buffalo, Beadle, Minnehaha, Brookings, Hanson, Spink, Union, Brule and McCook.

There were forty-nine organized counties in the south, and twenty-one were represented.

An incident of the convention which was characteristic of public assemblies at the time was an effort to make it a factor in the capital fight. Huron was now the temporary capital under the Sioux Falls constitution, and was anxious to retain it, and not take her chances of another election for the temporary location. Her delegates led by Mr. Miller, endeavored to secure some agreement in the memorial that would make it unnecessary to hold another election on that question, though it was apparent that the question of minority representation and prohibition as well as the 1885 constitution would be resubmitted. The decision of the convention firmly set aside the whole matter as irrelevant to the purpose of the convention, and instructed its delegates to work for the promotion of division and statehood and refuse to consider local questions.

The convention appointed the following delegates to go to Washington and present their memorial to Congress and the President, and to labor for the success of the recommendations made by the convention, to-wit: Chief Justice Tripp, Judge Spencer, Hon. Frank M. Zeibach, Territorial Auditor James A. Ward, Hon. Ezra Miller, register of the Huron land office, and Hon. James S. Foster, of Mitchell. Alternates selected were H. F. Fellows, of Plankinton, Hon. S. A. Ramsey, of Woonsocket, I. J. Eales, of Gettysburg, with George Beckett, of Huron, secretary.

STATEHOOD INFORMAL CONVENTION IN NORTH DAKOTA

The election of General Harrison for President and a republican House was interpreted by the people of Dakota, including all political parties, to indicate that the territory would certainly be divided and two states formed and admitted to the Union as early as it was practicable to accomplish it. South Dakotans felt that they were already through, or nearly so with their preliminary work, that is, that while there were some dissenters, the large majority seemed content with the constitution already adopted.

But North Dakota had taken no steps in this direction. Her citizens were brought rather abruptly to face the question of framing a state government for the northern half of the territory, and an initiatory movement for that purpose was started as early as the 25th of November, when a body of representative citizens of Jamestown sent out an invitation to all the counties in that half of the territory, to send representatives, the number being left to their discretion, to a meeting to be held at Jamestown, the 5th of December, to consider the proper course to be pursued in the preliminary work which the new order of things had given them to deal with. The call is here quoted:

The citizens of North Dakota are hereby requested to meet in mass convention at the City of Jamestown, December 5, 1888, for the purpose of considering questions of vital importance, particularly the calling of a constitutional convention and securing an early admission into the Union. The basis of representation is left to the judgment of the different counties, and it is earnestly requested that every county be represented.

There was a general and very encouraging response to this formal call, and a large body of representative and public-spirited men assembled at Jamestown on the date named, December 5th, and was called to order by Hon. E. P. Wells, who was chairman of the committee of Jamestown citizens under whose authority the invitation had been issued. It is gathered from the published minutes of the proceedings that over three hundred representatives were present, representing every county in Northern Dakota except Bottineau, Griggs, McIntosh, Rolette and Sargent. The proceedings follow:

J. M. Bartholomew, of LaMoure County, nominated V. S. Stone, of Fargo, for chairman. Judson LaMoure, of Pembina, nominated ex-Gov. Gilbert A. Pierce for chairman. Alfred Dickey, of Jamestown, was also nominated, but declined.

On motion of Colonel Gore, of Fargo, it was decided that in the vote for chairman and all subsequent voting, each county be allowed the same number of votes as that given in the last representative apportionment.

Pierce was elected chairman on the first ballot by a vote of 111, to 80 for Stone. Pierce was supported by the Missouri slope and by half of the Red River Valley. James River Valley and the other half of the Red voted for Stone. Counties voting for Pierce were: Billings, Burleigh, Dickey, Emmons, Grand Forks, Kidder, Logan, Mercer, McHenry, McLean, Morton, Nelson, Oliver, Pembina, Ramsey, Stark, Towner and Walsh. Counties voting for Stone were: Barnes, Benson, Cass, Eddy, Foster, LaMoure, Richland, Rolette, Stutsman, Steele, Trail, Wells and Ward. Ransom divided her votes.

On taking the chair, Governor Pierce made a brief address full of facts and figures.

Upon suggestion of J. A. Rea, of Bismarck, the convention then elected vice presidents as follows: Colonel Plummer, of Cass; Judge Lewis, of Trail; Colonel Thompson, of Burleigh; Major Roche, of Grand Forks. Col. R. M. Tuttle, of Mandan, was elected secretary, and A. C. McMillan, of Jamestown, W. H. Ellis, of Oakes, and J. B. Powers, of Wahpeton, Richland County, assistant secretaries.

Delegate Kennedy, of Dickey County, introduced and moved the adoption of a resolution declaring it to be the sense of this convention that the territory should be divided on the 7th standard parallel of surveys. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Messrs. Spaulding, of Cass County, Jewell, of Burleigh, Hansborough, of Ramsey, Ward, of Grand Forks, and Yorkey, of Walsh, were appointed a Committee on Order of Business. While this committee was absent the convention listened to Delegate Wells, of Jamestown, who read letters and telegrams of endorsement from Representatives Snider, Dunnell and Comstock, of Minnesota; Governor-elect Merriam, also of Minnesota; Thomas Lowery, of Minneapolis; Governor Church, Judge Rose, Delegate-elect Matthews, Delegate Gifford, Editor Wheelock, of the Pioneer Press, Governor Mellette, and Judge H. J. Campbell, of South Dakota.

The following Committee on Resolutions was then appointed: Harris, of Burleigh; Long, of Morton; Dickey, of Stutsman; Underhill, of Stark; Stone, of Cass; Hansborough, of Ramsey; Levissee, of Trail; Ellis, of Dickey; Tombs, of Walsh. Recess was taken until 7 o'clock in the evening.

The convention reassembled at 7.35, when T. K. Long, of Mandan, chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, submitted the following report, which was adopted by a unanimous vote:

Resolved, by the people of North Dakota in convention assembled:

First—That we favor the division of Dakota Territory on the 7th standard parallel and the immediate admission of the northern portion into the union of states.

Second—That we are emphatically in favor of the name of North Dakota for the proposed new state.

Third—That the Fiftieth Congress should provide for the admission of North Dakota.

Fourth—That in case the Fiftieth Congress fails to provide for the admission of North Dakota as a state, we earnestly request the President-elect to call a special session of the Fifty-first Congress for that purpose.

Fifth—That the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of Dakota Territory is urged to provide, at the earliest practicable moment after its meeting in January, 1889, for a constitutional convention for North Dakota.

Sixth—That South Dakota, Montana and Washington are respectfully invited to cooperate with North Dakota in this movement for admission.

On motion, the chair appointed the following committees:

Committee to prepare a bill to submit to the Legislature and memorialize Congress—E. C. Geary, Fargo; J. F. O'Brien, Ramsey County; Thomas Elliott, Ransom County; James H. Bosard, Grand Forks County; H. S. Dissem, La-Moure County.

Territorial Convention Committee—L. R. Casey, Stutsman County; John Russell, Barnes County; Judson LaMoure, Pembina County; L. B. Richardson, Grand Forks County; N. C. Lawrence, Stark County.

Memorial to President-Elect—R. S. Stevens, Ransom County; Smith Stimmel, Cass County; H. C. Stanley, Kidder County; J. Morley Wyard, Foster County; D. S. Dodds, Nelson County.

The resolutions committee, having covered nearly every point of interest in their report, it was adopted by a unanimous vote.

No business remaining, the convention adjourned, and listened to addresses from General Ward, of Grand Forks, and Colonel Plummer.

The decision of the Committee on Resolutions that the Legislature should call a constitutional convention, was endorsed by the convention without dissent.

The committees appointed held meetings and discussed without decided action matters of time and place for meetings to accomplish the work that devolved upon them.

Now comes the action of Congress in enacting the omnibus admission bill, which provides a constitutional convention for North Dakota and all necessary statehood legislation, rendering the purpose of the above convention unnecessary.

JUDGE TRIPP VISITS WASHINGTON

Hon. Bartlett Tripp, chief justice of the territory, was warmly interested in favor of the division of the territory and the admission of the states into the Union, and, being prominent in democratic circles, was induced to visit Washington in January, 1880, for the purpose of presenting to the President and to Congress, particularly the democratic House and Mr. Springer, the sentiment of the democratic party in the territory upon these questions. Upon his return, about the 1st of February, a public meeting was held at Yankton for the purpose of hearing from Judge Tripp, his opinion of the situation at Washington concerning Dakota affairs, particularly the status of the division and statehood bills.

The citizens' meeting was held at Turner Hall, on the evening of Thursday, January 31st; the hall was filled, and every available seat was not only occupied, but every space that afforded standing room was also taken, and many were unable to gain admittance. The people were intensely interested. Hon. H. J. Campbell called the meeting to order and nominated Gov. Newton Edmunds for the chairmanship, who was chosen by a unanimous vote. The governor stated the object of the meeting, which was designed as a complimentary reception to Mr. Tripp, and to hear his statement of the all-absorbing question of that time. Judge Tripp then took the platform and said, in substance:

There never was a more important period in the history of Dakota than the one encompassed by present conditions. It was a condition in which all were interested in a financial sense as well as in a governmental sense, and the financial aspect was looked upon as its most serious aspect. Admission meant largely increased value. The speaker was eloquent in a tribute to Dakota and the grandeur of its area and resources, and into this tribute was woven the stirring remarks of Sunset Cox in the House of Representatives on the same subject. He believed that statehood would add 25 per cent to all property values, and would bring in an abundance of outside capital which now refused to cross the line of a territorial boundary.

That while Dakota was an earnest applicant for admission into the Union, its representatives were not humbling themselves before the Washington powers. They were asking, in a firm and respectful manner, for the rights of Dakota. Their requests went before men from the small eastern states who had no comprehension of the resources of the West or of its extent or capacity. They fortify themselves behind the position that 400,000 people are not entitled to as many senators as the many more hundred thousands whom they represent. The speaker dissipated this argument by producing the record, which showed that when Kentucky was admitted it had but 74,000 people, when Tennessee was admitted it had but 47,000, Ohio but 35,000, Missouri but 66,000, California but 94,000, Kansas but 107,000, Nebraska and Colorado but 100,000, and Nevada but 40,000. All these states were given two senators upon their admission. In area, the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Maryland, combined, had but 126,000 square miles, while Dakota contained 150,000, and every square mile was capable of sustaining a dense population—a population far greater than that of some of the sterile states named. In evidence of this he quoted the crop and stock statistics of past years and gave a comparative statement of the railroad mileage.

Dakota sought division for the overshadowing reason that it was too large for one state. That was argument enough. Its affairs could not be economically administered under one governmental organization. Large states were a menace to the republic. Large states and large cities contained the corruption that existed in our politics. Large states were much more expensive to their people than small states. The statistics showed a much heavier percentage of taxation in large states than in small states. He cited the enormous growth in expenditures in the great Territory of Dakota, appropriations being $75,000 in 1881, $150,000 in 1883, $700,000 in 1885, $1,400,000 in 1887. No states were more economically managed than the small New England states.

Referring to the Washington situation, the speaker said:

The Platte bill had passed the Senate and the Springer bill had passed the House. It was to our interest to secure a compromise between the two. There was disagreement between the two houses of Congress upon these two bills—disagreement on several points. Eastern senators had grown to believe that they had the right to fix the size and boundaries of new states. We of the West denied this proposition. The Constitution conferred no such right. All Congress could do was to admit the states. It had no right to debate terms irrespective of the wishes of the people of the new states. Dakota's representatives had demanded division first and admission second, and upon these demands they had been received courteously and listened to most patiently. The Dakota bill held the attention of the House for four days, overshadowing all other business. It was discussed and changed and as it finally passed amended Mr. Springer was hardly able to recognize it. The bill as it passed provided that South Dakota should vote on the Sioux Falls constitution. Then, if ratified, it was to be submitted to the people—the constitution and its separate clauses. If again re-ratified and officers re-elected at the November election the President was to proclaim the state. If the constitution was not ratified, a new constitution was to be made and the state afterwards admitted by act of Congress. There were some things in the bill we did not want, but they could be corrected in a conference. The provision relative to voting upon division and some provisions relating to school lands were objectionable, but every one in the House and Senate stood ready to make necessary corrections.

No doubt that Mr. Springer would be willing to leave the decision upon division to a majority of the whole territory. Mr. Tripp had conversed with Mr. Springer and that gentleman had said he was willing to meet the Senate half way. Senator Platte had expressed like willingness to agree upon a compromise. The New Mexico clause was favored by a majority of the Senate, so the only vital difference was on the Dakota division vote, and this could be overcome and the bill passed at this session of Congress. If it did not pass at this session, Dakota was liable to remain a territory two years longer, as there could be little expectation of an extra session.

Judge Tripp stated that he had seen the President, and he had expressed a willingness to sign the bill, with such modifications as might be agreed upon. So if all differences could be arranged in conference, South Dakota would achieve speedy statehood. Otherwise it was liable to remain two years longer outside the Union.

The following resolutions, presented by Judge Campbell, were then adopted, and the meeting adjourned:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting of the citizens of Yankton County, that there is imminent danger that the defeat of the bill for the division and admission of South and North Dakota, now pending in the Senate of the United States, will involve a delay of at least two years in such admission. That any serious delay means lasting and grave injury to all our interests.

That the present disposition of the democratic party in Congress to pass such a bill, should be promptly accepted by the republicans. And that we therefore respectfully ask our republican friends in the United States Senate to pass as soon as possible the Omnibus Bill, with such amendments as shall be just and proper, at this session of Congress. That we do not consider a new vote upon division as necessary or just, the people of the territory having repeatedly demanded division, and that sentiment being fixed and unalterable.

Resolved, That the hearty thanks of the people of Yankton County are due, and are hereby expressed to our distinguished fellow townsman, Hon. Bartlett Tripp, for his effective and able work at Washington in behalf of admission and the admission of these two states, and for his able and eloquent address to us upon the situation of Dakota matters in Congress.

Resolved, That the chairman and secretary of this meeting be instructed to furnish copies of these resolutions to the Hon. Bartlett Tripp, Hon. A. L. VanOsdel, member of the council, Hon. O. S. Gifford, and to Senators Platte, Davis and Manderson, of the United States Senate, and that they be requested to present them to the Senate of the United States.

PASSING THE OMNIBUS BILL

There was much of interest to Dakotans in the almost daily reports that came from Washington during this session of Congress. One day the telegraph wire would bring intelligence of the most hopeful character, to be contradicted within twenty-four hours by news that had a depressing influence. Nine-tenths of the reports were built on flimsy foundations. They were not false or manufactured, but were based on some incident or conversation with the leaders in Congress, who were themselves very much "at sea" a portion of the time. While it seemed to be quite well understood that Springer would never yield his one-state program and insist on the admission of New Mexico, it was also equally certain that the Senate would never agree to the "admission as a whole" proposition, and were also disposed to resist the admission of New Mexico. Dakota, however, was making the session notable and memorable.

The final struggle for the enactment of a statehood bill for Dakota and the other territories began in earnest on the 15th of January, 1889, about seven weeks before the termination of the session and the end of the Fiftieth Congress. Statehood was now offered, but the terms were a ground for serious objection.

It appears from the subsequent proceedings that Mr. Springer was more anxious that the territories should be provided with the means of securing admission before this Congress adjourned than even the republicans, for the republicans relied upon the new President calling an extra session after the 4th of March, when Congress would be controlled by republicans in both branches and would have full control of statehood affairs.

It was evident that the President-elect had about concluded that there should be something of vital importance to the people generally, in addition to the statehood question, to justify a special session.

On January 15th, Mr. Springer, chairman of the House Territorial Committee, reported the Senate (Platt) bill, which provided for the admission of South Dakota and the organization of North Dakota as a territory. It was generally satisfactory to Dakotans. At the same time he reported Mr. Springer's omnibus bill, first as a substitute for the Senate bill, but subsequently changed to an amendment, by striking out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill, and substituting the omnibus bill in lieu thereof.

This omnibus bill was very different from the one finally adopted. It demanded another vote on the division question. It proposed that North Dakota might take the name "North Dakota," or any other name, and that South Dakota might take the name of "South Dakota," or any other except "Dakota." His bill included the Territory of New Mexico also, whose admission at the time was opposed by the republican Senate mainly on the ground that a majority of its inhabitants were unamerican.

It was evident at this time that with Mr. Springer controlling the majority of the House, and the Senate irreconcilably opposed to his bill, there could be no statehood measure passed during the remaining few weeks of the short session unless Springer yielded. It was further evident that had Dakotans been willing to accept some objectionable features of the Springer bill, they would have been unable to have obtained the consent of the Senate, which was inclined to follow their own ideas and were not much influenced by "the anything to get in" expressions of a very few indiscreet and possibly over-ardent advocates of statehood from home who besieged them, somewhat to their annoyance.

But Springer must yield. He held the key to the situation in his control of the House, but the democrats did not want an extra session with the republicans in control of both houses.

The Senate committee got together on the 1st of February. It was then decided not to frame a new bill as a substitute for that of Mr. Springer, but to report the Springer bill to the Senate, recommending non-concurrence, and ask the appointment of a committee of conference. They decided that they would reserve the bill they had prepared as a substitute, and lay it before the conference committee as representing the views of the Senate conferees.

This proposed substitute called two state conventions in Dakota and did away with another vote on division. It corrected the crudities of the Springer measure, and omitted all provision for New Mexico. It was expected that the New Mexico question would be the principal point of contention in the conference. The adoption of the Sioux Falls constitution for South Dakota, or a new one, was provided for, as the people might determine. The Senate passed the substitute bill.

The democrats in both houses were insisting that the exclusion of New Mexico would be fatal to the bill. Senator Butler and Mr. Springer both declared that the democrats would not vote for a bill that brings in the northern territories alone.

The Springer bill, with the action of the Senate thereon, reached the House February 1st, while that body was in committee of the whole, and was not considered during that day's business, but was taken up the following day. It was said that the territorial question had ceased to be a Dakota question, and was now a New Mexico question, but nevertheless Mr. Springer expressed confidence in the result before the conference committee at another session.

The House took up the Senate report February 2d, and on motion of Mr. Springer, insisted upon its amendments and appointed a conference committee consisting of Mr. Springer, Mr. Baker, of New York (a republican and an ardent friend of the Dakotas), and Mr. Barnes, of Georgia (a democrat and a fair-minded man who had ideas of his own which were said to be liberal toward the territories). The Senate conference committee was composed of Senators Platt, of Connecticut, chairman of the territorial committee; Senator Cullom, of Illinois, and Senator Butler, of South Carolina, whose views have been given in former pages.

Senator Platt called the conference committee together on the 5th of February. It was apparent that there would be earnest effort made to agree upon a bill that would be unanimously reported, but this would have to include New Mexico if the House conferees were to support it. They were willing to withdraw all objections to Dakota if this was accorded them. An intelligent observer on the ground at Washington and in a position to know as well as any outsider the exact situation, furnished the following view of it, which subsequent proceedings verified as substantially correct:

Springer is cheerful, and Platt sphinx-like, while the outside Dakotans are growing hopeful. Their most substantial hope is based on the conviction, which is gaining ground every day, that the democrats are seriously considering whether they shall not in the alternate pinch yield the admission of New Mexico rather than risk the failure of their bill. The democrats have been studying the character of the New Mexican population and are beginning to doubt whether they would lose anything politically by its exclusion. They see that the mass of the people are without intelligent political convictions and likely to be controlled by whatever power controls the Federal Government. They think it would be republican under Harrison by the same reasoning that made it democratic under Cleveland. They see, too, in the alien and untaught voters of New Mexico plastic material for the manipulation of the wealthy boss, and dread the formation of another senatorial rotten borough, controlled by the same group of corporations that owns Nevada and has a mortgage on California, too. That is to say, the democrats are beginning to see the same evils in the admission of New Mexico that the republicans have seen all along, and to comprehend at the same time that their party has nothing to gain by evoking these evils.

It was whispered about quite recently that Springer was prepared to consent, under apparent compulsion, to let the bill become a law with New Mexico left out. Now it is beginning to be said that enough democrats are prepared to consent to the exclusion without compulsion to give the amended bill a majority of the House. Springer is as artful as usual. He will throw the responsibility of shutting New Mexico out upon the republicans. He will seem to fight for her rights to the last, and only yield to a majority made up, except a dozen or so, of republicans. His plan is to be ready for an agreement with the Senate conferees on all points of the bill except the exclusion of New Mexico, in the expectation that he will be overruled and New Mexico excluded by the votes of the republicans and fifteen or twenty democrats. Then he will announce that the republicans of both houses have declared by a solid vote that the people of New Mexico are less fit for citizenship than the negroes of Louisiana, and he says there will not be republicans enough in the territory to make milestones across it. This he calls putting the republicans in a hole. The people of the northern territories will be quite willing to see that achievement performed if they can only get into the Union themselves. The democrats seem to be ready to give up everything for which they have held on, and even explore the republicans for permission to give up more, in order to make the new states a feature of this Congress instead of the next. This incidentally is justice to the territories, but that is not the main motive.

The hope at the bottom of the democratic change of heart in relation to the republican territories is that gratitude for their party for admission, together with the growth of the revenue reform sentiment in the Northwest, will very soon make two or three of these territories democratic.

It remains to be seen whether the republicans of the Senate are willing to sacrifice the glory of making four new republican states in the next administration, for the sake of giving the territories prompt assurance of certain early admission in this. The certainty is all this Congress can give more than the next, as that will have the power to do all that can be done now. But action at this session forestalls unforeseen accidents.

The conferees assembled February 7th, and held a long session, at the conclusion of which, the report said, it was decided to report to the respective houses that the conference was unable to agree. The matters of disagreement were fully set forth in Mr. Springer's report to the House, which is here given:

Mr. Speaker—I desire to state briefly, in order that the House may understand the matter fully, the points of difference between the conferees on the part of the Senate and on the part of the House.

A majority of the Senate conferees insist that the bill as it passed the House, shall be amended, first, so as to exclude New Mexico; second, so as to admit South Dakota by proclamation under the Sioux Falls constitution, which is to be submitted to the people again, with a new election of officers and without a vote in that territory on the question of division; third, to bring in the three territories of Washington, Montana and North Dakota on the same basis, all of them either by proclamation or all of them by special acts of admission at the next session of Congress. These are the chief points presented by the Senate conferees.

It was suggested by them further, that such matters as relate to the election of delegates and the apportionment of the district in which the members are to be elected, the date of holding conventions and the date of resubmitting the South Dakota constitution, and the location of the temporary seat of government in South Dakota, should be referred to the chairmen of the respective committees of the Senate and House. As to those minor points, I have no doubt an agreement could be reached without difficulty or delay.

A majority of the House conferees submitted in conference the following as a basis of agreement which should be satisfactory to them:

First. As to New Mexico, we are willing to submit the question of exclusion of that territory from the bill to the two houses of Congress and be governed by such instruction as might be given thereon.

Second. That a vote on the question of a division of Dakota would be insisted upon, but in a spirit of compromise and to secure other portions of the bill as it passed the House, we are willing to recommend such amendment of the bill as would provide that the majority of all votes cast in the Territory of Dakota should be sufficient to decide the question of division instead of the provision of the bill as it passed the House, requiring a majority in both North and South Dakota on that question to authorize division.

Third. As to the admission of North Dakota, Montana and Washington, and New Mexico (if that territory is retained in the bill), by proclamation or by special acts of Congress, the House conferees were willing to recommend that Montana and Washington should be admitted on the constitutions formed by those territories heretofore, as provided in the bill as passed by the House, as to Montana, and also as is provided in a proposed amendment in reference to Washington Territory, submitted by the senator from Indiana, Mr. Voorhees.

But we were unwilling to recommend that any state should be admitted by proclamation of the President, unless the constitution framed by it should first be submitted to Congress, and hence, if a majority of the Senate conferees shall insist upon a uniform rule as to these territories, an agreement can be reached by requiring all to be admitted alike by special acts at the session of Congress beginning in December next.

This does not apply to South Dakota, which the House conferees insist shall be admitted in the seventh paragraph of the third section of the bill as it passed the House, which paragraph is known as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Perkins, and which was adopted by the House on his motion without objection.

Fourth. The majority of the House conferees will insist upon a re-submission of the question of a temporary seat of government for South Dakota.

Fifth. The House conferees may substitute in reference to donations of land for educational and other purposes, so as to secure such lands for school purposes only, or for the purposes mentioned in the bill as it passed the House.

These, Mr. Springer said, constitute the matters of disagreement at this time. I desire to say, however, that the conferees of both the Senate and House have met in a spirit of liberality and a desire to secure a result which will meet the favorable action of the two houses. And I have no doubt that such agreement will be reached at an early day, with such aid as the two houses may give us.

The House, in considering the report, first adopted a motion made by Mr. Springer, that the House insist on its amendments, and ask for another conference.

Mr. Baker, of New York, one of the conferees, then offered a resolution instructing the House conferees as follows:

- 1st. To exclude New Mexico from the bill
- 2d. To amend the bill so as to provide for the admission of South Dakota by proclamation. The Sioux Falls constitution to be re-submitted to a vote of the people of South Dakota, with a provision for a new election of state officers, and without a new vote on the question of division.

3d. That North Dakota, Montana and Washington shall be admitted on the same basis, either by presidential proclamation or formal acts of admission.

Mr. Cox, of New York, offered a substitute for Baker's resolution that differed only in one respect—it provided for the admission of the three states last named by proclamation. Baker accepted the Cox amendment.

Springer insisted on retaining New Mexico. After debate, and on motion, the first clause of Baker's resolution eliminating New Mexico, was agreed to by a vote of 135 to 106. The second clause of Baker's resolution, as amended by Cox, was then agreed to.

Without following the proceedings further in the House or in conference, further than to state that at the meeting of the conference committee, held February 15th, the House receded from every contested proposition, and this intelligence was flashed from Washington to many points in Dakota by Delegate Gifford, concluding laconically with "Admission sure."

This action by the conferees was followed by their report to their respective houses. Their report was confirmed in each branch, and the joint omnibus bill enacted into law. Another telegram from Delegate Gifford, of February 22d, stated: "The statehood omnibus bill was signed by the President at 11 o'clock to-day, and is now a law."

The conference report was submitted by the respective conferees to the House and Senate on the 20th. The report said:

Promptly at 2.40 o'clock P. M., Mr. Springer rose in his seat, accompanied by his traditional buttonhole bouquet, which today was white instead of red, and presented the conference report on the part of the House. The report was sent to the clerk's desk and unanimous consent was asked that it be voted upon without being read. There was no objection and the vote was quickly taken. Speaker Carlisle put the question to vote. There was no call of yeas and nays. The speaker in his loud tone put the question by saying that all who were in favor of adopting the report should say aye. Hearty the response came from every member in the House, with the exception of Mr. Barnes, of Georgia, a member of the Conference Committee, who had refused to sign the report, for reasons satisfactory to himself.

The affirmative response was given with much enthusiasm, which was hardly, if ever before, equaled on the passage of any measure. It rung through the hall, out into the corridors, down toward the great dome, and was audible out on the plaza, where fifty or more carpenters were at work erecting a stand upon which President Harrison was to be inaugurated. When the nays were called for there was but one feeble response, that of Mr. Barnes, who was governed by conscientious scruples against the admission of states by proclamation; and the speaker then announced that the ayes had it. This was the signal for a general outburst of joy. The more enthusiastic members took from their seats the great bundles of papers, Congressional Records, books and anything in sight, and hurled them high in the air. Then began a general hand-shaking, which lasted for ten minutes, some members throwing their arms fraternally around someone's neck, and more general goodfellowship over any measure was scarcely, if ever, seen in the national halls of legislation. The Minnesota delegation, headed by Mr. McDonald, marched to Mr. Springer's desk, and each in turn shook the hand of the chairman of the Territorial Committee. After Mr. McDonald came Mr. Rice, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Lind and Mr. Nelson.

The territorial delegates, headed by Mr. Gifford, Mr. Toole of Montana, and Mr. Voorhees of Washington, were all the recipients of the warmest congratulations. The work today is the general talk and comment throughout Washington tonight. In the corridors of the hotels and in every public place, with democrats and republicans alike, there is a general sentiment of good feeling and rejoicing that within the next few months the states of the Union will have grown in number from thirty-eight to forty-two. It has been a great struggle and a hard fought battle, but today the wreaths of victory were made to crown the heads of four new sister states. If the legislatures of Washington and Montana are democratic, Toole and Voorhees will be candidates for senators. If the Montana Legislature is republican it is said here that Russell B. Harrison will be a candidate for the Senate.

Senator Platt presented the report of the conference in the Senate. Discussion followed as to the reason the conferees had not insisted on the right of women in Washington Territory to vote and hold office in spite of the decision of the Supreme Court of the territory. Mr. Platt said it was a question of expediency. The decision of the Supreme Court of Washington Territory had been appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and he hoped that the case would be advanced on the calendar. He should be very glad if the Supreme Court would find that the judgment should be reversed.

Mr. Vest inquired why the proposition to admit New Mexico as a state had been eliminated from the bill. Mr. Cullom said that there was a very great difference in the social conditions and general situation between the Territory of New Mexico and the territories included in the bill. A large portion of the people of New Mexico were termed Mexicans in contradistinction to Americans, and only a small proportion of them, not over fifteen or twenty thousand, could speak the English language. After further debate the vote was taken, and the report was agreed to without a division.

Concerning the approval of the bill and with what instrument it was effected, and other incidents, it was learned from a spectator who, with a large party, witnessed the ceremony, that the President affixed his signature a few minutes before 11 o'clock. His signature was made in a much bolder hand than he usually writes. The bill was signed with a quill pen, the quill having been plucked from the wing of an eagle killed in North Dakota. The quill had been sent him a few days previous, with the request that he would use it for the first time in attaching his signature to the territorial bill. This request the President heeded, and afterward sent the pen to Delegate Gifford, making him a present of it, together with a note saying that if any historical value could be added to the instrument, he was glad to give Mr. Gifford the benefit of it. Mr. Gifford accepted the pen and acknowledged the President's thoughtful courtesy by a note in return. The delegate wound it about with red, white and blue ribbons, and remarked that when the governors of the two states were chosen he would let them decide which state historical society should have it.

The enabling act for the four states of South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, which were to be made out of the three territories, and which, because of the numerous individual subjects carried, was popularly known as the "Omnibus Bill," here follows in full:

THE OMNIBUS BILL

An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two states and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Washington to form constitutions and state governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states, and to make donations of public lands to such states.

Section 1. That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the territories of Dakota, Montana and Washington, as at present described, may become the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Washington, respectively, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. The area comprising the Territory of Dakota shall, for the purposes of this act, be divided on the line of the 7th standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said territory; and the delegates elected as hereinafter provided to the constitutional convention in districts north of said parallel shall assemble in convention, at the time prescribed in this act, at the city of Bismarck; and the delegates elected in districts south of said parallel shall, at the same time, assemble in convention at the City of Sioux Falls.

Sec. 3. That all persons who are qualified by the laws of said territories to vote for representatives to the legislative assemblies thereof are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form conventions in said proposed states, and the qualifications for delegates to such conventions shall be such as by the laws of said territories respectively persons are required to possess to be eligible to the legislative assemblies thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said conventions shall be appointed within the limits of the proposed states, in such districts as may be established as herein provided, in proportion to the population in each of said counties and districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making said apportionments by the persons hereinafter authorized to make the same. From the best information obtainable, in each of which districts three delegates shall be elected, but no elector shall vote for more than two persons for delegates to such conventions; that said apportionments shall be made by the governor, the chief justice and the secretary of said territories; and the governors of said territories shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates in each of said proposed states, to be held on the Tuesday after the second Monday in May, 1880, which proclamation shall be issued on the fifteenth day of April, 1880, and such election shall be conducted, returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such conventions issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said territories regulating elections therein for delegates to Congress; and the number of votes cast for delegates in each precinct shall also be returned. The number of delegates to said conventions respectively shall be seventy-five, and all persons resident in said proposed states, who are qualified voters of said territories as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the election of delegates, and under such rules and regulations as said conventions may prescribe, not in conflict with this act, upon the ratification or rejection of the constitutions.

Sec. 4. That the delegates to the conventions elected as provided in this act shall meet at the seat of government of each of said territories, except the delegates elected in South Dakota, who shall meet at the City of Sioux Falls, on the fourth day of July, 1889, and after organization shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed state, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said conventions shall be, and are hereby authorized to form constitutions and state governments for said proposed states respectively. The constitutions shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not to be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said conventions shall provide, by ordinances irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said states:

First—That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitants of said states shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Second—That the people inhabiting said proposed states do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said states shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the states on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use. But nothing herein, or in the ordinances herein provided for, shall preclude the said states from taxing as other lands are taxed any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations, and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as may have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinances shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said states so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe.

Third—That the debts and liabilities of said territories shall be assumed and paid by said states respectively.

Fourth—That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of systems of public schools, and which shall be open to all the children of said states, and free from sectarian control.

Sec. 5. That the convention which shall assemble at Bismarck shall form a constitution and state government for a state to be known as North Dakota, and the convention which shall assemble at Sioux Falls shall form a constitution and state government for a state to be known as South Dakota; Provided, that at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in South Dakota, as hereinbefore provided, each elector may have written or printed on his ballot the words "For the Sioux Falls Constitution," or the words "Against the Sioux Falls Constitution," and the votes on this question shall be returned and canvassed in the same manner as for the election provided for in section 3 of this act; and if a majority of all votes cast on this question shall be "For the Sioux Falls Constitution" it shall be the duty of the convention which may assemble at Sioux Falls, as herein provided, to re-submit to the people of South Dakota, for ratification or rejection, at the election hereinafter provided for in this act, the constitution framed at Sioux Falls and adopted November 3, 1886, and also the articles and propositions separately submitted at that election, including the question of locating the temporary seat of government, with such changes only as relate to the name and boundary of the proposed state, to the reapportionment of the judicial and legislative districts, and such amendments as may be necessary in order to comply with the provisions of this act; and if a majority of the votes cast on the ratification or rejection of the constitution shall be for the constitution irrespective of the articles separately submitted, the State of South Dakota shall be admitted as a state in the Union under said constitution as hereinafter provided; but the archives, records and books of the Territory of Dakota shall remain at Bismarck, the capital of North Dakota, until an agreement in reference thereto is reached by said states. But if at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention in South Dakota a majority of all the votes cast at that election shall be "Against the Sioux Falls Constitution," then and in that event it shall be the duty of the convention which shall assemble at the City of Sioux Falls on the fourth day of July, 1889, to proceed to form a constitution and state government as provided in this act the same as if that question had not been submitted to a vote of the people of South Dakota.

Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of the constitutional conventions of North and South Dakota to appoint a joint commission, to be composed of not less than three members of each convention, whose duty it shall be to assemble at Bismarck, the present seat of government of said territory, and agree upon an equitable division of all property belonging to the Territory of Dakota, the disposition of all public records, and also adjust and agree upon the amount of debts and liabilities of the territory which shall be assumed and paid by each of the proposed states of North Dakota and South Dakota, and the agreement reached respecting the territorial debts and liabilities shall be incorporated in the respective constitutions, and each of said states shall oblige itself to pay its proportion of such debts and liabilities the same as if they had been created by such states respectively.

Sec. 7. If the constitution formed for both North Dakota and South Dakota shall be rejected by the people at the elections for the ratification or rejection of their respective constitutions as provided for in this act, the territorial government of Dakota shall continue in existence the same as if this act had not been passed. But if the constitution formed for either North Dakota or South Dakota shall be rejected by the people, that part of the territory so rejecting its proposed constitution shall continue under the territorial government of the present Territory of Dakota, but shall, after the state adopting its constitution is admitted into the Union, be called by the name of the Territory of North Dakota or South Dakota, as the case may be; Provided, that if either of the proposed states provided for in this act shall reject the constitution which may be submitted for ratification or rejection at the election provided therefor, the governor of the territory in which such proposed constitution was rejected shall issue his proclamation reconvening the delegates selected to the convention which formed such rejected constitution, fixing the time and place at which said delegates shall assemble; and when so assembled they shall proceed to form another constitution or to amend the rejected constitution, and shall submit such new constitution or amended constitution to the people of the proposed state for ratification or rejection, at such time as said convention may determine; and all the provisions of this act, so far as applicable, shall apply to such convention so reassembled and to the constitution which may be formed, its ratification or rejection, and to the admission of the proposed state.

Sec. 8. That the constitutional convention which may assemble in South Dakota shall provide by ordinance for resubmitting the Sioux Falls constitution of 1885, after having amended the same as provided in section 5 of this act, to the people of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at an election to be held therein on the first Tuesday in October, 1889; but if said constitutional convention is authorized and required to form a new constitution for South Dakota it shall be provided for submitting the same in like manner to the people of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at an election to be held in said proposed state on the said first Tuesday in October. And the constitutional conventions which may assemble in North Dakota, Montana and Washington shall provide in like manner for submitting the constitutions formed by them to the people of said proposed states, respectively, for their ratification or rejection at elections to be held in said proposed states on the said first Tuesday in October. At the elections provided for in this section the qualified voters of said proposed states shall vote directly for or against any articles or propositions separately submitted. The returns of said elections shall be made to the secretary of each of said territories, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for the constitutions the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said articles, propositions and ordinances. And if the constitution and governments of said proposed states are republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied with in the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of the election in each, and thereupon the proposed states which have adopted constitutions and formed state governments as herein provided, shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original states from and after the date of said proclamation.

Sec. 9. That until the the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said states shall be entitled to one representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, except South Dakota, which shall be entitled to two; and the representatives of the Fifty-first Congress, together with the governors and other officers provided for in said constitution, may be elected on the same day of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution; and until said state officers are elected and qualified under the provisions of each constitution and the states, respectively, are admitted into the Union, the territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in each of said territories.

Sec. 10. That upon the admission of each of said states into the Union sections numbered 16 and 39 in every township of said proposed states, and where such sections, or any parts thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one-quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said states for the support of common schools, such Indian lands to be selected within said states in such manner as the Legislature may provide, with the approval of the secretary of the interior; Provided, that the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not, at any time be subject to the grants nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character, be subject to the grants or to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reservation shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to, and become a part of, the public domain.

Sec. 11. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price not less than ten dollars per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools. But said lands may, under such regulations as the Legislature shall prescribe, be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company; and such land shall not be subject to pre-emption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

Sec. 12. That upon the admission of each of said states into the Union, in accordance with the provisions of this act, fifty sections of the unappropriated public lands within said states, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions as provided in section 10 of this act, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said states for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said states for legislative, executive and judicial purposes.

Sec. 13. That 5 per centum of the proceeds of the sales of public lands lying within said states which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said states into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said state, to be used as a permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said states respectively.

Sec. 14. That the lands granted to the territories of Dakota and Montana by the act of February 18, 1881, entitled "An act to grant lands to Dakota, Montana, Arizona, Idaho and Wyoming for university purposes," are hereby vested in the states of South Dakota, North Dakota and Montana, respectively, if such states are admitted into the Union as provided in this act, to the extent of the full quantity of seventy-two sections to each of said states, and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by either of said territories of Dakota or Montana may be selected by the respective states aforesaid; but said act of February 18, 1881, shall be so amended as to provide that none of said lands shall be sold for less than ten dollars per acre, and the proceeds shall constitute a permanent fund to be safely invested and held by said states severally, and the income thereof be used exclusively for university purposes. And such quantity of the lands authorized by the fourth section of the act of July 17, 1854, to be reserved for university purposes in the Territory of Washington, as, together with the lands confirmed to the vendees of the territory by the act of March 14, 1864, will make the full quantity of seventy-two entire sections, are hereby granted in like manner to the State of Washington for the purposes of a university in said state. None of the lands granted in this section shall be sold at less than ten dollars per acre; but said lands may be leased in the same manner as provided in section 11 of this act. The schools, colleges and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of the said states respectively, and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university. The section of land granted by the act of June 16, 1880, to the Territory of Dakota, for an asylum for the insane shall, upon the admission of said State of South Dakota into the Union, become the property of said state.

Sec. 15. That so much of the lands belonging to the United States as have been acquired and set apart for the purpose mentioned in "An act appropriating money for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota," approved March 2, 1881, together with the buildings thereon, be, and the same is hereby, granted, together with any unexpended balances of the moneys appropriated therefor by said act, to said State of South Dakota, for the purposes therein designated; and the states of North Dakota and Washington shall, respectively, have like grants for the same purpose, and subject to like terms and conditions as provided in said act of March 2, 1881, for the Territory of Dakota. The penitentiary at Deer Lodge City, Montana, and all lands connected therewith and set apart and reserved therefor, are hereby granted to the State of Montana.

Sec. 16. That 90,000 acres of land, to be selected and located as provided in section 10 of this act, are hereby granted to each of said states, except to the State of South Dakota, to which 120,000 acres are granted for the use and support of agricultural colleges in said states, as provided in the acts of Congress making donations of lands for such purpose.

Sec. 17. That in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new states by the eighth section of the act of September 4, 1841, which act is hereby repealed as to the states provided for by this act, and in lieu of any claim or demand by the said states, or either of them, under the act of September 28, 1850, and section 2479 of the Revised Statutes, making a grant of swamp and overflowed lands to certain states, which grant it is hereby declared is not extended to the states provided for in this act, and in lieu of any grant of saline lands to said states, the following grants of land are hereby made, to-wit:

To the State of South Dakota: For the school of mines, 40,000 acres; for the reform school, 40,000 acres; for the deaf and dumb asylum, 40,000 acres; for the agricultural college, 40,000 acres; for the university, 40,000 acres; for state normal schools, 80,000 acres; for public buildings at the capital of said state, 50,000 acres; and for such other educational and charitable purposes as the Legislature of said state may determine, 170,000 acres; in all 500,000 acres.

To the State of North Dakota a like quantity of land as is in this section granted to the State of South Dakota, and to be for like purposes, and in like proportion as far as practicable.

That the states provided for in this act shall not be entitled to any further or other grants of land for any purpose than as expressly provided in this act. And the lands granted by this section shall be held, appropriated, and disposed of exclusively for the purposes herein mentioned, in such manner as the legislatures of the respective states may severally provide.

Sec. 18. That all mineral lands shall be exempted from the grants made by this act. But if sections 16 and 30, or any subdivision or portion of any smallest subdivision thereof in any township shall be found by the department of the interior to be mineral lands, said states are hereby authorized and empowered to select, in legal subdivisions, an equal quantity of other unappropriated lands in said states, in lieu thereof for the use and benefit of the common schools of said states.

Sec. 19. That all lands granted in quantity or as indemnity by this act shall be selected, under the direction of the secretary of the interior, from the surveyed, unreserved and unappropriated public lands in the United States within the limits of the respective states entitled thereto. And there shall be deducted from the number of acres of land donated by this act for specific objects to said states the number of acres in each heretofore donated by Congress to said territories for similar objects.

Sec. 20. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to each of said territories for defraying the expenses of the said conventions, except to Dakota, for which the sum of $10,000 is so appropriated, $20,000 each for South Dakota and North Dakota, and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the territorial legislatures. Any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purposes shall be covered into the treasury of the United States.

Sec. 21. That each of said states, when admitted as aforesaid, shall constitute one judicial district, the names thereof to be the same as the names of the states, respectively; and the Circuit and District courts therefor shall be held at the capital of such state for the time being, and each of said districts shall, for judicial purposes, until otherwise provided, be attached to the eighth judicial circuit, except Washington and Montana, which shall be attached to the ninth judicial circuit. There shall be appointed for each of said districts one district judge, one United States attorney, and one United States marshal. The judge of each of said districts shall receive a yearly salary of $3,500, payable in four equal installments, on the first days of January, April, July and October of each year, and shall reside in the district. There shall be appointed clerks of said courts in each district, who shall keep their offices at the capital of said state. The regular terms of said courts shall be held in each district, at the place aforesaid, on the first Monday in April and the first Monday in November of each year, and only one grand jury and one petit jury shall be summoned in both said Circuit and District courts.

Sec. 22. That all cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon any record from the Supreme Court of either of the territories mentioned in this act, or that may hereafter lawfully be prosecuted upon any record from either of said courts, may be heard and determined by said Supreme Court of the United States. And the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the Circuit or District Court hereby established within the state succeeding the territory from which record is or may be pending, or to the Supreme Court of such state, as the nature of the case may require; Provided, that the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall, in cases rising in the Territory of Dakota, be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the Circuit or District Court of the District of South Dakota, or to the Supreme Court of the State of South Dakota, or to the Circuit or District Court of the District of North Dakota, or to the Supreme Court of the State of North Dakota, or to the Supreme Court of the Territory of North Dakota, as the nature of the case may require. And each of the Circuit, District, and State courts herein named shall, respectively, be the successor of the Supreme Court of the territory, as to all such cases arising within the limits embraced within the jurisdiction of such courts respectively, with full power to proceed with the same, and award mesne or final process therein; and that from all judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of either of the territories mentioned in this act, in any case arising within the limits of any of the proposed states prior to admission, the parties to such judgment shall have the same right to prosecute appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States as they shall have had by law prior to the admission of said state into the Union.

Sec. 23. That in respect to all cases, proceedings, and matters now pending in the Supreme or District courts of either of the territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission into the Union of either of the states mentioned in this act, and arising within the limits of any such state, whereof the Circuit or District courts by this act established might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases, the said Circuit and District courts, respectively, shall be the successors of said Supreme and District courts of said territory, and in respect to all other cases, proceedings and matters pending in the Supreme or District courts of any of the territories mentioned in this act at the time of the admission of such territory into the Union, arising within the limits of said proposed states, the courts established by such state shall, respectively, be the successors of said Supreme and District Territorial courts, and all the files, records, indictments and proceedings relating to such cases, shall be transferred to such Circuit, District, and State courts, respectively, and the same shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law; but no writ, action, indictment, cause or proceeding now pending, or that prior to the admission of any of the states mentioned in this act shall be pending in any territorial court in any of the territories mentioned in this act, shall abate by the admission of any such state into the Union, but the same shall be transferred and proceeded with in the proper United States Circuit, District or State Court as the case may be; Provided, however, that in all civil actions, causes and proceedings in which the United States is not a party, transfers shall not be made to the Circuit and District courts of the United States except upon written requests of one of the parties to such action or proceeding filed in the proper court; and in the absence of such request, such cases shall be proceeded with in the proper state courts.

Sec. 24. That the constitutional conventions may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full state governments, including members of the legislatures and representatives in the Fifty-first Congress; but said state governments shall remain in abeyance until the states shall be admitted into the Union, respectively, as provided in this act. In case the constitution of any said proposed states shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the Legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two senators of the United States, and the governor and secretary of state of such proposed state shall certify the election of the senators and representatives as required by law; and when such state is admitted into the Union the senators and representatives shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress, and to all the rights and privileges of senators and representatives of other states in the Congress of the United States; and the officers of the state governments formed in pursuance of said constitutions, as provided by the constitutional conventions, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of such state officers; and all laws in force made by said territories at the time of their admission into the Union shall be in force in said states, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitutions of the states, respectively.

Sec. 25. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act, whether passed by the legislatures of said territories or by Congress, are hereby repealed.

ELECTRICAL EFFECT OF THE OMNIBUS BILL

Heretofore in the various proceedings in the territory having to do with division and statehood, there was a large element of the voting population who, while favoring the various movements undertaken to promote them, viewed them as unauthorized by any lawful authority that assured their success, and therefore not meriting serious attention. Even in 1885, when a constitutional convention was held under the authority of the Legislature of the territory, there were many, friendly to the object sought, who took little interest in it, believing that the authority of Congress was essential to give validity to a convention for such a purpose. It was due to this sentiment that was held apparently by one-half the voters of Southern Dakota that the vote at the election which adopted the constitution was so light, barely one-half, which greatly encouraged the opponents of division, and correspondingly depressed its friends. They did not realize the educational value of these movements, and to what extent their influence was felt in behalf of dividing the territory. And it will be observed in the latter proceedings of Congress that Mr. Springer took advantage of the light vote polled in 1885, in his argument in January following, urging another vote on the question of division.

All this was changed when the omnibus bill that provided for division and two Dakota states became a law in February, 1889. It was realized that this proposition came from an authority that had all the power essential to make it a success when supplemented by an affirmative vote of the people of the territory, and there was not the slightest question regarding the outcome. All parties were for it, and a clarion and triumphant tone was given to our early declaration, "We are a state," heretofore rather boastfully uttered to stimulate a lagging public sentiment. The leaders of all parties "put their shoulders to the wheel," and the people were aroused to an enthusiasm new to themselves. And that inanimate body known as the Sioux Falls constitution began to pulsate.

There was no feeling of resentment toward Mr. Springer for the obstructive tactics which had long delayed the fruition of Dakota's hopes, and he would have been accorded a friendly welcome had he come among the Dakotans in this day of their rejoicing. The event had kindled a sentiment of kindness toward the people of the United States generally, whom Dakotans were now to meet upon the level of sovereign statehood. It was especially gratifying to the people of the new South Dakota to know that Congress had practically endorsed their state constitution which had been framed under the authority of the Territorial Legislature of 1885, and which they were now to reaffirm at an election held under the authority and expense of the parent government—a constitution that had been partially framed and adopted by the people's convention of 1883. This new omnibus bill seemed to be a complete vindication of all the orderly movements in the territory in behalf of division and statehood that had marked the years of the pending decade. And though this bill was known popularly as the Springer bill, the people of Dakota will not soon forget that the portion of the measure referring to Dakota was largely the work of Senator Harrison, and the successful termination of this long struggle for popular sovereignty can in large part be justly ascribed to him.

Dakota may be said to have furnished another example of what the people of a territory may lawfully do to help themselves to a state government, though the lesson came at a time when there were no more territories (save New Mexico) to profit by its example. And we do not learn from Dakota's experience that a territory can become a state of the American Union without the consent of Congress.

RETROSPECTIVE

There was never before such widespread rejoicing of such a multitude of free people on such an occasion; but to get a glimpse of the fervor which distinguished it, the reader is advised to turn back through these pages, about twenty-eight years, to the small communities which at that time inhabited this Northwest, and read again of the antics of the little bands of frontiersmen when first informed by ox-train messengers, of the passage of the act organizing the territory. Jackrabbits and uncivilized redmen vied with the pale faces, participating in the welcome given to that event, a welcome so hearty and prolonged that a witness of the proceedings would not have imagined that a time could ever come when hundreds of thousands of the pale-faced race would with loud rejoicing and enthusiastic huzzas bid a tearless farewell forever to the charter which gave them the first relief of a territorial form of government and brought them in its stead the habiliments and sovereignty of statehood. To one who has watched the progress since that jackrabbit era, how entertaining the retrospect—to follow the painfully slow accessions to population when the arrival of a half dozen stranger-faces would excite a small community, and was looked upon as the forerunner of a dozen more—next year; the earnest effort to have the horseback or ambulance mail service increased to twice a week; a suggestion that a sawmill to prepare cottonwood lumber for building in place of cottonwood logs, would fill a long felt want and be sure of extensive patronage, and would provide a respectable enclosure where the itinerant clergyman, who was liable to happen in at any time, might find a room to preach in and, if necessary, a place to lodge in; the faint whispers in behalf of a school of some sort for the eight or ten youngsters of school age of both sexes, and a minor number of half-breed children, all of whom were supposed to be thirsting for book learning. Next, some lady has opened a school in her family apartments, the sawmill comes in, and the community turns out as one man and one woman to greet it and to shake hands with the sawmillers. The word goes forth that dirt floors will no longer be recognized as genteel. A steamboat whistles far down the "Big Muddy," and a motley group gathers at the landing to stare at it and witness the putting on shore of a number of bales and boxes for the merchant which contain the latest fashions in ready-made wearing apparel which give to the local inhabitants of the community such a family resemblance; bales of calico for the ladies, a cord of bacon, barrels of beans, and vinegar, dried fruit, flour, cornmeal and a fresh consignment of cove oysters for state occasions. "The tear of regret will intrusively swell" when fancy reverts to our primitive innocent pastimes and catfish diet.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE OF THE TWO DAKOTAS—FAREWELL MEETING

The Farmers' Alliance of both North and South Dakota, as it had existed under the territorial organization, held its final meeting at Aberdeen during the closing days of November, 1889, and adopted its reports and declared its platform for the government of the two bodies when they should have become divided and each formed into a state organization acting independently. The resolutions adopted were those which follow:

Resolved, That we urge local alliances to join in the circulation of a petition to the first Legislature of North and South Dakota, requiring the submission of amendments to the state constitutions forbidding the sale of our educational lands, and providing for proper systems of leasing.

Resolved, That we will not give our support nor our vote to any party or organization that does not incorporate our platform, or the substantial part thereof, in their own, and nominate men whose past record and present principles will be a guarantee that that platform will be carried into practice at once and without any reservation;

Resolved, By us, members of the Farmers' Alliance, representing both North and South Dakota, that we demand of the Congress of the United States, that a currency in sufficient quantity shall be issued directly by the Government, without the intervention of national banks; that this currency shall be a full legal tender, and loaned to citizens upon real estate security at a reasonable rate of interest. We also demand that the Government gradually acquire the ownership of the transportation lines, and operate them in the interest of the people; and be it further

Resolved, That we pledge our sacred honor to at once prepare for a political campaign in which we will not, under any circumstances, support or vote for any man that will not fairly and definitely pledge himself to work for these measures;

Resolved, That notes obtained by fraud shall be absolutely void;

Resolved, That the Legislature be requested to pass a tree-culture act, at its first session, empowering the county commissioners to allot a certain amount to be deducted from real estate valuation by reason of the planting of trees;

Resolved, That we demand of the Legislature at the ensuing session the adoption of a rigid mine inspection law with suitable penalties for the violation thereof, and that the executive be empowered to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate and House of Representatives, a practical miner as mine inspector for South Dakota;

Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that the railroad commissioners be elected by the people. We recommend that the memorial introduced by H. W. Smith be adopted as amended and that a copy of the same be sent to each of our senators and members of the House of Representatives, and request of them to have the same properly brought before those bodies and favorable action taken thereon.

(This memorial refers more particularly to the currency question and urges Congress to increase the volume of circulating currency to the end that it may be adequate for legitimate business purposes, and that the nefarious business of the usurer may be checked, etc.)

We demand the recognition, by incorporation, of trades unions, cooperative stores, and such other associations as may be organized by the industrial classes to improve their financial condition, or promote their general welfare.

That lands forfeited by railroads or other corporations immediately revert to the Government and be declared open for purchase by actual settlers on the same terms as other public lands.

We demand the extinguishment of the public debt of the United States by operating the mints to their fullest capacity, in coining gold and silver and tendering the same, without discrimination, to the creditors of the nation, according to contract.

We demand the substitution of legal tender treasury notes for the issues of the national banks. That the Congress of the United States shall regulate the amount of such issue by per capita calculation, that shall increase and keep pace with the growth of the country's population, and the expansion of its business interests. We further demand the repeal of the present national banking system.

That as there is now a department of agriculture, we demand that the bureau of labor statistics be attached thereto.

We demand that the United States Government purchase, by the right of eminent domain, the railroad, telegraph and telephone lines and operate them, and that a department of transportation be organized to control such enterprises.

THE PLATFORM

We, The Farmers' Alliance of North and South Dakota, in cooperation with other organizations of labor, in convention assembled, recognizing the fact, to wit: That new issues are born of time and progress, and old issues perish, but the fundamental principles, as approved by the united voice of the people, remain and shall ever remain as the best and only security for the continuation and maintenance of a free government by and for the people, we demand that the rights and privileges of the people shall no longer be trampled upon by monopoly, but shall be respected by all classes.

Ours is not a political party—it is more, for in it are crystallized sentiments and measures for the benefit of the whole people. But it should be borne in mind, when exercising the rights of suffrage, that most of the objects herein set forth can only be obtained by legislation, and that it is the duty of all to assist in nominating and supporting with their votes only such candidates as will support these measures regardless of party. Calling upon all who believe in securing the greatest good to the greatest number to join and assist us, we declare that our aims are:

First. That industrial and moral worth, not wealth, should constitute the true standard of individual and national greatness.

We demand that a graduated income tax be levied, and

That aliens be prohibited from owning lands in the United States and that the Government shall, by purchase and the right of eminent domain, obtain, after a reasonable time, possession of all lands owned by aliens.

1. All public necessities, so far as practicable, should be owned and controlled by the Government, and managed in such a way that no class should be allowed to exact unjust rates for the use thereof.

2. Our railroads should be owned and so controlled by the Government, and be operated in the interest of the people upon an actual cost basis.

3. The establishment of a national monetary system in which a circulating medium, in necessary quantity, shall issue directly to the people without the intervention of banks. That all the national issue shall be full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and that the Government shall not guarantee or recognize any private banks or create any banking corporations.

4. Equal and just taxation of property.

5. Prohibition, state and national.

6. Election of the United States senators by the direct vote of the people.

7. Courts of arbitration, that justice, not precedent, may govern.

8. The Australian, or similar system, of voting.

9. The abolition of the contract system on national, state and municipal works.

10. The prohibition by law of the employment of children under fifteen years of age in mines, shops or factories.

11. To prohibit the hiring out of convict labor

We demand of our legislatures a thorough and effective usury law, also a uniform caucus and election law, applicable to all elections.

The names following this declaration of principles, which were adopted without dissent by the North and South Dakota bodies, are here appended:

D. W. Smith, J. A. McGovern, B. F. Wright, William Glendenning, George F. Hopkins, Wesley Brownell.

The Committee on Irrigation presented the following report, which was carefully considered and then adopted:

Mr. President and Fellow Members of the Dakota Farmers' Alliance:

At the meeting of the South Dakota Farmers' Alliance, in June last at Huron, a Committee on Irrigation and Artesian Wells was appointed for the purpose of meeting the Committee of the United States Senate on Irrigation and the Reclamation of Arid Lands, of which Hon. Wm. M. Stewart, of Nevada, was chairman, and to do and perform such other work as might tend to the investigation and development of a system of irrigation for Dakota.

Your committee visited St. Paul, Minnesota, on August 1, 1880, and had a conference with the Senate committee, and laid before them such facts and data bearing upon the question of irrigation as they had been able to collect. The Senate committee was induced to visit the interior of the state for the purpose of examining artesian wells and collecting such other data as they might deem necessary in reference to this question.

Meetings have been held, the question of irrigation has been discussed, and a deep interest has been manifested among our people on the question of irrigation. Petitions have been signed, and a memorial from our State Legislature has been procured, calling on our members of Congress to endeavor to secure an appropriation from the general Government sufficient to ascertain and determine the nature, extent and source of supply of the artesian basins that are believed to underlie a large portion of the states, and the practicality of its use for irrigating purposes.

From the evidence that your committee have been able to collect they have arrived at the following conclusions:

That Dakota lies in a belt of country reaching from the British possessions to the Gulf of Mexico, from 150 to 200 miles wide, that is the border land between the arid country at the foot of the Rockies on the west and the rainy country on the east. That while in a large proportion of the seasons there is rainfall enough to insure fair to good crops, dry seasons are periodical and are sometimes very destructive. That unless this deficient rainfall can be supplemented by artificial means, agricultural pursuits will be attended by very undesirable uncertainties.

Your committee confidently believes that a sufficient supply of water can be procured by artesian wells in such portions of the state as water can be had by that means, and by a system of reservoirs and catch basins in other parts to supplement such deficiency.

Your committee understands that there is an uncertainty about the extent of this artesian basin and the unfailling supply of water, also that our people do not understand the proper and judicious application of water for irrigation purposes. They came here expecting and depending upon rainfall and made their calculations accordingly. They have been deceived, they have lost their crops, and are financially prostrated. They possess neither the means nor the knowledge to make experiments. The uncertainties about this question are such that a prudent man would not be justified in hopelessly embarrassing himself in case of failure.

This question being one of national importance and affecting the entire public, it is the opinion of your committee that it is not only the right but the duty of the general Government to make an appropriation sufficient to make a thorough investigation of this whole question and as far as possible set at rest all doubts and uncertainties connected therewith.

Your committee would, therefore, recommend that our members of Congress be earnestly memorialized to make an earnest effort to secure such appropriation, so that this question can be set at rest, and the foundation laid for a system of irrigation that will lead us out of the wilderness. Also that the Legislature be memorialized to take charge of this work and to act in connection with the Government, and to organize and develop a system of irrigation.

We would also recommend that a committee be appointed by this body to look after and take charge of this matter and fight it to a finish. Also that means be provided to pay the necessary expenses of this committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

FRED F. B. COFFIN, Chairman Irrigation Committee.

The North Dakota delegates declared for Walter Muir, of Cass County, for president of the North Dakota Alliance, and deferred the election of their other officers and the completion of their organization.

[With the adjournment of this convention, the Farmers' Alliance of both states began an independent career, and the northern Alliance had already elected one United States senator, Mr. Casey, of Stutsman County. It will be further observed that many of the suggestions and declarations in the platform of the territorial Alliance have since been incorporated in substance in state and national laws and constitutions, from which it is proper and a matter of pride to infer that the Dakota organization occupied a leading position as the exponent of the tenets and purposes of the national organization.]

The officers chosen for the South Dakota Alliance were: H. L. Loucks, Clark, president; first vice president, A. D. Gardner, Black Hills; second vice president, C. A. Soderburg, Minnehaha County; secretary, Mrs. J. W. Harden, Jerauld County; board of directors, R. B. Bentley, Brown County, J. R. Lowe, of Brule County, D. M. Feurey, of Lake County.

ALLIANCE OF NORTH DAKOTA

The Farmers' Alliance held a session at Fargo, June 28th and 29th, following the convention at Huron. It was a Northern Dakota convention, and as explained in the call, the object of the meeting was "to consider the best means of promoting our interests in the new state organization." On the first day of the session President Loucks delivered an address covering quite fully the idea expressed in the call. His remarks were punctuated with approval by applause from the large audience, and when at the close he resumed his seat, the audience rose and gave him three hearty cheers. It was quite evident that a large majority of the delegates were in full accord with his views.

The platform adopted was substantially the same as that passed at the Huron convention, given in the report of that convention. A condensed report of the president's address stated that he advised the farmers that:

The first thing to be done by the farmers of Northern Dakota was to capture the state government. The farmers must have the governor, lieutenant-governor, a majority of both houses of the Legislature, a majority of the railroad commission, the representatives in Congress, and both of the United States senators. To the school teachers he would concede the superintendent of public instruction, to the newspaper the auditing, to the business men the commissioner of public lands, and to the lawyers the attorney-generalship and the judges. This would be an equitable distribution of the public office. The concessions to other classes being generous and unselfish. He advised invoking the aid of legislation for the correction of every evil where law would correct, and would have the Federal Government assume control of and operate all railroads, telegraph and express lines, and all other public necessities. He would abolish the national banking system, and have the Government issue directly to the people what money they need. The speaker also favored national and state prohibition, and woman suffrage.

It was currently reported at the convention in the conversation of the members that Mr. Loucks was to be the Farmers' Alliance candidate for United States senator from South Dakota.

The following special resolution was adopted, in addition to the platform:

Resolved, That the farmers and laborers of North Dakota, believing that God helps those who help themselves, pledge our most earnest efforts to assist in laying the foundation of our new and grand state, on a new and generous plan, and our most earnest efforts to secure a full representation at all primaries, and select such delegates as will, at the various conventions to which they are accredited, place in nomination men who are identified with our interests. That every legitimate interest is entitled to representation in all legislative bodies proportionate to its numbers. That it is the sentiment of this alliance that our objects can be best attained through the machinery of our respective parties, as we are in a large majority in both of them, and we have only to make systematic effort to possess them. That the use of proxies should be minimized. That in the interest of good government, we favor something similar to the Australian system of balloting. That we are in favor of equal rights and justice to all. That we demand of the democratic and republican central committees that they call state conventions not earlier than September 1st, nor later than September 12th, so that farmers may be able to attend.

That we regard with unfeigned displeasure efforts of certain of the press to defame the known, honored and trusted character of our officers and leaders. That the Jamestown Capital is the official paper of the alliance and we commend it to the farmers. We express entire sympathy with the sentiments expressed by Powderly in a letter to Loucks, read before the convention. We reaffirm the prohibition resolutions adopted at Jamestown, endorse President Loucks, recognizing in him an able, wise and conservative leader, who has not been debarred from a conscientious discharge of his duties by fear, flattery or threats.

The Scandinavians of North Dakota organized, at Fargo, in June, under the name of the Scandinavian Union of North Dakota, for the purpose of securing for themselves a more equal distribution of the offices under the forthcoming state government.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE—CAMPBELL'S SPEECH

General Campbell was not now in accord with the controlling forces in the republican party in 1889. More or less friction had existed between certain of the leaders and the general during all the long campaigns for statehood. The general had taken a leading part and had met with many manifestations of popular favor, and had appeared to run his campaign without taking counsel of any of the leaders of the party. At one period he seemed to have reached a commanding place in the confidence of the people. His course would indicate that he felt that what he had done had been appreciated by the masses. His position, while it might have indicated that he was safely riding on a popular wave, exposed him to the shafts of those who would envy his position, and it appeared, early in 1889, that he felt that he was being crowded—that there were others to whom the people were willing to listen. In the election of delegates to the constitutional convention at Sioux Falls the test came in his home county, where he was defeated for delegate by an emphatic vote, Ed G. Edgerton, a son of the judge, being nominated over him. From that time the general seems to have adopted a new line of campaigning, for he was undoubtedly a receptive candidate for the Senate or other high office. The general is next heard from at Huron, where a three days' session of the Alliance was held, beginning June 19th, President H. L. Loucks presiding. Hon. J. W. Harden, the democratic nominee for Congress in 1888, was present. It was to be an important meeting, and was expected to have an influence of considerable weight in the political events of the year. The theme discussed was the selection of senators and officers of the new states.

The brief report made of Mr. Louck's speech represented him as saying that:

The farmers should have both United States senators, both members of Congress, the governor and lieutenant governor, and the Legislature, and thought the auditorship should go to the press. He deprecated any third party movement, however, urged the farmers to adhere to the old parties, which they could control if they exerted their strength unitedly.

At the conclusion of Mr. Louck's address, General Campbell was called for. He was introduced by Mr. Loucks, who said that he was a lawyer of ability and a friend of the farmer. Mr. Campbell then spoke substantially as follows:

He saw before him men who are the sovereigns of South Dakota because they represent four-fifths of its people. You have the power to rule this new state if you choose to exercise such power. I see that you have come here with the quiet and solemn determination of men to lay your hands, as you have the right and duty to do, upon the springs of power and control them for the best good of yourselves, your families, and all the people of this great commonwealth. You are on the eve of a great battle. The question to be fought is this: "Shall this new state be organized and governed in the great interests of the great producing classes of the state, or the great corporations, boodlers and rings who have hitherto governed this territory?" The American Government was meant to be a government of the people, by the people and for the people. It has been so in name only, but not in truth. That this new government shall be so in truth, and not in name only, is the fight. You are now about to perform the great governmental act of founding a new commonwealth among the nations of the earth. You are to make a new state. What kind of a state shall it be? There are two kinds of states in the Union. In one the people rule, the taxes are light, debt small, expenditures economical, school fund safe, and the people, in fact as well as in name, elect their officers and frame their laws. In the other kind of a state rings and monopolies rule, taxes are heavy, debt enormous, expenditures outrageous, school funds wasted and stolen, and great rings and monopolies name the senators, judges and legislators, and frame and dictate the laws. Which kind of a state do you want here? Why should not the people who make the government make it their own government, and not the government of some ring and combination? This fight is the fight of the producer against the boodler. Shall the new government be the producers' government or the boodlers' government? You have adopted a good constitution, but it will be as worthless as a piece of brown paper unless you elect men who will enforce it. Make your own governors, senators, judges and legislators. Send your own servants and not some other person's servants to do your work and it will be done to suit you. Smash all slates, break all rings, and control the constitutional convention and the Legislature in your own interest. Elect your own man and own candidate for the office of president of the constitutional convention of the 4th of July next. There are abuses threatening this new state government which will either destroy you or you must destroy them. Extravagant appropriations such as that of $40,000 for a militia encampment in this time of hardship. Judgeships, senatorships, are being traded for and parceled out like so much plunder among the forty thieves of Bagdad. Directors of public institutions are today awarding themselves contracts under fictitious names and auditing their own bills. Great corporations owned in other states now rule whole counties by fraud and force, and seek to dictate senators, judges and governors. What is your remedy?

This: That from this time the farmers in their respective parties go into every primary, caucus and convention, and nominate your friends and not your enemies, for all the offices from United States senator down to constable.

Hon. J. Burrows, of Nebraska, delivered an address the second day. Mr. Burrows was president of the National Alliance, and his speech was devoted to an explanation of the objects and desires of the Alliance throughout the country.

The following platform and resolutions were adopted:

1. All public necessities, so far as practicable, should be owned and controlled by the Government, and managed in such a way that no class should be allowed to exact unjust rates for the use thereof.

2. Our railroads should be so controlled by the Government as to be run in the interests of the people upon an actual cost basis.
3. The establishment of a monetary system, in which a circulating medium in necessary quantities shall issue directly to the people, without the intervention of banks, that the national issue shall be full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and that the Government shall not recognize or guarantee any private banks or create any banking corporations.
4. Equal and just taxation.
5. Prohibition, state and national.
6. Election of United States senators by direct vote of the people.
7. Courts of arbitration, that justice, not precedent, may be given.
8. The Australian system of voting.
9. The abolition of the contract system by our national, state and municipal governments.
10. The prohibition, by law, of the employment of children under fifteen years of age in mines, factories or shops.
11. To prohibit the hiring out of convict labor.

Independent of the platform, the following resolutions were also adopted, and were intended to reflect the sentiments of the Knights of Labor:

Resolved, That we, the farmers and laborers of South Dakota, believe and most emphatically reiterate the saying that "God helps those that help themselves," and pledge our most earnest efforts to assist in laying the foundation of our new and grand state on a broad and generous plane, and pledge our united influence to secure a full representation at all primaries, county, district and state conventions, and see to it that no delegates are elected to represent us except such as are in full sympathy with our alliance platform, as well as men possessing the ability to procure legislation that will best mete out justice and prosperity to the men that till the soil, as well as those who toil in the mines and shops, for "under God the people rule."

2. That it is the sentiment of this alliance that our object can be best attained through the machinery of our respective parties, as we are in a large majority in both of them, and we have only to make a systematic effort to possess ourselves of them.

3. That we deem the use of proxies at all meetings and conventions as against good public policy and government, and strongly favor the abolishment of the proxy system, and request our central committees to state in their calls that no proxies will be accepted.

4. That in the interests of economy and justice we ask the constitutional convention to provide something similar to the Australian system of elections for the elections this fall, and also that they provide for holding the election for state and national officers on a different day from the election for the capital, the constitution and its amendments.

5. That we demand from the republican and democratic central committees that they call the state conventions not earlier than September 1st, nor later than September 10th, to the end that farmers may be able to attend.

6. That as a farmers' alliance we have taken no part in any capital schemes or investment companies.

Resolved, That as the Dakota Ruralist is the official paper of the Dakota Farmers' Alliance, that we will give it our financial support by subscribing, and using our best endeavors to get others to subscribe, for it. Be it further

Resolved, That we will not support any paper that is not in sympathy with the alliance movement and will not give it friendly support. Be it further

Resolved, That we consider it an insult to every member of the alliance for any paper to speak of our officers and leaders in a disgraceful manner. We further declare that our motto shall be: "An injury to one is the concern of all."

A free trade resolution was then presented to the meeting, by Delegate Harden, as follows:

Resolved, That while we have a free market to sell in, we demand a free market to buy in.

The resolution was defeated by a large majority.

A committee of the Alliance also acted in a matter concerning the rainfall in Dakota in its bearing on crop cultivation. Sen. William M. Stewart, of Nevada, was in the territory that summer, as a committee from the Senate, collecting information concerning climatic conditions, the amount of rainfall, etc., and this Alliance committee, headed by Maj. F. F. B. Coffin, of Huron, furnished him with a report, of which the following is a copy:

1. The rainfall in certain limited sections of Dakota is not sufficient to insure the successful cultivation of farm crops.

2. We have no data from which to know the average rainfall, but from the reports of the United States signal service, to which we refer you, but would state that these reports are not altogether reliable, from the fact that our rains, in dry seasons especially, are quite local.

3. The only known source of water for artificial irrigation purposes for the greater portion of the state is the inexhaustible subterranean supply, which it has been demonstrated can be reached by artesian wells at a nominal cost. In the Black Hills country a supply can be reserved by a system of reservoirs, storing the water from mountain streams.

4. From observations of our citizens forming the earliest settlements of our country, it has been demonstrated that when we have heavy snow and rain, sufficient to fill our streams and lake beds, the rainfall increases, as the supply of water demonstrates.

5. If this supply of water can be kept up by artificial means it will certainly insure a continuation of rainfall.

6. By placing artesian wells at suitable points, as you may determine, it will keep those streams and lake beds filled.

7. Owing to the present need of rain in certain portions of this vast country, crops are somewhat suffering, we respectfully but earnestly request that you visit this country at your earliest convenience and give this question, which we deem of vital and national importance, your most careful consideration.

The next movement on the part of these gentlemen was at the constitutional convention at Sioux Falls about a fortnight later, when an effort was made to combine a portion of the Alliance men and a portion of the prohibitionists or anti-prohibitionists with the democrats and control the organization. The preliminary caucuses preceding that convention, which convened July 4th, reveal the failure of that effort.

The demands of the Alliance at this time included the election of United States senators by a direct vote of the people, the adoption of the Australian system of voting, which had been passed by the Legislature but vetoed. It was introduced, however, not by a farmer, but by Hon. Alexander Hughes, at that time a representative from Burleigh County. Other demands of the Alliance were the Government ownership of railroads; the abolition of banks, the Government to issue the money direct to the people. It will be confessed that public sentiment was inclined to favor most of these and other demands of the Dakota grangers, as they were called.

The association at this time and for a few years later would seem to have been speaking with a prophetic voice, possibly in part unconsciously, regarding political and economic changes that the future was to weave into the laws not only of the Dakotas but throughout the nation. The hand that guided the plow seems to have been writing up a new code. The hand and mind that guided the plow appears to have been meditating a peaceful revolution in the industrial world, through the instrumentality of the ballot box and the Legislature. The granger statesman had divined the source of political power in the republic to be connected with the ballot box and a free and enlightened people to use it conscientiously and intelligently. These granger ideas acted like leaven upon the other political parties. The granger seed germinated in the democratic and republican breast, and the time came when the modest plowman was obliged to witness the fruits of his harvest garnered by those who had borne but a slight share of the "heat and burthen of the day."

CHAPTER CXIV SOUTH DAKOTA CONVENTIONS AND ELECTIONS

1889

GOVERNOR CALLS ELECTIONS—SOUTH DAKOTA RATIFIES CONSTITUTION OF 1885 - CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION AT SIOUX FALLS—NAMES OF MEMBERS—THE PROCEEDINGS—NORTH AND SOUTH DIVIDE TERRITORIAL PROPERTY—ADJOURNMENT—GOVERNOR CALLS FIRST STATE ELECTION—BOTH PARTIES HOLD CONVENTIONS AND NOMINATE STATE TICKETS AND LEGISLATIVE MEMBERS—PROHIBITIONISTS ACTIVE IN CAMPAIGN—REPUBLICANS CARRY THE STATE—FIRST STATE LEGISLATURE CONVENES AND ELECTS UNITED STATES SENATORS.

On the 15th of April, 1889, Governor Mellette issued his proclamation ordering the election of delegates in South and North Dakota to elect delegates to two constitutional conventions, and for other purposes. That portion of the proclamation relating to South Dakota reads as follows:

It is ordered that on May 14, 1889, an election shall be held at the usual voting place in each election precinct in all that portion of the Territory of Dakota situated south of the 7th standard parallel produced due west to the boundary line of the said territory, for the purpose of electing seventy-five delegates to a constitutional convention for the State of South Dakota, and at the election thus provided each elector may have written or printed on his ballot the words,

"For the Sioux Falls Constitution," or the words,

"Against the Sioux Falls Constitution," the votes on which question shall be duly returned and canvassed.

The convention of delegates so chosen shall assemble at the City of Sioux Falls, July 4, 1889, and in case the majority of votes cast at the preceding election shall have been "For the Sioux Falls Constitution," such convention shall resubmit, for ratification or rejection, the said Sioux Falls constitution, at an election to be held on Tuesday, October 1, 1889, and shall also resubmit the articles and propositions separately submitted at the election whereby said constitution was ratified, including the temporary location of the capital, together with such changes of said constitution only as relate to the name and boundary of the State of Dakota, the reapportionment of the judicial and legislative districts, and such amendments as may be necessary to comply with the act of Congress hereinbefore mentioned.

But if a majority of the votes shall have been cast "Against the Sioux Falls Constitution," on the 14th day of May aforesaid, then the convention shall proceed to form a constitution and state government to be submitted to the electors of the said State of South Dakota for ratification or rejection at an election to be held for that purpose on Tuesday, October 1, 1889.

At the election herein provided for delegates to the constitutional conventions for the states of South Dakota and North Dakota, no elector shall vote for more than two persons for delegates to such conventions. All persons resident in the Territory of Dakota who by the laws of said territory are qualified to vote for representatives to the legislative assemblies thereof are competent to vote for and choose such delegates. The qualifications for delegates to the conventions to be thus formed are such as persons are required to possess by the laws of Dakota Territory in order to be eligible to membership in the legislative assemblies thereof.

The said elections shall be conducted and the votes cast for delegates in each precinct returned in the manner prescribed by the laws for the election of delegate to Congress.

For the purposes of this election, the territory had been divided into election districts, twenty-five in North Dakota and twenty-five in South Dakota, as required by the enabling act. This duty was performed by Governor Mellette, Chief Justice Tripp and Secretary Richardson. Each district was entitled to three delegates, but no elector was allowed to vote for more than two, which was to enable the minority party to obtain representation.

The formation of the several districts of South Dakota is given herewith:

First—The counties of Pennington, Custer and Fall River.

Second—The precincts comprised of the First, Second, Third and Fourth wards of the City of Deadwood, respectively, together with the precincts of Lead City, South Lead, Terraville, Gaville, Central City, Golden Gate, Carbonate, Bald Mountain, Portland, Ruby Basin, Woodville, Spearfish, Reeds, Crow Creek, Crow Peak and Bear's Gulch, all in the County of Lawrence.

Third—All that portion of the County of Lawrence not above specified as constituting the Second district, together with the counties of Butte, Burdick, Ewing and Harding.

Fourth—The counties of Roberts, Grant and Deuel.

Fifth—The counties of Marshall and Day.

Sixth—The voting precincts of Palmyra, Osceola, Savo, Liberty, Portage, Allison, Frederick, Greenland, Lansing, Detroit, Oneota, Brainard, Shelby, Carlisle, Westport, Columbia and Claremont in the County of Brown, together with the counties of McPherson and Campbell.

Seventh—All that portion of the County of Brown not included in District No. 6, above described.

Eighth—The counties of Walworth, Edmunds and Faulk.

Ninth—The County of Spink.

Tenth—The counties of Potter, Sully, Hughes and Hyde.

Eleventh—The counties of Hand, Buffalo and Jerauld.

Twelfth—The county of Aurora and Brule.

Thirteenth—The County of Beadle and that portion of the County of Sanborn lying east of the west line of range 60.

Fourteenth—The County of Clark and that portion of the County of Kingsbury lying west of the west line of range 55, and townships No. 109 and 110, range 55, in said County of Kingsbury.

Fifteenth—The counties of Codington and Hamlin.

Sixteenth—The County of Brookings and that portion of the County of Kingsbury not included in District No. 15 above described.

Seventeenth—The counties of Miner and Lake.

Eighteenth—The County of Moody and all that portion of Minnehaha County lying north of the north line of township No. 101.

Nineteenth—All that portion of Minnehaha County not included in District No. 18, as above described.

Twentieth—The County of Lincoln and that portion of the County of Turner lying east of the west line of range 53.

Twenty-first—The counties of Clay and Union.

Twenty-second—The County of Yankton and that portion of the County of Hutchinson lying east of the west line of range 58, except that portion of Milltown Precinct No. 8 contained therein.

Twenty-third—The counties of Charles Mix, Bon Homme and all that portion of the County of Hutchinson not included in District No. 22 above described.

Twenty-fourth—The counties of Davison and Douglas and all that portion of the County of Sanborn not included in District No. 13, above described.

Twenty-fifth—The counties of Hanson and McCook, and all that portion of the County of Turner not included in District No. 20 above described.

The governor issued a proclamation June 22d giving the names of the delegates elected to the state conventions.

The official vote in South Dakota, May 14, gave 37,710 votes cast for the Sioux Falls constitution, and 3,413 against it, a total of 41,123, just about one-half the vote. There was no effort made to get out the vote, and as the South Dakota voters felt that practically there was a solid sentiment for the Sioux Falls constitution, there was nothing to arouse popular interest. The election came at a time when the farmers were in the midst of their spring work, which it has been found invariably works to the disadvantage of a full vote, and a full vote lacks usually 15 or 20 per cent of all the voters.

The governor also gave a list of the citizens elected as delegates to the constitutional conventions in both the Dakotas. Those chosen for South Dakota were:

First District—Sanford Parker, Valentine V. McGillicuddy, Chauncey L. Wood. Second District—Dighton Corson, William S. O'Brien, Charles M. Thomas. Third District—S. A. Wheeler, Thomas W. Thompson, John Scallard. Fourth District—William McCusick, Henry Neill, C. R. Westcot. Fifth District—William Coak, W. G. Dickenson, Geo. H. Culver. Sixth District—Martin R. Heminger, Lyman T. Boucher, Harry T. Craig. Seventh District—C. T. Brott, Wm. Stoddard, M. H. Stroupe. Eighth District—H. A. Humphrey, J. G. Davies, Peter Couchman. Ninth District—J. F. Wood, Thomas Sterling, T. W. P. Lee. Tenth District—John F. Whitlock, David Hall, C. H. Price. Eleventh District—C. G. Hartley, S. F. Huntley, R. C. Anderson. Twelfth District—A. J. Kellam, S. V. Willis, H. G. Fellows. Thirteenth District—C. H. VanTassel, L. H. Hole, George C. Cooper. Fourteenth District—Carl G. Sherwood, W. H. Matson, J. D. Jeffries. Fifteenth District—E. E. Clough, S. S. Peck, S. B. Van Buskirk. Sixteenth District—L. Atkinson, I. R. Spooner, Joshua Downing. Seventeenth District—H. W. Eddy, F. G. Young, R. F. Lyons. Eighteenth District—Andrew J. Berdahl, H. M. Williamson, C. S. Gifford. Nineteenth District—Wm. Van Eps, Clark G. Coats, E. W. Caldwell. Twentieth District—William Elliott, A. B. McFarland, J. A. Fowler. Twenty-first District—John L. Jolley, A. O. Ringsrud, Col. J. Kimball. Twenty-second District—Edward G. Edgerton, Christian Buechler, C. J. B. Harris. Twenty-third District—William T. Williams, Robert A. Smith, Joseph Zitka. Twenty-fourth District—A. J. Edgerton, Charles A. Honlton, S. A. Ramsey. Twenty-fifth District—W. H. Goddard, W. H. Murphy, T. F. Diefendorf.

The South Dakota constitutional convention assembled at Sioux Falls July 4th, at noon, as provided in the enabling act. Sioux Falls was celebrating the day, and while the delegates were all on the ground, they were not in a humor for convention duties, with so much enthusiasm, gaiety and fluttering flags about them or within sight and hearing. A caucus had been held which had agreed upon A. J. Edgerton for president of the convention, and E. W. Caldwell for temporary secretary, and when the convention assembled, Dighton Corson, of Lawrence County, a member of the convention of 1885, called the body to order. Reverend Doctor Stratton, of the Congregational Church, offered prayer, and then the proclamation of the governor calling the convention was read. The roll call was answered by all the members except five, who were known to be in the city. Judge Thomas, of Lawrence County, was present, but declined to act as a delegate, holding that his official position made him ineligible.

The oath of office was then administered by Chief Justice Bartlett Tripp, who was president of the constitutional convention of 1883. Dr. I. R. Spooner, of the Sixteenth district, then nominated A. J. Edgerton, of Mitchell, for president of the convention, and Charles H. Price nominated S. V. Van Buskirk, of Watertown, but the latter declined, and Edgerton was unanimously chosen and escorted to the chair by Doctor Spooner and Mr. Van Buskirk. E. W. Caldwell was elected temporary secretary. An adjournment was then taken until 2 o'clock Friday afternoon, without completing the organization.

On reassembling, Major Kellam, of Chamberlain, called to order, President Edgerton having been called away. Prayer was offered by Reverend Mr. Wakefield, of Aurora County. There were seventy-three of the seventy-five delegates present.

Secretary Caldwell read the following telegrams:

Bismarck, Dakota, July 4, 1889.

To Constitutional Convention, Sioux Falls, Dakota:

The constitutional convention of North Dakota sends greeting and bids you God-speed in your advance movement toward statehood and full American citizenship. May the four new stars about to be added to the national flag not lose in brilliancy through lack of care in laying the foundations of states to be. Let Washington bring fruit and flowers, Montana its precious metals to add to the beauty and wealth of the nation, while the Dakotas will bring wheat and corn to feed the people of the world.

F. B. FANCHER, President.

Olympia, Washington Territory, July 4, 1889.

To A. J. Edgerton, President, Sioux Falls, Dakota:

The Washington constitutional convention returns greeting to South Dakota convention. The time is auspicious. The empire state of the Pacific Northwest will join her sister in every onward development.

J. C. MOORE, Chairman.

The convention then completed its organization by the election of the following officers:

Rev. F. A. Burdick (republican), of Yankton, and W. W. Goddard (democrat), of Sioux Falls, were placed in nomination for chief clerk. The vote resulted: Burdick, 50; Goddard, 21. Burdick was declared elected.

For enrolling and engrossing clerk, Dr. A. W. Hyde (republican), of Brookings, and James Kingsbury (democrat), of Yankton, were nominated. Hyde was elected, 50 to 19.

For sergeant-at-arms, James Carney (republican), of Lawrence, and W. T. Buchanan (democrat), of Minnehaha, were nominated. Mr. Carney was elected, 50 to 21.

E. C. Warner, of Day County, was elected watchman, there being no other candidate.

For messenger, Frank Hoppin (republican), and P. T. Durflinger (democrat), both of Hand County, were nominated. Hoppin was elected, 48 to 23.

For chaplain, Rev. J. A. Wakefield, of Aurora, and Bishop Hare, of Sioux Falls, were nominated. The vote resulted: Wakefield, 45; Hare, 26. Mr. Wakefield was declared elected, and the list of officers to be chosen was completed.

Delegate Carl G. Sherwood, of the Fourteenth district, presented a resolution proclaiming that the constitutional convention of South Dakota, now being organized, declares in favor of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. The resolution was unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

Mr. Jolley, of Clay County, from the Committee on Rules, reported:

That the joint commission on the part of South Dakota to visit Bismarck and determine the division of the territorial property and debts shall consist of seven members, to be appointed by the president, and that it shall be empowered to employ a clerk and such other assistance as may be needed.

Mr. Jolley stated that the committee did not deem it prudent to consult the convention of North Dakota before determining the number of delegates that should constitute the commission.

Mr. Clough, of Codington, justified the size of the commission. He thought there should be the moral force of numbers behind it. If only three delegates were placed upon the commission the responsibility would be too great, and though the work was never so equitable, it might operate to the injury of the members of the commission individually.

Mr. Peck, of Hamlin, moved that the report be received and the committee discharged but the report not adopted. He wanted a day's time to cogitate on the report.

Mr. Jolley said it would be a mark of discourtesy not to act upon the report at this time, when the convention had asked to have it made. After discussion in which it became apparent that there was formidable opposition to the report,

ACADIA UNIVERSITY (ANTIGONISH) COLLEGE, ANTON
Founded in 1888

THE NEW YORK
PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX AND
TILDEN FOUNDATIONS

Mr. Jolley said the committee was willing to make the report a special order for today.

Mr. Price, of Hyde, thought it very doubtful whether the president of the convention had the power to name the commission. He believed the convention, under the provision of the act of Congress, may be required to select the commission.

The report was then made a special order for the following day.

Mr. Price, of Hyde, then addressed the convention in reference to the division line of the territory. He said there were two distinct and well defined 7th standard parallels, and that a commission consisting of three delegates, to confer with a similar commission from the North Dakota convention, should be appointed, with a view to determining definitely the boundary line between North and South Dakota. The speaker produced a drawing from the surveyor general of the territory, to prove that the boundary line was a question of dispute. On motion of Mr. Price, the boundary line question was referred to the Committee on Boundary.

The following telegram was then read by the chief clerk:

To Hon. A. J. Edgerton, Sioux Falls, Dakota:

Montana, standing on the threshold of statehood, reciprocates your cordial greeting and indulges the hope that the constitution which you have met to form may be based upon the virtues and intelligence of the people, and when so formed it may survive the years to come in all its vigor, unimpaired, until a hundred sovereign states shall have been enacted into one confederacy, there to remain an indestructible and indissoluble union.

J. K. TOULF, Temporary President.

In committee of the whole, the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules was considered, with reference to the number of the joint commission to visit Bismarck and the North Dakota convention and agree upon a division of the territorial property and obligations. The report of the committee favored the adoption of the report made by Mr. Jolley and it was unanimously adopted.

A resolution of the Committee on Rules reported the number of delegates to be appointed on each standing committee, which was adopted. There were thirty-one standing committees provided for.

The privileges of the floor were extended to Hon. Hugh J. Campbell and Hon. G. C. Moody, of Deadwood, delegates to the original constitutional convention.

Ivan W. Goodner, of Huron, and Theron G. Brown, of Sioux Falls, were employed as stenographers to the convention. The convention adjourned until the afternoon of Monday, the 7th.

At the Monday's session the commission appointed to negotiate a division of the territorial property and public debt with the North Dakota convention was announced by the president as follows: A. J. Kellam, of Brule County; V. V. McGillicuddy, of Pennington; Henry Neill, of Grant; E. W. Caldwell, of Minnehaha; William Elliott, of Turner; C. H. Price, of Hyde; C. T. Brott, of Brown. The last two named were democrats, the others republicans.

On the seventh day of the convention, July 10th, the president announced the standing committees. In doing so he stated that he did not expect that he had pleased all the delegates, that was next to an impossibility. He had, however, done the best he possibly could. The list as announced is here given:

On Congressional and Legislative Apportionment—Messrs. Van Tassel, of Sanborn County; Parker, of Fall River; O'Brien, of Lawrence; Thompson, of Lawrence; McCusick, of Roberts; Culver, of Marshall; Henninger, of Brown; Stroupe, of Brown; Davies, of Edmunds; Lee, of Spink; Hall, of Sully; Huntley, of Jerauld; Willis, of Aurora; Matson, of Kingsbury; Clough, of Codington; Atkinson, of Brookings; Lyons, of Miner; Williamson, of Moody; Coats, of Minnehaha; Fowles, of Lincoln; Ringsrud, of Union; Edgerton, of Yankton; Zitka, of Bon Homme; Houlton, of Douglas; Dieffendorf, of McCook Judiciary—Sterling, of Spink; Humphrey, of Faulk; Williams, of Bon Homme; Cooper, of Beadle; Ramsey, of Sanborn; Corson, of Lawrence; Wood, of Pennington; Sherwood, of Clark; Van Buskirk, of Codington; Berdahl, of Minnehaha; Eddy, of Miner; Harris, of Yankton; Fellows, of Aurora.

Schedule—Hole, of Beadle; Jolley, of Clay; Spooner, of Kingsbury; Scollard, of Meade; Westcott, of Deuel; Dickinson, of Day; Boucher, of McPherson; Stoddard, of Brown; Couchman, of Walworth; Wood, of Spink; Whitlock, of Potter; Hartley, of Hand; Fellows, of Aurora; Jeffries, of Clark; Peck, of Hamlin; Parker, of Fall River; Corson, of Lawrence; Berdahl, of Minnehaha; Van Eps, of Minnehaha; Buechler, of Hutchinson; Smith, of Charles Mix; Ramsey, of Sanborn; Murphy, of Hanson; McFarland, of Lincoln; Eddy, of Miner.

Name, Boundary and Seat of Government—Stroupe, of Brown; Edgerton, of Yankton; Van Eps, of Minnehaha; Kimball, of Clay; Murphy, of Hanson; Williams, of Bon Homme; Wheeler, of Butte.

State, County and Municipal Indebtedness—Sherwood, of Clark; Jolley, of Clay; Van Eps, of Minnehaha; Ramsey, of Sanborn; Diefendorf, of McCook; Lee, of Spink; Spooner, of Kingsbury; Stroupe, of Brown; Clough, of Codington.

Executive and Administrative—Westcott, of Deuel; Dickinson, of Day; Craig, of Campbell; Anderson, of Hand; Downing, of Brookings; Gifford, of Minnehaha; Murphy, of Minnehaha; Murphy, of Hanson.

Legislative—McFarland, of Lincoln; Ramsey, of Sanborn; Zitka, of Bon Homme; Jolley, of Clay; Cook, of Marshall; Coats, of Minnehaha; Lyons, of Miner.

Bill of Rights—Spooner, of Kingsbury; Van Buskirk, of Codington; Jeffries, of Clark; Henninger, of Brown; Dickinson, of Day.

Election and Suffrage—Stoddard, of Brown; Craig, of Campbell; Cook, of Marshall; Westcott, of Deuel; Scollard, of Meade; O'Brien, of Lawrence; Whitlock, of Potter.

Federal Relations—Murphy, of Hanson; Houlton, of Douglas; Sherwood, of Clark; Harris, of Yankton; Kimball, of Clay.

Education and School Lands—Coats, of Minnehaha; Humphrey, of Faulk; Williamson, of Moody; Young, of Lake; Downing, of Brookings; Peck, of Hamlin; Matson, of Kingsbury; Culver, of Marshall; Huntley, of Jerauld.

Municipal Corporations—Hall, of Sully; Wood, of Spink; Atkinson, of Brookings; Cooper, of Beadle; Fellows, of Aurora.

Corporations Other than Banking and Municipal—Dickinson, of Day; Thompson, of Lawrence; Stroupe, of Brown; Goddard, of McCook; Jolley, of Clay; Whitlock, of Potter; Van Buskirk, of Codington.

County and Township Organization—Whitlock, of Potter; Atkinson, of Brookings; Eddy, of Miner; Berdahl, of Minnehaha; Ramsey, of Sanborn; Culver, of Marshall; Fellows, of Aurora.

Revenue and Finance—Goddard, of McCook; Houlton, of Douglas; Zitka, of Bon Homme; Harris, of Yankton; Ringsrud, of Union; Van Eps, of Minnehaha; Boucher, of McPherson.

Public Accounts and Expenditures—Ringsrud, of Union; Scollard, of Meade; Williams, of Bon Homme; Williams, of Moody; Henninger, of Brown; Davies, of Edmunds; Willis, of Aurora.

State Institutions and Public Buildings—Young, of Lake; Van Eps, of Minnehaha; Hartley, of Hand; Downing, of Brookings; Wood, of Pennington; Smith, of Charles Mix; Wood, of Spink; Anderson, of Hand; Buechler, of Hutchinson.

Mines, Mining and Water Rights—O'Brien, of Lawrence; Parker, of Fall River; Wheeler, of Butte; Young, of Lake; Jeffries, of Clark; Couchman, of Walworth; Fowler, of Lincoln.

Roads, Bridges and Other Internal Improvements—Smith, of Charles Mix; Ringsrud, of Union; Berdahl, of Minnehaha; Atkinson, of Brookings; Anderson, of Hand; Couchman, of Walworth; Craig, of Campbell.

Exemptions—Buechler, of Hutchinson; Fowles, of Lincoln; Coats, of Minnehaha; Lyons, of Lake; Peck, of Hamlin; Jeffries, of Clark; Cooper, of Beadle; Culver, of Marshall; Henninger, of Brown.

Rights of Married Women—Willis, of Aurora; Hall, of Sully; Davies, of Edmunds; Craig, of Campbell; Wheeler, of Butte; Thompson, of Lawrence; Diefendorf, of McCook.

Banking and Currency—Davies, of Edmunds; Huntley, of Jerauld; McCusick, of Roberts; Gifford, of Minnehaha; McFarland, of Lincoln; Buechler, of Hutchinson; Ramsey, of Sanborn.

Military Affairs—Clough, of Codington; Matson, of Kingsbury; Lee, of Spink; McCusick, of Roberts; Zitka, of Bon Homme; Goddard, of McCook; Kimball, of Clay.

Amendment and Revision of the Constitution—Boucher, of McPherson; Stoddard, of Brown; Cook, of Marshall; O'Brien, of Lawrence; Downing, of Brookings; Gifford, of Minnehaha; Harris, of Yankton.

Printing—Humphrey, of Faulk; Hole, of Beadle; Sterling, of Spink; Couchman, of Walworth; Hall, of Sully.

Seal—Houlton, of Douglas; Zitka, of Bon Homme; Kimball, of Clay; McCusick, of Roberts; Scollard, of Meade; Humphrey, of Faulk; Wood, of Spink.

Miscellaneous Subjects—Eddy, of Miner; Van Tassell, of Sanborn; Hartley, of Hand; Cook, of Marshall; Stoddard, of Brown; Williams, of Bon Homme; Parker, of Fall River.

Compensation of Public Officers—Williamson, of Moody; Fowles, of Lincoln; McCusick, of Roberts; Anderson, of Hand; Spooner, of Kingsbury; Thompson, of Lawrence; Wood, of Pennington.

Arrangement and Phraseology—Corson, of Lawrence; Goddard, of McCook; Boucher, of McPherson; Willis, of Aurora; Cooper, of Beadle; Matson, of Kingsbury; Van Buskirk, of Codington; Wood, of Pennington; Young, of Lake.

Manufactures and Agriculture—Lee, of Spink; Whitlock, of Potter; Westcott, of Deuel; Lyons, of Miner; Gifford, of Minnehaha; Kimball, of Clay; Edgerton, of Yankton; Diefendorf, of McCook; Smith, of Charles Mix.

Expenses of the Convention—Huntley, of Jerauld; Parker, of Fall River; Fellows, of Aurora; Jeffries, of Clark; Williamson, of Moody; McFarland, of Lincoln; Sherwood, of Clark.

Engrossment and Enrollment—Hartley, of Hand; Peck, of Hamlin; Lyons, of Lake; Berdahl, of Minnehaha; Wheeler, of Butte.

A memorial was presented by Delegate Williams, of Bon Homme County, signed by thirty-six native Russians who have located in South Dakota, praying that in the constitution protection and immunity be granted them from military service. They state that "they left their native country to escape military duty because they are religiously opposed to taking up arms, going to the field of battle and killing one another." That while the Constitution of the United States protects its citizens, it leaves them subject to military duty in time of war." Their memorial says further:

We profess the non-resistant doctrine, and we conscientiously cannot take up arms and go to war and fight. We beg those who have different views on the subject to hear with us. We are willing to pay tolls, imports and custom dues, and be subject to the higher powers of laws of the land, not conflicting with the will of the Government, but we have come here for the relief we now ask.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Various motions and resolutions pertaining to the general routine were referred to the appropriate standing committees. It was expected that the sessions of the convention would be brief for a number of days in order that the committees might employ their time on the various constitutional subjects referred to them.

The convention then proceeded to refer the various parts of the constitution to appropriate committees, and while this was being done two or three amendments were offered to the constitution. This brought up the question whether the convention could amend the constitution further than had been required by the enabling act, that constitution having already been adopted. Judge Edgerton took the floor and admonished the convention that they could go no farther with amendments than those specified in the act of Congress under which they were assembled, and any amendment not permitted by the enabling act would result in the President's declining to recognize it, and a long delay would be the result. On the part of a large element in the convention it was contended that the reference of the 1885 constitution to committees did not necessarily imply that amendments would be made. That it was necessary to readopt the constitution now as in past conventions, article by article and section by section, although no amendments were contemplated. They were opposed to making any amendments except those provided in the omnibus bill, to-wit, changing the name, dividing the debts and records, fixing the boundary, and reapportioning the legislative and judicial districts, yet contended that there was but one way to readopt the constitution, and that was the way the convention was proceeding upon.

Mr. Lee, of Spink, a plain, blunt man, said he could see no sense in contemplating for a moment the consideration in the committee of any of the articles in the constitution. That it was a waste of time in view of the fact that Congress had limited the amendments to be made, in case the people voted to ratify the constitution, which they had already done in connection with the election of delegates to this convention, and he believed that the convention should take primary action on all amendments offered, and not refer any part of such amendments to committees.

President Edgerton finally withdrew his suggestion, and the reading and reference proceeded.

When at article 24, prohibition was reached, Mr. Corson, of Lawrence County, moved a suspension of further proceedings under the rule until tomorrow, when the question of just what the convention may do in the way of amendments may be definitely determined. He said the omnibus bill provided that the constitution of 1885, ratified on May 14th last, shall be resubmitted on the 1st of next October. Not a constitution this convention may frame, or the one under consideration in amended form, but the constitution already made and ratified. He thought this the most important question which could come before the convention, and exactly what may and may not be done under the provisions of the omnibus bill should be known beyond the shadow of doubt before further proceedings were had.

Further discussion followed, a number of the delegates speaking, and all agreeing that it was not the intention to amend. It was simply a question whether the work was to be done by comparison, or as it was done originally. The contention was that the order under which the convention was proceeding was the only proper way to proceed.

Mr. Corson moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the reading of the constitution and reference to committees was made a special order for this day, and asked that this motion and the one he made previously go over until the following day. The motion was adopted.

The convention then adjourned until 2 o'clock the following day.

On the tenth day of the session, July 13th, a memorial to the President of the United States was presented by Mr. Humphreys, from the Committee on School Lands, requesting the President to direct that all proceedings relating to the entry of or issuance of patent to alleged mineral or coal lands situated within the agricultural districts of South Dakota be postponed and stayed until the state is by proclamation of the President declared admitted, and until the Legislature of the state have an opportunity to appoint the requisite agents therefor, and provide by law for contesting the right to make such entries and obtain from the Government patents to such lands.

The motion for the adoption of the memorial led to a lengthy discussion, based principally on the propriety of addressing the President on the subject. It was alleged that some of the school lands were being prospected for minerals with a view of claiming them under the mineral land laws, without, however, definitely determining their mineral character. Finally a vote was taken and the memorial adopted by a vote of 36 to 24.

The business pending when the convention adjourned the previous day—the reading of the constitution and its reference by articles to committees—was resumed and completed without further question. The matter had been profoundly considered over night, and the conclusion reached that it could do no harm, and would furnish legitimate employment for the delegates while awaiting the report of the joint committee employed at Bismarck in dividing the debts and records of the territory equitably between the two states.

Mr. Clough, of Codington, presented a memorial from the ministerial association of South Dakota, asking that safeguards for an honest election be provided, and that the election for the location of the capital be held on another day than that on which the constitution is voted upon. The memorial was referred.

Mr. Boucher, of McPherson, offered a declaration, which was referred to the Committee of Federal Relations, declaring:

That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant shall be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of worship. That the people inhabiting this state forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within the state owned or held by any Indians. That the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the state shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents of the state. That the Legislature shall provide a system of public schools which shall be open to all the children of the state and free from sectarian control. This proposition is in accordance with the requirements of the omnibus bill.

The session on Monday, the thirteenth day, was quite brief, and the attendance at the opening not more than one-half the delegates. An effort was made to reconsider the vote adopting the memorial to the President relating to school lands, for the purpose, it was claimed, of correcting its phraseology, but it failed by the narrow margin of two votes. A number of the absent delegates came in during the session, until those present and voting numbered fifty-two. Seven of the absent were away on duty to North Dakota.

On the fourteenth and fifteenth days there was no business transacted of moment, the convention simply meeting, announcing a readiness for business, but none appearing, adjournment was taken.

On the sixteenth day, Delegate Willis, of Aurora, introduced a resolution, instructing the judiciary committee to examine and report to the convention whether or not, in their judgment, any portion of the $20,000 appropriation made by the Government for the expenses of this convention can be used to defray the expenses of the May and October elections. The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Westcott, of Deuel County, the roll of the standing committees was called in order to give to the committees which are ready to report, an opportunity to do so.

The Committee on Amendments and Revision of the Constitution, to whom was referred article 23 of the constitution, reported that they had examined said article and found no change necessary to make it conform to the omnibus bill, and recommended that it be submitted as originally drawn. The executive and administrative committee made a similar report regarding the article referred to it, and the two reports were made a special order for a later hour.

Communications relating to the liquor question and an invitation from the warden of the penitentiary to the delegates, or to the convention, to visit the institution in a body, were presented.

Mr. Sterling from the judiciary reported on the resolution inquiring whether any portion of the $20,000 appropriation could be used to defray election expenses, that no part of the appropriation could be used for such a purpose.

Several members of the constitutional convention of 1885, through Delegate Sherwood asked whether they would now be permitted to sign said constitution, which they did not do at the time of its adoption. The request was referred to the judiciary committee.

A number of formal reports were received from the committee having in charge certain articles of the constitution, all of whom found no change necessary to make them conformable to the omnibus bill.

On the seventeenth day there were a number of committee reports announcing no change. The Committee on the Bill of Rights, however, varied this monotony for the first time by presenting a report that they had amended or would recommend the amendment of the article by the insertion of the word "South," before the word "Dakota," to make the article meet the requirements of the omnibus bill.

Reports were submitted by Mr. Spooner and Mr. Williamson from the Committee on Compensation of Public Officers, Mr. Boucher from Committee on Amendments and Revision, Mr. Ringsrud from Committee on Public Accounts, announcing no change.

The judiciary committee reported a resolution dividing the state into eight judicial districts, describing them by counties. The report after much discussion was adopted, but a minority report was suggested in order to bring the matter before a full convention.

On the eighteenth day reports were submitted from the special committee on signing the bill of rights, Mr. Stoddard on election and suffrage, by Mr. Eddy on miscellaneous subjects, Mr. Lee on manufactories, by Mr. McFarland from legislative committee, from Mr. Davies on banking and currency, from Mr. Westcott on executive and administrative, from Mr. Buechler from exemptions, all of which reported no change.

Mr. Humphrey from the Committee on Education and School Lands, reported that section 5, article 7, of the Sioux Falls constitution provides that no land shall be sold for less than the appraised value, and in no case for less than $10 an acre, unless after the year 1890, two consecutive Legislatures concur in a law otherwise directing. The qualifying clause beginning with the word "unless" is stricken out by the committee.

Mr. Young from state institutions and public buildings, reported the prefix "South" before the word "Dakota," in article 14.

Delegate Clough, from military affairs, reported the word "South" prefixed to the word "Dakota." This committee also reported on the petition of Jacob Schnaidt and other Russian citizens, declaring that it is not possible for this convention to amend the article so as to exempt them from military duty.

Mr. Sterling, from the judiciary committee, reported on the resolutions relating to the formal acceptance of land grants from the Government and without determining the necessity for formally accepting such grants, the committee recommend that a section be incorporated in the constitution formally accepting such grants. From the same as to the signing of the constitution of 1885 by delegates who neglected to sign that document at the time of its adoption, the committee are of the opinion that the convention has no authority to grant permission to such persons to affix their signatures to the document at this late day.

Mr. Sterling introduced an amendment to the report of the Committee on School Lands, which provided for leasing said lands for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section to any one person or company. All rents to be paid annually and all leases to be approved by the governor.

Colonel Clough asked every veteran of the Union army who are members of the convention to give him in writing his name, together with the rank held, the regiment and company.

Nothing was done on the twentieth day and on the twenty-first the only important matter was to instruct the committee then in Bismarck negotiating the matter of dividing the debts, etc., to confer also upon the boundary line question in order to a definite settlement thereof.

On the twenty-second day a communication from the American Sabbath Union, signed by Elliott F. Shepard, Maj. Gen. A. A. Howard, J. H. Knowles and Willbur F. Crafts, asked the convention to insert in the constitution a provision protecting and encouraging Sabbath observance. The communication came by wire from Blue Mountain Lake, New York.

The session was occupied in receiving reports and brief discussions. Mr. Stroupe, from Committee on Boundary, reported that the committee had added the word "South" before the word "Dakota," and had also substituted the "7th standard parallel" for the "40th parallel."

On July twenty-sixth, which was the twenty-third day of the session, the convention received a petition from Huron, reporting a mass meeting, at which ex-Governor Church presided, urging the convention to adopt the Australian system of voting. The judicial district bill heretofore reported was then adopted. The Sabbath observance communication from Blue Mountain Lake was considered, and the convention decided that it had no authority under the omnibus bill to make any change in that article of the constitution, and instructed the president to so inform the distinguished gentlemen who sent the message containing the request.

On the twenty-sixth day Mr. Van Tassell's report on legislative apportionment was received and adopted. The price of school lands, leasing the same, and others were finally left undisturbed as fixed by the constitution of 1885.

On the twenty-fourth day Mr. Stroupe, from the Committee on Name and Boundary, to whom was referred the resolution relating to the 7th standard parallel, reported that in the opinion of the committee, the constitutional conventions of North and South Dakota were not authorized by the "omnibus bill" to determine what constitutes the true 7th standard parallel, and recommended that no action be taken by the convention. Report adopted.

The constitution was ordered printed. Two hundred thousand newspaper supplements were ordered, 20,000 in the German and 20,000 in the Scandinavian language, and 10,000 in the Russian. The question of the Australian ballot and the election of a district court clerk occupied some time, but both were finally decided in the negative. It was evident that the convention was not disposed to make any changes but those exacted by the omnibus bill. They apprehended mischievous results from trying any experiments.

After a ten days' session the joint commission appointed to effect the division of the territorial assets and indebtedness between the states of North and South Dakota has completed its labors, and was ready to report. The South was to pay the North $42,000, because of the excess in appropriations for permanent institutions. South Dakota took the territorial library, valued at $6,000, paying the North for one-half of it. The detailed report of the joint commission is given elsewhere.

The question having been raised that a portion of the proposed northern boundary (the 7th standard parallel) had been partially duplicated, and which of the lines was the correct one was yet unsettled, hence the motion that a joint committee from the North and South conventions should be appointed to investigate the problem, and decide upon the correct boundary and division line. It appeared that within the limits of the Sisseton reservation there were laid down two 7th standard parallels. The 7th standard parallel, as far as projected at the time, had been run by South Dakota surveyors. Carl C. P. Meyer had the first contract to produce the 7th standard westward from the Minnesota boundary through the Sisseton reservation. Mr. Meyer made an error in his calculations through indefinite figures furnished from the office of the surveyor general of Minnesota and located the line two miles south of its proper position. Afterwards the Meyer survey was ignored and M. T. Wooley and C. H. Bates went into the field and corrected his error by carrying up the lines from the 6th standard parallel, and correctly locating the 7th standard parallel within the Sisseton reservation. Subsequently E. D. Palmer, deputy surveyor, took up the corrected line of the 7th standard and carried it westward to the Missouri River.

The following excerpt from a letter written officially by the surveyor general of Dakota in reply to a letter of inquiry from Deputy Surveyor Ed Palmer would seem to be sufficient authority to permanently settle the boundary line question. The surveyor general says:

When the error of C. C. P. Meyer was finally discovered, the Meyer survey was disregarded, and the system was newly projected from the Minnesota surveys by those excellent surveyors, Charles H. Bates and M. T. Woolley. Hence, so far as the public land surveys are concerned, the 7th standard, as continued by Mr. Reeves from the Minnesota surveys of 1870, and subsequently produced westward by Mr. Woolley in 1872, correcting the Meyer error, and by yourself (Palmer) in 1874, is not in any way affected by the Meyer survey of 1865, or Mr. Barrett's reservation surveys of 1868-69, but is in proper position, and in its capacity as a boundary line will doubtless be continued over the reservation in due time.

Messrs. Stewart and Reagan, the senators who had been investigating the question of rainfall and irrigation in Dakota in 1889, felt great interest in Dakota probably more than in any other section examined by them. Senator Stewart in stating his views to the Chicago Inter-Ocean said:

The most striking fact in the two Dakotas is the astonishing belt of artesian water which underlies, to all appearances, fully one-third of South Dakota—the central portion—and spreads widely over North Dakota. So strongly had this phenomenon impressed the senators that they had concluded to urge the sending into the twin Dakotas a corps of competent engineers and geologists to examine and survey the artesian belt. They also declared their adhesion to the policy of urging appropriations for a sufficient number of artesian wells to systematically develop, if possible, the average depth of bore, nature of strata, extent of water belt, expense of boring, nature of water found and other important facts.

Mr. Stewart was strongly inclined to accept the view that the great artesian basin of Dakota finds its sources of supply in the melting snows of the Rocky Mountains. Senator Stewart was properly considered a reliable authority on matters of this character, having given much attention to the investigation of the mineral resources of the West. His home and a greater part of his active life had been spent in Nevada—the territory and the state.

The meetings for several days following were brief and no business was transacted save the occasional report of a committee, reporting "no change."

On August 1st, the thirtieth day of the session, there were thirteen delegates present. For several days previous the attendance had been so much less that no session had been formally opened and the daily invocation of the chaplain had been omitted. The ominously number of delegates present at this session reminded the delegates of this omission and they insisted that the chaplain, Reverend Willis, of Aurora, perform his duty. A communication was then read from the Englewood Union Veteran Club, of Chicago, enclosing resolutions adopted by the Grand army posts of Chicago, reminding the convention that

The men of 1861-65 made statehood possible for Dakota, and asking that, as a matter of justice, as well as sentiment, the veterans be allowed to name at least one of the four new states. That as one of these states will receive the name of the first American of the eighteenth century, the soldiers of the Union ardently desire that the name of the first American of the nineteenth century shall be perpetuated in the other. They therefore suggest to the convention the name of Lincoln for one of the Dakotas.

There was considerable business transacted on the thirty-first day. The report of the joint commission on the settlements of a division of property and debts with North Dakota was received and approved. This was the last working day of the session, the intention being to adjourn finally on the following day, August 4th.

United States Senators Stewart, of Nevada, and Reagan, of Texas, were present, having come as a Committee on Irrigation from the Senate, in quest of information from members of the convention, some of whom, it was known, had given much time and study to the subject. In order to facilitate and systematize the securing of information by the visiting gentlemen, President Edgerton appointed a special Committee on Irrigation, composed of Professor McGillivuddy, of Pennington County, Mr. Peck, of Hamlin County, Doctor Spooner, of Kingbury County, Mr. Cochran, of Walworth County, Mr. Hall, of Sully, Mr. Houlton, of Douglas, Mr. Eddy, of Miner, Mr. Murphy, of Hennepin, Mr. Wood, of Spink, Mr. Cook, of Marshall and Mr. Wetcott, of Deuel, who met with the senators and furnished them much information regarding the water supply of Dakota and the facilities for constructing river and lake improvements that would be of great value in seasons of unusual dryness. The senators were of the opinion that while Dakota could depend upon a moderate rainfall, it was proven by statistics that it had a dry climate, and occasionally liable to such prolonged drouths as to produce a crop failure practically, which in view of the increasing volume of the territory's food products might be in the nature of a national calamity, therefore a prudent foresight would suggest that the parent government should foster irrigation by building dams where practicable and irrigating canals. While the first cost of the necessary improvements would be comparatively heavy it would be repaid to the people of the nation by increased production and consequent lower prices for food stuffs. The preservation of one annual crop in Dakota would not only be of great pecuniary benefit to the producer but it beneficially aided every class of our country's growing population. The senators were much gratified with their visit.

A communication was received from President Harrison, written by his secretary, stating that he had referred the convention's memorial relating to the protection of school lands to the interior department.

On motion of Mr. Jolley, of Clay, it was ordered that the president of the convention have the custody of the debates until the Legislature shall order and provide for their publication, and then he, with Hon. H. F. Fellows and Hon. A. G. Kellam, shall prepare the same for publication and cause the same to be published.

The consideration of the schedule was then resumed. Mr. Williams, of Bon Homme, offered an amendment whereby the terms of state officers would expire in 1891, thereby making the elections of state and county officers coincident. The question of the power of the convention again came up. The point upon which the convention divided was as to whether the election provided by the omnibus bill to be held in October would be an election under and authorized by the constitution, or one provided by the omnibus bill. Those who held to the former view and opposed the amendment maintained that the election held in October would be the first held under the constitution, and that the convention had no power to shorten any terms of the offices provided for by the constitution. That the framers of the constitution of 1885 undoubtedly provided for two general elections. That the only other source of power aside from the constitution is the omnibus bill, and that makes no provision for the election or terms of officers.

On the opposite side those who favored the amendment contended that the election in October could not be under the constitution for the simple reason that there would be no constitution at that time, one of the purposes of that election being for the ratification of that document. They held that the omnibus bill clearly provided for the October election, and that this convention was empowered to provide for such tenure of state offices as would not conflict with the two-year term as provided by the constitution. A vote on the Williams amendment was taken about noon and resulted in a tie, 30 for and 36 against. The amendment was therefore declared lost. The session was then adopted as reported.

Mr. Caldwell suggested that inasmuch as a part of the agreement with North Dakota was to be incorporated in the schedule and ordinance, it might be well to postpone action on the remainder of the schedule until after the consideration of the agreement and Mr. Jolley then moved that the further consideration of the schedule be postponed, which carried, and the convention proceeded to the consideration of the report of the joint commission on the part of South Dakota.

Mr. Harris, of Yankton County, moved that the convention proceed to incorporate in the constitution the agreement of the joint commission of North Dakota and South Dakota, beginning at the preamble and ending with close of article 24. Motion adopted.

After a noon recess Chairman Edgerton stated that he had voted against the amendment to section 19 of the schedule, but he had been informed that there was a possibility of such a construction being placed upon the section as to render the election of county officers this fall necessary. With that view of the question, and in order that the matter might be more fully discussed, he moved a reconsideration of the motion by which the amendment was lost. Motion carried. And after much discussion the Williams amendment was adopted by a vote of 40 to 32. The effect of this amendment was to bring the election of all officers, state and county, biennially in the even numbered years, whereas without the amendment there would be annual elections—in the even numbered years the state officers and congressmen would be chosen, and the county officers in the odd numbered years.

The joint committee on the part of South Dakota then submitted their report to which was attached the entire agreement reached by the joint commission, also the article of the constitution pertaining to debts and liabilities, as required by the enabling act to be incorporated in the constitution. Also that part of the agreement pertaining to books, archives and records, and which the commission recommends shall be incorporated in the schedule and ordinance. This left so much of the agreement as relates merely to the distribution of property incorporated in neither the constitution or schedule and ordinance.

That part of the agreement referring to debts and liabilities was referred to the Committee on Debts and Liabilities, and that part pertaining to records to Committee on Schedule and Ordinance.

An adjournment was then taken at a late hour in the evening to 10 o'clock on the morning of the 4th of August.

Monday, August 5th, was the closing day of the convention. President Edgerton occupied the chair. Reverend Huntley, delegate from Jerauld County, offered a prayer for divine guidance during the last hours of the convention, and besought the divine blessing upon the people of the new state as they shall begin the new era under the constitution.

Delegate Price was then called to the chair, and Judge Edgerton asked unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution, which he explained was in order to facilitate matters in accordance with the resolution adopted August 3, 1889.

Resolved, That the territorial treasurer is hereby authorized and empowered to issue refunding bonds to the amount of $107,500, bearing interest not to exceed 4 per cent per annum, for the purpose of refunding the following described indebtedness of the Territory of Dakota, to wit: Seventy-seven thousand dollars in 5 per cent bonds, dated May 1, 1883, issued for the construction of the west wing of the insane hospital at Yankton, and $30,000 in 6 per cent bonds, dated May 1, 1883, issued for permanent improvements on the Dakota Penitentiary at Sioux Falls, such refunding bonds, if issued, to run for not more than twenty years, and shall be executed by the governor and treasurer of the territory, and shall be attested by the secretary under the great seal of the territory. In case such bonds are issued by the territorial treasurer as hereinbefore set forth, before the 1st day of October, 1889, then upon the admission of South Dakota as a state it shall assume and pay said bonds in lieu of the aforesaid territorial indebtedness.

The resolution was adopted.

President Edgerton resumed the chair, and Mr. Price offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That for the conscientiously and impartial manner in which he presided over the deliberations of this constitutional convention, and for his unflinching and courteous treatment of the members and officers, so particularly Hon. A. J. Edgerton has the thanks of this convention. That the conscientious part taken by him in securing the admission of South Dakota into the nation or state, and the invaluable services rendered by him in framing the fundamental law of the new state have inseparably linked his name with the history of the new Commonwealth of South Dakota and as a tribute and in honor thereof for him he is hereby presented with the gavel which he has wielded with such fairness and fairness during the sessions of the convention, and will cherish the honor that he may live many years to enjoy the rights and privileges of a citizen of the new State of South Dakota.

Judge Edgerton appropriately acknowledged the tribute paid him in a brief and heartfelt manner.

A resolution was adopted tendering the thanks of the convention to Rev. F. A. Burdock, chief clerk, Dr. A. W. Hyde, enrolling clerk, Rev. J. A. W. Wakefield, chaplain, James Carney, sergeant at arms, F. Hoop, messenger, Col. I. W. Goodner and G. T. Brown, stenographers, and Albert Keith, Charlie Walts and Frank Clough, pages, for the faithful discharge of their duties.

Colonel Jolley then presented President Edgerton with an elegantly framed photograph of the delegates and officers of the convention. Responding, Judge Edgerton said that surprises came thick and fast. He referred to his unanimous election as president of the convention of 1885, regardless of party, and of his election as presiding officer of this body by the same unanimous vote. To help to frame the organic law of a great commonwealth was the highest duty of any citizen. If he had done that to merit the approbation of his fellowmen he was satisfied. He promised that he would ever cherish the picture and hand it down as a legacy to his children.

Major Kellam, delegate from Brule County, then moved that the constitution having been considered and acted upon article by article, the same be passed, adopted, and confirmed as a whole. The ayes and noes were taken on this motion with the following result: Ayes, 72; nays, 0.

Mr. Caldwell offered a resolution requesting the president of the convention, as custodian of the enrolled constitution, to have four copies of the same prepared, compared, and certified to by him, said copies to be used in printing the newspaper supplements. The expense of the copies to be vouched by the president to the first Legislature at a cost of not to exceed fifty dollars. Carried.

Major Kellam moved that the four stars of the convention be left with Mr. Caldwell to be placed in the hall of the State House. Carried.

The constitution was signed by all the delegates present, seventy-two in number. A recess was then taken, after which, with Mr. Van Baskirk in the chair, Judge Edgerton introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee authorized by the convention fulfill the request by the publication of the same at the earliest practicable time when the funds are procured either from the United States or the state, and that the published copies be distributed the same as the journals.

Adopted.

The convention then tendered a vote of thanks to Deputy Secretary Hubbard for his attention to his duties, to the citizens of Sioux Falls for innumerable courtesies. The convention accepted the invitation to attend the reception in the evening tendered them by the Sioux Falls people.

A recess was then taken until 7 o'clock, when the convention reassembled and took a recess again until 9 o'clock, the hour of the reception, at which time the convention adjourned sine die.

The second election provided for by the omnibus bill was held on Tuesday, October 1st.

PROHIBITIONISTS ASSEMBLE

On the 7th of July, and immediately after the adjournment of the convention for the day, the prohibitionists who were delegates to the constitutional convention held a called meeting in convention hall. Mr. Clough, of Codington County presided. About one-fourth of the delegates had remained at their desks, and these were joined by many more, making a numerously attended meeting. There were many short and enthusiastic speeches made on the outlook for the prohibition amendment to the constitution. In all but a minority of the counties the statement was made that the proposed amendment would receive a majority vote. The chairman stated that the call for the present meeting was signed by three-fifths of the delegates to the constitutional convention. He said further that he had traveled all over South Dakota, speaking in over forty cities, and he was confident that prohibition would prevail at the polls. The announcement was made that Governor Mellette was wearing a prohibition badge and working for the cause.

Professor Bartlett, the superintendent of the Yankton city schools and secretary of the board of education, said:

From our standpoint we put down the constitutional convention as three to one in favor of prohibition, and it will probably be four to one when its sentiment fully solidifies. We have now more than two to one openly pledged. There were others in sympathy with us that are struggling for office, and will not commit themselves just now. The prohibition sentiment, strong as it is, grows constantly and its expansion is surprising. The prominent officials and politicians are coming out for us. Governor Mellette leads and declares himself for prohibition and all that there is in it, and wears the badge of our order. Judge Edgerton and Judge Moody are with us and for us and will so vote, and some of the most prominent lawyers in South Dakota, heretofore opposed to prohibition, have joined our ranks and are ready to speak in our behalf. Among these I can mention Mr. Americus Melville, of Huron.

The constitutional convention is a clean convention. Among its members there are no signs of saloon visiting. A few may go to saloons, but if they do they do not care to have it known. Many of the democratic members are the most radical prohibitionists in the convention and are making more prohibition noise than the republicans. Chauncey Wood, of Rapid City, is one of that class. He says there is a strong prohibition sentiment in the Black Hills, and instead of a large majority against prohibition in that section, the vote will be about evenly divided. We feel that prohibition will gain a victory in South Dakota, and that the first State Legislature will be strongly for prohibition. We are encouraged beyond expression over the outlook.

The members of the prohibition organization desire to say:

First. That the object of this organization is to aid in securing constitutional prohibition in South Dakota.

Second. That this organization is composed of followers of all parties, is strictly non-partisan, and as such supports no party, but leaves each of its members to follow the dictates of his own judgment and conscience as to his political creed and party affiliations. It follows that no member or set of members, whether officers or not, has any right whatever to pledge the support of this body to any of the political parties, and any such persons so pledging such support are acting without authority and in violation of the spirit of such organization.

On the other hand, each and every member, though free to support, without let or hindrance of this organization, whatever party he deems fit, with as much zeal and discretion as his character and ability shall supply, will not be indifferent to the due qualifications of candidates for nomination to public office, and may be expected to use a degree of caution and diligence commensurate with the relative importance of the issue at stake.

Third. The means and methods to be used are first and above all others the constant and humble seeking of God's blessing and help, without which we know that no right cause can win. Our design is to do all we can in joining others of like views on this question, in bringing to the minds and consciences of the people, in as many languages as possible, by means of pulpit, press, platform and otherwise, the various phases of the truth of this issue, and in securing for prohibition, by all honest and honorable means, the ballot of every possible voter. It is the duty of every member to say plainly what he thinks and where he stands on this question, in such a way as he cannot be misunderstood by either friend or foe, and to work as hard and as wisely as he can to win. A good cause has nothing to gain by hiding its light. What we want is votes. Nothing else will count in October. We must sow beside all waters, but most particularly in the fruitful fields. Given so much time and energy, prudence dictates that we expend them among the classes quickest to see and most ready to vote for what they believe to be right, and for the interest of their families, their property, and the public welfare. Each precinct and county is expected to do its best, but remember that a vote is a vote anywhere in South Dakota, and it will serve the cause but poorly to expend your strength all at home, when a part would bring greater returns elsewhere. Carry your own point of attack, but be ready to strengthen any other point reading it, lest the enemy flank us and carry the day. We are all the common people, fighting for a common cause, and must win all together or not at all. Let all churches, parties, societies and individuals friendly to this cause work together on this issue, leaving criticism till the fight is over, well knowing that though "he that is not with me is against me," it is equally true that "he that is not against us is for us." If God be for us, who can be against us?

Unanimously adopted by the central and executive committee.

V. V. Barnes, president, Yankton; W. F. E. Bishnell, secretary, Huron; T. H. Hagerly, treasurer, Aberdeen.

PROHIBITION IN THE NORTH STATE.

The central committee of the non-partisan prohibition association of Northern Dakota met at Fargo on the 24th of April for the purpose of considering plans and making preliminary arrangements for an organization in every county in the proposed new state, with the view of securing the submission of a prohibitory alcoholic liquor clause to a popular vote as a part of the state constitution. The prohibitionists did not propose to nominate candidates of their own for the constitutional convention but they declared that they would support no one for delegate to the constitutional convention who will not promise to vote in the convention for the submission of a prohibitory clause to a popular vote. The central committee appointed J. C. White, of Casselton, general organizer, and Reverend Mr. Barker, of Fargo, general lecturer, and these parties were expected to devote their time to the duties connected with their respective appointments. Organizers were also appointed for each legislative district, and for each county, whose duty it would be to organize the local forces for the election of constitutional convention delegates.

The North Dakota non-partisan temperance alliance held a convention at Jamestown late in May, and adopted a resolution reading as follows:

Resolved, That we who are of the people will not hereafter support the candidate of any political party which does not in its platform frankly admit the right of the people to settle the question of prohibition for themselves, and which does not in its platform pledge the party to abide by and defend constitutional and statutory prohibition when passed by the people.

The first state republican convention for South Dakota was called by that portion of the republican territorial central committee residing in the counties south of the 7th standard parallel, as follows:

The chairman of the territorial committee was Harrison Allen, who resided at Fargo, and who sent out notice to the members of the central committee residing in the counties south of the 7th standard parallel as follows:

Fargo, Dakota Territory, June 12, 1889.

You are hereby notified that the members of the republican territorial committee residing in South Dakota will meet at the Cataract House in Sioux Falls on July 4, 1889, at 8 o'clock P. M., to take such action as may be deemed necessary for the interests of the party in South Dakota. Please be present. By order
HARRISON ALLEN, Chairman
E. C. GEARY, Secretary.

The committee referred to by Chairman Allen do not appear to have acted in accordance with his notice, but assembled at Huron on Thursday, June 27th. The change was doubtless due to the forthcoming assembling of the constitutional convention at Sioux Falls on the date named by Chairman Allen, when the cataract would be crowded with prominent citizens, and where a committee to apportion delegates and name a time and place for holding a convention would be beset by many advisers who would have a personal interest in the arrangement of the call. At Huron they could deliberate quietly, and in advance of the constitutional meeting, which, probably, all of them desired to attend. From Huron the following call was issued on the 27th of June:

A republican state convention for South Dakota is hereby called to assemble in the opera house at Huron, in the Territory of Dakota, on the 28th day of August, 1889, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon of said day, to place in nomination the following named officers, to be voted for at the election to be held on the 1st day of October, 1889, in said South Dakota, namely:

Two representatives in Congress.
One governor.
One lieutenant governor.
One secretary of state.
One state auditor.

One state treasurer.
One attorney general.
One commissioner of schools and public lands.
Three judges of the Supreme Court.

Said state convention is called by order of the Republican Central Committee of South Dakota, and the apportionment for said convention is made up on the basis of one delegate for each 100 votes, or majority fraction thereof, as cast for the Hon. Geo. A. Mathews at the November election in 1888, and each county in South Dakota shall have at least one delegate, and the apportionment and representation for each county in South Dakota shall be as follows:

Aurora	7	Davison	9	McPherson	5
Beadle	17	Edmunds	8	Marshall	7
Brown	24	Fall River	3	McCook	7
Brookings	14	Faulk	7	Miner	8
Buffalo	1	Grant	7	Minnehaha	24
Brule	8	Hamlin	5	Moody	9
Bon Homme	10	Hand	11	Pennington	9
Butte	2	Hanson	6	Potter	5
Custer	5	Hughes	7	Roberts	2
Campbell	5	Hutchinson	1	Sanborn	8
Clark	11	Hyde	4	Spink	18
Codington	10	Jerauld	4	Sully	5
Charles Mix	7	Kingsbury	12	Turner	14
Clay	11	Lake	9	Union	14
Day	9	Lawrence	24	Walworth	2
Douglas	7	Meade	6	Yankton	15
Deuel	6	Lincoln	15
Total representation, 448.

The member or members of this committee are hereby authorized to call the several judicial conventions in the respective circuits in which they reside, and it is recommended that at the time the delegates are selected by the different county conventions to represent said counties in the state convention that delegates be elected to represent their respective counties in the judicial circuit convention.

J. M. GRIDLEY, Secretary.

W. T. COAD, Chairman.

The first state republican convention assembled at the City of Huron on Wednesday, August 28, 1889, at 2 o'clock P. M., and was called to order by Hon. W. T. Coad, of Rapid City, acting chairman of the Republican Central Committee. Prayer was offered by Reverend Skillman, of Huron.

Colonel Smedley, of Grant County, was elected temporary chairman, and Hon. H. F. Mayhew, of Sanborn County, temporary secretary.

There were contesting delegations from Douglas, Clark, Miner and Deuel counties. Colonel Smedley was the Alliance candidate for temporary chairman, but was acceptable to all factions.

The Black Hills delegations were on the ground with forty-nine votes. The two strong factions represented in the convention were the Farmers' Alliance and the elements opposed to their control, though there was a general concession that they were entitled to a fair representation on the ticket. The prohibitionists were also strongly represented, but seemed satisfied that they would be largely represented on the ticket, from governor down, without regard to the side which controlled. A. C. Mellette's nomination for governor was conceded on all sides.

The Committee on Credentials reported the following named entitled to seats in the convention:

Codington County—Edward G. Fahnstock, Frank Phillips, John Greig, W. E. Scarret, S. B. Sheldon, Edward Wheelock, A. D. Chase, O. Gealey, J. C. Waldron, J. S. Gordon.

Kingsbury, Marshall and Grant delegates not given—Day also.

Minnehaha County—R. F. Pettigrew, J. M. Bailey, Jr., John Sundback, H. J. Whipple, L. J. Aga, C. E. McKinney, O. H. Smith, W. T. Hanley, D. R. Bailey, Walter Crisp, N. E. Phillips, Cyrus Waltz, M. R. Keuchek, John T. E. Lee, L. W. Caldwell, W. F. Kelley, F. H. Brown, A. M. Bowen, H. Faber, B. F. Campbell, W. H. Holt, J. J. Hull, George Arneson, C. G. Coats.

Hutchinson County—Jacob Schmandt, John Schamber, M. K. Bowen, J. E. Hipple, Henry Heil, F. Simmons, Frank Buck, H. Fisinger, F. Schamber, Frank Bem, C. Guenther.

Aurora County—Joseph Stittler, A. L. Davie, J. B. Tripp, A. H. Hall, F. S. Turney, H. W. Rathbun, John Rogers.

Bon Homme County—James Keitbauch, J. D. Elliot, E. Maxwell, P. Unruh, James Smith, John Krause, J. H. Stephens, J. Weiderick, A. J. Abbott, T. Leach.

Hand County—G. R. Maron, J. F. Cotton, B. D. Milan, W. H. Line, George Chaffeen, W. R. Crisfield, Charles Turner, O. H. Pruner, William Johnston, S. T. Hicks, R. H. Pickering.

McCook County—O. C. Potter, F. E. Smith, B. D. L. Dudley, L. C. Larson, E. L. A. Abel, W. T. Pierce, E. H. Wilson.

Davison County—A. J. Edgerton, chairman, A. M. Bowdle, Rev. H. D. Ward, David Cole, George Watson, A. E. Hitchcock, L. M. Seaman, R. Clark, F. E. Blanchard.

Yankton County—R. J. Gamble, N. Edmunds, Sol. Wenzlaff, Wm. M. Powers, Wm. Blatt, E. G. Smith, H. Ellerman, B. S. Williams, Phillip Engel, J. I. Welo, W. P. Dewey, A. L. Pfeiffer, Iver Bagstad, A. O. Saugstad, Peter Engen.

Union County—A. S. Disbrow, John Dahl, N. A. Kirk, N. A. Branson, J. E. Sinclair, O. E. Dawson, John Larson, J. G. Merrill, E. C. Ericson, Wm. Main.

Spink County—B. F. Taylor, J. E. Jenkins, J. R. Taylor, William Kauce, Geo. O. Baten, A. J. Tuthill, W. W. Taylor, C. T. Howard, B. T. James, W. F. Dale, W. H. Roberts, M. L. Reed, J. D. Wilkins, D. H. Groves, F. Laberieg, R. M. Spoons, S. F. Cook, W. S. Babcock.

Sully County—Wm. McLaughlin, J. H. Maxwell, W. H. Little, S. W. Frumbull, William Toomey.

Turner County—Doctor Peterman, N. I. Alberty, J. P. Ward, D. W. Tyler, William Elliott, F. F. Hanford, F. R. Buchanan, Joel Fry, W. D. Clayton, J. A. Davis, Vale P. Thielman, F. H. Newton, R. W. Parker, E. J. Jenks.

Hanson County—L. C. Taylor, W. S. Logan, L. P. Chapman, C. I. Miltimore, George E. Foster, C. I. Phelps.

Hughes County—L. E. Gaffey, S. M. Laird, John Sutherland, W. I. Willmann, J. H. Russell.

Brookings County—W. H. Skinner, Reuben Matson, Christ Halverson, V. B. Lawrence, M. L. Palmer, James McVey, A. P. Culberson, George Headley, W. E. Whitney, M. N. Trygstad, Ole Thompson, F. O. Rice, A. H. Natwick, C. L. Woodbeck.

Miner County—C. A. Cressy, A. H. Barnes, C. M. Comstock, D. McCullough, James Stewart, Moses Martin, Lars Hanson, D. W. Jackson.

Lake County—A. E. Clough, S. N. Fader, V. R. Waddell, B. B. Howell, J. A. Johnson, George L. Wright, E. Sheridan, H. C. Cole, A. H. Tuttle.

Moody County—George Rice, C. H. Roerbeck, W. W. Spear, D. O. Hogeberg, B. B. Iverson, A. Brown, B. Miller.

Brule County—F. M. Goodykoontz, F. A. Thomas, J. Andrews, C. S. Blodgett, B. H. Keish, W. G. Cook, C. M. Gregory, W. V. Lucas.

Douglas County—H. W. Johnson, A. S. Chatz, C. E. Flecte, G. S. Perry, W. E. Shipton or Tipton, W. Verduin, J. T. Mathews.

Clay County—J. A. Barnback, S. N. Palmer, J. V. White, Harvey Gunderson, Nels O'Harson, N. W. Paulson, George Richardson, George Woodworth, D. H. Cotton, A. Jackson, S. C. Fargo.

Hyde County—James McCowell, C. Wilson, M. Connor, P. Sturer.

Colonel Star, of Lawrence County, was made permanent chairman, and E. W. Caldwell, of Sioux Falls, permanent secretary.

After a speech by Hon. G. C. Moody, of Lawrence County, who presented the convention with a gavel made of Black Hills tin taken from a Pennington County claim, the platform was presented by the Committee on Resolutions and adopted. A minority report on platform was also submitted, differing from the majority on the prohibition question, which was first submitted to a vote and lost by a vote of 94 for to 354 against. The majority report, which follows, was adopted by a unanimous vote.

PLATFORM

Resolved, That as republicans of the State of South Dakota, in our first convention assembled, we reaffirm the principles enunciated in the platform of the national convention assembled in Chicago in June, 1888, and we most heartily endorse the administration of President Harrison and Governor Mellette. We hail with unfeigned pleasure the privileges of statehood soon to be ours, and we congratulate the republican party in that they hold to those principles in which all industries can find true protection, and in which all citizens, without regard to nationality, can harmonize, and we congratulate our people that through the power of these principles they now have their rights of homestead, preemption and timber claim in our public lands restored to them. We favor those laws which give full remuneration to labor and secure to capital its rights.

We recognize agriculture, mining and manufacturing as the paramount material interests of our state, and we deprecate any laws which separate these from the commercial and industrial interests of our people, as we are dependent upon the harmony of all these great interests for our success. We therefore declare it to be the duty, as it should be the pleasure, of all men placed in office by the people, to oppose any unjust encroachments of corporations or trusts upon the rights of any of our citizens, and to so administer the government in all its branches as will conduce to the welfare and advantage of all our people.

We view with pride our educational facilities, the flourishing condition of our public schools, colleges and universities, and we demand that our school lands shall be jealously guarded.

We honor our old soldiers and favor liberal pensions to all those who hold an honorable discharge. We also favor wise and liberal provisions for the care and maintenance of all who are needy and disabled.

We most heartily sympathize with the Irish people in their desire for home rule.

We heartily favor the American system of protection, by such properly regulated import duties upon foreign products as will stimulate every industry, and fully protect our vast army of workmen against the unfair competition of the criminal and pauper laborers of the Old World.

We most heartily welcome to our fellowship the people who have come to us from foreign lands to find a home in this, the country of their adoption, intending to render due respect to its laws. We favor the enactment of such laws as will protect the citizens in the free exercise of their right of suffrage, and will insure fair and honest elections and equal and just taxation of property.

Recognizing the pernicious influence of the traffic in intoxicating liquors upon every interest of our commonwealth, we favor national and state prohibition of such traffic, and the adoption of the article of our constitution relating thereto, and the enactment of such laws as will make the same effective.

The great agricultural interests of Dakota demand that they should be protected, fostered and guarded with jealous care, and such laws enacted as will insure equitable rates of transportation, allowing no unjust discriminations against sections or individuals. That we favor the improvement of the great waterways of the Northwest so as to bring close competition in the carrying trade. We favor a warehouse law which will give every farmer a free market for his produce and which will not leave him at the mercy of any elevator and railroad combine.

We advise and urge prompt and liberal action on the part of the state and nation towards the establishment of a competent system of irrigation of such portions of our state as would be benefited thereby.

We favor the establishment of a bureau of labor and statistics, that we may have accurate information in regard to the educational, moral and financial condition and needs of the laboring masses. We also favor the prohibition by law of the employment of children under sixteen years of age in mines, shops and factories.

We favor the election of railroad commissioners by statute for the protection of the people against exorbitant rates and unjust discrimination, and we favor such a system of railroad inspection and supervision as will promote the convenience and safety of the people.

We view with alarm the dangerous encroachment of the corporation trust system all over our land, and demand the enactment of stringent laws, state and federal, forbidding the formation of all trusts and combinations for the purpose of controlling or embargoing the price of any of the necessities of life unlawful and contrary to public policy, and providing for their suppression and the punishment of all parties implicated therein.

After the adoption of the platform, the convention proceeded to the nomination of congressmen and state officers, when the following nominations were made.

On motion of Judge Brow, of Canton, O. S. Gifford, of Canton, was nominated for Congress by acclamation. Judge Ellis, of Faulkton, then nominated John A. Pickler for the other congressional position. Pickler was a Faulk County man. There was no opposing nomination, though efforts had been made by the friends of Matthews and also of McCoy to bring them before the convention, but these efforts were abandoned and Mr. Pickler was nominated by acclamation.

Delegate Schmidt, of Codington County, placed Arthur C. Mellette, of Codington County, in nomination for governor. There was no other candidate named and Governor Mellette was nominated by acclamation.

For lieutenant governor, J. H. Fletcher, of Brown County, and J. H. Patten, of Miner County, were placed in nomination. Fletcher was a farmer and this office was greatly desired by the alliance as the lieutenant governor presided over the Senate and would have the making up of the Senate committees. The first ballot resulted in Fletcher's nomination by a vote of 216 for Fletcher to 187 for his opponent.

Then followed the nomination of A. O. Ringsrud, of Union County, for secretary of state. He was placed in nomination by Hon. E. C. Erickson and was nominated by a unanimous vote.

The next office contested for was that of territorial auditor. Frank Alexander, of Campbell County, and L. C. Taylor, of Hanson County, both newspaper men, were placed in nomination. Taylor won by a vote of 277 to 121 for Alexander. The nomination of Taylor was then made unanimous on motion of the defeated party.

There were three candidates placed in nomination for state treasurer. These were Mr. Bebee, of Edmunds County, Mr. Diggs, of Grant County, and a Mr. Smith, of Lake County. Mr. W. F. Smith won on the sixth ballot by a vote of 247 to 201 for Mr. Diggs, Mr. Bebee having withdrawn. The nomination was made unanimous.

Robert Dollard, of Bon Homme County, was then nominated for attorney general by acclamation.

For superintendent of public instruction, G. I. Pinkham, of Hand County, H. E. Kratz, of Clay County, and Cortez Salmon, of Turner County, were placed in nomination and Mr. Pinkham was nominated on the first ballot. Mr. Ringsrud having been nominated from Union, the candidates from Clay and Turner were handicapped by their location.

The long drawn out struggle was for the office of commissioner of school and public lands. The candidates were O. H. Parker, of Brookings County, Abraham Van Osdel, of Yankton County, W. Able or Abel of McCook County, J. M. Paul, of Edmunds County, and Amos E. Barber, of Day County. It required thirty two ballots to settle it, Parker and Paul having been withdrawn in the meantime. This final ballot stood, 249 for Parker, 131 for Van Osdel, and 48 for Abel. The nomination of the Brookings gentleman was then made unanimous.

For supreme judges, Maj. A. J. Kellam, of Brule County, Hon. Dighton Corson, of Lawrence County, and Hon. J. E. Bennett, of Clark County. The only opposition was against Mr. Bennett, of Clark. Judge Poindexter, of Spink, and Americus B. Melville, of Beadle, being candidates against him. Judges Corson and Kellam were nominated by acclamation. And on the first ballot Bennett triumphed over both competitors, and was accorded a unanimous nomination.

This concluded the list of nominations. On motion the convention endorsed Chicago as the place for holding the World's Columbian Exposition in 1892. After passing some resolutions of compliment, the convention adjourned sine die.

Members of the Republican State Central Committee were appointed as follows:

Union County—H. H. Blair, Elk Point. Clay County—A. A. Barnestock, Vermillion. Yankton County—R. J. Gamble, Yankton. Bon Homme County—J. L. Turner, Springfield. Lincoln County—William M. Cuppett, Canton. Turner County—Vale P. Thielmann, Parker. Hutchinson County—John E. Hippler, Parkston. Douglas County—F. L. McCoy, Harrison. Minnehaha County—N. E. Phillips and R. Kenefick. McCook County—B. D. Dudley, Canistota. Hanson County—George E. Foster, Alexandria. Davison County—A. M. Bowdle, Mitchell. Aurora County—William Smith, Plankinton. Brule County—R. S. Southgate, Kimball. Moody County—George Rice, Flandrau. Lake County—C. B. Kennedy, Madison. Miner County—D. D. Holdredge, Howard. Sanborn County—J. F. Whiting, Artesian. Jerauld and Buffalo counties—O. T. Dye, Richards, Jerauld County. Brookings County—J. E. Diamond, Brookings. Kingsbury County—J. E. Gipson, DeSmet. Beadle County—W. B. Sterling, Huron. Hand County—B. D. Millam, Miller. Hyde and Hughes counties—F. O. Parker, Highmore. Sully and Potter counties—A. J. Pruett, Gettysburg. Deuel County—T. C. Peterson, Gary. Hamlin County—J. H. Smith, Castlewood. Codington County—J. H. Phelps, Watertown. Clark County—E. F. Conklin, Clark. Spink County—C. L. Howard, Redfield; E. W. Foster, Ashton. Grant and Roberts counties—D. Eastman, Wilmot. Day County—E. Huntington, Webster. Brown County—H. L. Sessions, Aberdeen; W. C. Allen. Marshall County—E. A. Cooper, Britton. Faulk County—H. B. Chamberlain, Faulkton. Edmunds and McPherson counties—Corwin Johnson, Leola. Walworth and Campbell counties—Frank Alexander, Mound City. Lawrence County—R. F. Grimshaw, Deadwood; W. S. Mead. Pennington County—D. H. Clark, Rapid City. Meade and Butte counties—J. R. Crowe, Sturgis. Custer and Fall River counties—D. W. McFadden, Custer City.

The chairman of this central committee was Charles T. McCoy, who was selected by order of the convention, by the nominees for governor, lieutenant governor, the congressmen and Sol. Star, chairman of the convention.

Of the candidates named by this convention Messrs. Gifford, Mellette, Dollard, Corson, Kellam and Bennett were nominated by the convention of 1885, and elected.

A feature of the political campaign of 1889 was an organization called the Scandinavian Republican League of South Dakota, which extended into every county and claimed that the Scandinavian vote of the state was one-seventh of the total vote. It had for its object the educating of the Scandinavians in the principles of the republican party, and for that purpose had established a newspaper at Brookings which was called the South Dakota Echo, edited by O. S. Norvold. O. Gesley, of Watertown, was president of the league.

A State Republican League was organized at Huron, August 27th, to supplement the work of the republican committee. Thirty local leagues were represented. John Longstaff, of Huron, was made chairman of the meeting, and John H. Drake, of Aberdeen, secretary. The constitution recommended by the national league was adopted.

Col. F. W. Foster, of Spink County, was elected president of the state league by acclamation. Thomas G. Orr, of Walworth County, was unanimously chosen first vice president, and H. H. Keith, of Minnehaha County, was elected second vice president, but declined, and Col. B. F. Campbell, of Minnehaha, was chosen. Dr. D. F. Royer, of Jerauld County, was elected third vice president. Charles F. Hackett, of Turner County, was elected secretary. Frank Washabaugh, of Lawrence County, was elected treasurer.

An executive committee of one from each county was named, as follows: Beadle, J. L. Spaulding, of Huron; Brown, H. S. Williams, Aberdeen; Codington, E. A. Gore, Watertown; Edmunds, J. D. Jones, Ipswich; Faulk, Frank Turner, Faulkton; Grant, J. C. Knapp, Milbank; Hand, S. L. Sage, St. Lawrence; Hanson, George E. Foster, Alexandria; Hyde, R. C. Walton, Highmore; Jerauld, Don C. Needham, Crow Lake; McPherson, J. Boucher, Leola; Miner, R. S. Person, Howard; Minnehaha, John Sundback, Sioux Falls; Sanborn, John Wilson, Letcher; Potter, B. M. Springer, Forest City; Spink, John J. Cushing, Ashton; Turner, V. C. Wass, Centreville; Walworth, W. D. Olney, Bangor; Yankton, L. B. French.

DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION

The Democratic Central Committee of the territory met at Mitchell, July 22d, and called a state convention to be held at Huron, September 4th, for the purpose of placing in nomination candidates for the various state offices, and to promulgate a platform. The committeemen present were: Ex Gov. L. K. Church, of Huron; Abe Boynton, Lennox; L. G. Johnson, Brown County; Maj. C. Boyd Barrett and James Ringrose, Aberdeen; J. F. Carpenter, Woonsocket; Otto Peemiller, Yankton; C. H. Freeman, Elk Point; Frank Hammer, Mitchell; L. S. Matthews, Armour; Chauncey Wood, Rapid City; Q. W. Childs, Mellette.

In accordance with the call, the democratic state convention assembled at Huron, September 4th. W. F. Steele, of Deadwood, was elected temporary chairman over John W. Harden, by four votes. E. M. O'Brien, Yankton County; A. S. Volkmar, Grant County; and W. W. Goddard, Minnehaha County, were elected secretaries.

The chair appointed the following Committee on Credentials: J. B. Bromlette, George Randall, Isaac Lander, S. A. Ramsey, Isaac Pierson, C. H. Price, Frank Bohl, F. D. Murrier, J. W. Hardin.

Committee on Permanent Organization—C. H. Freeman, B. S. Clidden, S. B. Van Buskirk, P. F. Wickhem, C. N. Harris, John Pusey, M. H. Day, J. F. Brackley, P. F. McClure.

The convention adjourned to meet at 7 o'clock P. M.

The evening session convened at 8 o'clock. The Committee on Credentials reported that there were no contests.

The temporary organization was made permanent, and a committee of five on rules and order of business, and a committee of nine on platform were appointed by the chair.

Committee on Rules—A. B. Curtis, S. H. Kauffmann, H. C. Walsh, S. F. Brott and James Walsh.

Committee on Platform—Hughes East, of Yankton; J. A. Ward, of Minnehaha; Louis Patrud, of Brookings; P. F. Wickhem, of Hanson County; Clarence Denniss, of Brown; W. A. Lichtenwalder, of Hughes; A. A. Powell, of Fall River; W. A. Brackley, of Lawrence, and A. Hoynton, of Lincoln.

The Committee on Rules and Order failed to agree. After some discussion, Cushing's Manual was adopted, and nominations were ordered according to the published call. O. H. Freeman, of Union, moved that no nomination be made until the report of the Committee on Platform was adopted. Carried.

There were several official efforts made to adjourn until 9 o'clock, Thursday, but they failed. The convention then selected the following central committee, being one for each representative district in the order named:

C. H. Freeman, Elk Point; D. M. Inman, Vermillion; C. J. B. Harris, Yankton; S. W. Treash, Scotland; J. V. Conklin, Canton; E. C. Kennedy, Parker; A. J. Yorker, Freeman; D. H. Gaughn, Wheeler; G. W. Matthews, Armour; W. D. Stiles, W. W. Goddard, Sioux Falls; J. D. Ryan, Salem; P. F. Wickhem, Alexandria; F. M. Hammer, Mitchell; J. D. Bartou, Plankinton; S. W. Duncan, Chamberlain; M. E. Cogley, Flandreau; John Fitzgerald, Madison; Jesse Gast, Howard; Connor Cooney, Woonsocket; F. W. Whitney, Wessington Springs; R. M. Hayes, Duncan; A. Colliton, Elkton; C. H. Bradford, Lake Preston; Z. T. Huntley, Huron; J. J. Smith, Miller; B. Cash, Pierre; L. Q. Jeffries, Highmore; R. B. Coddington, Blunt; R. J. Eads, Gettysburg; J. B. Fonger, Gary; Ben Harvey, Castlewood; J. E. Dorr, Watertown; S. A. Keenan, Clark; H. S. Volkmar, Milbank; W. Y. Ashton, Wilmot; H. C. Walsh, Redfield; F. M. Crain, Doland; D. B. Davis, Andover; F. B. Smith, Hetland; I. Pierson, Aberdeen; J. F. Rourins, Britton; J. K. Secklar, Faulkton; S. V. Arnold, Roscoe; S. P. Hardinbrook, Leola; O. K. Stablien, Bangor; W. A. McClaren, Mound City; Ben Bear, Deadwood; W. Alexander, Lead City; C. L. Wood, Rapid City; T. E. Harvey, Sturgis; D. Sayre, Minnesell; L. B. Rena, Buffalo Gap; A. A. Howell, Oelrichs.

THE PLATFORM

The democratic party of South Dakota, in its first state convention assembled, pledges its loyalty to the democratic faith as expressed in the national democratic platform of 1888, and endorses the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last annual message to Congress relative to tariff reduction.

We pledge ourselves to continue the battle for tariff reform until the present unjust and unnecessary war tariff is reduced and the cause of the people is triumphant.

We tender our sympathy to the suffering laboring men of the country, who in the past few months have been driven from employment by the merciless exaction of protected monopolies, unholy trusts and heartless combines.

We congratulate the people of South Dakota that we are sure to take our place in the sisterhood of states, and upon the opening to settlement of nearly eleven million acres of rich agricultural lands, both accomplished under democratic administration.

We are opposed to constitutional prohibition now demanded by the republican party of South Dakota, and favor in its stead a well regulated license law, which is accepted by the democracy of the country to be the best method of controlling the traffic in intoxicating liquors and lessening the evils of intemperance.

We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the various labor organizations and to the farming community in their efforts to improve their social and financial conditions, and we pledge ourselves to assist them by every means within our power to accomplish these ends.

We acknowledge the great debt of gratitude the nation owes to the heroes of the late war, and we declare in favor of just, liberal and equitable pension laws.

We declare in favor of minority representation and urge all fair-minded taxpayers to support the article of our constitution relating thereto as a partial protection against the evils of vicious legislation.

We are in sympathy with the Irish people in their effort to obtain home rule and look to the day when they shall be a free people.

We heartily extend the right hand of fellowship to all people of foreign lands who come to our new state with the intent to become true and loyal citizens.

We arraign the republican party of Dakota for extravagance and mismanagement in conducting the affairs of the territorial government; that party has always had the exclusive control of the lawmaking power of the territory. Our bonded indebtedness has been increased over six hundred thousand dollars within the past three years and public institutions established not actually needed at this time.

Our revenue has exceeded half a million dollars per annum, which was ample to meet all necessary expenses of territorial government. Notwithstanding this fact, and the further fact that property is taxed to the full limit allowed by law, a deficiency has been created within the last six months, and the new State of South Dakota will suffer the humiliation of entering the Union with a deficiency in its treasury of nearly two hundred thousand dollars under the present republican misrule. This deficiency will necessarily be increased over two hundred thousand dollars per annum in excess of all possible revenue receipts and over the limit of indebtedness allowed by our state constitution. A swarm of clerks were employed by the last Legislature equal in number to the members of both houses, and these extravagant and unnecessary appropriations were made without a due investigation as to the actual needs of the territory and over the veto of the democratic governor.

The following minority plank was rejected by a vote of 204 to 56:

That we are for the home against the saloon. For total and complete prohibition of the liquor traffic, and that we are in favor of the adoption of a law of our constitution relating thereto, and the enactment of such laws as will make the same effective and enforce and amendment.

The convention adjourned to the 5th, after adopting the platform.

The convention was called to order at 9:40 o'clock Thursday morning, September 5th. D. S. Glidden moved that the order of business be changed so that the state ticket be nominated before that of congress men.

Keith, of Brookings, presented the name of Hon. J. W. Harden, of Jerauld County, for governor. Winsett, of Sioux Falls, placed Hon. P. F. McClure, of Pierre, in nomination for governor. There being no other nominations, a ballot was ordered. Just at this juncture Mr. Keith arose and withdrew the name of Harden. McClure was then nominated by acclamation.

A. W. Pratt, of Brown, was nominated for lieutenant governor by acclamation.

Otto Peemiller, of Yankton, was presented for secretary of state; also Z. T. Huntley, of Beadle, presented the name of L. Q. Jeffries, of Hyde County. Mr. Jeffries, in a short speech, withdrew in favor of Peemiller, who was nominated by acclamation.

J. E. Horton, of Campbell County, was nominated for auditor by acclamation.

A. D. Hill, of Hand County, and Anton M. Kellar were named for treasurer. Before a ballot was taken, Kellar's name was withdrawn. Hill was nominated by acclamation.

H. F. Fellows, of Aurora, was nominated for attorney general by acclamation.

Prof. George A. McFarland, of Lake County, for superintendent of public instruction, was nominated by acclamation.

H. S. Volkmar, of Grant County, was nominated by acclamation for commissioner of school and public lands.

Judge L. W. Crofoot, of Beadle County, and S. B. Van Buskirk, of Codington, were named for supreme judge. Crofoot was withdrawn, and Van Buskirk nominated by acclamation.

C. H. Winsor, of Minnehaha, was nominated by acclamation for supreme judge. Dan McLaughlin, of Lawrence County, for supreme judge, was nominated by acclamation.

L. Q. Jeffries, of Hyde County, and O. M. Booth, of Custer County, were nominated for Congress by acclamation.

Hon. P. F. McClure was introduced to the convention and made a short speech, after which the convention adjourned.

THE ELECTION

The general election was held on Tuesday, October 1st, in both North and South Dakota, and resulted in the ratification of the state constitution in both states, and in the election of the republican state ticket, a republican Legislature in each state, the adoption of the prohibitory liquor article in both states, and the defeat of minority representation in both.

In North Dakota the public institutions were located by the constitution. In South Dakota a temporary capital was voted for, and the choice fell to Pierre by a large plurality.

A very full vote was polled in South Dakota, but it was estimated that 20 per cent of the vote of North Dakota was not cast, thousands of the voters being engaged with the threshing crews who were in the midst of their work in many sections of the state.

The returns of the state election held October 1, 1887, were made to the secretary of the territory, Hon. J. B. Richardson, and canvassed by Governor

Mellette, Chief Justice Bartlett Tripp and the secretary, as provided by the enabling act. The result of the canvass follows:

For governor—A. C. Mellette, of Codington County, received 53,964 votes; P. F. McClure, of Hughes County, 23,840 votes.

For lieutenant governor—J. H. Fletcher, of Brown County, 54,711; A. W. Pratt, of Brown County, 22,946.

For secretary of state—A. O. Ringsrud, of Union County, 54,587; Otto Peemiller, of Yankton County, 23,272.

For state auditor—L. C. Taylor, of Hanson County, 54,521; Joseph E. Horton, of Campbell County, 23,309.

For state treasurer—W. F. Smith, of Lake County, 54,680; A. D. Hill, of Hand County, 23,052.

For superintendent public instruction—G. L. Pinkham, of Hand County, 54,781; George A. McFarland, Lake County, 23,055.

For commissioner of school and public lands—O. H. Parker, of Brookings County, 53,846; Henry D. Volkmar, Grant County, 22,632.

For attorney general—Robert Dollard, Bon Homme County, 55,034; H. E. Fellows, Aurora County, 22,632.

For justices of the supreme court—First district, D. Corson, Lawrence County, 54,110; Daniel McLaughlin, Lawrence County, 21,809. Second district, A. G. Kellam, Brule County, 54,150; Curtis H. Winsor, Minnehaha County, 21,410. Third district, John E. Bennett, Clark County, 53,675; S. B. Van Buskirk, Codington County, 22,677.

For members of Congress—O. S. Gifford, of Lincoln County, 54,135; John A. Pickler, of Faulk County, 53,257; L. Q. Jeffries, Hyde County, 22,840; S. M. Booth, Custer County, 22,153.

For circuit judges—First district, E. G. Smith, 9,090; John W. Harden, 4,051. Second district, F. R. Aikens, 7,883; G. B. Wynn, 2,433. Third district, J. O. Andrews, 8,146; M. S. Glass, 5,866. Fourth district, Richard Haney, 6,053; — Porter, 2,959. Fifth district, A. W. Campbell, 7,942; D. W. Crofoot, 3,771. Sixth district, Howard G. Fuller, 9,320; Colonel Price, 3,725. Seventh district, John W. Nowlin, Rapid City, 1,936; W. F. Coad, 1,261. Eighth district, Charles U. Thomas, Deadwood, 3,411; A. W. Hastie, Deadwood, 1,592.

TERRITORIAL OFFICERS APPOINTED BY GOVERNOR MELLETTE

The governor subsequently appointed Col. J. T. Huston, adjutant general; H. E. Blanchard, public examiner; F. H. Hagerty, commissioner of immigration, and Dr. D. E. Collins, veterinary surgeon general. For railway commissioners, J. H. King, of Rapid City; A. D. Chase, of Watertown; H. J. Rice, of Huron. J. L. Robinson, secretary of the board.

CHAPTER CXV

THE TWO DAKOTAS BECOME STATES

1889

(Conclusion of Territorial History)

ORGANIZING STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA—MEETING AND ORGANIZATION OF FIRST SOUTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE—NAMES OF MEMBERS—RICHARD F. PITTIGREW AND GIDEON C. MOODY ELECTED SENATORS—ORGANIZING STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA—STATE OFFICIALS—CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, NORTH DAKOTA—NAMES OF MEMBERS—FIRST STATE CONVENTION, NORTH DAKOTA—NAMES OF MEMBERS—FIRST REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION, NORTH DAKOTA—NAMES OF MEMBERS—FARMERS' ALLIANCE IN CONTROL—NORTH DAKOTA DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION—NAMES OF MEMBERS—ORDWAY SOUGHT A NORTH DAKOTA SENATORSHIP—MEETING OF NORTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE—NAMES OF MEMBERS—EX-GOVERNOR PIERCE AND L. R. CASEY ELECTED UNITED STATES SENATORS—HARRISON'S STATEHOOD PROCLAMATION AND THE FORMALITIES OF ADMISSION TO THE UNION—THE TWO DAKOTAS MADE TWIN STATES—CONCLUSION.

SOUTH DAKOTA STATEHOOD

The general election for the ratification of the constitutions, the election of state officers and a State Legislature, was held on Tuesday, October 1, 1889, in both North and South Dakota, and resulted in the ratification of the constitutions, and in the election of the republican state tickets, a Legislature largely republican in each state, the adoption of the prohibitory intoxicating liquor clause in each state, and the defeat of minority representation.

In North Dakota the public institutions had all been located by the constitution. In South Dakota a temporary capital was voted for, and the choice fell to Pierre by a large plurality. A very full vote was polled in South Dakota, but it was estimated that 20 per cent of the vote in North Dakota was not cast, thousands of the voters being engaged with the threshing crews which were in the midst of their work in all parts of the state. The tables elsewhere printed give the official returns of the vote.

Section 24 of the omnibus bill passed by Congress prescribed the procedure, in case the constitutions were ratified, as follows:

Sec. 24. That the constitutional conventions may, by ordinance, provide for the election of officers for full state government, including members of the legislatures and representatives in the Fifty first Congress, but said state governments shall remain in abeyance until the states shall be admitted into the Union, respectively, as provided in this act.

In case the constitutions of any of the said proposed states shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the Legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two senators of the United States, and the governor and secretary of state of such proposed state shall certify the election of the senators and representatives as required by law, and when such state is admitted into the Union the senators and representatives shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress, and to all the rights and privileges of senators and representatives of other states in the Congress of the United States. And the officers of the state governments formed in pursuance of said constitution, as provided by the constitutional conventions, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of such state officers, and all laws in force made by said territories at the time of their admission into the Union shall be in force in such states, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitutions of the states, respectively.

Now the provisions of the new constitution are introduced to guide the pioneer officials in their earliest proceedings. Section 13 of the schedule and ordinance provided as follows:

Sec. 13. The Legislature elected under the provisions of this ordinance and constitution shall assemble at the temporary seat of government on the third Tuesday in October in the year A. D. 1889, at 12 o'clock M., and on the first day of their assemblage the governor and other state officers shall take the oath of office in the presence of the Legislature. The oath of office shall be administered to the members of the Legislature and to the state officers by the chief justice of the territory, or by any other officer duly authorized by the laws of the Territory of Dakota to administer oaths.

Sec. 14. Immediately after the organization of the Legislature and taking the oath of office by the state officers, the Legislature shall then and there proceed to the election of two senators of the United States for the State of South Dakota, in the mode and manner provided by the laws of Congress for the election of United States senators. And the governor and the secretary of state of South Dakota shall certify the election of said senators and two representatives in Congress in the manner required by law.

Sec. 15. Immediately after the election of the United States senators as above provided for, said Legislature shall adjourn to meet at the temporary seat of government on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of January, 1890, at 12 o'clock M. Provided, however, that if the State of South Dakota has not been admitted by proclamation or otherwise at said date, then said Legislature shall convene within ten days after the date of admission of the state into the Union.

The procedure for electing senators had been prescribed by the laws of the United States and needed no modification to suit it to the Dakota situation. Chapter 1, Title 2, of the United States Revised Statutes thus regulates the matter:

Sec. 14. The Legislature of each state which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any senator was elected to represent such state in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a senator in Congress.

Sec. 15. Such election shall be conducted in the following manner. Each house shall openly, by a viva voce vote of each member present, name one person for senator in Congress from such state, and the name of the person so voted for who receives a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each house shall be entered on the journal of that house by the clerk or secretary thereof, or, if either house fails to give such a majority to any person on that day, such fact shall be entered on the journal. At 12 o'clock meridian of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place as aforesaid, the members of the two houses shall convene in joint assembly, and the journal of each house shall then be read, and if the same person has received a majority of all the votes in each house, he shall be declared duly elected senator. But if the same person has not received a majority of the votes in each house, or if either house has failed to take proceedings as required by this section, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose by a viva voce vote of each member present a person for senator, and the person who receives a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, a majority of all the members of both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected. If no person receives such a majority on the first day, the joint assembly shall meet at 12 o'clock meridian of each succeeding day during the session of the Legislature, and shall take at least one vote until a senator is elected.

Sec. 16. Whenever on the meeting of the Legislature of any state a vacancy exists in the representation of such state in the Senate, the Legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after meeting and organization, to elect a person to fill such vacancy in the manner prescribed in the preceding section for the election of a senator for the full term. (This section was applicable to the situation in both the Dakotas.)

Sec. 17. Whenever during the session of the Legislature of any state a vacancy occurs in the representation of such state in the Senate, similar proceedings to fill such vacancy shall be had on the second Tuesday after the Legislature has organized and has notice of such vacancy.

In 1885 South Dakota had taken all the necessary preparatory steps for admission into the Union under the name of the "State of Dakota," under the authority of an act of the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota, but had not been able to secure admission into the sisterhood, as has been quite fully related in these pages. At that time the Legislature then chosen elected Judge G. C. Moody and Judge A. J. Edgerton as the senators, there being no other candidates, and the two selected being the popular choice. Since that event

Hon. R. F. Pettigrew, of Minnehaha County, had grown to be a popular citizen and was, in 1885, a leader in the political field, with the most numerous following, and with less opposition than those who had been previously favored. The Farmers' Alliance had in the meantime become a powerful factor, and though its majority was allied with the republican party, it cherished a number of advanced political tenets that could be promoted by having a senator elected that would represent them in addition to the principles of the republican party, hence a candidate from the Alliance, Mr. Alonzo Wardell, came into the field with the purpose of displacing Mr. Moody, who was opposed by Hon. H. E. Loucks, largely, as it appeared, on personal grounds. Mr. Loucks himself would doubtless have been in the field, but was not eligible at the time, not having been a citizen of the United States the required period. Mr. Loucks was president of the Alliance and a citizen of excellent ability and well equipped for public station. Judge Moody and Judge Edgerton, who had been energetically and ably laboring to promote South Dakota's statehood in Washington since their election in 1885, were also prominent candidates for reelection.

Under the constitution which had been ratified October 1st, the Legislature was given but two weeks' time in which to prepare for its first session, at which United States senators were to be elected. In the meantime the votes were to be canvassed, returns made to the secretary of the territory, and a final canvass made by the territorial canvassing board and certificates of election issued to the persons elected to state offices and the Legislature. All this had to be done in an unusually hurried manner, and at the time of the convening of the Legislature at Pierre there were still three House members whose election had not been definitely determined. But the constitution required the meeting of the Legislature and the qualification of the state officials on that date, and there was no authority to change it. The returns in the hands of the secretary indicated that the Legislature would be made up of forty-one republicans in the State Senate, three democrats and one independent republican. In the House, 111 republicans, nine democrats and one independent republican. There were forty-one senatorial districts and fifty representative districts. The state senators-elect were:

First district, Union County, E. C. Ericson, Elk Point; Second district, Clay County, John L. Jolley, Vermillion; Third district, Yankton County, L. B. French, Yankton; Fourth district, Bon Homme County, George W. Snow, Springfield; Fifth district, Lincoln County, H. J. Frank (independent republican), Canton; Sixth district, Turner County, Vale P. Thielman, Parker; Seventh district, Hutchinson County, C. Ferger (democrat), Olivet; Eighth district, Charles Mix and Douglas counties, E. E. Tomlinson, Castalia; Ninth district, Minnehaha County, A. B. Kittredge, Sioux Falls, and J. A. Cooley, Dell Rapids; Tenth district, McCook County, J. H. Brown, Salem; Eleventh district, Hanson County, M. E. Conlan, Alexandria; Twelfth district, Davison County, George A. Johnson, Mitchell; Thirteenth district, Aurora County, W. M. Smith, Plankinton; Fourteenth district, Brule County, J. M. Greene, Chamberlain; Fifteenth district, Moody County, L. Haswold, Flandrau; Sixteenth district, Lake County, H. P. Smith, Madison; Seventeenth district, Miner County, Dr. J. A. Trow, Carthage; Eighteenth district, Sibley County, C. A. Warner, Artesian; Nineteenth district, Jerauld and Buffalo counties, Rev. S. T. Huntley, Wessington Springs; Twentieth district, Brookings County, G. J. Cooley, Brookings; Twenty-first district, Kingsbury County, F. R. Spooner, DeSmet; Twenty-second district, Beadle County, John Cain, Huron; Twenty-third district, Hand County, George R. Mason, Miller; Twenty-fourth district, Hyde and Hughes counties, Coc J. Crawford, Pierre; Twenty-fifth district, Sully and Potter counties, L. C. Leppelman, Gettysburg; Twenty-sixth district, Deuel County, C. R. Westcott, Goodwin; Twenty-seventh district, Hamlin County, Ole T. Ford, Bryant; Twenty-eighth district, Codington County, W. R. Thomas, Watertown; Twenty-ninth district, Clark County, C. G. Sherwood, Clark; Thirtieth district, Spink County, Thomas Sterling, Redfield, H. T. Hunter, Mellette; Thirty-first district, Grant and Roberts counties, John S. Proctor, Milbank; Thirty-second district, Day County, John Norton, Webster; Thirty-third district, Brown County, L. C. Dennis, Aberdeen, George W. M. Miller, Frederick; Thirty-fourth district, Marshall County, Richard Williams, Langford; Thirty-fifth district, Faulk County, F. M. Byrne, Faulkton; Thirty-sixth district, Edmunds and McPherson counties, F. M. Hopkins, Roscoe; Thirty-seventh district, Walworth and Campbell counties, George H. Hoffman, Bangor; Thirty-eighth district, Lawrence County, Charles Parsons, Lead City, F. J. Washabaugh, Deadwood; Thirty-ninth district, Pennington County, A. W. Bangs (democrat), Rapid City; Fortieth district, Meade County, Edward Galvin (democrat), Sturgis; Forty-first district, Custer and Fall River counties, Dr. A. S. Stewart, Custer City.

MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

First district, Union County, J. E. Sinclair, Beresford, J. B. Brouillette, Jefferson, Ole Gunderson, Brule; Second district, Clay County, Darwin M. Inman, Vermillion, John F. Norelius; Third district, Yankton County, John O. Aseth, Gayville, Fred Schnauber, Yankton, Phil K. Faulk, Yankton, E. G. Edgerton, Yankton; Fourth district, Bon Homme County, A. J. Abbott, Bon Homme, Frank Trumb, Choteau Creek, A. W. Lavender, Scotland; Fifth district, Lincoln County, Henry Bradshaw, Maple Grove, H. D. Fitch, Eden, O. A. Helvig, Canton; Sixth district, Turner County, C. J. Bach, Hurley, D. W. Tyler, Marion, E. M. Mann, Swan Lake; Seventh district, Hutchinson County, M. K. Bowen, Milltown; A. J. Yerker, Freeman; Eighth district, Douglas County, F. LeCocq, Jr., Harrison, Frank Peacock, Armour; Ninth district, Charles Mix County, George Norbeck, Bloomington, Edwin Morgan, Castalia; Tenth district, Minnehaha County, S. E. Young, Sioux Falls, C. W. Hubbard, Sioux Falls, John F. Norton, Sioux Falls, Lasse Bothun, Palisades, Charles T. Austin, Taopi, Sever Wilkinson, New Hope, J. R. Manning, Valley Springs; Eleventh district, McCook County, Joshua Watson, Canistota, W. T. Pierce, Dover; Twelfth district, Hanson County, W. C. Wright, Emery, H. P. Benjamin, Alexandria; Thirteenth district, Davison County, D. M. Powell, Mount Vernon, A. L. Tibbitts, Ethan; Fourteenth district, Aurora County, John Davis, Plankinton, J. L. Heintz, White Lake; Fifteenth district, Brule County, Henry Hilton, C. J. Maynard, L. S. House, all of Kimball; Sixteenth district, Moody County, Samuel L. Hess, Flandrau, W. H. Loucks, Trent; Seventeenth district, Lake County, Frank Knight, Romona, B. B. Dowell, Madison, N. O. Helgeson, Prairie Queen; Eighteenth district, Miner County, S. Jones, Roswell, R. D. Stove, Howard; Nineteenth district, Sanborn County, S. T. Winslow, Woonsocket, W. H. McKeel, Artesian; Twentieth district, Jerauld County, V. I. Converse, Alpena; Twenty-first district, Buffalo County, Ed Daniels, Gann Valley; Twenty-second district, Brookings County, M. A. Stanley, Volga, H. I. Stearns, Brookings, Asa B. Doughty, White; Twenty-third district, Kingsbury County, W. H. Matson, Iroquois, George H. Whiting, Esmond, Edward Benke, Arlington; Twenty-fourth district, Beadle County, Karl Gerner, Iroquois, George E. Mahaffa, Wessington, E. Wilson, Hitchcock, Frank Munson, Virgil, Maris Taylor (democrat), Huron; Twenty-fifth district, Hand County, L. W. Lansing, Ree Heights, E. T. Sheldon, St. Lawrence, W. W. Johnson, Dean; Twenty-sixth district, Hyde County, B. F. McCormick, Highmore; Twenty-seventh district, Hughes County, W. Summer-side, Harrold; Twenty-eighth district, Sully County, W. H. Little, Warnecke; Twenty-ninth district, Deuel County, M. F. Greeley, Gary, G. E. Hodgkins, Estelline; Thirtieth district, Hamlin County, M. M. Karlstad, Seward, J. C. Sharp, Castlewood; Thirty-first district, Codington County, Alex McIntyre, Watertown, A. B. Henry, Henry, T. G. Wilson, Waverly; Thirty-second district, Clark County, F. W. Collins, Willow Lake, W. B. Kenyon, Bradley, Alfred Heaton, Raymond; Thirty-third district, Spink County, J. M. Howard, Turton,

C. H. Driesbach, Frankfort, B. E. Bisler, Crandon, S. W. Bowman, Ashton, J. F. Wood, Doland; Thirty-fourth district, Faulk County, I. C. Sage, Faulkton, W. D. Elting, Faulkton; Thirty-fifth district, Potter County, C. A. McConnell, Copp; Thirty-sixth district, Grant County, W. D. Lawrence, Troy, A. L. Patridge, Milbank; Thirty-seventh district, Roberts County, Louis Mickelson, Wilnot; Thirty-eighth district, Day County, C. W. Stafford, Andover, M. Rexford, Waubay, J. J. Fosse, Webster; Thirty-ninth district, Marshall County, Peter Berkman, Amherst, John Hovern, Havanna, North Dakota; Fortieth district, Brown County, M. J. Gordon, Aberdeen, G. B. Dauley, Columbia, F. H. Smith, Groton, S. A. Kennedy, Ferney, J. C. Simmons, Frederick, J. J. Barnes, Westport, A. H. Green, Warner, W. A. Burnham, Groton; Forty-first district, Edmunds County, John Rudd, Roscoe, David Gamble, Bowdle; Forty-second district, Walworth County, M. T. DeWoody, Bangor; Forty-third district, McPherson County, Fred Junge, Long Lake, William Brancier, Eureka; Forty-fourth district, Campbell County, J. B. Varnum, Mound City; Forty-fifth district, Fall River County, H. A. Godard, Smithwicks; Forty-sixth district, Custer County, Cyrus Cole, A. S. Way, both of Hermosa; Forty-seventh district, Pennington County, R. B. Hughes, Rapid City, Joseph Jolley, Rapid City; Forty-eighth district, Meade County, M. M. Cooper, Sturgis City, S. B. Miller, Grashull; Forty-ninth district, Lawrence County, W. S. O'Brien, Lead City, W. H. Parker, Deadwood, James Anderson, Deadwood, Sol Star, Deadwood, Robert Graham, Terra-ville, John Wolznmuth, Spearfish; Fiftieth district, Butte County, F. B. Cummings, Minnesela.

The Legislature convened at noon on Tuesday, October 15, 1889, the House of Representatives in the courthouse, and the Senate in the Presbyterian Church, rather a commendable beginning so far as the places of meeting were concerned. Pierre, however, had not known it would be the temporary capital until less than a fortnight before, and it will be understood that it had not had time to build suitable accommodations for the capital. On this occasion it was estimated, after considerable inquiry, that there were about 1,200 visitors present in town when the Legislature convened. John Rudd, of Edmunds County, acted as temporary chairman of the House, and J. W. Cone, of Brule County, temporary secretary. After prayer and the calling of the roll, S. E. Young, of Minnehaha County, was elected speaker by a vote of 118 to 14, the latter number being cast by the democratic faction for R. B. Hughes, democratic member from Pennington County. J. W. Cone, of Brule County, was elected chief clerk under the permanent organization, and W. Hotaling, of Beadle County, sergeant-at-arms.

In the Senate the body was called to order by its president, Lieutenant Governor Fletcher. Prayer was offered by Reverend Mr. Brown, and F. A. Burdick, of Yankton, was elected chief clerk; J. C. Cummings, of Brookings County, sergeant-at-arms, and Rev. Edward Brown, of Kingsbury County, chaplain. Owing to the prevalence of a serious doubt regarding the lieutenant governor's eligibility to sit, Sen. Frank J. Washabaugh, of Lawrence, acted as president of the Senate.

The two houses having perfected their organization, the ceremony of administering the oath of office to all the state officers took place on the porch in front of the courthouse, Chief Justice Bartlett Tripp administering the oath. The Legislature took a recess to witness the solemn ceremony, after which it reconvened, and without further action adjourned until 2 o'clock P. M. the following day.

In the evening of the 15th the republican members held a caucus at the courthouse to decide whom to support for senators. The Hon. John L. Jolley, state senator from Clay County, was elected chairman of the caucus by a unanimous vote, and Hon. Carl Gerner, of Beadle County, and Hon. E. C. Erickson, of Union County, were appointed secretaries. There were also four tellers appointed, one for each candidate, to-wit: G. C. Moody, R. B. Pettigrew, A. J. Edgerton and Alonzo Wardell. A. B. Kuttredge was the teller for Mr. Pettu-grew. The names of the others are wanting. These preliminaries being arranged, the nomination of candidates for United States senator was declared to be in order, whereupon Hon. M. J. Gordon, of Brown County, in an able speech, placed in nomination Hon. Gideon C. Moody, which was eloquently seconded by Hon. John Cain, of Beadle County. There was considerable cheering following the nomination of Mr. Moody.

The Hon. S. E. Young, who had been elevated to the speakership, then took the floor, and being one of the finest orators in the new state, presented the meritorious qualities of his candidate in the most eloquent and telling manner, and when he pronounced the name of Frank Pettigrew it was greeted with much enthusiasm. Hon. Coe I. Crawford then seconded the nominations of both Moody and Pettigrew in an effective speech, demonstrating that he was much more than an ordinary speaker, and quite at home upon the occasion.

The Hon. E. B. Cummings, of Butte County, came next, placing in nomination Hon. Alonzo Wardell, who was said to have the favor of the Farmers' Alliance. Mr. Cummings' effort was warmly praised for its effective style and logical reasoning. The times were pregnant with the new, reasonable and substantial demands of the important association represented by the Hon. Alonzo Wardell, to whose claims could be added the fact that he was an unswerving upholder and defender of republican principles, and was also a capable representative of the reforms in the economy of agriculture and transportation that were beginning to be recognized as issues of the utmost importance to the welfare and prosperity of the people everywhere, and to none of greater importance than to South Dakota. The speech received abundant evidence that he had a sympathetic audience and an appreciative one.

Doctor Spooner, of Kingsbury County, followed with an earnest recital of the many excellent qualities of the Hon. Alonzo J. Edgerton. The speaker had an excellent subject, whose public career and private life afforded an attractive theme for the occasion, and one that afforded opportunity for bestowing much praise without exaggeration. His candidate was unquestionably in the house of his friends, highly esteemed, and had there been three senators to elect, it would be safe to say that he would have been named one of the successful ones.

With the close of Doctor Spooner's remarks the list of candidates was completed, and an informal ballot was ordered, which being taken, disclosed the following result: For B. F. Pettigrew, 98 votes; for G. C. Moody, 85 votes; for A. J. Edgerton, 67 votes; for Alonzo Wardell, 44 votes. Mr. Cummings, then, on behalf of his candidate, Mr. Wardell, moved that proceedings under the informal ballot be suspended, and that Pettigrew and Moody be declared the unanimous nominees. The motion was seconded amid much enthusiasm, and carried by a unanimous vote.

This was followed by the introduction of the successful candidates, and their acceptance of the nominations in a formal manner.

Judge Edgerton, in response to a general and vociferous demand, spoke briefly and wisely, exhibiting no symptoms that he retained any unkind sentiment. He said "the voice of the people was the voice of God," and he bowed to the will of the majority, and should go forward doing what he could to promote the welfare of the people and the interests of the new state. He paid a complimentary tribute to the successful candidates.

Mr. Wardell stated that as a good republican he was ruled by the majority, and was satisfied that the state would have capable senators, who could be trusted. He was especially grateful to the many friends who had steadfastly stood by him.

On the following day the Legislature confirmed the action of the republican caucus, electing Pettigrew and Moody United States senators from South Dakota. The democratic members, to the number of seventeen, voted for Bartlett Tripp and M. H. Day.

This concluded the work authorized for this session, and the Legislature adjourned to meet the first Tuesday after the first Monday in January, 1870. South Dakota had not yet been admitted into the Union. That formality rested with the President, and he was expected to wait until North Dakota was ready for admission. The north state would elect its senators later in the month.

Prior to the final adjournment, the Legislature passed a resolution endorsing Chicago as the exposition city for the Columbian Exposition in 1892. It also adopted a resolution requesting the Dakota congressmen to labor for an appropriation to defray the expense of making surveys and boring wells with a view of determining the extent of South Dakota's water resources.

The members of the Legislature joined in a request for the appointment of Judge Edgerton to the office of judge of the district of South Dakota.

EDGERTON ENDORSED—BIOGRAPHICAL—MOODY AND PETTIGREW

Judge A. J. Edgerton's name was presented to the President by petition for the office of United States district judge of South Dakota, about November 5th. The petition was endorsed by the two South Dakota senators, the governor of the state and most of the state officers, the judges of the State Supreme Court, a large number of the members of the State Legislature and many citizens. Later a call was made upon the attorney general and the callers were assured the appointment would be made.

About November 18th, Alonzo J. Edgerton, then of Mitchell, South Dakota, was appointed judge of the United States District Court for the district of South Dakota—a life position, and one he was well qualified to fill. The appointment was quite satisfactory to the people of the state, the judge having previously served a term as a member of the United States District Court, occupying at that time the position of chief justice.

At the time of the election of Messrs. Moody and Pettigrew to the Senate a biographical sketch was published of each which may be accepted as authentic. The sketches did not appear until both had been elected and were on their way to Washington to urge the promulgation of the proclamation that would admit South Dakota into the Union, and which was awaiting the action of North Dakota in order that the President might have the satisfaction of proclaiming full statehood for both at the same time. The sketch of Judge Moody is first given, he being the eldest:

"Gideon C. Moody is a native of Indiana, where he lived when the War of the Rebellion began. He received a good education and chose the profession of law for his calling. He was an impetuous, ardent republican already active in political affairs when the first call for troops was made by Lincoln after the firing upon Sumter. He enlisted as a private and was commissioned first lieutenant April 10, 1861. When the company was organized it was assigned to the Nineteenth Indiana Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and Lieutenant Moody was promoted to captain. The regiment was sent to West Virginia, where he took part in the battles of Phillipi and Laurel Hill—led the skirmish at the latter place, and participated in the battle of Garrick's Ford, where the rebel General Garnett was killed. When he returned to his old camp at Laurel Hill he received notice through Schuyler Colfax of his appointment as captain in the Nineteenth United States Regulars. The term of enlistment of his regiment, three months, having expired, it returned to Indiana and was mustered out. Governor Morton then offered him a commission as colonel of a regiment of the best ten companies he could pick out of twenty-two then in camp. But Moody declined, having promised the men of his old regiment that he would go with them if they reenlisted. This was done. The Ninth Indiana was formed and Captain Moody commissioned as lieutenant colonel. This regiment also was sent to West Virginia. While in that field he was promoted colonel in command.

"His regiment was finally ordered to join Buell's forces at Nashville. He took part in the battle of Shiloh. His adjutant was shot at his side, and his regiment lost 172 out of 448 engaged. On his return to Nashville he had trouble with General Wilson for his outrageous abuse of the men. He shared the general feeling that General Buell was disloyal, and he did not hesitate to express his views. It will be remembered that there was a serious quarrel among the officers of that command, one of whom met his death because of it. In this state of affairs Colonel Moody asked to be mustered out, that he might join his company in the regular army. His request was granted, for no doubt General Buell desired to be rid of Moody's censure. He served as a regular army officer in various commands, sometimes commanding a regiment, and was aide to General Thomas during the campaigns of Chickamauga, Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge. Believing, in the spring of 1864, that the war was nearly ended, he resigned, came back to Indiana, and shortly after, with his family, joined the New York colony bound for Dakota and emigrated to Yankton. He settled at Yankton and remained there fourteen years. He was elected to the Legislature for three terms, 1867, 1869 and 1874. He was chosen speaker of the House in 1869, and again in 1874. In 1878 he was appointed associate justice of the Supreme Court of Dakota, and was assigned to the Black Hills district, succeeding Judge Bennett, who had been elected to Congress. This is where the colonel received his title of judge. In 1883 he was a member of the first constitutional convention. In 1885 he was elected to the second constitutional convention. In both conventions he was chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He drafted the first memorial to Congress for the division of Dakota Territory and the admission of South Dakota as a state. That document may be said to have been the basis of all similar appeals. It has been embodied in the proceedings of both branches of Congress. When the first south state government was organized Mr. Moody was elected one of the senators, almost without opposition. The place was conceded to him. His gallant fight at Washington to defeat the one-state movement will be remembered. His efforts had ever been for the welfare of South Dakota. His ability no one questions."

"Hon. Richard F. Pettigrew was born in Ludlow, Vermont, in 1848. When six years old, his father and family moved to Wisconsin and took up a pre-emption. 'Frank,' as he is popularly called, received the training and education of an ordinary farmer boy. At sixteen years of age his father released him from farm work, that he might get a better education than the public school afforded. This opportunity, although not very promising to one less hopeful, Frank made use of to good advantage. He paid for his schooling at the college by janitor work. When within one term of graduation his father died and no one was left at home to run the farm. Frank felt it his duty to leave school that spring to put in the crop, and he did not finish his course. His career from that time was not of an unusual character. He taught school, did farm work and commenced the study of law. He entered the law department of the State University at Madison, and continued his course until his money was exhausted. He then joined a surveying party to survey in Dakota in 1869. During this year he took up a piece of land as a preemption where a portion of Sioux Falls has been built. He returned to Madison that winter and pursued his law studies, emigrating to Dakota the following year, making Sioux Falls his home. He cultivated forty acres of his Dakota claim the first season, doing the work himself. He was well satisfied that Sioux Falls was destined to become an important commercial and manufacturing point, and he intended to grow up with it.

In 1875 he was elected to the Territorial House of Representatives, and to the Council in 1877 and 1879. In 1880 he was elected delegate to Congress. In these several legislative positions he acquitted himself with ability, and established a record for faithfulness and tireless industry. He had kept himself free from all jobs and forms of corruption, and was proof against the ordinary accusations that confront the successful politician. One of the local journals of Sioux Falls, commenting upon his election to the Senate at the time, said:

He had been instrumental in making Sioux Falls what it is, saving the credit of being chiefly the means of establishing in the city manufactures which have a gross total of $100,000 a month. And in all his enterprises he has never oppressed any fellow citizen. His transactions have been honorable and upright. He has never taken undue advantage of any man's necessities. He has never foreclosed a mortgage. He has in hundreds of instances helped men in hard luck. From no worthy subscription paper for public projects or private help, during the score of years he has been a resident of Sioux Falls, has his name been omitted, nor has the amount been less than that subscribed by anyone else. He has not sued nor he hasn't been sued. His transactions have been so manifestly square and honorable that he has rarely been compelled to go into court to either enforce or protect them.

There was great rejoicing throughout the South Dakota state realms over the result of this senatorial contest, which was in accord with the public desire, in fact had been anticipated for some time, so that public expectation was not disappointed. The rejoicing amounted to a general celebration at Deadwood, the home of Senator Moody, and at Sioux Falls, where Senator Pettigrew resided. The return of these gentlemen to their homes was marked by frequent tokens of the popular approval along the way, and by elaborate decorations and grand processions, with numerous bands discoursing triumphant airs when they reached their home cities. In the Black Hills Colonel Otis, in command at Fort Meade, escorted Senator Moody and party from the fort to Deadwood, accompanied by the military band. The ruler of a kingdom in ancient days could have had no more fitting reception than was accorded these two quite worthy citizens.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION ADMITTING SOUTH DAKOTA

By the President of the United States of America. A proclamation.

Whereas, The Congress of the United States did, by an act approved on the 22d day of February, 1889, provide that the inhabitants of the Territory of Dakota might, upon the conditions prescribed in said act, become the states of North Dakota and South Dakota, said area comprising the Territory of Dakota should, for the purposes of the act, be divided upon the line of the 7th standard parallel, produced due west to the western boundary of said territory, and that the delegates elected as therein provided to the constitutional convention, in the districts south of the parallel should, at the time prescribed in the act, assemble in convention at the City of Sioux Falls; and

Whereas, It was provided by said act that the delegates elected as aforesaid should, after they met and organized, declare on behalf of the people of South Dakota that they adopt the Constitution of the United States, whereupon said convention should be authorized to form a constitution and state government for the proposed State of South Dakota; and

Whereas, It was provided by said act that the constitution so adopted should be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not to be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and that the convention should by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said state, make certain provisions prescribed in said act; and

Whereas, It was provided by said act that the constitution of North Dakota and South Dakota should, respectively, incorporate an agreement to be reached in accordance with the provisions of the act, for an equitable division of all property belonging to the Territory of Dakota, the disposition of all public records, and also for an apportionment of the debts and liabilities of said territory and that each of said states should obligate itself to pay its proportion of such debts and liabilities the same as if they had been created by such states, respectively; and

Whereas, It was provided by said act that at the election for delegates to the constitutional convention of South Dakota, as therein provided, each elector might have written or printed on his ballot "For the Sioux Falls Constitution" or "Against the Sioux Falls Constitution," and that the votes on this question should be returned and canvassed in the same manner as the votes for the election of delegates, and it a majority of all the votes cast on this question should be "For the Sioux Falls Constitution" it should be the duty of the convention which might assemble at Sioux Falls, as provided in this act, to recommend to the people of South Dakota, for ratification or rejection, at an election provided for in said act the constitution framed at Sioux Falls, and adopted November 3, 1889, and also the articles and propositions separately submitted at that election, including the question of locating the temporary seat of government, with such changes only as related to the name and territory of the proposed state, to the reapportionment of judicial and legislative districts, and such amendments as might be necessary in order to comply with the provisions of the act; and

Whereas, It was provided by said act that the constitution formed for the people of South Dakota should, by an ordinance of the convention forming the same, be submitted to the people of South Dakota, at an election to be held on the first Tuesday in October, 1889, for the ratification or rejection by the qualified voters of said proposed state, and that the returns of said election should be made to the secretary of the Territory of Dakota, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, should canvass the same, and if a majority of the legal votes cast should be for the constitution, the governor should certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon, and upon the separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions and ordinances; and

Whereas, It has been certified to me by the governor of the Territory of Dakota that at the aforesaid election for delegates, the "Sioux Falls constitution" was submitted to the people of the proposed State of South Dakota, as provided in said act, that a majority of all the votes cast on the question was "For the Sioux Falls Constitution," that said constitution was, at the time prescribed in the act, resubmitted to the people of South Dakota, with proper changes and amendments, and has been adopted and ratified by a majority of the qualified voters of said proposed state, in accordance with the conditions prescribed in said act; and

Whereas, It is also certified to me by said governor that at the same time the body of said constitution was submitted to a vote of the people two additional articles were submitted separately, to wit: An article numbered 24, entitled "Prohibition," which received a majority of all the votes cast for and against said article, as well as a majority of all the votes cast for and against the constitution, and was adopted, and an article numbered 25, entitled "Minority Representation," which did not receive a majority of the votes cast thereon and was rejected; and

Whereas, A duly authenticated copy of said constitution, additional articles, ordinances and propositions, as required by said act, have been received by me,

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, do, in accordance with the act of Congress aforesaid, declare and proclaim the fact that the conditions imposed by Congress on the State of South Dakota to entitle that state to admission to the Union have been ratified and accepted, and that the admission of said state into the Union is now complete.

In testimony whereof I have herenunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this second day of November, in the year of our Lord 1889, and of the independence of the United States of America the 114th. By the President,

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

The state officers-elect of South Dakota assembled at Pierre on Wednesday, November 6, 1889, and the state government was organized and set in motion, with Arthur C. Mellette, as governor; J. H. Fletcher, lieutenant governor; L. C. Taylor, auditor; A. O. Ringsrud, secretary of state; W. F. Smith, treasurer; Robert Dollard, attorney general; G. L. Pinkham, superintendent of public instruction; O. H. Parker, commissioner of school and public lands. A building to accommodate the state officers and Legislature was erected, but prior to its completion the officials had quarters in the courthouse.

The city government of Pierre gave a reception to the officers of the state on the evening of the 6th, which was held at the opera house, and presided over by Mayor Johnson. Addresses were made by Governor Mellette, Judge Corson and Attorney General Dollard, while Pierre responded through Coe I. Crawford, who had been elected a state senator from Hughes County. The proceedings were eminently appropriate to the occasion, and the new state government's inauguration furnished an epoch in the history of the great Northwest, for about the same time the states of North Dakota and Montana, all a part of the original Territory of Dakota, participated in similar ceremonies. The addresses, which were warmly praised by those who listened to them and by the local press, were not preserved.

The first official act of Governor Mellette was a Thanksgiving proclamation:

Executive Office, State of South Dakota, Pierre, November 11, 1889.

The President of the United States, in recognition of an appropriate custom of the American people, having so recommended, and the people of South Dakota having peculiar cause for rejoicing as well for the material and spiritual blessings vouchsafed them during the past year as for the glorious political victory from their long and arduous struggle the executive of this new state hereby recommends and enjoins that Thursday, November 25, 1889, be set apart and solemnly consecrated as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for past mercies, and prayer for future aid in establishing the commonwealth in liberty, truth and righteousness, that it may abide forever to glory and be blessed as part of the sacred Union.

In view of the special privilege of commemorating the state's nativity in the very month thereof, the executive recommends that all business and labor be suspended after twelve o'clock A. M. upon the day named, and that the people assemble at their respective places of worship and instruction, and devote an evening to holy praise and prayer and patriotic song and story, to the end that the young may be inspired with lofty purpose and the aged gladdened with the remembrance of work well done, and the hearts and homes of all inspired with renewed faith to go forward. The executive further and most earnestly recommends and enjoins that the many may freely bestow from their abundance material aid to the few among us who are in need, that none may feast until all are fed, to the end that the occasion may long be remembered both from the joy that cometh from giving and receiving, and that Christian charity and brotherly love may ever abide as the chief cornerstone of the commonwealth.

ARTHUR C. MELLETTE.

NORTH DAKOTA CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

A proclamation by Governor Mellette, as required by the enabling act, was issued April 15th, calling an election of delegates to the constitutional convention of North Dakota, to be held on Tuesday after the second Monday in May, which proclamation was required by the enabling act and was similar to the like document issued in regard to South Dakota, except the latter had to deal with the Sioux Falls constitution already prepared.

In accordance with the proclamation, the delegates to the North Dakota convention assembled at 12 o'clock M., July 4, 1889, in the hall of the House of Representatives, Bismarck, and was called to order by the secretary of the territory, L. B. Richardson, at whose invitation Rev. Joseph Anderson, pastor of a church at Bismarck, invoked the divine blessing upon the convention.

Following the prayer, the secretary acted as chairman until the convention chose a temporary chairman. A temporary secretary was elected, and following this, F. B. Fancher, of Jamestown, was elected temporary chairman, who appointed a Committee on Credentials and also a Committee on Rules, when an adjournment was taken until the following day.

Mr. Fancher was vice president of the Farmers' Alliance. His opponent, Mr. John Miller, of Richland County, was also an Alliance man, and was afterwards elected the first governor of North Dakota. Fancher's election was agreed upon in a caucus of republican members.

The Committee on Credentials reported the second day and found the following named delegates entitled to seats in the convention: (North Dakota had been divided into twenty-five districts by the governor, chief justice and secretary at the same meeting when South Dakota was carved out.)

First District—The townships of Dayton, Lincoln, Joliet, Pembina, Carlisle, Midland, Hamilton, Bathgate, Neche, St. Joseph, Walhalla, Pembina County.

Delegates—R. B. Richardson, Drayton; H. L. Holmes, Neche; W. B. Best, Bay Centre.

Second District—The townships of Akra, Cavalier, Thingvalla, Park, Lodema, Beauclieu, Gardar, Crystal, Flora and St. Thomas, Pembina County, and the townships of Montrose, Alma and Osnahroek, Cavalier County.

Delegates—John McBride, Alma; A. F. Appleton, Crystal; Joseph Powles, Milton.

Third District—The townships of Olga, Fremont, Loam, Harvey, Hope, Langdon, Linden, Grant School and Cypress, together with all the remaining portion of Cavalier County not hereinbefore specified, and the counties of Rolette and Towner.

Delegates—P. McHugh, Langdon; C. P. Parsons, Rolla; R. B. Glick, Langdon.

Fourth District—The counties of Bottineau, McHenry, Ward, Pierce, Church and Renville.

Delegates—Joseph L. Colton, Burlington; V. B. Noble, Bottineau, Ezra Turner, Bottineau.

Fifth District—The counties of Burleigh, McLean, Mercer, Sheridan, Stevens, Garfield, Mountraille, Williams, Dunn, McKenzie, Wallace, Aldred, Buford, Flannery, Hettinger and Bowman.

Delegates—E. A. Williams, Bismarck; Harvey Harris, Bismarck; John E. Carland, Bismarck.

Sixth District—The counties of Morton, Oliver, Stark and Billings.

Delegates—A. W. Hoyt, Mandan; William Ray, Dickenson; A. S. Parsons, Mandan.

Seventh District—The counties of Emmons, Logan, McIntosh, Kidder, Wells, and all that portion of the County of LaMoure lying west of the west line of range 63 west.

Delegates—George H. Fay, Ashley; James B. Gayton, Hampton; Charles V. Brown, Sykeston.

Eighth District—The County of Dickey, and voting precincts numbered 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 19 and 20, in the County of LaMoure.

Delegates—Alexander D. Flemington, Ellendale; William H. Rowe, Morningside; Lorenzo D. Bartlett, Ellendale.

Ninth District—The County of Ransom and all the remaining portion of the County of LaMoure not included in Districts 7 and 8 as above described.

Delegates—Andrew Sandager, Lisbon; Reuben N. Stevens, Lisbon; Samuel H. Moer, LaMoure.

Tenth District—The County of Sargent and the townships of Ellendale, Cheyenne, West End, Dexter and Park, in Richland County.

Delegates—J. D. McKenzie, Milnor; John Shuman, Rutland; John Powers, Havana.

Eleventh District—All the remaining portion of the County of Richland not included in the Tenth District above described.

Delegates—Andrew Slotten, Wahpeton; W. S. Lander, Wahpeton; W. F. Purcell, Wahpeton.

Twelfth District—The City of Fargo and the townships of Fargo, Barnes, Reed and Harwood in the County of Cass.

Delegates—H. F. Miller, Fargo; B. F. Spaulding, Fargo; Jacob Lowell, Fargo.

Thirteenth District—The townships of Pleasant, Stanley, Norman, Warren, Mapleton, Raymond, Berlin, Gardner, Wisner, Noble, Kinyon, Elm River, Francis, Rush River, Harmony, Casselton, in the County of Cass.

Delegates—R. M. Pollock, Casselton; Addison Leach, Davenport; H. M. Peterson, Horace.

Fourteenth District—All that portion of the County of Cass not contained in the Twelfth and Thirteenth districts as above defined.

Delegates—F. W. Chaffee, Amenia; William J. Clapp, Tower City; Enos Gray, Embden.

Fifteenth District—The County of Barnes.

Delegates—Elmer Elliott, Sanborn; John W. Scott, Valley City; Jay Wellwood, Minnie Lake.

Sixteenth District—The County of Stutsman.

Delegates—F. B. Fancher, Jamestown; E. W. Camp, Jamestown; Andrew Blewett, Jamestown.

Seventeenth District—The counties of Benson, Eddy, Foster, and all that portion of Griggs County west of the west line of range 59.

Delegates—H. M. Clark, New Rockford; E. S. Rolfe, Minnewaukan; O. G. Meacham, Carrington.

Eighteenth District—All that portion of the County of Griggs not described in said district numbered 17, the County of Steele, and the Township of Roseville, including the City of Portland and the Township of Mayville, including the City of Mayville, in the County of Trail.

Delegates—E. D. Wallace, Hope; E. M. Paulson, Mayville; David Bartlett, Cooperstown.

Nineteenth District—All the remaining portion of the County of Trail not described in district numbered 18.

Delegates—Knud J. Knobland, Caledonia; J. F. Selby, Hillsboro; M. F. Hegge, Hegge.

Twentieth District—The City of Grand Forks and the townships of Grand Forks, Brenna, Rye, Falconer, Harvey, Ferry, Lakeville, Levant and Turtle River, in the County of Grand Forks.

Delegates—William Budge, Grand Forks; Richard Bennett, Grand Forks; Alexander Griggs, Grand Forks.

Twenty-first District—The townships of Strabane, Johnstown, Milan, Gilby, Wheatfield, Hegton, Mekinok, Blooming, Arvilla, Chester, Oakville, Avon, Pleasant View, Fairfield, Washington, Union, Allendale, Walle, Michigan, Americus and Bentrue, and the City of Larimore, in the County of Grand Forks.

Delegates—Charles Carothers, Emerald; Arne P. Haugen, Reynolds; J. H. Matthews, Larimore.

Twenty-second District—The townships of Elkmount, Inkster, Oakwood, Agnes, Niagara, Elm Grove, Moraine, Larimore, Logan, Grace, Lovetta, Lind and Northwood, in the County of Grand Forks, and the County of Nelson.

Delegates—M. N. Johnson, Lakota; M. V. Linwell, Northwood; T. W. Bean, Michigan City.

Twenty-third District—The County of Ramsey.

Delegates—A. O. Whipple, Devil's Lake; James F. O'Brien, Devil's Lake; Edward Lohnes, Devil's Lake.

Twenty-fourth District—All that portion of the County of Walsh east of the east line of range 54.

Delegates—James Bell, Minto; A. D. Robinson, Minto; M. K. Marriman, Grafton.

Twenty-fifth District—All the remaining portion of the County of Walsh not described in the district numbered 24, above designated.

Delegates—John Allmen, Grafton; Roger Allin, Grafton; James A. Douglas, Park River.

The delegates then arose to their feet, and with uplifted hand took the oath of office, which was impressively administered by Hon. Roderick Rose, associate justice of the Territorial Supreme Court.

The convention then entered upon the election of a permanent president. The candidates had been previously agreed upon at a caucus of each of the principal parties. F. B. Fancher, for the republicans and Farmers' Alliance, and Hon. John F. Carland, for the democrats, were nominated by their respective parties for the office of president. Fancher received 54 votes, and Carland 16, Fancher being declared elected, and upon resuming his seat as permanent president, spoke as follows:

Gentlemen: As a presiding officer I cannot promise very much. I am not very well versed in parliamentary law, but I think I will venture to do my best to please you, to endeavor to carry out your wishes and to assist you in embodying in the constitution for North Dakota the sound judgment and level headedness of the whole people of North Dakota, and not to foster the interests of any man or any class of men. If, after some experience, I shall succeed in meeting your approval, the credit attained will have justified you in your action today. If I shall be so unfortunate as to fail I do not solemnly assure you it shall not have been my fault, but my misfortune, for I will make every effort to succeed.

The subordinate officers were then elected, and then the proceedings for making the constitution were inaugurated by the unanimous adoption of a formal resolution declaring the adoption by the convention of the Constitution of the United States.

The officers elected by the convention were as follows: J. G. Hamilton, of Grand Forks, chief clerk; Fred Palley, of Richland County, sergeant-at-arms; C. C. Bowsfield, of Dickey County, enrolling and engrossing clerk; E. W. Knight, of Cass County, messenger; George Wentz, of Burleigh County, doorkeeper; J. S. Weiser, of Barnes County, watchman; H. U. Tuttle, of Morton County, stenographer; Rev. George Klein, of Bismarck, chaplain; pages, Arthur Linn, Harry G. Ward, Charles W. Conroy and Charles Lauder.

The Committee on Rules then reported a series of rules, forty-five in number, which provided a parliamentary code in connection with Robert's Rules of Order, which had previously been adopted by the convention. The report provided for the following standing committees, twenty-three in number, namely: On Printing, Reporting and Publication, Accounts and Expenses, Preamble and Bill of Rights, Legislative Department, Executive Department, Judicial Department, Elective Franchise, Education, Public Institutions and Buildings, Public Debt and Public Works, Militia, County and Township Organization, Apportionment and Representation, Revenue and Taxation, Municipal Corporations, Corporations other than Municipal, Miscellaneous Subjects, Schedule, School and other Public Lands, Temperance, Revision and Adjustment, Impeachment and Removal from Office. The Committee on Apportionment consisted of one from each district.

Addresses followed by Governor Mellette, Judge Cooley, of Michigan, famous writer and authority on constitutional law, and Rev. R. C. Wiley, of the National Reform Association, urging Sabbath observance, for instruction in the principles of Christianity in the schools, and the declaration recognizing God in the constitution.

The governor and the judge were somewhat at variance in their views as to what should go into the constitution. The governor said there were two policies in constitution making—one to embody only fundamental principles in the constitution, leaving to the Legislature to work out the laws. The other, which was a later policy, to embody all legislation in the constitution which could be prudently placed there. He said if it was right and the delegates knew what was the right thing in legislation, the more there is of it in the constitution the better for the people. One of the greatest evils is excessive legislation, the change every two years of the laws. He said: "It is wise, in my judgment, after the people have decided in which direction their interests lie, to embody them in the fundamental law, and make it permanent." He also said: "If you can secure the purity of the ballot by constitutional provisions, it will not be obtained at too high a cost."

Judge Cooley, addressing himself in part to the subject of what to engraft in the constitution, said that "many new questions were now vital that were unknown a hundred years ago," and he advised the delegates to remember that times change, and the Legislature should not be prevented from meeting those evils which are sure to come. "Don't, in your constitution making, legislate too much. In your constitution you are tying the hands of the people. You have got to trust somebody in the future, and it is right and proper that each department of the government should be trusted to perform its legitimate function."

The members of the convention listened to addresses from United States Senator Stewart, of Nevada, chairman of the Senate Committee on Irrigation, on that subject, and from Senator Reagan, of Texas, on the same subject. Major Powell, director of the Geological Survey, spoke on irrigation, advising that no capitalists or corporations be permitted to secure possession of the state's waterways and water powers. The proposition of the single tax was urged by Mr. Buell, a Minneapolis reformer. Woman suffrage was also advocated by a speaker from Boston, Henry B. Blackwell, an able speaker. There appeared to be a greater interest taken by outside parties in the formation of the constitution for the north state than in its sister south, which was engaged in similar work at the same time, but the situation south was not inviting to the advocates of constitutional reforms, the constitution of the southern state having been made in 1885, and already adopted by a vote of the people, and could not be amended.

The fifth centennial anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus was to be observed by the people of the United States in 1892, and a World's Columbian Exposition was proposed to be held. A number of the leading cities were candidates for the exposition, and the North Dakota convention declared in favor of Chicago.

The delegates were all supplied with copies of the constitution of South Dakota, which had already been adopted by the popular vote of that proposed state. There was no lack of material for the new state charter, for the constitutions of nearly all, and probably all, the states were represented. It would seem to be a larger task to decide what to reject, than to agree upon what to admit. There was also a complete constitution presented by Hon. E. A. Williams, of Burleigh County, the authorship of which was accredited by the press to the Hon. William M. Evarts, of New York, but which the distinguished advocate declined to acknowledge, averring that he had not written a line of it. The document proved to be a grouping of the best provisions of the constitutions of the various states and the United States, fitted to North Dakota. However, the delegates were not inclined to accept the work, though a portion of it probably found its way into the new constitution through the committees and through amendments.

While the people of the proposed new State of North Dakota were known to be in the front rank of progress in all matters of public concern, and even presumed to be somewhat radical in their views of governmental reform, the sentiment, or rather the prevailing sentiment in the convention, was not favorable to important experimental changes in well known or well tried principles of republican government.

On the 16th of July, the twelfth day of the session, Delegate Stevens, of Lisbon, introduced, by request, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the constitution provide that the legislative authority of this state shall vest in a single body, to be called a Legislative Assembly, which shall consist of not less than one hundred members, to be elected by the people; Provided, The Legislative Assembly may from time to time increase the number of members as necessity may require.

As may be expected, the resolution, because of its novelty principally, awakened considerable interest, and at first it was thought that the mover was not in earnest respecting the innovation proposed, there being no precedent for it among the states of the Union. But further along in the session it was discovered that quite a respectable number of delegates had discussed the proposition and felt like supporting it. The fact that the American states had not adopted it was not permitted to becloud the fact that a number of the most advanced European governments had but one legislative body, and the fact that American colonies during the Revolution were governed by one legislative body, and even the Continental Congress was composed of a single House of Representatives. A long and decidedly interesting discussion grew out of the subject. The affirmative side had a number of able advocates who brought in as precedents the legislative bodies, ancient and modern, of all European republics, Canada, the American colonial Congress during the War of the Revolution. In favor of the single house were Delegates M. N. Johnson, afterward a prominent and nearly successful candidate for the United States Senate; also Mr. Ezra Turner and R. N. Stevens, W. S. Lauder, A. S. Parsons, and others. The democratic side presented the arguments for two houses in the person of Delegate John E. Carland. He directed attention to the historical facts of the failure of the one-house plan in this country. It had been found unsuitable. Pennsylvania had tried it, South Carolina, also, and others, and had thrown it out and substituted the two-house plan. There was no check on faulty legislation in a one-house system. Delegate Harvey Harris advocated the two-house plan. He stated that a plan that had been universally adopted by the other states proved that the two-house system was the safest and best. This discussion was had in committee of the whole, which recommended, in its report to the convention, that the resolution proposing a single house be indefinitely postponed, and the report was adopted by the convention, and the plan for two houses was passed.

The provision prohibiting the manufacture or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquor or disposing of it in barter or trade, was supported by a large majority of the delegates, but there was a disposition to divide on the proposition to make the clause a part of the constitution. It was apprehended that its submission in that form would be prejudicial to the success of the constitution when it came before the people to be voted upon, and it was finally agreed to submit the prohibitory clause as a separate article to a separate vote.

The location of the public institutions of the state occasioned a long and exciting debate. Nearly all these institutions had been already located by the territorial government, suitable buildings erected at the cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and their location was not seriously objectionable. This situation afforded a strong ground for the present locations to claim the protection of the constitution by an article fixing them in their present locality. Quite naturally this unusual, if not unprecedented, proposition was strongly opposed by a large proportion of the delegates, who held that the people should be given the right to say where their public institutions should be situated. They might prefer to have them all, or nearly all, in one locality, which would result in greatly lessening the expense of their maintenance. The subject had been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and there had been but two resolutions on the question submitted and referred to the committee, one of which provided for the location of the temporary capital at Bismarck, and submitting to a vote of the people the question of locating a permanent capital. The committee made no report on this proposition, but about the thirtieth day of the session reported an article locating the capital, the Agricultural College, the State University, the Insane Hospital, the School of Mines, a deaf and dumb asylum, an institution for the feeble-minded, a blind asylum, a soldiers' home, a reform school for incorrigible youths, two normal schools, a school of forestry and scientific school and in industrial school. There was also a minority report which favored the temporary location of the capital at Bismarck and submitting the question of permanent location to the voters, and leaving the location of all the public institutions to the legislative assembly.

A number of the new institutions had not been previously located, but their locality was fixed for them whenever the state felt that they were demanded.

Mr. H. F. Miller, of Fargo, where the Agricultural College was located, moved the adoption of the majority report, whereupon Mr. David Bartlett, of Griggs County, offered as an amendment for the first section of the report, the following:

The following article shall be submitted to a vote of the people as a separate article, as provided by the schedule.

The effect of the amendment would be to throw the whole matter into the hands of the people, and in support of his amendment Mr. Bartlett said:

The unusual manner in which this question has been brought up was unexpected by me. I am well aware that I represent the opinion of the minority on this floor this afternoon, and as far as I am concerned I bow to the majority. However you may have obtained that majority, you have it. Now I ask in behalf of thirty members, and I think more; I ask in all fairness that you adopt this amendment I have offered, and that this matter be submitted separately, that the people may have, if they wish to locate these institutions, that they may have the right to do so. Refuse this amendment and you compel at least thirty members that sit in this convention today to refuse to sign your constitution—you compel at least thirty who have sat here from the 4th day of July until now, trying to do their duty, to go home and say to their people that they have been corruptly thwarted in their work, and ask their people to refuse to endorse it. I don't believe that this convention can afford to do this.

BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM, HOT SPRINGS
United States Government Institution for disabled soldiers. One of the best equipped in the world

THE NEW YORK
PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR, LENOX AND
TILDEN FOUNDATIONS

Refuse to submit this matter separately, and not to rest for a moment with the minority here, which I believe is a respectable minority. Refuse to let any state compel us to take the steps that we here and now state that we do not wish to take and would rather not take. Refuse this, and the republicans in this convention will bear the success of the republican party in the new state. You may smile, but it is a fact. We know that not only have the votes of the minority been obtained by every means in our power, the power of corporations, by promising and farming out, so far as that influence could go, every office and position on the state ticket this fall—we know that not one of them is attached to a reform, this amendment and you compel at least thirty members to join with any party, are all men that will forever sit squarely down on the rule of corporations in this state. Gentlemen, I ask in the name of humanity—I plead—that you accept this fair and reasonable substitute.

Other speeches were made of the same tenor. M. N. Johnson said:

This is an important moment, and I fear a sad day in the history of North Dakota.

Delegate Stevens, supporting the adoption of the majority report, stated that it was much better to locate the public institutions before there was any excuse for lobbying, to give the different parts of the state fair treatment. Bismarck, as the capital, would help in building the western portion of the state. The other institutions were located as they were, because the population of the state demanded it. The locations were all properly made, and were fixed upon to keep them out of the hands of the lobbyists.

The amendment to submit the clause to a vote of the people was defeated when the vote was finally reached which resulted, for the amendment 31, against, 43. On final vote the majority article, definitely locating the institutions as they appear in the adopted constitution, by a vote of 44 to 30.

Concerning woman suffrage, the convention adopted an article giving the Legislature authority to enact a law granting the right to women, but required that the law should be submitted to a vote of the people, and affirmed by the popular vote before going into effect.

There was considerable indignation manifested among the people because of the action taken to in regard to locating the public institutions, and at a point called Portland, in Trail County, it was claimed an indignation meeting was held and forty-four delegates were burned in effigy. In other portions of the proposed state indignation meetings were held and hostile resolutions adopted expressing deep-seated resentment.

As an offset to this expression the friends of the movement locating the institutions held a meeting at Fargo which was largely attended, and passed resolutions approving of the plan. This was deemed a necessary precaution to head a movement that was threatening to reconsider the action by the convention, which seemed to be gaining strength.

The joint commission appointed to act with a committee from the South Dakota constitutional convention which should agree upon an equitable division of the property and indebtedness of the Territory of Dakota, was composed of F. W. Camp, W. E. Purcell, B. F. Spalding, Harvey Harris, Alexander Griggs, J. W. Scott and Andrew Sandager to act for Northern Dakota. The results of the work of this commission, which were approved by both conventions, North and South, appear in a separate chapter. This joint commission was the only official body of the kind ever raised in the United States for the purpose of apportioning the assets and liabilities of a territory to its successors, the states. The procedure was interesting and consumed nearly three weeks time.

The final act of the convention was an amendment to the article on revenue, empowering the Legislature to provide the system of taxing the gross earnings of railroad corporations.

The convention adjourned finally on the 20th of August, after a session of forty-five days. At the election held October 1st, the people ratified the constitution by a vote of 27,441 to 8,107 against. The vote on prohibition was quite close, but the amendment carried by a vote of 18,552 to 17,303.

One thousand copies of the proceedings and debates of the convention were ordered printed.

The North Dakota constitutional convention of 1889 was made up of fifty republicans and twenty-six democrats.

NORTH DAKOTA REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION

The first republican state convention assembled at Fargo on the 21st of August, 1889, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the various state offices to be filled for the new state government. It was an occasion of widespread interest, and the city was thronged with delegates and visitors who wish to be present at the initial convention that was to name the first state officers, it being generally conceded that the republicans would be able to elect their ticket. The city was appropriately and profusely decorated, and although there was much enthusiasm abroad there was much anxiety among the leaders concerning the men to be selected as officers. The delegates were largely new in the political field, and those belonging to the Farmers' Alliance were not inclined to talk much of their designs. It was an occasion in politics that promised surprises.

While all the delegates were republicans, there were two factions—one composed largely of members of the Farmers' Alliance, and the other led by Harrison Allen, late United States marshal, who had been chairman of the republican central committee of the territory, and who at the time was the candidate for governor of the faction of the republican party that had been in control of North Dakota political affairs for years. Ex-Governor Ordway was identified with this faction. The alliance faction was led by John Miller, of Richland County, and their purpose was to name a ticket that would not be controlled by the former dominant faction. There were nearly three hundred delegates, and these were quite equally divided, and it was presumed that when it came to manipulating the convention after the members got together, the Allen side, because of their experience and acquaintance with parliamentary usage, would be able to make up for some trifling lack of numbers. But there was never a faction in any convention so uncompromising and so aggressive as the granger element in that convention assemblage. They were on the firing line for hours. The control of the convention and the nominations would go to the side that could elect the permanent chairman, hence the prolonged struggle for this position. The credentials committee had two contests to settle, important because of the uncertainty as to which faction would have the majority. The contested County of Cavalier was settled by the admission of both delegations with half a vote each and the report of this committee was finally adopted.

Mr. Cochrane had been appointed temporary chairman of the convention and Mr. H. F. Miller, of Fargo, was the chairman of the credentials committee. A motion to appoint a committee of five on permanent organization was then adopted and the committee appointed. Mr. Miller, of Fargo, then moved that in order to save time, E. A. Williams, of Bismarck, be chosen permanent chairman. The chair ruled the motion out of order. A motion to reconsider the vote for the appointment of the permanent organization committee, was then made and seconded, and a roll call ordered. This meant a test vote between the Allen and Miller factions. The motion was lost, the vote resulting 127 for reconsideration and 135 against, a defeat for the Allen or Tyler party.

(General Allen had in the meantime been withdrawn as a candidate for the nomination for governor, and E. S. Tyler, of Fargo, substituted.)

The chairman then appointed the committee of five, and it needed but a few minutes for them to agree upon a report which recommended for permanent chairman, Hon. M. N. Johnson.

A motion to substitute the name of E. A. Williams for that of Johnson was made, and a motion to lay this motion on the table was then made and seconded, and a roll call demanded, which resulted in 135 votes for the motion to table, to 136 against. This was favorable to the Williams side, and the convention then voted by call of counties, Johnson and Williams being the nominees.

As the call proceeded the excitement of the delegates increased, and the crowded gallery or lobby was the theatre of much unrest. Seven counties changed their votes after the first announcement, and just before the final count was given out. The result was questioned and a ballot for verification asked for. Delegates by the score were on their feet, and a scene of disorder prevailed. The verification, as the temporary chairman announced it, gave Williams 130 votes and Johnson 126. Then followed a tumultuous scene. The chair had not yet declared the result, and finally appointed Geo. B. Winship and G. S. Ball to foot up the totals. This being done, the ballot as finally announced gave Johnson 131, and Williams 130. Johnson was then declared elected, and escorted to the chair, where he expressed his appreciation of the honor, an honor which could not be duplicated, this being the first state convention held in the new North Dakota commonwealth. The speaker deprecated the apparent hostility of the factions, and promised that in the further proceedings he should know no faction, but should be governed by the established rules, showing no partiality. He hoped the further deliberations of the convention would be marked by harmony, and that the delegates would unite to nominate a ticket that would command the esteem and confidence of the people of the north state, and one that would secure the united support of the party at the polls.

The chair occupied by Presiding Officer Johnson at the convention was the one in which General Grant sat when he received the surrender of General Lee, at Appomattox, in 1865.

The secretaries chosen at the temporary organization were reelected. The convention, after some preliminary motions had been settled, proceeded with the principal work of the convention, the nomination of state officers with the following result: For governor, John Miller, of Richland County; for lieutenant governor, Alfred Dickey, of Stutsman County; for secretary of state, John Flittie; for state treasurer, L. E. Booker; for state auditor, John P. Bray; for superintendent public instruction, William Mitchell; for assistant superintendent public instruction, F. W. Cathrow; for attorney general, Geo. F. Goodwin; for commissioner of insurance, A. L. Carey; for commissioner of agriculture and labor, H. F. Helgesen; for public examiner, J. A. Percival; for commissioners of railroads, Geo. S. Montgomery, F. S. Underhill, D. Bartlett; for Supreme Court, for chief justice, Guy C. H. Corliss, Joseph M. Bartholomeu, Alfred Wallin.

REPUBLICAN LEAGUE NORTH DAKOTA

A republican league convention was held at Fargo during the session of the state convention for the purpose of organizing a state league for North Dakota. Hon. F. A. Williams, of Burleigh County, was elected chairman and R. F. Wallace, of Stutsman, S. J. Small, of Cass, C. W. Andrews, of Pembina, A. J. O'Keefe, of Grand Forks, secretaries. The state league was organized by the election of the following officers: President, Mr. Schring, of Eddy County; vice presidents, F. H. Reguter, of Burleigh, J. D. McDonald, of Pembina and G. H. Andrews, of Barnes County; treasurer, W. H. Ellis, of Dickey County; executive committee, Harvey Harris, of Burleigh County; F. W. Cathrow, of Bottineau County; A. H. Gray, of Barnes County; B. F. Spaulding, of Cass County; J. T. Scott, of Stark County; J. F. Cowan, of Ramsey County; A. R. Owens, of Dickey County; Charles Aldin, of Sargent County; A. J. O'Keefe, of Grand Forks County; F. I. Smith, of Traill County; J. A. Foye, of Stutsman County; J. S. Harcourt, of Kidder County; A. Sandager, of Ransom County; C. W. Clark, of Cavalier County; G. W. Harmon, of Morton County, and T. B. Brown, of Pembina County.

The resolutions adopted, affirmed the league's endorsement of the principles of the republican party as expressed in the national platform, declaring their purpose at all times to aid in strengthening the party in the State of North Dakota, and to electing the nominees of the republican party. Extolling the work done by the national league in the United States and by local leaguers in Dakota, and urging all members of the organization to use their best efforts to increase and extend the league, to unite factions, and to promote harmony.

NORTH DAKOTA DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION

The North Dakota democratic convention for the purpose of nominating the first state ticket convened at Fargo on the 30th of August, Friday, 1880. The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock and the first matter that engaged the attention of the delegates and spectators was a rousing speech by Hon. Wm. A. Springer, member of Congress from Illinois, and proud of the title he had received of being "Father of the Omnibus Bill," under which the Dakotas were then making their way into the Union. At the conclusion of the speech which was enthusiastically received, a credentials committee was appointed by the temporary chairman, which reported all the counties represented, mostly by their elected delegates, and a few by proxies.

Mr. J. F. O'Brien was then elected permanent chairman, and W. A. Fridley, secretary. A Committee on Resolutions previously appointed, reported a platform, which endorsed the course of the late democratic administration and general policy of the democratic party, and which was adopted.

Caucusing was then engaged in for the purpose of agreeing upon the best state ticket obtainable, but great disappointment was felt at the positive refusal of some of the most available and strongest men to accept places on the ticket. Neither Lowell nor McCormack were willing to head the ticket, and the convention concluded to wait until evening before making its nominations. At the evening session the following ticket was nominated, a platform adopted, after which the convention adjourned.

For governor, R. N. Roach, of Walsh County; for lieutenant governor, S. K. Maginnis, of Stutsman County; for secretary of state, A. S. Froslied, of Terrel County; for auditor, R. O. Odegard, of Cass County; for attorney-general, T. R. Bangs, of Grand Forks County; for superintendent of public instruction, Chas. A. Kent, of Dickey County; for Supreme Court Judges, S. W. Miller, of Cass County; J. W. Gammons, of Ramsey County. The third was left for the executive committee to name. There were six of these to be elected but by agreement the democrats nominated three and the republicans three. For commissioner of agriculture, J. R. Engebert, of Foster County; for commissioner of insurance, W. A. Fridley, of Kidder County; for railroad commissioners, F. P. Wright, Peter Cameron and John Ely; for member of Congress, Dan W. Marratta.

ORDWAY AFTER A SENATORSHIP

Ex-Governor Ordway returned to the northern part of the territory in 1889 and announced that he would be a candidate for the United States Senate from North Dakota. It was surmised that Ordway had an understanding with prominent North Dakota interests at the time he was governor that gave him a claim upon their support for this position. He had been absent from the territory, residing at Washington, engaged principally in the real estate business since leaving Dakota in 1884, but he had left his household furniture and a horse and buggy and some other personal property, and a dwelling house, at Bismarck, as an evidence of his continuous residence. He first located at Bismarck on his return but soon thereafter purchased a farm in Walsh County, in the Red River Valley, and claimed his local residence in that county. He occupied his time during the year in electioneering for the senatorial position, and claimed that he had a combination by which ex-Governor Pierce and himself would be selected. This was, however, denied by those in a position to know the work that was being done by the men who would probably have much influence in selecting their representatives. Pierce appeared to be a general favorite, but it was considered poor politics for the dominant party, which had been claiming that Dakota offices should be given to actual residents, to violate their officially pronounced declaration by taking both senators from the ranks of ex-officials, neither one actually a bona fide resident nor identified in any way with its material interests farther than the ownership of a piece of land or a house in town, both being regarded as profitable investments. The feeling opposed to Ordway was increased, if anything, during the progress of the canvass.

Governor Ordway was quite confident of success. He made this statement about October 20th, a few weeks before the election, to a friendly reporter for a St. Paul newspaper:

I regard the chances for Governor Pierce as very good, and as large number of the members-elect, friendly to him, have given strong assurances that they will support me for one of the places, I think that, unless there is some unusual and extraordinary effort made, the general sentiment of the members elected will be that Governor Pierce and myself are the best equipped and will be the choice for senators.

The election occurred in North Dakota October 1st, and the candidates named by the republicans were chosen, to wit: Governor, John Miller, lieutenant governor, Alfred Diekey; secretary of state, John Flittie; state treasurer, L. E. Booker; state auditor, John P. Bray; superintendent public instruction, William Mitchell; assistant superintendent, F. W. Cathro; attorney-general, Geo. F. Goodwin; commissioner of insurance, A. L. Carey; commissioner of agriculture and labor, H. F. Helgesen; public examiner, J. A. Percival; Supreme Court judges, Guy C. H. Corliss, Joseph M. Bartholomew, Alfred Wallin; railroad commissioners, D. Bartlett, F. S. Underhill and Geo. S. Montgomery.

(By agreement the republicans nominated but three of the District Court judges, and the democrats three, both parties to vote the same judicial ticket and thus secure a non-partisan judiciary). The following were elected:

First Circuit, C. F. Templeton, democrat. Second Circuit, D. E. Morgan, republican. Third Circuit, W. B. McConnell, democrat. Fourth Circuit, W. S. Lauder, republican. Fifth Circuit, Roderick Rose, democrat. Sixth Circuit, W. H. Winchester, republican.

NORTH DAKOTA ELECTION OFFICIAL

The official canvass of the vote for the state offices of North Dakota gave the following result:

For governor, John Miller, 25,365. R. N. Roach, 12,733. For lieutenant governor, Alfred Diekey, 25,779. S. K. Maginnis, 12,316. For secretary of state, John Flittie, 25,620. A. S. Froslid, 12,425. For state treasurer, L. E. Booker, 25,707. Lord, 12,389. For state auditor, John P. Bray, 25,719. R. Odegard, 12,356. For attorney-general, Geo. F. Goodwin, 25,855. T. R. Banjo, 12,148. For superintendent public instruction, William Mitchell, 25,781. Chas. W. Kent, 11,746. For commissioner agriculture and labor, H. F. Helgesen, 26,339. J. R. Englbirg, 11,785. For commissioner of insurance, A. L. Carey, 26,332. W. A. Fridley, 11,388. Judges Supreme Court, Alfred Wallin, 27,126. Guy C. H. Corliss, 27,315. Joseph M. Bartholomew, 26,289. S. W. Miller, 11,819. J. W. Gammons, 11,690.

For the constitutions, 27,441. Against, 8,107.

For prohibition, 18,552. Against, 17,393.

For district judges, First District, A. J. O'Keefe, 4,250. C. F. Templeton, 6,713. Second District, D. E. Morgan, 2,701. Jas. F. O'Brien, 1,495. Third District, Seth Newman, 3,131. W. S. McConnell, 3,519. Fourth District, W. S. Lauder, 3,955. S. H. Snyder, 2,077. Fifth District, O. H. Hewitt, 2,371. Roderick Rose, 3,300. Sixth District, W. H. Winchester, 2,352. John C. Hollnback, 1,621.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION ADMITTING NORTH DAKOTA

Whereas, The Congress of the United States did by an act approved on the 22d day of February, 1889, provide that the inhabitants of the Territory of Dakota might, upon the conditions prescribed in said act, become the states of North and South Dakota. And, Whereas, it was provided by said act that the area comprising the Territory of Dakota should, for the purpose of the act, be divided on the line of the 7th standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said territory; and that the delegates elected as therein provided, to the constitutional convention in the districts north of said parallel, should assemble in convention at the time prescribed in the act, at the City of Bismarck; and,

Whereas, It was provided by said act that the delegates elected as aforesaid should, after they had met and organized, declare on behalf of the people of North Dakota that they adopt the Constitution of the United States, whereupon said convention should be authorized to form a constitution and state government for the proposed State of North Dakota. And, Whereas, it was provided by said act that the constitution so adopted should be republican in form and make no distinction in civil and political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not to be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence; and the convention should, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said state, make certain provisions prescribed in said act; and,

Whereas, It was provided by said act that the constitutions of North and South Dakota should respectively incorporate an agreement to be reached in accordance with the provisions of this act, for an equitable division of all property belonging to the Territory of Dakota; the disposition of all public records; and also for an apportionment of the debts and liabilities of said territory, and that each of said states should obligate itself to pay its portion of said debts and liabilities, the same as if they had been created by each such states respectively; and,

Whereas, It was provided by said act that the constitution thus formed by the people of North Dakota should by the ordinance of the convention forming the same, be submitted to the people of North Dakota at an election to be held therein, on the first Tuesday in October, 1889, for the ratification or rejection, by the qualified voters of the proposed state, and that the returns of said election should be made to the secretary of the Territory of North Dakota, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them, should canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast should be for the constitution the governor should certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon, and upon the separate articles or propositions, and ordinances; and,

Whereas, It has been certified to me by the governor of the Territory of Dakota that within the time prescribed by the said act of Congress, the constitution for the proposed State of North Dakota has been adopted and the same ratified by a majority of the qualified voters of said proposed state, in accordance with the conditions prescribed in said act; and,

Whereas, It is also certified to me by said governor that at the same time that the body of the same constitution was submitted to a vote of the people, a separate article numbered 20, and entitled "Prohibition," was also submitted and received a majority of all the votes cast for and against said article, as well as a majority of all the votes cast for and against the constitution, and was adopted; and,

Whereas, A duly authenticated copy of said constitution, articles, ordinances, and propositions, as required by said act, have been received by me; now,

Therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, do, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress aforesaid, declare and proclaim the fact that the conditions imposed by Congress upon the State of North Dakota to entitle that state to admission to the Union, have been ratified and accepted, and that the admission of said state into the Union is now complete.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this second day of November, in the year of our Lord, 1889, and of the Independence of the United States of America, the 114th.

By the President,

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA TWIN STATES

There was some discussion in the new states whether North Dakota or South Dakota was first—which would be entitled to preference as the thirty-ninth state. This honor finally went to North Dakota in giving the states their place in the calendar at Washington, but in the various steps immediately preceding statehood South Dakota could make a valid claim as the elder sister. She was the first to elect senators and hence the first to hold a State Legislature, and the state officers of South Dakota were inaugurated on Saturday, November 2d, the day that the President's proclamation, admitting both states, was issued, while the state officers of North Dakota were inaugurated on Monday, November 4th, two days later. The state government of South Dakota, therefore, must have been in lawful operation two days earlier than that of her younger sister, which would seem to entitle her to the claim of being the first to mount the throne of state sovereignty.

The territorial officers were all relieved, with the exception of Treasurer Bailey, on the 4th. The North Dakota state officials were sworn in or took their official oath from Judge Bartholomew. Treasurer Bailey of the territorial force was prepared to transfer his office, but the nonarrival of State Treasurer Booker, of North Dakota, compelled a brief postponement. The President's proclamation, or the statement of Secretary of State Blaine, informs us that the two states came in at the same moment of time. That is the best evidence. It was claimed that the President did not know which proclamation he signed first. The statement of the secretary of state of the United States follows:

It will be asked which of the states of North and South Dakota is the elder or senior. President Harrison signed the proclamations which admitted the two states into the Union on the afternoon of November 2, 1889, and this is the remark he made at the time. "They were born together—they were one and I will make them twins."

Hon. James G. Blaine was the secretary of state at the time, and one of his duties was to attest the proclamation of the President. Here is a copy of a telegraphic dispatch which Mr. Blaine sent to Governor Miller, of North Dakota, and to Governor Mellette, of South Dakota, who had been elected the first governors. The dispatch was sent within an hour after the states were admitted.

Washington, D. C., November 2, 1889.

The last act in the admission of the two Dakotas as states into the Union was completed this afternoon at the executive mansion, at 3 o'clock and forty minutes, by the President signing at that moment the proclamation required by law for the admission of the two states. The article on prohibition, submitted separately in each state, was adopted in both. The article providing for minority representation in South Dakota was rejected by the people. This is the first instance in the history of the National Government of twin states. North and South Dakota entered into the Union at the same time.

JAMES G. BLAINE.

ORGANIZING NORTH DAKOTA STATE GOVERNMENT AND ELECTING SENATORS

In response to summons by Governor Mellette, the state officers and judge of the Supreme Court of North Dakota assembled at Bismarek on Monday, November 4th, took the oath of office administered by Associate Justice Roderick Rose, and the new ship of state, to be known for all time as "North Dakota," was formally launched. At the same time the governor issued a call to the members of the Legislature of North Dakota to assemble at the capital at Bismarek on the 10th of November for the purpose of electing two senators of the United States.

Gilbert A. Pierce, ex-governor Dakota Territory, was elected one of the United States senators from North Dakota, November 21, 1889. He received the unanimous republican vote. The vote for the second senator was considerably divided, as follows:

	Senate	House	Total
Johnson	10	48	48
Ordway	2	10	12
Casey	4	11	15
Walsh	3	10	13
McCumber	3	3	6
Plummer	1	3	4
Rudge	1	—	1
Marratta (dem.)	7	12	19
LaMoire	—	3	3
Miller	—	1	1

Necessary to a choice, 62

Hon. Gilbert A. Pierce, who was unanimously chosen one of the United States senators from North Dakota, was born in Cattaraugus County, New York, in 1836 but the family moved to Indiana when he was sixteen years old. He had shown a preference for a legal education and for a time attended the Chicago Law School. Upon the breaking out of the great Civil war he enlisted in the Ninth Indiana Regiment. He won rapid promotion in the volunteer service, and at the close of the conflict he was colonel of his regiment. Returning to Valparaiso, Indiana, he entered journalism, continuing until 1868, when he was elected to the Indiana Legislature. From thence he went to Chicago and for twelve years following was connected with the Chicago Inter-Ocean and the Chicago News. He was appointed governor of Dakota in 1884 by President Arthur, which position he held until 1887 when he was succeeded by a democrat, Judge Louis K. Church. He endeared himself to the people of the northern section by his veto of the bill removing the capital to Pierre on the ground that the Legislature had virtually repealed the section of the organic act by the contract which the capital commission had made with Bismarck and the North Pacific Railroad.

A joint caucus was held on the 23d, which met in the forenoon and broke up in confusion. A vote was taken, but before being announced, a motion was made to adjourn. This was opposed by the Johnson men, whose count showed that he had received forty-two votes, one more than was necessary for the choice of the caucus. The chair ruled the motion to adjourn out of order, but before the caucus could act on the ruling, the caucus had adjourned without the necessary formality of the announcement of the vote. The Johnson men were much excited and highly indignant. The two Houses then went into joint session to take a formal ballot, which resulted as follows:

Johnson, 42; Ordway, 10; Casey, 10; Walsh, 9; McCumber, 4; LaMoire, 4; Plummer, 11; Marratta, democrat, 13. Forty-seven votes were necessary to elect. Johnson was said to have sufficient votes lacking one. A recess was taken till evening.

On the following day four ballots were taken without result.

Concerning this caucus it was said that the leaders of the anti-Johnson forces, which included all who were not for Johnson, spent the whole night preceding trying to come to an understanding, but none of the candidates would consent to be eliminated. There were claims made of great strength for Casey, but there was no evidence that he had been selected as the "field" candidate. No one appeared to be trying to promote Ordway. He had the same few who had probably been pledged to him since he signed the bill for the removal of the capital, but even these appeared desirous only to show the ex-governor that they had not thrown him over. They numbered nine or ten, and not knowing who to go to, remained perfunctorily for him. Walsh remained an active candidate, and Casey appeared to be popular. Ordway's contingent made an early claim that he had been cruelly betrayed, which was intended to give him more consolation than he would derive from feeling that he never had any standing as a candidate, but he was soon put aside as not to be considered in the race. Harrison Allen was supposed to have inherited Ordway's strength, as it was boastingly called, but he was another who was not wanted. There was a show for Walsh, and a better show for Johnson. When the Legislature met in joint session on the 23d, Johnson had 38 votes secure, and as the roll was called it was discerned that he was making a slight gain. Almost every member was keeping tally. Before the vote was announced the leaders of the anti-Johnson disunited forces demanded a verification of the same. This necessitated another roll call. When that was done the point of order was made that two members had changed their votes. While in the midst of this discussion some made a motion to adjourn till evening which was carried by two votes, and Johnson's promise of victory passed under a shadow from which it never emerged. The vote for senator taken as above was not announced, but Johnson had forty-one as shown by a number of the volunteer tally keeper, and if he could have prevented an adjournment, there is no telling what might have happened.

The meeting in the evening failed to elect, but it remained in session an hour, and defeated a meeting of the republican caucus called for a later hour the same evening. It also developed a surprise in the two ballots taken. The first ballot resulted, Johnson, 10; Casey, 13; Walsh, 8; Ordway, 9; General Allen, 3; La-Moure, 4; McCumber, 3, and Marratta, 13. The second ballot resulted about the same. Before the third ballot was ordered, Stevens, of Ransom, placed in nomination President Sprague, of the Grand Forks University. The nomination was seconded by Estrabrook, of Grand Forks. Swantson, of Devil's Lake, nominated H. W. Lord, of Devil's Lake. When Senator Robinson's name was reached he rose and explained his vote. He said he had been addressed that afternoon by a trusted lieutenant of M. N. Johnson in a manner that put him on his mettle. He was told that he dare not vote for any other man than Johnson, and he wanted to say in reply that he was a free American citizen, and that he would vote as he pleased. Therefore he took great pleasure in casting the first vote for Homer B. Sprague. This brief statement awakened a sensation, and called forth murmurs of "Johnson beaten. He is gone." Senator Smith, who had been included with Joe Robinson in the list of men who dared not vote against Johnson, on account of his constituency, also voted for Sprague. Smith's colleague, Ramsey, of the House, followed him. Among the others voting for Sprague were Worst of Emmons, Thompson of Walsh, Esterbrook of Grand Forks, and Thompson of Fargo. Sprague received nine votes. It was only a complimentary vote, however. Sprague was not regarded as a candidate. The result of this ballot gave Johnson but thirty two votes, a loss of ten. Lord received four, General Allen six on one ballot, and Ordway five on the second ballot. It was said that Johnson's grip had been loosened, and the caucus then adjourned until Monday noon. Monday four ballots were taken during the day session without result, but at the session held the same evening L. R. Casey, of Jamestown, was successful.

Capt. Daniel Maratta, ex-United States marshal of Dakota Territory, and Col. M. C. McCormack, ex-territorial secretary, and both steamboat celebrities and able men, were nominated by the democratic legislative caucus of North Dakota for the position of United States senator.

While ex-Governor Ordway was supposed to be making great haste to reach Bismarck and mount the forum and make reply to State Sen. Judson La-Moure's charges, he was in reality making tracks in the other direction. He had discovered that the health of his wife required a visit to the Michigan spring, and like a dutiful husband he said his path of duty impelled him toward the healing waters.

L. R. Casey, of Jamestown, was elected United States senator from North Dakota on the 26th of November. There had been several days consumed and a number of ballots taken for the second senator before a decision was reached. Ordway, who appears to have made a residence in the Red River Valley in Walsh County, made a determined effort to win this place, but his highest vote was twelve, which finally dwindled to five. He made a sorry spectacle in the fight, and brought into the contest all his personal magnetism and knowledge of political intrigue, but was easily checkmated by the honest Scandinavians and anti elements of the Legislature. This was Mr. Casey's first political office and his first election to any office, except that he had held the office of county commissioner of Foster County, Dakota Territory, by appointment. He was quite a wealthy man. He was born in the Town of York, Livingston County, New York, in 1837. When quite young his parents removed to Ypsilanti, Michigan, where he prepared for Ann Arbor University, but did not enter. He was later in the hardware business in Toledo, Ohio, seven years, as a member of the firm of Leff, Kellogg & Casey. After retiring he went to Europe and studied and traveled for five years. He became a student of foreign affairs and an accomplished linguist. He settled at Carrington, Foster County, Dakota Territory, in 1882, where he opened a 5,000 acre farm. At the time of his election he was secretary of the Casey-Carrington Land Company, which owned over one hundred thousand acres in the James River Valley, with a capital of $500,000. His residence was at Jamestown. He was a member of the Farmers' Alliance at that time, and after a strong influence in the politics of both states, and that organization claimed the credit of his election.

DRAWING FOR SENATORIAL TERMS AND NUMBER OF STATE

A Washington letter writer described the proceedings attending the precedence accorded the new states of North and South Dakota and Washington, and also the system by which the terms of senators are fixed in the case of new states.

It is a game of chance, a sort of lottery, and in the instance mentioned was pronounced of greater proportions than had ever been witnessed in the Senate in the history of that body. It occurred on Tuesday, December 3, when six senators from three new states drew for order of admission into the Union, and for terms, under a complicated resolution introduced by Senator Hoar, which he said was in conformity with the resolution of May, 1879, and the Constitution.

Senators Pierce and Casey of North Dakota, were sworn in just as soon as possible after the chaplain's prayer. Senator Cullom, of Illinois, presented Mr. Pierce's credentials from North Dakota, and escorted him to Vice President Morton's desk, and Senator Washburn performed the same courtesy for Mr. Casey, also of North Dakota. It took but one minute to repeat the oath, and then the vice president turned to one side of his desk and gave a hand to each of the senators. Senator Cullom then presented a memorial from North Dakota endorsing Senator Pierce for the long term. Senator Sherman smiled when it was read; Senator Hoar hinted that the Legislature had nothing to say about that. Senator Gorman agreed with him and cited a similar instance when Minnesota's first senators came in, where the legislative endorsement did not count. Senator Call, of Florida, argued the other way, holding that the Legislature was entitled to choose on such matters. The matter was settled by action, which called for drawing in the old way without regard to the North Dakota Legislature.

The draw was first for order of precedence by states, and Senators Allen of Washington, Casey of North Dakota, and Moody of South Dakota, for the three states, drew slips of paper from a ballot box. Allen got number one, so Washington became the thirty-ninth state. Moody got number two, giving South Dakota fortieth place, and Casey's draw gave North Dakota forty-first place. Montana, which would be ready in a short time, would take forty-second place and be the youngest state in the Union in the year of our Lord 1890. Washington was accordingly the first state to settle on the length of senatorial terms, and there were slips of paper representing a two and a four-year term, placed in the box. Allen drew first and got the four-year term, leaving Squire to take the two-year slip. South Dakota came next with a chance at a two, a four and a six-year term. Pettigrew always had good luck in a draw. "I'll bet on him for the six-year term," said a South Dakota voice in the gallery. He would have won his wager, for Pettigrew drew the six-year slip. Judge Moody got number three, which entitled him to a two-year's term only. North Dakota also had a chance at the three classes, but neither of the senators drew the six-year slip. Casey got a four-year term and Pierce a two-year term.

With this distribution it left Montana a chance for a six-year term whenever their senators applied for their installation. When this occurred, Thomas C. Powers, a pioneer Dakotan, drew the six-year term.

Those persons who were favored with observing the classification of the senators from North and South Dakota at Washington, were reminded that they had witnessed a ceremony not permitted to any persons who had lived since the year 1789, a century before. Not since May 15th of that year have more than two senators from new states been sworn in and classified on one occasion. There were some present who descanted upon what might be transpiring in the same chamber when another century had intervened. Montana does not appear in the list, not having organized its Legislature, being delayed by a number of legislative contests.

WAS DAKOTA'S ORGANIZATION AS A TERRITORY PREMATURE?

Viewed in the light of public demand, the treaty of cession from the Yanktons in 1858-59, and the organization of Dakota Territory in 1861 could have been deferred a few years longer with advantage. There was in abundance of public land at the time, and very little immigration. One half of Iowa was a vast comparatively unoccupied waste, teeming with the growth of its native herbage, and the same could be said of Minnesota, and still more of Nebraska, and as much of Kansas. Colorado was on the eve of securing an organization as a territory. The first settlement at Sioux Falls and Medary was broken up and the permanent occupation deferred until near 1870 by Indian troubles, and we do not discover that anything of value to the substantial development of that section was lost by the delay. The Missouri slope was yielding its annual harvest of robes and furs, and would have been benefited and gained valuable advantages had its occupation by the whites been delayed until the vacant routes of travel laid out and improved. Had the organization of Dakota come a few years later, there would probably have been two territorial organizations instead of one. Minnesota and the Northern Pacific Railroad influence would have demanded one to include the territory west of the Red River, and Iowa could have secured one for the country south. It would unquestionably have resulted more to the advantage of the people of the two territories had division come about in that way.

All things considered, one is prone to think that partisanship and the real estate craze which prevailed at the time, had more to do with bringing about the early opening of Dakota to settlement than the needs of the people.

We have an impression, one that has occasionally obtruded itself upon our mind during the progress of this work, that there will appear in it some ground for claiming that it has a political partisan bias. If such should prove to be the case, its author ought not to be held responsible, for he has sought to dispossess his mind of every particle of prejudice in performing his task.

The reader will not fail to understand that the Territory of Dakota came into organized existence at the most critical period of our career as a nation; that owing to its close political relations with the parent government, it undoubtedly was to a great extent influenced in its political career by the party which for twenty-four years of our territorial government, controlled, without notable interruption, the national Government. That a very large proportion of the hundreds of thousands who immigrated to its fertile lands had imbibed a predilection for the principles of the republican party, before coming hither, and in the case of many from over the sea, even before their departure from the fatherland. And finally, that no government could have surpassed our own, during our period of territorial wardship, in its wise and timely regard, as a rule, for the welfare and the educational and material interests of Dakota's people. In the enjoyment of these splendid and substantial advantages, the citizens of all parties enjoyed an equal chance, and the reward of their efforts and industry has been subject to no political or party bias, so that in closing the account of Dakota's long territorial vassalage and career, we look abroad and find fortune's favors have not been directed by any political organization—but as is generally the case, probity, talent, education, industry, intelligent enterprise have been rewarded, and mark the path Dakota's successful sons have trodden. They had a goal in sight, and they climbed toward it, overcoming by their professional and business integrity, their faith and persistence, the ordinary obstructions and difficulties that beset the commendable struggles of man and womankind, everywhere, political or party bias presenting no obstruction.

INDEX

Aberdeen Founded	1207	Bayless, Lott S., Receiver of Yankton Land Office	68
Allbright, S. J., Sioux Falls Pioneer	101	Beadle, General W. H. H.	134
Allison, John P., Judge, Celebrated In- dian Marriage	431	Geology by	68
Allison, John P., Treasurer Yankton Land & Town Co.	414	Appointed Surveyor General	73
Altitudes in Dakota	1595	On Statehood	1650
Amidon and Son Killed at Sioux Falls	106-255	Census	1651
Ancient Order of United Workmen	1581	Bear's Ebb, Killed by His Own People	255
Appointments by President Lincoln	400	Beever, Fred I. Holt, with Sibley	284
Appointments, Official, in 1881	1163	Bennett, Granville G., Nominated for Congress	1066
In 1883	1309	Elected to Congress	1074
In 1888	1550	Bierly, W. R.	1537
In 1889	1591	Big Sioux, First Settlement	115
Arms and Ammunition	459	Valley Inundated	1151
Armstrong, M. K., at Pembina	85	Bill, Treaty	1152
Pioneer, 1859	146	Bimetallic Money, Standard Repealed 1873	690
Elected Speaker	263	Bijou, Antoine-Bijou Hills	154
Elected President of Council	151	Black Hills-Allison Treaty Commission	911
Chief Engineer M. & M. Co.	610	Allison Treaty	915
Nominated for Congress, 1872	667	C. H. Bates' Letter	870
Not a Candidate for Congress, 1871	990	Bishop Haro's Letter	901
Candidate for Congress, 1874	995	Byron Smith Expedition to	86
Arthur, Chester A., President	1185	Captain Dady's Expedition Forbidden	871
Ash, H. C., and Family, Pioneers, 1859	150	Captain Kelly's Statement	927
Member Legislature	421-452	Chiefs Red Dog and Spotted Tail Op- pose	91
Government Timber Agent	540	Civil Government Organized	930
Deputy U. S. Marshal	1024	Counties of	970
Removed to Sturgis City, 1876	1040	The First Court	981
Ash Hollow, Battle of	62	Custer City Founded	307
Ashley, William H., fur trader	53	Custer's Expedition to	877, 887
Fights with Arikaree Indians	55	Custer's Reports on	885, 890
Assessments	1329	Dakota Delegation Visits Washington	808
Assessment, First in Lawrence County	1061	Deadwood Placers Discovered	924
Astor's Expedition to the Pacific	41	Delegate Kidder's Famous Speech on	931
Astor, John Jacob	59	Delegate Kidder and the President	937
Bacon, Lieut. James, Dakota Cavalry	107	Early Efforts to Open	861
Bad Lands, Origin of	869	Edmunds Commission	947
Letter of C. H. Bates	870	Expedition from Bismarck	96
In 1880	1145	Expedition of Lieut. Warren	87
Of Little Missouri	1146	Expedition from Yankton	929
Bad River	44	Exclusion Policy Not to be Enforced	970
Bailey, Horace T.	168	First Efforts to Explore	86
Baleont, Hank, Wins Renown	137	First Mining District	908
Balcomb, Father, Pembina	82	Gen. Crook Persuades Men to With- draw	100
Bankers' Convention of 1887	1505	Gen. Hancock Opposes Exploration of Gen. Pope to Build Fort in	894 896
Barry, William, Tried for Killing Spear	728	Gen. Sherman Consul to Dakota	100
Acquitted	731	Geology of	89
Bartlett, Ara, Appointed Chief Justice 1865	101	Government Divides to Purchase Government Obligations-Laver Treaty	897 901
Bates, C. H., Writes Letter on Bad Lands	870	Government Relieves to Presumptive Ex- ecutors	919
Battles, Deerkill Mountain, 1864	52
Bad Lands, 1864	56
Shreveport, Has Fight with Indians	574

- Black Hills—continued
- Importance of Treaty..... 973
- Indians Removed to Indian Territory. 954
- Jenney's Scientific Expedition to..... 903
- Jenney's Official Report on..... 909
- Known to be Gold Bearing..... 861
- Legal Contest for County Offices..... 980
- Legislation for..... 1022
- Military Prohibits Exploration of..... 864
- Militia Under Arms..... 978
- Old Settlers..... 1585
- Opening of..... 969
- Peace Policy Greatly Strengthened... 972
- Peace Policy..... 983
- Pearson of Yankton One of First to Arrive..... 929
- Precious Metal..... 1506
- Prehistoric Mining..... 982
- President Grant Talks on Opening of.. 897
- Professor Hayden's Report on..... 866
- Public Meeting at Yankton to Discuss Purchase of..... 895
- First Railroad..... 983
- Report of Treaty Commission..... 969
- Rush to..... 929
- Salt Springs..... 1138
- Separate Territory for..... 975
- Sheriff Seth Bullock..... 977
- Sioux City Expedition to..... 893
- Sioux Indians Visit Washington..... 896
- Some Early Sioux History..... 972
- Special Election..... 979
- Spotted Tail Heads a Delegation..... 955
- Spotted Tail Talks to Secretary Delano 900
- Tin..... 1507
- Treaty Commissioners in Danger..... 916
- The Treaty..... 947
- Yankton Sends Out Explorers to..... 911
- Blind Cared for in 1875..... 854
- Care of..... 1297
- Bliss, Philemon, Chief Justice, 1861.... 315
- Seeks Congress..... 368
- Blizzard and Flood of 1880 and 1881.... 1151, 1163
- 1860-61, Fiske a Victim..... 150
- January, 1860..... 443
- Fatalities..... 554
- Of 1881, Range Cattle Perish..... 1150
- Of 1888..... 1512
- Board of Pharmacy..... 1505
- Bolters' Convention, 1874..... 993
- Bond Bill, First..... 844
- Bon Homme, Old Fort on Bon Homme Island 17
- Measurements by Lewis & Clark..... 17
- Map of Old Fort..... 17
- Earliest Settlement..... 121
- Shober's Minnesota Colony, 1858..... 122
- Political Convention, 1861..... 124
- Town Site Z. Renconter..... 124
- Booge, Charles P., Adjutant General... 235
- Boundary Line, International..... 85
- Survey of..... 588
- Southern Boundary of Territory..... 1002
- Bountiful Harvests of 1887..... 1496
- Boyle, John W., Receiver of Land Office. 435
- Boyton, Captain Paul, Makes a Voyage. 1200
- Bradford, Emma, First School Teacher... 122
- Bramble, Downer T., Pioneer, 1859..... 146
- Bramble, Miner & Co., Black Hill Freighters..... 1139
- Brave Bear Kills a White Man..... 1204
- Brisbine, T. W..... 463
- Broatoh, Capt. William, Agent at Yankton..... 524
- Brockman's Farmer Statement..... 1044
- Brookings, Wilnot Wood..... 99
- Chosen Governor at Sioux Falls..... 104
- Superintendent of Wagon Road..... 405
- Republican Candidate for Congress... 439
- Appointed Associate Justice..... 523
- Promotes Railroad Matters..... 598
- Republican Candidate for Congress... 1226, 1663
- Brookings and Moody Campaign, 1872... 661
- Brother-To-All Speaks on Visit to Carlisle 1127
- Brown, George, Tells why Buffalo are Scarce..... 500
- Brule Creek Massacre..... 417
- Frauds..... 417
- Bughier, Theophile, Pioneer..... 135
- Buckman, Joseph Y., Representative Red River..... 93
- Buffalo Diminishing..... 500
- Still Plentiful in 1882..... 1228
- The Extirmination of..... 1497
- Bullock, Sheriff Seth, Black Hills..... 977
- Burbank, John A., Appointed Governor. 523
- Message to Legislature, 1872..... 677
- Burleigh, W. A., Appointed Indian Agent 192
- Indian Goods on Sunken Steamboat... 194
- Report to Governor..... 307
- In Politics, 1864..... 368
- Nominated for Congress..... 372
- Elected to Congress..... 378
- Sustains President Johnson..... 435
- Elected Second Term..... 439
- Candidate for Congress..... 497
- Delegate Speech in Congress..... 511
- Speech on Indian Affairs..... 513
- Candidate for Congress..... 547
- Railroad Advocate and Director..... 601
- Nominated for Congress, 1874..... 992
- Nominated for Congress at Third Convention but Declines..... 994
- Caldwell, E. W., Interviews Governor Ordway..... 1177
- Calhoun, John C., Secretary of War.... 56
- Campbell, Judge H. J., His Efforts and Rewards..... 1795
- Campaign of 1881-2..... 1217
- Of 1884..... 1353
- Canton Founded..... 487
- Capital Commission..... 1469
- Bill Passes..... 1303
- In Court..... 1321
- Court Judgment on..... 1322
- Capital of Territory Prior to Legislative Action..... 178
- Located by Law at Yankton..... 206
- Building First Erected..... 255
- Capital, Removal of..... 1300
- Removal Agitated by Governor Ordway..... 1174
- Removal Agitation of 1880..... 1142
- Bill to Remove Capital to Pierre..... 1396
- Removal Press Comments..... 1305
- Removal, Yankton Sentinel..... 1314
- Captive Women Ransomed from Indians, 1862..... 252

Carter and Laramie Counties	409	Constitutional Convention—continued
Catholicism	1373	Of North Dakota	102
Catholic Church Organization	479	Of South Dakota	1089
Growth of	1198	Content for Governorship 1880	114
Catlin, George, Indian Painter	45	Conventions, Various of 1885	1804
Cavalry, Dakota, Company A in Indian		Convicts, Keeping of	503
Fight	114	Conventions, Want Territorial Govern-
Mustered Out	401	ment	167
Cement Plant at Yankton	1572	First Political Party	184
Census of 1880	1118	First County	185
Decennial	1118	County, the First Call	218
Of 1883	1150	County and Tickets Named First	224
Of 1879	1100	Republican, Yankton County	15
Of 1882	1229	Political	490
Of 1881	1724	Republican, 1870	542
Yankton, 1859	149	Republican, Double Header, 1870	546
Of Territory, 1860	177	Republican hunt at Elk Point	987
Of Territory, 1861	176	Republican Congressional	109
Of Territory, 1870	540	Republican, 1872	603
Semi-decennial	1417	Republican Liberal, 1872	606
Centennial Anniversary of Adoption of		Republican, 1876	1007
the U. S. Constitution	1501	Republican, 1874	1008
Exposition of U. S.	856, 1570	Republican, 1878	1064
Exposition, Preparing for, in 1872	673	Republican, 1880	1116, 1141
Year, U. S.	1005	Republican, 1882	1218
Chamberlain City Located	1163	Republican, 1884	1352
Charles Mix County, Early Days	153	Republican, 1885	1747
Chippewa Indian Treaty, Red River	86	Republican, 1886	1441
Choteau Family—Fur Traders	40	Republican, 1888	1514
Church, Louis K., Appointed Judge	1405	Republican, 1884	1594
Appointed Governor	1458, 1467	Republican of North Dakota	1350
Opposes Division of Territory	1475	Of 1876 Nominated Kidder	1009
Message to the Legislature	1555	Democratic and Liberal Republican of
Impeachment of	1521	1872	666
Clay County Population Increases Great-		Democratic, 1878	1068
ly in 1877-8	1061	Democratic, 1880	1105
Cleveland, Grover, President	1403	Democratic, 1882	1224
And Dakota Committee	1778	Democratic, 1884	1350
Indian Recommendations	1432	Democratic, 1885	1412
Cole County Early Settlers	152	Democratic, 1886	1448
Indian War, 1862	239	Democratic, 1888	1519, 1522
Collins, E. C., Assessor Internal Revenue	435	Democratic, 1889	1862-1909
Company A, Dakota Cavalry, Mustered		Democratic of North Dakota	1942
In	191	Irish, at Vermillion	672
Dakota Militia	236	Corn	1571
Company B, Dakota Cavalry, Mustered		Council of 1883	1294
In	316	Of 1885	1386
Congregational Church, the First	478	County Fairs of 1883	1331
Congress, Fiftieth	1857	Indebtedness of 1888	1571
Implores Divine Favor	319	Officers First Appointed	229
Johnson Schism	430	Superintendent First Mentioned	477
Republicans	449	Organization	1376, 1593
Delegate Election	493	Big Sioux and Midway	79
Democrats Sustain Johnson	435	Brown County	1207
Congressional Reconstruction Policy	488	Burleigh County	696
Constitution, First, Adopted in 1883	1716	Cass County	701
First, Before Congress	1719	Largo County	700
Constitutional Convention, First, 1883		Red River County	92
	1293, 1669	Hughes County	1141
First, Adjourns	1716	Turner County	592
First, Delegates to	1660	Frauds	1432
First, Organization of	1672	Law	1141
First, Proceedings and Debates in	1674	Court, First Term, Vermillion, 1861	129
First, Report of Committee on Judi-		Cowles, Warren, Death of	685
ciary	1696	Crawford County Voting System	544
First, Argument for Statehood	1696	Creedman, James Accompanies Boyton
Second, Bill Authorizing	1728	Down the Missouri	1203
Second, Memorial Asking for	1727	Crescent City	564
Second, Organization of	1732	Crop Failure of 1889	1592
Second, Proceedings and Debates of	1733	Crop Report of 1885	1416
Second, Adjourns	1743	Crow Creek Agency Seized by U. S.
		Soldiers	1042

- Crow Creek—continued
 Fourth of July Celebration, 1880... 1128
 Trouble in Reservation..... 1425
 Crow Dog Kills Chief Spotted Tail..... 1192
 Trial of 1193
 Appeals 1195
 Custer's Expedition to Black Hills... 877, 882
 Reports on Black Hills..... 885, 890
 Custer City Founded..... 907
 Custer's Last Battle—Sitting Bull's
 Army 938
 Terry's Expedition to Little Big Horn, 938
 U. S. Fores 940
 The Last March 940
 The Massacre 940
 Terry's Official Report..... 942
 Wounded Conveyed to Fort Lincoln.. 944
 Public Demands Extermination of Sioux 945
 Sitting Bull's Retreat..... 946
 Battle of Slim Buttes..... 957
 Gen. Miles Pursues Sitting Bull..... 958
 Reno Court of Inquiry..... 961, 964
 Reno Exonerated 964
 Sitting Bull's Influence..... 964
 Sitting Bull's Story of..... 965
 Gall's Story of..... 967
- Dakota or Sioux Indian Nation..... 14
 Names of Tribes..... 14
 Genealogy 158
 Indian Nation 156
 Dakota Territory—Land Company 99
 Before Congress 105
 Large Part of Minnesota..... 162
 A Sanitarium 165
 Why so Named..... 173
 Nearly Depopulated 241
 War Equipment 480
 Bar Organized 447
 Progress 533
 Development for Ten Years..... 534
 Dakota Bar Association..... 1437
 Bills in Congress, 1888..... 1511
 In Congress 1567
 In Congress of 1887..... 1473
 Gifford's, Hon. O. S.—Review of Conditions in 1888..... 1831
 At Home 1783
 In 1873 718
 Pioneer Wheat Farm..... 1616
 Tribute to 1331
 Dakota's Growth 1325
 Progress in 1886..... 1451
 Dalrymple Wheat Farm, A..... 1139
 Daugherty, John, Pioneer Freighter..... 1140
 Deadwood Visited by Destructive Fire...
 1101, 1104
 Visited by Governor Howard..... 1104
 Deaf and Dumb Institution at Sioux Falls 1142
 Delegate to Congress; Rights of a Delegate 586
 Delegates to Congress on Committees,
 1872 673
 Dakota Delegation Visits Washington... 898
 Democrats and Anti-Monopolists..... 990
 Deuel County's First Vote..... 676
 Dewitt, F. J., Pioneer, Sioux Falls..... 195
 Trader at Crow Creek Agency..... 301
 Dicke's Post 46
 Dirt Lodges, Sioux Indian..... 306
- Disaul, Emannel, Pioneer Trader..... 121
 Distance from St. Louis to Fort Pierre
 1283 Miles—Lewis & Clark..... 45
 Steamboat Measure, 1528 Miles..... 64
 District Attorney, Office of, Created... 1072
 District Court, First Term Held at Ver-million, 1861-2.....
 First Term Held at Yankton..... 315
 First Court at Pembina..... 584
 Decision Regarding Treaty, 1868..... 1004
 Divorce Bills Vetoed by Governor..... 428
 Dollard, Cobb, Bon Homme History..... 121
 Dougherty, Lieut. W. E., Takes Forceable
 Possession of Crow Creek Agency... 1142
 Drifting Goose 99
 Becomes Troublesome 1057
 Obstructs Settlement of James River Valley, 1878 1054
- Earliest Settlers 80
 Early Fur Traders..... 41
 Edgerton, A. G., Colonel, with Sibley... 277
 Judge Alonzo J..... 1919
 Alonzo J., Appointed Chief Justice. 1183
 Alonzo J., Letter to Senator M. C. Butler 1827
 Edmunds, Newton, Appointed Governor,
 1863 311
 Governor's First Message..... 323
 Military Order from, 1864..... 365
 Second Message to Legislature..... 381
 Criticises Indian War Policy..... 425
 Edmunds, Senator, on the Duty of Territories 1830
 Education, Report of Superintendent... 456
 Educational Institutions 1372
 Statistics of 1887..... 1829
 Education—Common School Report of Territorial Superintendent 456, 473
 Common Schools of 1884..... 1336
 Indian Schools 1476
 University of Dakota 1341
 Congress Asked for Land for Agricultural College 1298
 Election in 1889, Called by Governor... 1887
 Of 1888, Celebration 1542
 Of North Dakota, 1889..... 1933
 Of North Dakota Senators..... 1935
 Of 1885 Under Constitution..... 1745
 Of 1872 669
 Of 1878 1071
 Of 1880 1137
 Of 1882 1226
 Of 1883 for Senators..... 1762
 Of 1886 1449
 Of 1888, Presidential 1831
 Of 1889 1911
 Electoral College of 1888..... 1544
 Elk Point, Occupied, 1859..... 136
 And Cole County..... 151
 Ellis, Corporal Joe, Kills Indian..... 113
 Evangelists at Big Stone..... 1374
 Exemptive Law Amended..... 426
 Exemptions, 1874 836
 Exemption Law, Unsuccessful Attempt to Repeal, 1879 1096
- Farmer's Alliance 1501-1538
 Two Dakotas; Farewell Meeting..... 1880
 Faulk, A. J., Appointed Governor 435
 Governor's First Message..... 452
 Second Annual Message..... 466

Federal Officials, The First	181	Garfield, James A., Elected President	1165
Section of Prison	1434	James A., Assassinated	1185
Fiftieth Wisconsin Infantry	415	Geology of Dakota, Beadle and Hayden	69
Financial Condition in 1873	719	Gilford, Oscar S.	1360 1422
Firemen's Tournament	1586	Gilpin, Charles E., Trader	46
First White Settlements: Pembina, 1843;		Gleason, W. C., U. S. Attorney	177
Sioux Falls, 1856; Yankton, 1857;		Grand Army of the Republic	1384
Bon Homme, 1858; Vermillion, 1858;		Grant and Greeley	954
Big Sioux Point, 1858; Elk Point,		Grant, U. S., President	521
1859	80	At Fargo	1327
First White Woman in Territory, Mrs.		Death of	1418
John Goodwin, Sioux Falls	100	Grasshoppers—1874	842
Fiske, George D., First Trader at Yank-		In Vague Settlement, 1864	342
ton	119	Investigation by Government Scien-
First Blizzard Victim	150	tists	345
Flood Waters in the Spring of 1866	446	Loss	346
Floods in 1878	1078	Plague of 1876	1012
Of 1881	1151 1163	Convention at Omaha	1012
Flour Mills in 1872	671	Governor Pennington's Address	1012
Fort Abercrombie	87	Proclamation by Governor	1028
Abraham Lincoln	580-695	Day of Fasting Observed	1028
Bennett Built, 1872	678-682	Abundant Harvest Followed	1029
Benton	576-46	Gray, Josiah, in Indian Skirmish	112
Berthold	46	Great Seal of Territory	268
Campbell	46	Great Sioux Reservation Black Hills
Dakota Built	413	Convention; Demands Opening	1240
Dodge Relief Convention	847	Celebration on Passage of Treaty Bill	1258
Garry	83	Indian Affairs Committee Makes Re-
George	41	port	1238
James Built	413	Congress Does Not Ratify Treaty	1246
Keogh Built 1878, General Miles in		Council Considers Treaty Held by In-
Command	1076	dians	1260
La Fromboise	67	Crook Commission Appointed	1267
Lookout	53	Dawes Bill Defeated	1255
Meade Mentioned	414	Edmund's Commission Makes Report	1243
Pierre, Choteau Built	45	Early Agitation for Opening	1233
Pierre Bought by the Government	63	Exploration of Bad Lands and Great
Pierre Abandoned, 1858	67	American Desert	1239
Pierre Investigated	1205	Gilford's Amendment to Treaty Bill
Pierre and Pierre Village	1206	Fails	1266
Randall, Named for Colonel Daniel Ran-		Gilford Bill Passes	1257
dall	65	Investigating Committee Appointed by
Randall, Established in 1855-56	65	Senate	1240
Randall in 1872	657	Investigating Committee Reports	1250
Randall in 1861	222	Jones Bill Introduced	1256
Snelling	81-87	Location of Separate Reservation	1244
Tecumsek	44	National Indian Defense Association
Thompson Crow Creek	300	Opposes Dawes Bill	1233
Totten, Homicide at	629	Opening	1280
Union	44	Opening, Plan for	1241
Union Built	1108	Report of Treaty Commission	1261
Vermillion	46	Right of Way for Railroads Granted
Foster, James S., Head of New York		Review of Efforts to Open	1234 1236
Colony	334	Right of Way for Wagon Roads
Report of School Superintendent	384	Granted	1234
School Report	471	Senate Does Not Confirm Treaty	1249
Report Superintendent Education	456	Judge Shannon Gives His Impressions
Commissioner	852	Out	1252
Fremont, John C., with Nicollet	59	Teller's Statement on Treaty	1247
French, G. W., Chief Justice	523	Sioux Treaty Intention of 1884	1254
Frost, D. M., Pioneer	168	Sitting Bull and Red Cloud Oppose
Todd & Company, Trading Post	116	Opening	1271
Todd & Company Plat Yankton	119	The Treaty	1245-1283
Fuller, A. G., Delegate to Congress	102	Treaty Bill Passes House and Senate	1266
Fur Trade	39	Treaty Commission Appointed	1258
Traders and Companies	40	Treaty Convention at Pierre	1248
Magnitude of	48	Treaty Fails	1264
Poem Farwell	49	Gregory County Early Settlers	155
Gambles, Robert J., Fourth of July Oration in 1888	1845
Vol. II—61

- Hackett, Edmond, Explores Mouse River Valley 1210
- Hagaman, Robert, Assistant Adjutant General 235
- Half Breeds, Red River 84
- Hamilton, Major J. V. 154
- Hammond, J. H., Appointed Superintendent of Indian Affairs for Dakota. 1040
- Defends Policy in Effort to Forestall Public Opinion 1041-1044
- Pernicious Activity Against Indian Agents 1040-1050
- Removed 1050
- Hancock, Major General, in Dakota. 682
- Hand, George H., Reaches Dakota. 431
- Appointed U. S. Attorney. 435
- Choice of People to Succeed Governor Howard 1115
- Register of Yankton Land Office. 683
- Hanson, Joseph Mills 49
- Poem, The Fur Traders. 49-50
- Hanson, Joseph R., in 1858 133
- Clerk of Legislature. 197
- Appointed Indian Agent. 435
- Hardie, General, Investigates Militia Accounts 393
- Harlan, A. J., Speaker 261
- Harney Expedition, 1855. 59-60
- To Fort Pierre 63
- Locates Fort Randall, 1855. 65
- Harrison's, President, Proclamation Admitting South Dakota. 1921
- State and Territorial Bill. 1719
- Harvests, Annual 607
- Colossal Farms 1031
- Encouraging Harvest, 1869. 608
- In 1877 Favorable. 1033
- Northern Wheat Fields. 1030
- Hayden, F. V., Professor of Geology, Dakota Territory 69
- Report on Black Hills. 66
- Hayes, President, Visits Dakota and Delivers an Address. 1072
- Hayt, E. C., Indian Commissioner, Removal of 1051
- Hearn, Major J. A., Agent at Grand River 524
- Hermann, Hon. Binger, General Land Commissioner 1
- Hill, James J., 1860-1-2. 88
- In North Dakota. 1098
- Historical Association and Lectures, 1863-4 348
- Members' Names 350
- Hodnett, John Polk, Appointed Assessor. 526
- Hogan, James, Lynched at Vermillion. . . 445
- Hostile Indians Driven into Dakota, 1862 253
- Holman, C. J., Early at Yankton. 118
- Plan and Party 118
- Homestead Law Requirements. 78
- Howard, Charles K. 114
- At Sioux Falls. 504
- Howard, William A., Appointed Governor 1062
- Message to Legislature, 1879. 1081
- Death of 1110
- Speaks at Vermillion State Fair 1077
- Howard, William A., Visits Stricken Deadwood 1104
- Howard, William A.—continued
- Memorial Services for. 1114
- Resolutions on Death of. 1111-1114
- Will of 1115
- Hoyt, Rev. Melanethon. 145-214
- Hudson Bay Fur Company. 40-81
- Hudson, E. E., Crow Creek Trader, Accused of Fraud. 1043
- Case Heard by Indian Commissioners, Acquitted 1047
- Hughes, Alexander 676
- Hugo, Major W. H., Agent Poncas. 524
- Hunt, Washington 41
- Hunter, Harry 1545
- Huron Townsite Located. 1100
- Hutchinson & Bliss Statement. 274
- Immigration 1298
- Agents in 1873. 719
- Board 853
- Bohemian 530
- German-Russian. 705, 713, 1107
- Icelanders 1167, 1434
- In 1877 1033
- In 1879 1060
- Irish 672
- National Bureau of. 1032
- Promoted 851
- Spring of 1886. 1437
- Indians—Agents, Names of. 524, 764, 799
- Arikarees Defeated 54
- Arthur, President, Views. 817
- Army Control of Indians, Opposition to 753
- Army Officers for Agents. 751
- Army Seeks Control of Indians. 747, 753
- Baldheads, Aversion to. 804
- Beads, Use of Abolished. 802
- Census of the Indians. 1107
- Chiefs at Washington, 1877. 799
- Christianity and the Indians—
- Catholic Pioneer Missionaries. 774
- Christianity a Factor for Peace. 772
- Christianity, Influence of. 770
- Clarkson, Bishop, with the Poncas. . . 773
- Dakota Mission Memorial. 782
- De Balecourt, Father Anthony. 776
- De Smet, Father 774
- Genin, Father 777
- Marty, Bishop, and Others. 778
- Missionaries Report Progress. 790
- Missionaries, Work of. 763
- Presbytery Dakota Indians. 780
- Religious Denominations in Control. 764
- Spotted Tail Theology. 799
- Tomahawk's Faith 780
- Ward's, Rev. Joseph, Report. 781
- Williamson's, Rev., Statement. 778
- Commission Visits Sioux in 1866. 752
- Crook, General, the Indians' Friend. . . 800
- Cupidity of the Pale Face. 799
- Devil's Lake Reservation. 835
- Education of Indians. 473, 810
- First Battle 53
- Fur Trading Interest 774
- Government Attitude Toward Indians. 744
- Government Policy Toward the Indians 745
- The Great Britain's Treaty Policy. . . 744
- Grant's, President, Indian Policy. 764
- Grant's Indian Policy Message. 765
- Hayes, President, and the Indians. 800
- Hayes', President, Views. 815

Indians—continued

Hayt, Commissioner, Visits Sioux	802
Indian Domestic Relations	146
Indians Favor Civil Control	754
Indian Freighters	807
Indians, Friendly, Location of	768
Genealogy	158
Hostile, Stanley's Report on	767
Hostile, Desire Peace	661
Hostile, Sue for Pardon	819
Immune from White Man's Laws	774
Incorrigible Element	754
Industrial Civilization	744
Indian Land not Indian Reservations	94
Names	286
Indians Oppose Missouri Location	801
Oppose Opening Roads Across Their Lands	407
Oppose Transfer	813
Remove to Reservation	142
Treated with	58
Treat with Indians	791
Indian Treaty Methods Criticised	159
Treaty, Text of	793
War, 1864	354
War, Causes of	303
Wars Close, 1865	367
War in Yankton County	238
Ink-pa-du-ta, Hostile Sioux Chief	302
Johnson, President, Appoints Treaty Commissioners	77
Last Battle with Indians	830
Mandans and Gros Ventres	835
Medicine Men, no Favors Shown	822
Messiah Uzae, 1889	826
Miles, General	827
Military and Civil Authorities Strive	895
Military Movements Western Dakota	818
Negotiations for Black Hills	799
Ogallala and Brule Sioux	741
Peace Commission, First Named	57
Policy	746
Policy Explained	754
Policy New	524
Pollock, Colonel	807
Poncas Removed	767
Renville, Chief, Speaks	834
Roschud Landing a Mission	807
Roschud and Pine Ridge	807-8
Santee Indians at Niobrara	755
Schurz, Secretary, in Dakota	806
Schurz' Views	814
Sheridan's, General, Report	781
Sheridan on Unwise Expenditure	814
Sherman Commission Appointed	755
Treaty of 1868	756
Treaty Defective	765, 797
Sherman's Views	785
Sioux Agency Site Selected	806
Chiefs Visit Washington	750
For Indian Territory	796-7
Reservation Enlarged	788
Sisseton Indian Story	831
Sisseton Republican Government	822
Sitting Bull's Army	822
Sitting Bull Killed by Sioux	828
Makes a Speech	823
Placed at Standing Rock	821
Surrenders	824
Smith, Commissioner, and the Yanktons	794

Indians—continued

Spotted Tail's Eldest Daughter	770
Spotted Tail at Home	808
Stanage's Cabin Attacked by Indians	248
Transfer of Indian Bureau	811
Transportation, Cost of	812
Treaty Commissioners' Work in 1865	748
Unepupa Treaty, Text of	748
United States' Promise to Spain	745
War Department Control of Indians	408
War and Peace, Cost of Compared	784, 786, 787
War Policy Explained	754
Winnebagoes, Displeased	147
Yankton Reserve Open to Settlement	805
Indignation Meeting, 1871	809
At Sioux Falls	1418
At Yankton	1314
Ingham, Rev. S. W., Pioneer, 1860	129
Insane, Adjoining States Cancel Contract for Care of	1088
Insane Hospital	1434
Destroyed by Fire	1259
First Patient Assigned to	1090
Granted Land	1142
Located at Yankton	1091
Ramey, Dr. J. K., Appointed First Superintendent	1092
Temporary Hospital Erected	1089
Troubles	1477
Insane, Special Message by Governor Howard for Care of, 1879	1089
Irish Republicans	526
Jacobson, J. A., Killed at James River Crossing	511
James River, Exploring Valley	59
Quartzite	70
Navigation of	1504
Reservation Set Apart for Drifting Goose and His Band	1056
Source of, Discovered	1216
Valley Lands Surveyed, 1878	1054
Jayne, William, First Governor	175
Nominated for Delegate	224
Declared Elected	241
Governor's First Message	197
Governor's Second Message	264
Sketch of His Life	274
Jefferson, Thomas, U. S. President, Letter from	2
Jenny, Samuel, Agent Santee Indians	524
Jesuit Missionaries	84
Johnson, President, Appoints Edmunds Indian Peace Commission	409
Congress Troubles Appear	430
Republican Convention	436
Names of Delegates	449
Congress Trouble	488
Reconstruction Policy	488
Republicans	486
Judges Appointed in 1884	1349, 1376
Judges, Supreme, of 1885	1414
Judicial Districts, the First	180
Judicial District, Fourth, Established	1006
Judicial Districts, New	1506
Kelly, J. L., Adjutant General	480
Kiddler, Jefferson P., Delegate to Congress, 1859	104
Candidate for Congress	485

- Kidder, Jefferson P.—continued
 Appointed Associate Justice..... 523
 Appointed Associate Justice, 1865..... 404
 Death of 1323
 Defeated for Renomination, 1878..... 1066
 Delegate and the President, 1875..... 937
 Elected to Congress..... 1874
 Nominated to Congress, 1874..... 989
 Resigns Seat in Congress..... 728
- Kingsbury, W. W., First Delegate from
 Dakota 105
- Kittson, Norman W., First Settler..... 79
- Kittson, Norman W., Biography..... 85
- Knights of Pythias..... 1421
- Knights Templar 1348
- La Barge, Joseph 46
- Lake Kampeska and the Land Growth.. 704
- Lamb-Phillips Contest for Seats in the House 1300
- La Moure, Judson, in Politics.....
- La Moure, Judson, on Brule Creek.....
- Land District Entries, The Earliest.... 175
- Land Districts, 1879 1100
- Land Districts, Additional, Established.. 1216
- Land Office Established at Yankton... 683
- Land Office at Vermillion, Removed to Sioux Falls 685
- Laramie County in Legislature..... 483
- Larpenteur, Fur Trader..... 46
- La Salle, Robert, Cavalier..... 1
 Discoverer of the Mississippi..... 1
- Lawyers, Dakota, Bar Association..... 447
- Leavenworth, Colonel Henry..... 53
- Legislative Chaplain's Sermon..... 1320
 Proceedings of 1883..... 1319
- Legislation, Certain, Forbidden..... 1474
- Legislatures, Governor's Messages, Names of Members.
 The First 195-197
 Second, 1862-3 258-264
 Third, 1863-4 321-323
 Fourth, 1864-5 381
 Fifth, 1865-6 421
 Sixth, 1866-7 450-452
 Seventh, 1867-8 465-466
 Eighth, 1868-9 505-506
 First Biennial, 1870-1871..... 556-559
 In Extra Session..... 587-620
 In Extra Session Unauthorized..... 623
 Tenth, 1872-3 672-676
 Eleventh, 1874-5 996
 Twelfth, 1877 1019
 Thirteenth, 1879 1080
 Fourteenth, 1881 1166
 Fifteenth, 1883 1293
 Sixteenth, 1885 1754
 1886 1788
 Last Territorial 1552
 First South Dakota 1915
 Seventh Session 1459
 Membership Reduced by Congress.... 1087
 Passed Measures over Governor's Veto 1172
- Lewis and Clark Expedition..... 7-38
 Camps 36
- Lincoln, Abraham, Administration Indorsed 316
 Inaugural Message 398
 Thanksgiving Proclamation, 1863.... 318
- Lincoln County Organized..... 485
- Litchfield, L. H., Register of Deeds.... 230
 Appointed U. S. Marshal..... 435
- Little Big Horn, Battle of..... 940
 Terry's Expedition to..... 938
- Little Crow, Santee Chief..... 233
 Indian War, 1862..... 1227
- Live Stock Industry, 1882 413
- Livingston, Dr. H. F..... 1042
 Appointed Agent at Crow Creek..... 1049
 Elected to Yankton Board of Education 1043
 Forcibly Removed as Agent..... 1045-1047
 Trial of 1040-1051
 Cases 1545
- Local Option 342
- Locusts, Seventeen Year..... 850
- Redlegged 2
- Louisiana Territory Purchased by U. S... 2
 Boundaries of 2
- Lounsberry, Colonel 1566
 C. D., Dakota Information..... 1794
 Manderson 1436
- Lyman, William P., First White in Yankton 116
- McClellan, John, Sioux Falls..... 99
- McCook, Edwin Stanton, Homicide..... 720
- McCormack, Acting Governor..... 1467
- McCormack, M. L., Nominated for Congress 1137
- McFetridge, James, Collector Red River.. 86
- McHenry, James, First at Vermillion... 126
 Secretary 168
- McIntyre, C. H., Minnesota Colony, 1866. 447
 Elected to Legislature, 1868..... 495
- McKenzie, Alexander..... 1369
- McKenzie, Kenneth, Fur Trader..... 43
- MacKinaw Boat 48
- Madoe, Prince, Welsh Explorer..... 20
- Mail Route from Yankton to Jamestown,
 the First 1059
- Mandan and the Bad Lands in 1880.... 1145
 Indians and the Welsh Colony..... 18
- Mandans, Treaty with and Other Tribes. 1438
- Manitoba Meeting at Sioux Falls..... 1589
- Masons 1585
- Masonic Grand Lodge..... 854
- Massacre at Fort Phil Kearney..... 441
 Of Whites at Heart River, 1863..... 308
 Indian Account..... 309
- Medary and Midway County..... 108
- Mellette for Governor..... 1568
- Mellette's, Governor, Message..... 1757
 Message of 1886..... 1788
 Thanksgiving Proclamation of 1889.. 1922
- Menonite Memorial 711
- Methodists, First Pioneer Preachers.... 129
- Methodist University at Mitchell Burned. 1538
- Military Forces in Dakota, 1878..... 1073
 Officers as Indian Agents..... 524
- Militia of Dakota Called to Arms..... 235
 Called Out; Second Proclamation.... 249
- Miller, E. W., Nominated for Congress,
 1874, by Bolters..... 993
- Millers Organize 1537
- Mills, A. J. 676
- Milwaukee Car Exhibit..... 1370
- Miner, Captain Nelson..... 131, 233
 Official Report 1865..... 363
 Appointed Register Land Office..... 435
 Death of 1105
- Miner, William, Early Survey..... 75
- Minnehaha County Reorganized..... 533
- Minnesota Territory 79

Missionary Influence with Indians	1036	Parker, General, Commissioned Indian Agent	751
Mississippi and Missouri River Improvement Convention of 1882	1213	Full Blooded Omaha Indian	751
Missouri River Commission	1350	Visits Sioux in Dakota, 1865	751
Report of 1882	1215	Paul Piquette's Feary	145
Improvement Convention of 1881	1186	Peace Commissions of 1825	57
Missouri River		Peaceful Condition of Frontier, 1877	1041
Overflows in 1887	1472	Peace Policy, Black Hills	983
Upper, Surveyed	1213	Seven Years of	1029
Route to Montana	339	Pembina, Earliest White Settlement	79
Montana Emigration	338	Country Described	82
Moody, Gideon C.	339, 661, 664, 839, 1919	Whence Name Derived	80
Superintendent of Wagon Road	405	Redefined	95
Candidate for Congress, 1872	664	Land District	55
Letter	1792	Peminean Explained	83
Moody and Brokings Campaign, 1872	661	Pentecostary	1209
Mosquitos in Upper Mississippi River	411	Bill Authorizing Passed but not Approved	1097
Mouse River Valley Explored	1210	Formal Delivery of	1310
		Opening of	1229, 1297
Name of State Discussed	1725	Recommended by Secretary of Interior	1171
Names of the Dakota States, Origin of	1226	Pennington's, Governor, Administration
Napoleon Bonaparte	2	Satisfactory	106
National Love Feast Convention	423	Annual Message of 1874	997
Natural Gas	1502	Annual Message of 1877	1020
New Orleans Cotton Exposition	1364	Pettigrew, Richard F.	1920
Founded 1717	2	Settles in Sioux Falls	592
Newspapers		Elected to Congress	1137
Dakota's First Daily	841	Senator, Introduces Bill for Improvement of Upper Missouri River	1213
First Democratic Newspaper in Dakota	684	Member of Legislature of 1872	677
Sioux Falls Pantagraph	685	Nominated for Congress	1132
New York Colony to Dakota, 1864	331	Delegate Resents Governor Ordway's Interference	1180
Names of Members	335	Phillips, Dr. J. L., Sioux Falls	99
Codes Adopted	429	Picotte, Charles Francis	119
Nicollet, Professor, Geologist	59	Grant of Land	119
No Man's Land	1815	During Indian War	242
Normal Schools, First Mentioned	477	Sergeant at Arms First House	195
North and South Dakota, Twin States	1934	Life Story of	250
Northrup, Anson	87	Pierce, Gilbert A., Appointed Governor	1345
Northwest Fur Company	82	Tenders Resignation	1457
Norwegian Early Settlers	130	Pierce's, Governor, Second Message	1461
Lutheran Congregation	130	Pierre, Village and Fort Pierre	1206
Old Fellows Grand Lodge	855	Pinney, George M., Appointed Marshal, 1862	315
Official Canvass of 1888	1549	Elected Speaker	197
Official Votes for 1884	1364	Pipestone, (Red) Quarry	59
Old Settlers' Association, First	241	Analysis of	160
Ordway, Governor, Agitates Capital Removal	1171	Politics, 1872	661
Nehemiah G., Appointed Governor	1119	Pope, General, to Build Fort in Black Hills	866
Governor and Family Visit Black Hills	1122	Postoffices in 1870	537
Governor Favors One State	1165	In 1874	840
Governor Indicted	1378	Potter, Joel A., Appointed Indian Agent	435
Ordway's, Governor, First Message to Legislature	1167	Pound, William, Governor's Private Secretary, Appointed U. S. Attorney; Appointed Postmaster at Yankton; Died While on a Journey	1034
Interview in Washington	1176	Prairie Fire, Indians Suffer	519
Governor, Message to Council	1295	Remarkable Fires 1874	589
Removal Desired	1650	Indians Send Relief to Sufferers	589
Ordway, Governor, Seeks to Usurp Delegates' Powers	1179	Prairie Fire, Big Sioux Valley	1106
Ex-Governor, Senatorial Ambitions	1962	Prosody terms	84, 1372
Governor, Takes a Car of Dakota's Products through the East	1122	President Johnson, Impeachment Not Guilty	491
Ordway and Teller Correspondence	1311	Presidential Convention, Delegate 1863	316
Output of Farms in 1884	1374	Prohibition Convention of 1888	1542
Organic Act, Preliminary Meetings	169	Prohibitionists Assemble in 1889	1902
Text of the Law	179	Proclamation Calling Out Militia 1862	245
Suffrage Amendment	458	Public Land
Organizing the Territory	175	Surveys, the First	74
		How Acquired	76
Palmer, C. S., Appointed Assistant U. S. Attorney	1225

- Public Land—continued
 Sale of Mooted..... 427
 At Public Sale..... 556
- Railroads—Badly Needed 536
 Various Items Concerning..... 592
 In 1858 597
 Commission 1421
 Building in 1880..... 1143, 1183
 Construction and Rivalry in 1879..... 1108
 Legislation of 1879..... 1095
 Missouri & Niobrara 597
 Dakota & Northwestern..... 601
 McGregor & Western..... 604
 Companies Report to Legislature..... 606
 Yankton & Columbus 608
 La Crescent, Rochester & Yankton..... 609
 Missouri River Company..... 609
 Vermillion Valley & Northern..... 610
 Elk Point & Dakota 611
 Dakota Central 611
 Grank Trunk 613
 Dakota & Niobrara 613
 Dakota Southern 614
 Only Land Grant..... 615
 Building the First..... 615
 Dakota Southern to be Built..... 618
 Dakota Southern Sends Agent East... 619
 Extra Session of Legislature..... 620
 County Bonds Authorized..... 621
 Bond Election in Yankton County..... 625
 Construction of Dakota Southern..... 626
 Clay County Defeats Bonds 628
 Elk Point Gives $15,000..... 628
 Dakota Southern Built in 1872..... 630
 Yankton and Sioux City Terminals... 630
 First Excursion Train..... 633
 Dakota Southern in Court..... 635
 Case Settled Out of Court..... 636
 Treasurer Cannot Collect Tax..... 639
 Yankton County Bonds in Court..... 640
 County Issues New Bonds..... 647
 Contest for Control..... 648
 Milwaukee and Northwestern Opponents 648
 Milwaukee and Northwestern Win.... 654
 In North Dakota 1424
 Railroad to Black Hills..... 1433
 Bismarek & Turtle Mountain..... 1211
 Central Pacific 1188
 Dakota Central 1099
 Great Northern 1493
 Illinois Central 1495
 Manitoba 1548
 Northern Pacific 700-1700
 Bridge at Bismarek Begun in 1880.. 699
 British Fur Traders Make Trouble.. 687
 Completed to Missouri River..... 694
 Congress Authorizes Surveys..... 687
 Construction Completed 700
 Construction in Dakota, 1871-2.... 690
 Construction Opposed by Indians... 691
 Construction Suspended 697
 Construction Resumed 699
 Jay Cooke & Company to Finance
 Construction of 689
 Jay Cooke & Company Failure..... 697
 Jefferson Davis, Secretary of War,
 Policy Toward 687
 Mileage of 700
 Military Guards Railroad Surveyor. 692
- Railroads—continued
 Northern Pacific—continued
 Railroad Chartered 688
 Renews Construction West of the Missouri 1099
 Surveys Extended to Yellowstone... 693
 Terminus at Bismarck..... 699
 Terminus in Buffalo County..... 694
 Yellowstone Expedition of President
 Monroe 686
 St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Files Articles of Incorporation 1099
 Worthington & Sioux Falls Files Articles of Incorporation..... 1099
 Raymond, John B., Nominated for Congress 1131, 1223
 Elected to Congress..... 1226
 Views of Cleveland..... 1422
 Death of 1439
 Real Estate Boom..... 145
 Redfield, Alex H., Indian Agent..... 136
 Red River of the North—
 Carts 86
 Navigation 87
 Land Surveys 89
 Election District, 1861..... 91
 Counties, 1862 92
 Vote, Its Legality in 1862..... 93
 Legislative Members 269
 Laws Repealed in 1862..... 270-328
 Countries 81-90
 Description of Settlements..... 583
 Conditions in 1871..... 585
 Reed, Washington and the Indians..... 246
 Relief Societies, 1874..... 842
 Religious Institutions 1372
 Religious Organizations Active..... 535
 Report of Territorial Officers—
 Auditor..... 129, 387, 389, 395, 483
 Treasurer..... 462, 482, 509, 539
 Adjutant General 480
 Superintendent of Schools..... 384, 456, 471
 Republicans Bury Hatchet..... 662
 Liberal 661
 Platform of 1874..... 989
 Unite 985
 Reunion, Soldiers and Sailors'..... 1025
 Rivers of the Territory..... 72
 Rolette, Joseph, First Settler..... 79
 Biography 85
 Roman Catholic Missionaries..... 84
 Roosevelt, Theodore, Dakota Ranchman. 1409
 Rounds, George T..... 123
 Rudolph, W. C., Trader..... 46
- Schools, See Education.
 First Schoolhouse 122
 Textbooks 588
- Schurz, Carl, Appointed Secretary of Interior 1039
 First Annual Report..... 1040
 Annual Report, 1880 1130
 Probes Methods of Indian Bureau... 1039
 Seal of Territory..... 268
 Selkirk, Lord, 1882; His Fort Douglas on
 Red River 83
 Seventh Day Adventists..... 1499
 Seventh Standard Boundary..... 1782
 Shannon, Peter C., Defeated for Reappointment as Chief Justice..... 1182

- Sheridan, Gen. Philip H. 683
 In Dakota 683
 Makes a Report 1073
 Statement by 526
- Sherman, Gen. W. T., in General Command 115
- Shriner, William, Collector Internal Revenue 435
- Sibley's Official Report, Campaign 1863 259
- Silver Purchase 1434
- Sioux City Expedition to Black Hills 893
 Largely a Product of Dakota 1205
- Sioux Falls
 Discovered 97
 Incidents of Early Settlement in 1856-
 7-8 and Names of Settlers 97-100
 Election, 1858 102
 Evacuated, 1862 106
 Judge Flandreau's Letter 108
 W. W. Brookings, Early Days 111
 F. J. De Witt, Early Days 112
 D. M. Mills, Early Days 112
 Byron M. Smith 112
 Company A's First Battle 113
 Quartzite 70
 Wagon Road to Yankton 592
 Modern Sioux Falls 1014
 Efforts to Procure Railroads 1015
 Sioux Falls Railroad Organized 1017
 Will Subsidize No More Railroads 1018
- Sioux Indians, Early History 974
 Visit Washington, 1875 896
 Visit Washington and Carlyle Indian School, 1880 1125
- Scandinavians, 1862 Indian War 240
 Account by Ole and Louis Sampson 241
- Slim Buttes, Battle of 957
- Smith, Byron, Expedition to Black Hills 863
- Smith, H. P., Madison Pioneer 132
- Soldiers—
 Needed in the South 248
 Right to Vote 267
 Home 1468
- Sons of Temperance 854
- Spear, British Captain Shot on Steamboat
 An International Case 528
 Case Taken to District Court 529
 Verdict Justifiable Homicide 530
- Specie Payments Resumed 1108
- Spink, S. L., Appointed Secretary, Elected
 Delegate 499
 Candidate for Congress 488, 543, 547
- Spotted Tail Assassinated 1192
- Springer, Hon. William, Letter 1812
 Omnibus Bill 1796 1858
 Omnibus Bill Passes 1868
- Springfield Land District 553
- St. Joseph on Pembina River 84
- Stange, John, First Farmer 149
- Stanley, Gen., Commanding Dakota 535
- State Fair at Vermillion 1878 1077
- Statehood and Division—
 Admission and Division 1298
 Barnes, Judge, Advocates Division 1608
 Bennett's State Bill 1621
 Butler's (Senator) Address on Admission of Dakota into Union 1767
 Citizen's Convention at Canton 1632
 Congress, Fiftieth, Does Nothing for Dakota 1535
 Congress, State Making 1875
- Statehood and Division—continued
 Dakota Debate in Senate 1818
 Dakota Delegations Sent to Washington 1608
 Dakota Delegations Before Congress 1644
 Dakota in National Republican Platform 1854
 Debate in Senate, 1885 1763
 Division Assured, 1882 1654
 Division, Central Counties on 1808
 Convention 1801
 Convention to Oppose 1810
 Law for Vote on 1801
 Legislative Memorial for 1615
 Longitudinal, Proposed 1612
 North Dakota Conference on 1805
 Northern Grand Jury Favors 1620
 Sentiment 1798
 Vote on 1809
- Edgerton, Judge A. J., Letter to Senator M. C. Butler 1827
- Enabling Act for North Dakota 1846
- Harrison and McKinley on Admission of Dakota 1857
- President Harrison's Proclamation Admitting North Dakota 1934
- Hill, Representative of Ohio, Dakota's Champion 1769
- Howard, Governor, Favored Free
 States 1613
- Independent New York on Admission
 of Dakota 1855
- Importance of Dividing the Territory 1597
- Delegate Widder's Great Speech 1605
- Delegate Widder's One State Bill 1618
- Ojibway Territory 1598
- Ordway's Convention 1627
- Ordway's Idea on Statehood 1622
- Pembina Bill 1602
- Pettigrew's Pembina Bill 1630
- Pettigrew on Statehood 1623
- Preliminary Convention, June, 1883 1660
- Seventh Standard Favored as Boundary 1622
- Statehood 1609
- Statehood and Division Sentiment in 1882 1209
- Being Achieved 1596
- Bills in Congress in 1882 for 1624
- Doubtful 1882 1654
- Informal Convention in North Dakota 1865
- And National Politics 1619
- People's Movement for 1658
- Press On 1648 1653 1726
- And Division, Review of
 Of South Dakota 1913
- In Spite of Congress 1656
- And Division, Views on Two State Convention 1836
- Two States Favored 1862
- State League 1440 1745
- State Treasurer's Report for 1888 1388
 For 1884 1388
- Steamboat Navigation—
 The First Boat 45
 Antelope 59
 Red River 88
 Carrier with Indian Supplies 141
 Names of Early Craft, Australia, Wil-ham Beard, Gray Cloud, Arabia,
 Clara, Genoa 58

- Steamboat Navigation—continued
- On Red River..... 87
 - Days of 565
 - Voyage of the First..... 565
 - Captain Joseph La Barge..... 566
 - First Boats 567
 - Burning of the Chippewa..... 568
 - Names of 570
 - Profits of 570
 - Homicide on a Sand Bar..... 571
 - Battles with the Indians..... 572
 - Why Named Yellowstone..... 575
 - Frozen in, 1868..... 576
 - Tornado on the Yellowstone..... 577
- Steamboats—
- Log of the Peninah..... 578
 - Log of the Fanchon..... 579
 - A Three Thousand Mile Journey..... 579
 - Missouri Reliably Navigable..... 580
 - Imprisoned in Mid-river..... 1149
- Steele, William R., Nominated for Congress 1225
- Stickney, Mrs. George, First in Cole County 157
- Receiver of Land Office..... 435
- Stone, James N., Appointed Indian Agent. 435
- Strike-the-Ree 1857..... 115
- Stutsman County Contest in Legislature of 1877 1022
- Stutsman, Enos..... 117
- President Council 258
 - Appointed Treasury Agent..... 463
 - Elected Speaker..... 466
- Suffrage, No Denial on Account of Color. 458
- Sully, Gen. Alfred, on Red River..... 87
- First Indian Expedition 1863..... 288
 - Official Report 1863..... 291
 - Grasshopper Experience 344
 - Second Campaign 353
 - Official Report 357
 - Visited Sioux Indians 751
- Sunday School Convention..... 1583
- Supreme Court, First Session..... 419
- Seal of 419
- Surveyor General Receives Preemption Filings 175
- Tannatt, Dr. T. R., Only Union Officer at Fort Randall 66
- Tariff, Dakota's Position on..... 1124, 1326
- Taylor, Franklin, Vermillion Pioneer.... 131
- Appointed Collector 464
- Teachers' Institute, First..... 462
- Telegraph Line, First..... 540
- Completed to Standing Rock Agency.. 1108
- Teller, J. H., Statement on Great Sioux Reservation Treaty 1247
- Territorial Board of Agriculture..... 1421
- Bonds 1470
 - Fair, 1874 855
 - Officers of 1873..... 720
 - Officers of 1887..... 1471
 - Political Situation, 1872..... 661
- Thomas, Col. Eighth Minnesota, Official Report, 1864 365
- Timber Culture Law, Requirements..... 78
- Todd, J. B. S..... 60
- Nominated for Delegate..... 222
- Todd, J. B. S.—continued
- Delegate Contest with Jayne..... 269
 - Given Seat in Congress..... 270
 - Elected Speaker 450
 - Candidate for Congress..... 496
- Todd County Goes to Nebraska..... 1141, 1190
- Toohy, Dennis, Candidate for Congress. 498
- Treasurer's Report, First..... 462
- Treaties with the Indians—
- Arickaree Indians 55
 - Poncas, Dakota and Other Sioux..... 57
 - Yanktons 117
 - Chippewas, Red River..... 86
 - Sissetons 163
 - Hostile Indians 111
 - Text of Yankton Treaty..... 137-140
- Tripp, Bartlett, Nominated for Congress. 1070
- Appointed Chief Justice..... 1408
 - Visits Washington 1867
- Tripp, Captain William, Company B, Dakota Cavalry, 1863 316
- Appointed Surveyor General..... 435
- Turtle Mountain Country Opened to Settlement 1212
- Reserve 1439
- Union Sentiment in Army Before Civil War 63
- United States Agents for Sioux Indians in Dakota, 1878..... 1042
- United States, the Asylum for Oppressed 716
- Upper Missouri Land Company..... 117-134
- Vance, William J., Appointed Indian Commissioner 1051
- Van Meter, A. C..... 117
- Van Osdel, L. A., with Sibley..... 277
- Van Tassel, Frank L., Pioneer Business Man 1140
- Vermillion—
- Early Settlers 126
 - First Term of Court, 1861..... 129
 - Land District 554
 - Destroyed by Flood..... 1152
 - Scoured by Fire..... 859
- Verendrye, Pierre Gaultier Varumes.... 81
- Villages, Half Breed..... 84
- Wagon Roads Built by United States... 404
- Waldson, George P., Sioux Falls Pioneer Provost Marshal 313
- Wallace, Samuel J., Statement on Artesian Water Supply..... 1197
- War with Great Britain, 1812..... 44
- Ward, Rev. Joseph..... 478
- Sermon of 1308
- Warren, Lient. G. K., Reports on Expedition to Black Hills..... 873
- Waterways Convention at Fargo..... 1776
- Weiseman Massacre 306
- Weleh, William, Visits Indians..... 660
- Wells, Artesian, in Clay County..... 1198
- First in Dakota..... 1196
 - Statement of Samuel J. Wallace.....
- Western Town Company..... 99
- Wheat Farm, A. Dalrymple..... 1139
- Yield in 1872..... 671
 - Yield in 1880..... 1139

Wickliff, D. G., Allotted Seat in Legislature	1094	Wyoming
Wilkins, Turney, Appointed Secretary ..	523	A Part of Dakota	164
Williamson, Rev. John P., Letter of ..	137-174	Territory Organized	533
Winnebagoes and Santees at Crow Creek, 1863	299	Organic Act	484
Dissatisfied	347	Yankton
Winter of 1872-3 Extremely Cold	703	Indians Council with Lewis and Clark ..	14
of 1880-81 Severest in History of State	1148-1163	Indian Treaty, 1858	117
Wheat, John Thompson	530	Indians Considered a Separate Tribe ..	1204
Wintermute Tragedy	720	Townsite Surveyed	119
Witherspoon, James E.	243	In 1857	115
Wixson, Ely, Pioneer Elk Point	136	Population in 1858	120
In 1862	239	Indians Remove to Reservation, 1859 ..	141
Women's Christian Temperance Union ..	1575	Land and Town Company	144
Organized	1107	The Capital	208
Woman's Suffrage	1402	Indians Reported Unfriendly	217
Wright, Charles, in Indian Skirmish ..	112	In State of Siege, 1862	235
		Pawnee Treaty	285
		Ziebach, Frank M., Weekly Dakotian ..	175
		Captain Militia	236

9772-49-4

